The public debts of Europe, too, have nearly doubled in fifteen years; that is, they have risen from $13,200,000,000 to $21,600,000,000. The cost of government has risen in ten years fifty per cent. At the the present rate of progress, in fifty years, or even in twenty-five, there must be a great social or financial catastrophe of some kind; for the simple reason that the tillers of the soil, on whom these prodigious burdens rest, will not be able to stand them.

Moreover, these great fleets and armies are not maintained as the Roman legions were, to protect the civilized world from barbarians, or to clear the seas of pirates. We have no longer Goths or Huns, Turks or Tartars, to fear. They are maintained by highly civilized Christian men simply as a defense against other highly civilized Christian men.—The Nation.

At the close of a sermon delivered by Mr. Spurgeon at the Moody meetings, now being held at Fairfield Hall, a building accommodating 7,000 persons, near Mr. Spurgeon's house at Croydon, the preacher made a happy application of a little incident to illustrate how those who have found Christ should tell others about him: "A robin had been a frequent visitor upon the ledge of Mr. Spurgeon's study window, for he was accustomed to throw out crumbs for the birds. He and the robin got very familiar. 'He looked at me and I looked at him, in fact, he seemed as if he would like to come in, but I did not want him there.' He soon brought other robins, whom he evidently had told of the friend who put the crumbs out. One morning he noticed his tail higher than ever, and the little fellow looked wonderfully big. Seeking for the cause of it, he soon found that, not content with bringing other robins, he had this time brought a big blackbird! 'Oh, how I did love that robin after that!' The story pointed its own moral."

THE CORSET CURSE.

If women had common sense instead of fashion sense, the corset would not exist. There are not words in the English language to express my convictions upon this subject. The corset, more than any other thing, is responsible for woman's becoming the victim of disease and doctors.

Who can begin to prophesy the untold and manifold sufferings that a factory full of corsets must be responsible for? And where is the end? If only the wearer had to pay the penalty with pain and weakness, we might hold our peace.

One half of the children are born to die in this country before they are five years of age. Who can tell how much this state of things is due to the enervation of maternal life forces by this one instrument of torture?

I am a temperance woman. No one can realize more than I the devastation and ruin alcohol in its many tempting forms has brought to the human family. Still I solemnly believe that in weakness and deterioration of health and moral principle the corset has more to answer for than intoxicating drink,s.

What affects the physical, affects the spiritual; what affects the animal, affects the mental. Given a physical body dwarfed and deteriorated in any respect, and a corresponding deficiency in spiritual, intellectual and moral worth is likely to exist. Look at our men and women who have been grand and successful in achievement, noble in purpose and vigorous in intellect. With few exceptions they are men and women of harmonious, strong, athletic physiques. Women cannot possibly attain to this condition under the restricting influence of corded steel garments.

"What possible harm can a corset do if worn loose?"

My friend, put a band quilted full of cords and bones upon the arm of your active boy, whose athletic feats are your pride; let him wear it ever so loosely, and witness the deteriorating effects upon his biceps and triceps muscles! Put a similar bandage upon your pet dog or cat, just as loosely as it can be retained, and watch the result upon respiration, digestion and circulation!—Alice B. Stockham, M. D.

BEAUTIFUL.

Beautiful hands are those that do
Work that is earnest, brave and true,
Moment by moment the long day through.

Beautiful feet are those that go
On kindliest ministries to and fro,
Down lowliest way, if God wills it so.

Beautiful shoulders are those that bear
Ceaseless burdens of homely care,
With patient grace and daily care.

Beautiful lives are those that bless—
Silent rivers of happiness,
Whose hidden fountain but few may guess.

SELFISH DAVY.

Davy was a very pretty boy. He had light curly hair, dark blue eyes, and rosy cheeks. But he was very stingy. He did not like to share anything with his little brothers and sisters. One day he went into the kitchen where his mother was at work, and saw on the table a saucer of jelly.

"Can I have that jelly?" asked Davy.

"Mrs. White sent it to me," said Davy's mother. "She had company to dinner, and made this jelly very nice. But I don't care for it; so you may have it if you won't be stingy with it."

Davy took the saucer of jelly and went out into the yard; but he did not call his brothers and sisters to help him eat it.

"If I divide with them there won't be a spoonful apiece," he thought. "It is better for one to have enough than for each to have just a little!"

So he ran to the barn and climbed up to the loft, where he was sure no one would think of looking for him.

Just as he began to eat the jelly he heard his sister Fanny calling him. But he did not answer her. He kept very still.

"They always want some of everything I have," he said to himself. "If I had just a ginger snap, they think I ought to give each a piece."

When the jelly was all eaten, and he had scraped the saucer clean, Davy went down into the barnyard and played with the little white calf, and hunted eggs in the shed where the cows were. He was ashamed to go into the house, for he knew he had been very stingy about the jelly.

"Oh, Davy!" said Fannie, running into the barnyard, "where have you been this long time? We looked everywhere for you."

"What did you want?" asked Davy, thinking, of course, his sister would say she had wanted him to share the jelly with her.

"Mother gave us a party," said Fanny; "we had all the doll's dishes set out on a little table under the big tree by the porch; and we had strawberries, cake and raisins. Just as we sat down to eat, Mrs, White saw us from the window, and she sent over a big bowl of ice-cream and some jelly, left from the dinner; we had a splendid time; you ought to have been with us."

Poor Davy! How mean he felt! And he was well punished for eating his jelly all alone.—Our Little Ones.

TEMPERANCE.

TOBACCO.

A friend sends us for publication an extract from Dr. Beach's Family Physician. He pronounces tobacco injurious to the human system whether snuffed, smoked or chewed. Experiments upon various animals prove it to be a virulent poison, so that intelligent physicians hesitate to use it even externally. Tobacco using causes indigestion, scurvy, apoplexy, dizziness, headache, mental depression, nightmare, pain in the stomach, insanity, cancers, abscesses, consumption, blindness, paralysis and many other fatal diseases.

It shrivels the brain, injures the teeth, dulls all the senses, destroys the complexion and creates a craving for strong drink. In addition to all these evils the doctor considers tobacco using an untidy habit, as well as expensive. He reckons that the tobacco money of an ordinary family if kept at interest for fifty-five years would amount to $5,000. Some families spend one-third of their income for tobacco. He considers the habit impolite because justly offensive to non-users. King James pronounced tobacco using "a custom loathsome to the eye, hateful to the nose, hurtful to the brain, dangerous to the lungs, and in the black stinking fume thereof, nearest resembling the horrible Stygian, smoke of the bottomless pit."

HOW A BOY WAS SAVED.

The subject of the proper disposal of the boys of this generation is justly attracting wide attention of late. As wealth increases, the proportion of boys without anything to do out of school hours increases likewise. A recent writer, following the lead of Mr. Washington Gladden, who has given to parents an earnest awakening on this subject, imagines a father sighing over his eighteen year old son, and saying, "It is too late for me now. My boy is eighteen years old and as large as a man, and his life is utterly aimless yet."

This recalls to my mind a case in point, which, having the merit of being strictly true, may prove of interest to such fathers.

A gentleman in Virginia some sixty or seventy years ago, had a son eighteen years of age, who, he suddenly discovered, was becoming dissipated, "going to the bad," as it is often aptly termed. He could not believe it at first, the boy had seemed to be all right and he had never allowed liquor to be used at home, although its use in that country and at that day was well nigh universal. He determined to watch for himself and see if this boy, his eldest son, the pride of his heart, were really what he had heard, a wild, dissipated young man.

On the next occasion of his son's leaving home, the father, shortly after his departure, mounted his horse and rode in the same direction. He followed him to the house of a cousin several miles distant where he found his son in company with this cousin, himself one of the most reckless young men in the neighborhood, together with several others of like character and habits.

When this father entered the room where the young men were, he found them gambling and drinking, his son, apparently, as bad as the rest. This father believed in the scripture "Train up a child"—up, till he is a man, not half way, merely. He therefore ordered his son to return with him. The boy did not dare to refuse. His father, after talking long and seriously with him, then forbade his leaving the plantation for a year and a half. at the same time giving him entire charge of its affairs.

This command was strictly enforced; the young man was kept at home and at work instead of being sent to college, as his father had earnestly hoped. The result was the boy, at the end of the time, was a man with business habits, and with no relish for his old ways or the society of his former companions. He lived a long and honored life, being for twenty years or more a magistrate of the county, and a ruling elder in the Presbyterian church, while his cousin, the only one of his companions with whose history I am acquainted, died in a few years a miserable wreck.

Parental authority is consistent with the tenderest love, and should never be surrendered till the child is fully grown and settled in the things that make for his peace. It requires thought and care and trouble-taking to secure it, but it does not cause half the trouble and care that the opposite course causes. Long ago it was said, "A child left to himself bringeth his mother to shame."—Union-Signal.

REV. DR. FUMUS AND GEN. CHEWIT.

It is related of a distinguished clergyman of Puffington Dr. Fumus, that while attending a religious meeting in Fountainland, and receiving entertainment in an elegant mansion where the lady of the house was known to be very adverse to the habits of the Puffington people, rising early in the morning, he prostrated himself upon the floor with his head in the fire-place, whose chimney carried off all smoke, where he seemed to be breathing with great difficulty. His wife, seeing him in this condition, was much alarmed, and exclaimed, "What ails you, my dear? are you dying?" Out of all patience with himself, he replied, "Offering a stench offering to the devil, my dear!" and immediately arose, and, crushing his fumigating tube under his heels on the hearth, he exclaimed, "Get thee behind me, Satan! thou savorest not of the things of God, or of God's ambassador to men," after which the savor of his habit ceased to exhale from him, to the great joy of his wife, and to the great advantage of the young men who had been much influenced by his example."

"It is related also of a Chewington military gentleman, whose health was failing, and whose nervous system was much deranged. that his jaw was broken one day by a kick of his horse. This put a stop to his masticating habit for many months, during which time his health was completely restored; whereupon he rode through the whole district of Chewington, offering the gratuitous use of the heels of his horse to all who were in the same bondage in which he came so near dying."—The Crystal River.

A RUMSELLER'S EXPERIENCE.

A man named Stacy, the owner of a splendid drinking saloon in New York, signed the pledge and closed his house. Hearing that a party of lads had formed themselves into a temperance society, he gave them his experience as a rumseller. "I have sold liquor," said Mr. Stacy, "for eleven years—long enough for me to see the beginning and end of its effects. I have seen a man take his first glass of liquor in my place, and afterwards fill the grave of a suicide. I have seen man after man, wealthy and educated, come into my saloon, who cannot now buy his dinner. I can recall twenty customers worth from $100,000 to $500,000 who are now without money, place or friends." He warned boys against entering saloons on any pretext. He stated that he had seen many a young fellow, a member of some temperance society, come in with a friend and wait while he drank. "No, no," he would say, "I never touch it. Thanks, all the same." Presently, rather than to seem churlish, he would take a glass of cider or harmless lemonade. "The lemonade was nothing," said the rumseller, "but I knew how it would end. The only safety, boys, for any man, no matter how strong his resolution, is outside the door of a saloon."—Ch. Harvester.

CHEAPEST AND BEST.

In the whole range of the literature of our reform there is nothing cheaper than the Cynosure. Compute the amount of reading in each number and multiply it by fifty-two, and the result will be a surprise that so much can be furnished for $2.00. No book or pamphlet provides so much in proportion to the cost. As for the variety and quality of their work, the writers for the Cynosure are among the best and most conscientious and intelligent Christians in the world. To surpass their work would be difficult. Let them be sustained by increasing the circulation of the paper by thousands.

If each one will add to his effort for a good cause the name of a new subscriber, enclosing $4.00 for both, the sender may have also his choice of the following valuable pamphlets:

1. The Batavia Convention pamphlet, with the great speeches on that occasion, illustrations of the Morgan Monument, etc.; or

2. Egypt in History and Prophecy; or, Pharaoh Proclaiming God, by the celebrated Robert Patterson, from Hasting's Anti-infidel Library; or

3. The Anti-masonic Scrap Book, a new and enlarged edition now in press, containing all the tracts published by the N. C. A.; or

4. The Island of Madagascar; the excellent history written by Gen. J. W. Phelps and noticed in a late Cynosure.

5 Copies of any of the pamphlets sold by the N. C A, to the amount of 25 cents.

THE CHURCHES.

—Two members of the Chicago Young Men's Christian Association, who were conducting a religious meeting in a vacant lot, were arrested Sabbath afternoon by policemen whose order to "move on" they disobeyed. It is stated that the meeting was orderly and did not interfere with the public travel, as it was held nearly 200 feet from the street. The arrested parties were released on bail of $200 each.

—The Protestant mission at Celaca, on the Central railroad, Mexico, was attacked by a mob June 28th, who destroyed the furniture and effects of the Rev. A. W. Greenman. The others escaped to a neighboring house, being pursued and fired on. Returning the fire they killed and wounded several of the mob, which then dispersed. The mission party were then protected by federal soldiers. Greenman is now at the American legation here. The mayor of Celaca encouraged the attack, and refused protection to the members of the mission.

—The International Sunday-school Lesson Committee has issued its schedule of lessons for 1886. The first quarter's lessons are studies in Jewish History, from II. Kings to Malachi; while the remainder of the year is given to Studies in the Writings of John, from the Fourth Gospel to the book of the Revelation. Four lessons are taken from the latter book.

—The Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions has received from the executors of the late Frederick Marquand $5,000, with which to start a Corean mission, and a lady in Cleveland has contributed $2,000. This is a good beginning and the work will soon be commenced.

—Mr. William Bucknell, of Philadelphia, quietly slipped into the hand of the missionary, Dr. Clough, on the occasion of his recent visit to that city, a check for $10,000, one-half of which is to be used in making additions to the schools in Ongole, $1,500, his annual contribution, for the support of the Teluga native preachers, and $3,500 for the Female Seminary in Nellore.

—At Saratoga Rev. Mr. Henry, a missionary from China, said there are about 15,000,000 women and children in China ready to receive instruction. There have been started in Canton and vicinity twenty-five schools for girls with from fifteen to forty pupils in each. They are taught for the most part by pupils instructed in the boarding-schools previously established. Nine-tenths of those educated have become Christians.

—Two police captains at an out-station of the American Board in Japan, became Christians, one of whom lost his place in consequence. The second was also forced to resign. The matter was brought to the notice of some of the higher officials, and, perhaps as a result, one of the ex-captains has received a better position in another department. There is, no doubt, more or less local hostility to Christianity in Japan; but the spirit of the central government is decidedly favorable. It is very widely believed that the recent visit of Privy-councilor Ito to Germany, where he had several interviews with Prince Bismarck, and even with Emperor William himself, on the subject of Christianity, made a profound impression upon his mind. He is reported to have said that he had previously believed that religion was, with them, merely a state policy, but he was now convinced that they were sincere Christians.

The trial of J. B. Shay, of Streator Congregational church, for heresy, by the Central Illinois Association, was conducted at Normal last week. The charges were thus presented by the Rev. James E. Smith, of Normal:

"That he has denied the inspiration of the Scriptures, in the sense that they are the only perfect authority in matters of faith and practice.

"That he has denied the miraculous conception. The expression on which this charge is founded was not made from the pulpit, but privately, and is as follows: 'You worship a divine bastard; we worship a human Christ.'

"That he denies the deity of Christ.

"That he denies the fact of substitutional atonement."

Shay conducted his own defense. Two charges, the first and third, were sustained, the others were not. A motion was then made to expel Mr. Shay from the conference, which drew out a heated discussion, and was finally decided in favor of retaining Mr. Shay by a vote of 14 to 13. The result presents a strange anomaly. Mr. Shay stands convicted of heresy and yet retains his pulpit.

A dispatch from London at the close of the revival meetings sums up the great work thus: Moody says his revival campaign has been eminently successful. Something like four hundred meetings were held in eleven districts. Thirteen different meetings were held every week. He was absent only one day during the whole season, and that was owing to illness. He estimates over a million and a half of persons were present at the services. All classes of society were reached and influenced. Peers and paupers sat side by side, drinking the same message of salvation. The number of persons converted will reach into the thousands. Among them were several pronounced skeptics. Six male choirs and six Mizpah bands of reformed drunkards were organized. Two large halls are now in process of building at Stratford and Wadsworth to continue the good work begun there The cost of the mission is £15,000, nearly the whole of which has been subscribed. Whittle, McGranahan, Pentecost, and Stebbins have given very efficient help. There has been no opposition, and the meetings have been uniformly orderly. A gentleman has bought an iron tabernacle for the Salvation Army. Moody says he expects to sail with his family and Pentecost and Stebbins for New York on the steamship Oregon, which leaves Liverpool July 12. Many Christians look forward wistfully to his return to England.

—The body of Bishop Simpson lay in state in the Arch Street Methodist Episcopal church, Philadelphia, until after 10 o'clock Tuesday night, and was viewed by thousands. The interment took place in South Laurel Hill Cemetery, Wednesday. The pall-bearers were: The Revs. S. N. Chew, James Morrow, Joseph Welsh, J. B. McCullagh, A. J. Kynett, S. W. Kurtz. G. W. Miller, and T. C. Murphy, all of whom are members of the Philadelphia Conference.

—At the meeting of the Woman's Presbyterian Board of Missions in this city last week, Miss Cundall, who has recently returned from Syria, was present, and gave an account of the work attempted for the women in the mountains of Lebanon. These women promised to attend the meetings, but the Greek priests threatened them with excommunication if they set foot in a missionary's house.

—The Evangelical Christians of India have sent an urgent request to Messrs. Moody and Sankey to visit India. The Irish Protestants have likewise sent them a monster petition to conduct evangelistic services throughout Ireland. The petitions declare that the country is ripe for such a movement. Notwithstanding these appeals the evangelists are disposed to devote the next few seasons to America.

—The Presbyterian church raised for missions, home and foreign, during the past year the magnificent sum of $1,313,551.92.

—During the present century 150,000,000 copies of the Bible have been printed in two hundred and twenty-six different languages.

—The Congregational Convention of Vermont has adopted a report against the running of Sunday trains, and appointed a committee to memorialize the Legislature on the subject.

CABIN CREEK, Lewis Co., Ky., June 17.

DEAR FRIENDS:—I feel the drawings of the Spirit to once more write to you, and tell you where I am and what doing. A few weeks ago I left my school in the hands of two faithful teachers, Mr. and Mrs. Holloway, and went to Berea to hold meetings. Of course the unadulterated Bible truths were not well received by every one. All of God's faithful servants understand that the time has come "when men will not endure sound doctrine." The pastor of Berea church, John G. Fee, one of the noblest souls this side of heaven, stands up for Bible doctrine, and points travelers to the "old paths." He was present at nearly all the meetings, and encouraged with his firm yet gentle "amens," and also added aid in giving plain, healthy instruction to those seeking the knowledge of sins forgiven.

We held meetings at the chapel only once or twice a week, the rest of the time going among the citizens and holding meetings at private houses. God set his seal upon his own blessed truth, and at nearly every meeting some one, and sometimes from ten to twenty, promised by rising or by their testimony to seek the Lord, until over one hundred souls, from the aged down to the little child, confessed their earnest desires to become Christians. Just how many had found Jesus a personal Saviour before we left we cannot tell, not near all of them of course. Bro. Fee had baptized ten, and quite a number of others were talking and praying in the meetings, acting like real converts.

Berea College has done much for the elevation of the colored people. It looked good to see the happy faces of the colored young people right beside the white ones, with no fear in their hearts of ridicule. But I found the same failure in Berea College that I find in nearly all such schools—a love of ornamenting the body. As I saw the feathers, flowers, jewels, silks, and different trimmings, I could not help but think how many plain clothes the money spent for these superfluous things might buy. One feather would buy a plain dress for some poor girl that would last a term, one flower a pair of shoes. one pair of bracelets would buy her books, one ring pay her tuition, and one silk dress pay her board. Thus one term of schooling might be given another from the price of ornaments on a single person. While these schools are doing much to educate the poor, I can see how they could do much more. Oh, that many might see this as the few do, and dress as well as do anything else in the name of Jesus, not in the name of the proud world. The field is so wide, and life is so short, do all we can and spend all we can in the blessed cause, and we have done but little compared to what there is to do after all. May the Holy Spirit quicken the people to value time and money for Jesus' sake, and use it for eternity.

I went with Bro. Fee into the mountain country in Jackson county, where I found a large congregation of intelligent people. The children especially were bright looking, and earnest listeners to the truth. A number of the ladies called on me while I was there, and I found them sensible, modest women. They possessed both honesty and intelligence, and thus would take facts and reasonings presented and weigh them in the light of the Bible, and make careful decisions. But the people there are poor in this world's goods. They need a house for worship, a house for a school. They need a Christian teacher. Who is consecrated to the Lord that will go into such a field for the sake of souls? Who is keeping in gold, in notes, in land, in stocks, some of the Lord's money that ought to be sent to John G. Fee to build these houses? I have written this letter without consulting man, but God, and I trust to the Holy Spirit to stir up some pure souls to help in this work. If any young person with sufficient talent and education, entirely consecrated to God, taking the plain, narrow way, and willing to suffer for Jesus' sake, feels led of the Spirit to go into such a field as teacher, they will receive a hearty welcome by the people; they will also find in Bro. Fee a counselor and friend, and in the Lord a sure guide. For I am sure the Lord lives in the mountains of Kentucky as well as anywhere. And may some man or woman who holds the keys to one of the Lord's chests be stirred to action and send by the return mail, or put into the hands of a faithful missionary who will soon carry it there, the means to erect a comfortable house for worship in that place. In Jesus' name I write,

THE

CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

MEMORIAL RESOLUTIONS

ADOPTED BY THE ALUMNI ASSOCIATION OF WHEATON COLLEGE AT THEIR ANNUAL REUNION, JUNE 18, 1884.

WHEREAS, In the providence of God, the Associated Alumni of Wheaton College have been called upon within the past year to mourn the loss of four of their members, viz.: EDWARD B. SELLERS of the class of 1866, SAMUEL F. STRATTON of 1865, FRANK W. COMFORT of 1875, and CYRUS L. BLANCHARD of 1878, and

WHEREAS, While we bow in submission to the will of our Heavenly Father, who has, we believe, removed from earth to himself these our brothers who so faithfully preached his gospel and stood for the right, each in his place and calling, as it had been given them to discern it, and who were so "lovely and pleasant in their lives and in their deaths not long divided," yet remembering the injunction to "weep with those who weep," and desiring to testify our love and esteem for those who have finished with joy their earthly course; be it

Resolved, That we hereby express our sorrow that they are to meet no more with us in the halls of Alma Mater, and that no more we shall hear of the gospel preached, of wrong righted and good done through them in the name of the Master.

Resolved, That, while we deplore their loss to us the Alumni of Wheaton College, to Alma Mater as cherished and loyal sons and to the world as benefactors, we, humbly imploring divine aid, pledge ourselves to greater loyalty to truth and to greater usefulness in the world, remembering that the time is short and that what we do we must do quickly.

Resolved, That we extend our warmest sympathies to the relatives and friends of the departed, being assured that they sorrow not as those who have no hope.

Resolved, That these resolutions be enrolled on the minutes of the Association and that they be published in the Christian Cynosure, the Wheaton Illinoian and the College Record.

OBITUARY.

Died of pneumonia, on the 17th of March 1884, ABNER ORR, after four months residing in Marshal Co., Kansas, leaving a wife and five children to mourn his loss. The subject of this sketch was born in Gurnsey Co., Ohio, Jan 30th, 1830, converted at an early age, joined the M. E. church, and was licensed to preach. He took deacon's orders in the year 1859 by the hand of Bishop Simpson, and elder's orders in 1861, from Bishop Scott, and in 1874 took a transfer from the Iowa conference to the Missouri. Up to this time he had labored successfully and acceptably, but in 1875 he espoused the anti-secret cause, and openly rebuked and preached against the secret works of darkness, for he considered it an evil; and so considering, he felt it his duty, as a watchman on the walls of Zion, to cry out against the vile system. At that time his persecutions began, of which you are partially acquainted. In 1878 the Missouri conference located him under false charges. He was a staunch reformer, and where conscience or duty was involved he knew no compromise. The anti-secret cause has lost a faithful advocate, and his family a wise counselor. Almost his last words were, "My feet are on the rock. O glory!" and he often requested his little girl to sing, "Jesus Lover of my Soul," in which he would join while he had strength. So his friends "mourn not as those that have no hope." The funeral services were conducted by the Baptist minister who visited him in his illness, from Phillipians 1: 23, to a large concourse of people in the Baptist church at Elm Creek, Kan., and his remains now lie in the Elm Creek churchyard. May the Lord comfort the family, whose circle he in his wisdom has broken.

THE COLLEGES.

MONMOUTH:—The Commencement exercises at Monmouth college, June 19th, were attended by large audiences. The class of eighteen acquitted themselves in a manner worthy of the institution. Pres. McMichael being absent at the Pan-Presbyterian Council at Belfast, Ireland, Dr. Hutchison presided on the occasion. A correspondent of the Blanchard, Iowa, Record, narrates a strange performance that near the close too seriously marred the harmony of the occasion:

"At the delivering of diplomas a little incident occurred which will show the position Monmouth college takes on the fraternity question. When two of the gentlemen received their diplomas and were walking back to their places, they displayed a fraternity badge under their coats. Of course all in sympathy with college fraternities cheered, but immediately after dismissal a meeting of the senate was called upon the stage, and the two gentlemen were called to explain. They did not feel disposed to make an explanation at first but soon found that nobody was in fun, and fearing lest their degrees should be taken away or their diplomas revoked, they confessed that some of their frats from Galesburg had given them the badges and that they were not in connection with any college fraternity. Thus the very means that the young men took to encourage a spirit of disobedience among the students resulted in confirming and strengthening the college law in its influence upon the minds of the students."

The editor of the Record makes this comment:

"Our letter from Monmouth this week reveals a little of the workings of secretism in colleges. The senate and faculty of the college at that place have always set their faces like a flint against the fraternities. They have determined they shall not maintain an existence there. And we believe one means used to keep these societies down, has been to refuse to graduate students who are known to belong to them, either there or elsewhere. Hereafter it may be presumed unsafe for a passing graduate to display a society pin or badge on the platform commencement day at Monmouth college.

—Wheaton College catalogue shows a marked degree of prosperity during the year just ended in all departments. 244 students have been in attendance and in the Theological Seminary eleven more are listed, most of whom are also connected with some department of the College. The Trustees lost a valued counselor in the death of Moses Pettengill of Peoria. Few men have taken a deeper or more constant interest in the institution than he, although he had also established a young ladies' seminary in Peoria. Over $4,500 in donations were received during the year. There is much history connected with some of these gifts, which proves the gracious power of God in answer to prayer. The fall term opens on Tuesday, the 2d of September.

—Avalon College shows that it has a strong hold in the popular esteem of the parents of northwestern Missouri. Though the regular classes are small the total attendance is 220. President Kephart is assisted by ten other instructors. The fall term opens Wednesday, September 3d. Three courses of study are provided which differ chiefly in the amount of Greek and Latin required.

The attendance at some of the leading colleges for the current year is as follows: Michigan University stands at the head with 1,554 students; Harvard, 1,522; Columbia, 1,520; University of Pennsylvania, 1,044; Massachusetts Institute of Technology, 561; Princeton, 527. As regards the number of professors in each, however, the order will be somewhat changed. University of Michigan is omitted, owing to lack of data. Harvard has 32 professors, and a total of 55 instructors. Princeton comes next with 28 professors, and a total of 34, including tutors, etc. Yale, 20 professors, and total of 30 instructors. Columbia, 12, and total of 29. Of these four last named, Harvard was founded in 1636; Yale, 1701; Princeton, 1746; Columbia, (King's), 1754. Together with these statistics of number of students and professors, it would be interesting to note the sizes of libraries in the last named institutions. Harvard once more heads the list with a total of 277,700 volumes. Yale, total, 161,000 volumes. Princeton, 122,000 volumes. Columbia, 47,000 volumes. Harvard at present has 8 Fellows; Princeton 8; Yale, 3; and Columbia, 2.

—Hamilton College, Utica, New York, is having its tribulations. When Dr. Darling, the president, arose to preach the Baccalaureate sermon during the recent anniversary, not a member of the senior class was present in the seats reserved for them. It was an intentional slight, and a result of the bolt of the seniors last winter. Later it is reported that all but two of the members of the faculty have signed a paper requesting the removal of Dr. Darling from the presidency of the college.

—Rev. Wm. Johnston of College Springs, Iowa, received the degree of D.D. from Monmouth College at its late commencement.

—Prof. John Bascom, president of the State University at Madison, Wisconsin, is being attacked on account of his earnest prohibition principles, and a strong effort is being made by some influential persons to have him removed.

THE CHURCHES.

—Two members of the Chicago Young Men's Christian Association, who were conducting a religious meeting in a vacant lot, were arrested Sabbath afternoon by policemen whose order to "move on" they disobeyed. It is stated that the meeting was orderly and did not interfere with the public travel, as it was held nearly 200 feet from the street. The arrested parties were released on bail of $200 each.

—The Protestant mission at Celaca, on the Central railroad, Mexico, was attacked by a mob June 28th, who destroyed the furniture and effects of the Rev. A. W. Greenman. The others escaped to a neighboring house, being pursued and fired on. Returning the fire they killed and wounded several of the mob, which then dispersed. The mission party were then protected by federal soldiers. Greenman is now at the American legation here. The mayor of Celaca encouraged the attack, and refused protection to the members of the mission.

—The International Sunday-school Lesson Committee has issued its schedule of lessons for 1886. The first quarter's lessons are studies in Jewish History, from II. Kings to Malachi; while the remainder of the year is given to Studies in the Writings of John, from the Fourth Gospel to the book of the Revelation. Four lessons are taken from the latter book.

—The Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions has received from the executors of the late Frederick Marquand $5,000, with which to start a Corean mission, and a lady in Cleveland has contributed $2,000. This is a good beginning and the work will soon be commenced.

—Mr. William Bucknell, of Philadelphia, quietly slipped into the hand of the missionary, Dr. Clough, on the occasion of his recent visit to that city, a check for $10,000, one-half of which is to be used in making additions to the schools in Ongole, $1,500, his annual contribution, for the support of the Teluga native preachers, and $3,500 for the Female Seminary in Nellore.

—At Saratoga Rev. Mr. Henry, a missionary from China, said there are about 15,000,000 women and children in China ready to receive instruction. There have been started in Canton and vicinity twenty-five schools for girls with from fifteen to forty pupils in each. They are taught for the most part by pupils instructed in the boarding-schools previously established. Nine-tenths of those educated have become Christians.

—Two police captains at an out-station of the American Board in Japan, became Christians, one of whom lost his place in consequence. The second was also forced to resign. The matter was brought to the notice of some of the higher officials, and, perhaps as a result, one of the ex-captains has received a better position in another department. There is, no doubt, more or less local hostility to Christianity in Japan; but the spirit of the central government is decidedly favorable. It is very widely believed that the recent visit of Privy-councilor Ito to Germany, where he had several interviews with Prince Bismarck, and even with Emperor William himself, on the subject of Christianity, made a profound impression upon his mind. He is reported to have said that he had previously believed that religion was, with them, merely a state policy, but he was now convinced that they were sincere Christians.

The trial of J. B. Shay, of Streator Congregational church, for heresy, by the Central Illinois Association, was conducted at Normal last week. The charges were thus presented by the Rev. James E. Smith, of Normal:

"That he has denied the inspiration of the Scriptures, in the sense that they are the only perfect authority in matters of faith and practice.

"That he has denied the miraculous conception. The expression on which this charge is founded was not made from the pulpit, but privately, and is as follows: 'You worship a divine bastard; we worship a human Christ.'

"That he denies the deity of Christ.

"That he denies the fact of substitutional atonement."

Shay conducted his own defense. Two charges, the first and third, were sustained, the others were not. A motion was then made to expel Mr. Shay from the conference, which drew out a heated discussion, and was finally decided in favor of retaining Mr. Shay by a vote of 14 to 13. The result presents a strange anomaly. Mr. Shay stands convicted of heresy and yet retains his pulpit.

A dispatch from London at the close of the revival meetings sums up the great work thus: Moody says his revival campaign has been eminently successful. Something like four hundred meetings were held in eleven districts. Thirteen different meetings were held every week. He was absent only one day during the whole season, and that was owing to illness. He estimates over a million and a half of persons were present at the services. All classes of society were reached and influenced. Peers and paupers sat side by side, drinking the same message of salvation. The number of persons converted will reach into the thousands. Among them were several pronounced skeptics. Six male choirs and six Mizpah bands of reformed drunkards were organized. Two large halls are now in process of building at Stratford and Wadsworth to continue the good work begun there The cost of the mission is £15,000, nearly the whole of which has been subscribed. Whittle, McGranahan, Pentecost, and Stebbins have given very efficient help. There has been no opposition, and the meetings have been uniformly orderly. A gentleman has bought an iron tabernacle for the Salvation Army. Moody says he expects to sail with his family and Pentecost and Stebbins for New York on the steamship Oregon, which leaves Liverpool July 12. Many Christians look forward wistfully to his return to England.

—The body of Bishop Simpson lay in state in the Arch Street Methodist Episcopal church, Philadelphia, until after 10 o'clock Tuesday night, and was viewed by thousands. The interment took place in South Laurel Hill Cemetery, Wednesday. The pall-bearers were: The Revs. S. N. Chew, James Morrow, Joseph Welsh, J. B. McCullagh, A. J. Kynett, S. W. Kurtz. G. W. Miller, and T. C. Murphy, all of whom are members of the Philadelphia Conference.

—At the meeting of the Woman's Presbyterian Board of Missions in this city last week, Miss Cundall, who has recently returned from Syria, was present, and gave an account of the work attempted for the women in the mountains of Lebanon. These women promised to attend the meetings, but the Greek priests threatened them with excommunication if they set foot in a missionary's house.

—The Evangelical Christians of India have sent an urgent request to Messrs. Moody and Sankey to visit India. The Irish Protestants have likewise sent them a monster petition to conduct evangelistic services throughout Ireland. The petitions declare that the country is ripe for such a movement. Notwithstanding these appeals the evangelists are disposed to devote the next few seasons to America.

—The Presbyterian church raised for missions, home and foreign, during the past year the magnificent sum of $1,313,551.92.

—During the present century 150,000,000 copies of the Bible have been printed in two hundred and twenty-six different languages.

—The Congregational Convention of Vermont has adopted a report against the running of Sunday trains, and appointed a committee to memorialize the Legislature on the subject.

DEAR FRIENDS:—I feel the drawings of the Spirit to once more write to you, and tell you where I am and what doing. A few weeks ago I left my school in the hands of two faithful teachers, Mr. and Mrs. Holloway, and went to Berea to hold meetings. Of course the unadulterated Bible truths were not well received by every one. All of God's faithful servants understand that the time has come "when men will not endure sound doctrine." The pastor of Berea church, John G. Fee, one of the noblest souls this side of heaven, stands up for Bible doctrine, and points travelers to the "old paths." He was present at nearly all the meetings, and encouraged with his firm yet gentle "amens," and also added aid in giving plain, healthy instruction to those seeking the knowledge of sins forgiven.

We held meetings at the chapel only once or twice a week, the rest of the time going among the citizens and holding meetings at private houses. God set his seal upon his own blessed truth, and at nearly every meeting some one, and sometimes from ten to twenty, promised by rising or by their testimony to seek the Lord, until over one hundred souls, from the aged down to the little child, confessed their earnest desires to become Christians. Just how many had found Jesus a personal Saviour before we left we cannot tell, not near all of them of course. Bro. Fee had baptized ten, and quite a number of others were talking and praying in the meetings, acting like real converts.

Berea College has done much for the elevation of the colored people. It looked good to see the happy faces of the colored young people right beside the white ones, with no fear in their hearts of ridicule. But I found the same failure in Berea College that I find in nearly all such schools—a love of ornamenting the body. As I saw the feathers, flowers, jewels, silks, and different trimmings, I could not help but think how many plain clothes the money spent for these superfluous things might buy. One feather would buy a plain dress for some poor girl that would last a term, one flower a pair of shoes, one pair of bracelets would buy her books, one ring pay her tuition, and one silk dress pay her board. Thus one term of schooling might be given another from the price of ornaments on a single person. While these schools are doing much to educate the poor, I can see how they could do much more. Oh, that many might see this as the few do, and dress as well as do anything else in the name of Jesus, not in the name of the proud world. The field is so wide, and life is so short, do all we can and spend all we can in the blessed cause, and we have done but little compared to what there is to do after all. May the Holy Spirit quicken the people to value time and money for Jesus' sake, and use it for eternity.

I went with Bro. Fee into the mountain country in Jackson county, where I found a large congregation of intelligent people. The children especially were bright looking, and earnest listeners to the truth. A number of the ladies called on me while I was there, and I found them sensible, modest women. They possessed both honesty and intelligence, and thus would take facts and reasonings presented and weigh them in the light of the Bible, and make careful decisions. But the people there are poor in this world's goods. They need a house for worship, a house for a school. They need a Christian teacher. Who is consecrated to the Lord that will go into such a field for the sake of souls? Who is keeping in gold, in notes, in land, in stocks, some of the Lord's money that ought to be sent to John G. Fee to build these houses? I have written this letter without consulting man, but God, and I trust to the Holy Spirit to stir up some pure souls to help in this work. If any young person with sufficient talent and education, entirely consecrated to God, taking the plain, narrow way, and willing to suffer for Jesus' sake, feels led of the Spirit to go into such a field as teacher, they will receive a hearty welcome by the people; they will also find in Bro. Fee a counselor and friend, and in the Lord a sure guide. For I am sure the Lord lives in the mountains of Kentucky as well as anywhere. And may some man or woman who holds the keys to one of the Lord's chests be stirred to action and send by the return mail, or put into the hands of a faithful missionary who will soon carry it there, the means to erect a comfortable house for worship in that place. In Jesus' name I write,

THE

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. MEMORIAL RESOLUTIONS

ADOPTED BY THE ALUMNI ASSOCIATION OF WHEATON COLLEGE AT THEIR ANNUAL REUNION, JUNE 18, 1884.

WHEREAS, In the providence of God, the Associated Alumni of Wheaton College have been called upon within the past year to mourn the loss of four of their members, viz.: EDWARD B. SELLERS of the class of 1866, SAMUEL F. STRATTON of 1865, FRANK W. COMFORT of 1875, and CYRUS L. BLANCHARD of 1878, and

WHEREAS, While we bow in submission to the will of our Heavenly Father, who has, we believe, removed from earth to himself these our brothers who so faithfully preached his gospel and stood for the right, each in his place and calling, as it had been given them to discern it, and who were so "lovely and pleasant in their lives and in their deaths not long divided," yet remembering the injunction to "weep with those who weep," and desiring to testify our love and esteem for those who have finished with joy their earthly course; be it

Resolved, That we hereby express our sorrow that they are to meet no more with us in the halls of Alma Mater, and that no more we shall hear of the gospel preached, of wrong righted and good done through them in the name of the Master.

Resolved, That, while we deplore their loss to us the Alumni of Wheaton College, to Alma Mater as cherished and loyal sons and to the world as benefactors, we, humbly imploring divine aid, pledge ourselves to greater loyalty to truth and to greater usefulness in the world, remembering that the time is short and that what we do we must do quickly.

Resolved, That we extend our warmest sympathies to the relatives and friends of the departed, being assured that they sorrow not as those who have no hope.

Resolved. That these resolutions be enrolled on the minutes of the Association and that they be published in the Christian Cynosure, the Wheaton Illinoian and the College Record.

WILBER F. BAKER, Sec'y.

OBITUARY.

Died of pneumonia, on the 17th of March 1884, ABNER ORR, after four months residing in Marshal Co., Kansas, leaving a wife and five children to mourn his loss. The subject of this sketch was born in Gurnsey Co., Ohio, Jan 30th, 1830, converted at an early age, joined the M. E. church, and was licensed to preach. He took deacon's orders in the year 1859 by the hand of Bishop Simpson, and elder's orders in 1861, from Bishop Scott, and in 1874 took a transfer from the Iowa conference to the Missouri. Up to this time he had labored successfully and acceptably, but in 1875 he espoused the anti-secret cause, and openly rebuked and preached against the secret works of darkness, for he considered it an evil; and so considering, he felt it his duty, as a watchman on the walls of Zion, to cry out against the vile system. At that time his persecutions began, of which you are partially acquainted. In 1878 the Missouri conference located him under false charges. He was a staunch reformer, and where conscience or duty was involved he knew no compromise. The anti-secret cause has lost a faithful advocate, and his family a wise counselor. Almost his last words were, "My feet are on the rock. O glory!" and he often requested his little girl to sing, "Jesus Lover of my Soul," in which he would join while he had strength. So his friends "mourn not as those that have no hope." The funeral services were conducted by the Baptist minister who visited him in his illness, from Phillipians 1: 23, to a large concourse of people in the Baptist church at Elm Creek, Kan., and his remains now lie in the Elm Creek churchyard. May the Lord comfort the family, whose circle he in his wisdom has broken.

THE COLLEGES.

MONMOUTH:—The Commencement exercises at Monmouth college, June 19th, were attended by large audiences. The class of eighteen acquitted themselves in a manner worthy of the institution. Pres. McMichael being absent at the Pan-Presbyterian Council at Belfast, Ireland, Dr. Hutchison presided on the occasion. A correspondent of the Blanchard, Iowa, Record, narrates a strange performance that near the close too seriously marred the harmony of the occasion:

"At the delivering of diplomas a little incident occurred which will show the position Monmouth college takes on the fraternity question. When two of the gentlemen received their diplomas and were walking back to their places, they displayed a fraternity badge under their coats. Of course all in sympathy with college fraternities cheered, but immediately after dismissal a meeting of the senate was called upon the stage, and the two gentlemen were called to explain. They did not feel disposed to make an explanation at first but soon found that nobody was in fun, and fearing lest their degrees should be taken away or their diplomas revoked, they confessed that some of their frats from Galesburg had given them the badges and that they were not in connection with any college fraternity. Thus the very means that the young men took to encourage a spirit of disobedience among the students resulted in confirming and strengthening the college law in its influence upon the minds of the students."

The editor of the Record makes this comment:

"Our letter from Monmouth this week reveals a little of the workings of secretism in colleges. The senate and faculty of the college at that place have always set their faces like a flint against the fraternities. They have determined they shall not maintain an existence there. And we believe one means used to keep these societies down, has been to refuse to graduate students who are known to belong to them, either there or elsewhere. Hereafter it may be presumed unsafe for a passing graduate to display a society pin or badge on the platform commencement day at Monmouth college.

—Wheaton College catalogue shows a marked degree of prosperity during the year just ended in all departments. 244 students have been in attendance and in the Theological Seminary eleven more are listed, most of whom are also connected with some department of the College. The Trustees lost a valued counselor in the death of Moses Pettengill of Peoria. Few men have taken a deeper or more constant interest in the institution than he, although he had also established a young ladies' seminary in Peoria. Over $4,500 in donations were received during the year. There is much history connected with some of these gifts, which proves the gracious power of God in answer to prayer. The fall term opens on Tuesday, the 2d of September.

—Avalon College shows that it has a strong hold in the popular esteem of the parents of northwestern Missouri. Though the regular classes are small the total attendance is 220. President Kephart is assisted by ten other instructors. The fall term opens Wednesday, September 3d. Three courses of study are provided which differ chiefly in the amount of Greek and Latin required.

The attendance at some of the leading colleges for the current year is as follows: Michigan University stands at the head with 1,554 students; Harvard, 1,522; Columbia, 1,520; University of Pennsylvania, 1,044; Massachusetts Institute of Technology, 561; Princeton, 527. As regards the number of professors in each, however, the order will be somewhat changed. University of Michigan is omitted, owing to lack of data. Harvard has 32 professors, and a total of 55 instructors. Princeton comes next with 28 professors, and a total of 34, including tutors, etc. Yale, 20 professors, and total of 30 instructors. Columbia, 12, and total of 29. Of these four last named, Harvard was founded in 1636; Yale, 1701; Princeton, 1746; Columbia, (King's), 1754. Together with these statistics of number of students and professors, it would be interesting to note the sizes of libraries in the last named institutions. Harvard once more heads the list with a total of 277,700 volumes. Yale, total, 161,000 volumes. Princeton, 122,000 volumes. Columbia, 47,000 volumes. Harvard at present has 8 Fellows; Princeton 8; Yale, 3; and Columbia, 2.

—Hamilton College, Utica, New York, is having its tribulations. When Dr. Darling, the president, arose to preach the Baccalaureate sermon during the recent anniversary, not a member of the senior class was present in the seats reserved for them. It was an intentional slight, and a result of the bolt of the seniors last winter. Later it is reported that all but two of the members of the faculty have signed a paper requesting the removal of Dr. Darling from the presidency of the college.

—Rev. Wm. Johnston of College Springs, Iowa, received the degree of D.D. from Monmouth College at its late commencement.

—Prof. John Bascom, president of the State University at Madison, Wisconsin, is being attacked on account of his earnest prohibition principles, and a strong effort is being made by some influential persons to have him removed.

FARM AND GARDEN.

MEASURING HAY.

Is there any rule for measurement by whieh the weight of hay in bin or mow can be aseertained without taking it out and weighing it?—E. E. S., Spruce Creek, Pa.

An approximate, not aeeurate determination of the weight may be made by first measuring the length, breadth and height of the mass of hay, and thus find the number of eubic feet. Then for well paeked and settled timothy or other hay of similar texture, allow at least 500 cubie feet to the ton. Toward the top of the mow it will require 550 or more; under a very heavy weight near the bottom a ton may possibly be a little less. Clover hay will require nearly 700 cubic feet. Fine hay, cut early, will settle more eompaetly than coarse, ripe hay. It requires some experienee with measurements and and weights to determine the weight accurately by this mode.

KEEP ACCOUNTS.

A great many farmers go to the groeery or dry goods store and buy goods on time, not even asking the price, but leaving it to the honesty of the dealer. These people find, when they go to settle up, that the bill is larger than they expected. Accounts run up faster than we think if we do not keep track; we forget so many little items that make a large sum in a short time. I call to mind an old farmer who did not keep aeeounts. I worked for him onee, drawing logs for a man by the load; neither kept aecount of the number of loads drawn, and the account is unsettled yet. I think we should teach our boys and girls, as soon as old enough, to keep aceount of what is bought for them, or let them attend to the eggs and poultry sold, and they will soon learn to keep accounts for themselves.

CORN FODDER AS GOOD AS HAY.

A correspondent of the Prairie Farmer writes that the advice given recently about growing corn fodder reminds him of the practice of Hon. George F. Lord, of Elgin, Ill., as related by President W. D. Hoard, of the Northwestern Dairymen's Association: "Mr. Lord keeps 100 cows on 300 aeres of land, and has not raised a pound of hay for years. The corn is sowed in drills three and a half feet apart, and about the time it blossoms, it is cut with a self-raking reaper, cutting one row at a time, and the machine throwing it off in gavels. When sufficiently wilted, it is bound and set in large stacks and allowed to cure, standing on the ground until winter sets in, when it is hauled to the barn. He secures a yield of about seven tons of cured fodder per aere, worth as much as the best hay, and is thus enabled to devote a large amount of his land to pasture. He is one of the suecessful dairymen of Illinois."

FARM CELLARS.

Farm cellars are usually made receptacles for milk at this season. They are, on the whole, perhaps better for this purpose than any other place, where there is no specially provided dairy, but in most cases are not very well arranged. As a rule they are not well lighted or ventilated, are too damp and too cold, and too often used as stores for objectionable matters; or rather these matters, sueh as some odorous vegetable, are not properly cared for and beeome objeetionable, more on that aceount than for their intrinsic character. But the general care of cellars ineludes their proper use for all purposes, and a few suggestions at this time may be useful. Ventilation is, perhaps, the most important matter to be considered. And this is so because of the fact that the cellar necessarily becomes filled with what we may call "ground air," or air which percolates and circulates through the soil. Heretoforc this fact has been wholly ignored, and it has only been brought to notice since the rise of what might be called sanitary scienee. The air which rises from the floor and percolates through the walls of cellars at every change of temperature or pressure, is known to be charged with mueh unwholesome and injurious matter, which, of course, finds its way into the dwelling and endangers the health of the occupants. It also injures the milk, meat, or other articles that may be kept in the cellar, and is the unsuspected cause of much trouble in this respect. So that the ventilation of a cellar should be very thorough, and air should be admitted from the purest souree, and diseharged into some channel by which it may be not only carried off, but actually drawn into it. A ehimney that is in use is the best outlet for the ventilation of a eellar, and the outer air, brought in at least three feet above the ground, is the best souree of a fresh supply. The next important matter is the temperature, and this requires much careful arrangement. Beeause cellars are used as places for general storage, and while vegetables require to be kept as eool as possible, milk and cream need be kept warm. This makes a division of the cellar requisite, and separate apartments for vegetables and the milk. Then the ventilation should be also made separate, for it will not do to take air from the eold vegetable department into the milk room. The latter must be kept wholly separate, and ean be heated in several ways. A very little heat will raise the temperature of a moderate sized cellar. A block of iron made red hot, a pan of hot water, a few hot bricks will often warm a milk cellar sufficiently, while a pailful of water placed in a cold vegetable cellar will absorb the cold and prevent frost, for water will freeze first, and in freezing will give out a large part of its latent heat, which actually raises the temperature of the air in the cellar.—N. Y. Times.

BUGS ON VINES.

Dust White Hellebore powder on the leaves of the young plants early in the morning while the dew is on, to check the ravages of the Striped Bug, and when the plants get strong with large leaves sprinkle on a weak solution of Paris Green, say a teaspoonful to the gallon of water. This will not hurt the leaves, while it is death to the Squash Bug. Be careful to keep the water well stirred, or the Paris Green, if applied too thick, may wither up the succulent leaves.

THE FAMILY COW IN MIDSUMMER.

On farms where the dairy is an important part of the husbandry, provision is made by sowing soiling crops, to supplement the diminished pasturage in midsummer. Those who keep only the "family cow," or at most two or three cows, find the flow of milk to decrease, and often without any green crop provided for keeping it up. The territory of those who keep but a single cow, is often restricted to a small pasture and a vegetable garden. The garden should be made to supplement the pasture, and this may be done to some extent by securing for the cow much from the garden that usually goes to waste. Everyone who has a garden tries to have an abundance of green peas. After the vines have yielded their last profitable picking, instead of allowing them to remain upon the ground until that is wanted for another crop, feed the vines to the cow while they are still green and succulent. So with sweet corn. When the last ear is plucked from a stalk or a hill, do not wait until the whole patch or row can be cleared, but pull up the stalks that have been deprived of ears, a few at a time, and feed them while in their best condition. The outer leaves of early cabbages, and the leaves of beets, carrots and turnips, carefully saved, will make an important item in the sueculent food for the cow. If there is a space in the garden, from which an early crop has been removed, and it is not needed for a late garden crop, it should be growing something for the cow. Sweet corn may be sown thickly in rows for "fodder corn," and afford welcome feed. It is well to have an abundance of cabbage plants of a large, late variety, and set them out wherever there is room, and far beyond the needs of the family. An occasional cabbage next winter will be a treat to the cow. Experiments made a dozen years ago with some twenty varieties of the Southern Cow Pea showed, incidentally, that, even at the North, if they did not ripen their seeds, they would give an enormous weight of herbage upon a small area. This pea is highly valued for animals at the South, both fresh and as hay, and seems to be worth trying in Northern localities, as a soiling plant. Where there is room, even a few square yards, it may be well to sow either Hungarian grass, or one of the plants called Millet, for late summer feed for the cow. If the soil is rich, an abundant crop may be cut. Besides summer feed in the garden, if there is room there or elsewhere, it is well to think of Jerusalem Artichokes as a winter treat. It is late now for a large crop, but with the tops, which are highly relished, the tubers, being crisp, sueculent and highly nutritious, will be most aceeptable as an addition to dry fodder. When one onee fairly undertakes to produce the greatest possible amount of cow food from a small area of land, he will be surprised at the results that he obtains, especially those seen in the pail.—American Agriculturist for July.

TREATMENT OF EARACHE.—It is said that by the following simple method almost instant relief from earaehe is afforded: put five drops of ehloroform on a little cotton or wool in the bowl of a clay pipe, then blow the vapor through the stem into the aching ear.—Medical Record.

HER SECRET TROUBLES.

THE UNKNOWN TRIALS WHICH A WOMAN ENDURED WITHOUT COMPLAINT— WHY THEY VANISHED.

Near the close of one of the most trying of the few hot days of the present year a pale, care-worn woman might have been seen at the window of her dwelling apparently in a condition of complete exhaustion. Her efforts to meet the accumulated duties of her household had been great but unsuccessful, while the care of a sick child, whose wails could even then be heard, was added to her otherwise overwhelming troubles. Nature bad done much for her and in her youthful days she had been not only beautiful, but the possessor of health sueh as is seldom seen. But home and family duties and the depressing cares which too often accompany them had proven greater than her splendid strength, and she felt at that moment not only that life was a burden but that death would be a grand relief. This is no unusual experience. It is, in fact, a most common everyday occurrenee, and a great prayer is constantly ascending from thousands of homes for deliveranee from the deadly power whieh is enslaving so many wives, mothers and daughters. And yet these duties of life must be met. No woman can afford to turn aside from the proper care of her home and the ones who are eommitted to her care, although in doing these duties she may sacrifice her health, and possibly life itself. The experience of one who suecessfully overcame such trials and yet retained health and all the blessings it brings is thus told by Rev. William Watson, Presiding Elder of the Methodist-Episcopal church, residing at Watertown, N. Y. He said:

"My wife became completely run down through overwork and care of a sick member of our household, and I entertained serious apprehensions as to her future. She was languid, pale, utterly exhaustcd, without appetite, and in a complete state of physical decline. And yet she did not, could not neglect her duties. I have seen her about the house, trying courageously to care for the ones she loved when I could tell, from the lines on her face how much she was suffering. At times she would rally for a day or two and then fall back into the state of nervous exhaustion she felt before. Her head pained her frequently, her body was becoming bowed by pain and all hope of enjoyment in life seemed departed. What to do we could not tell. I resolved, however, to bring back her life and vitality if possible and to this end began to treat her myself. To my great relief her system has been toned up, her strength restored, her health completely recovered and wholly by the use of Warner's Tippecanoe, which I regard as the greatest tonic, invigorator and stomach remedy that has ever been diseovered. I was led to use it the more readily as I had tested the health-restoring properties of Warner's Safe Cure in my own person and I therefore knew that any remedy Mr. Warner might produee would be a valuable one. I have since recommended both Warner's Tippecanoe and Warner's Safe Cure to many of my friends and I know several Doctors of Divinity as well as numerous laymen who are using both with great benefit."

If all the overworked and duty driven women of America could know of the experience above deseribed, and act upon the same, there can be little doubt that much of the pain, and most of the depressing influenees of life might be avoided. Such truths are too valuable to remain unknown.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

IN BRIEF.

Important discoveries have recently been made in Egypt, the Holy Land and Syria. At a place called Eikmeen, in Upper Egypt, Professor Maspero has come upon a huge necropolis, of which hitherto there was no knowledge. In five tombs, or catacombs, he found 120 mummies. After three hours' examination of the neighborhood he discovered 100 more similar sepulchres, all intact. It is concluded that Eikmeen must contain at least five or six thousand embalmed dead, and that although not perhaps a very large proportion of the mummies may be of any great historical value, there will be quite a harvest of papyri, jewels and funeral treasures of various kinds. The place is identical with the ancient Khemnis—the Panopolis of the Greeks. The discoveries made in Syria and Palestine within the last year or two have been of equal interest. Among these prominence is given to a marble pedestal ornamented with bas-reliefs and inscriptions supposed to have belonged to the pagan temples built in the Græco-Roman period on Mount Gerzim, a Christian inscription, a Jewish sepulchre and other remarkable finds at Amwas, now identified with Emmaus Nicopolus; to a votive paten or plate for the eucharistic bread found on the Mount of Olives, and to various Roman, Greek and Arabic inscriptions. To all these discoveries M. Clermont Ganneau attaches much importance, as being illustrative of different denominations, but he admits that forgery of antiquities is extensively practiced, and points out some of the difficulties which lie in the way of the archæological investigator. At Jerusalem a thriving trade is done in bogus relics.

In England the mails are used for the transmission of nearly every species of merchandise. Fish, game, meat, butter, eggs, fruit, cream, and all other farm products are transmitted through the English parcels post at very cheap rates. In a word, the British Post Office really does the express business of the country.

A young man having asked a young lady if he could accompany her home, and was refused, said, "You're as full of airs as a music box." "Perhaps so," she replied, "but if I am I don't go with a crank."

An English servant girl who had returned from the United States to visit her friends at home, was told that she looked really aristocratic. To which she responded: "Yes; in America we all belong to the hire class."

Ten Frenchmen were killed and thirty-three wounded. The Chinese have 10,000 regulars between Bak-le and Langson. It is reported Admiral Courbet has been instructed to demand a public apology of China as well as indemnity for a violation of the treaty by the Chinese at Langson, and in case China refuses to grant this the French fleet will bombard the Chinese cities.

—A Paris, France, dispatch says that M. de Lesseps has issued invitations, in the name of the Franco-American Union, for the official presentation to Minister Morton, on July 4th, of the Bartholdi statue. M. Ferry, the Premier, will be present.

—The Asiatic cholera broke out in the city of Toulon, France, early last week, and caused an immediate panic, thousands fleeing from the city. The plague has been spreading and a dispatch from Marseilles dated 29th, says the panic on account of the appearance of the cholera is increasing. The railway stations are crowded with persons anxious to flee from the contagion. Fires are kept burning in the streets to purify the air, which has become decidedly offensive. Six deaths occurred here to-day and nine at Toulon, where there is no change for the better.

—The officers of the railroads traversing Iowa have issued a circular stating that in compliance with the law they will not receive any intoxicating liquors for transportation from any point either within or without the State to any point within its limits after July 4th.

President Arthur's veto of the Fitz John Porter bill killed that scheme of disloyalty. The House passed it over the veto and then gave itself up to frantic and senseless yelling. In the Senate the vote was a tie, two-thirds being required. The argument of the veto was well made that the bill overstepped the limits set for Congress by the Constitution, in making appointments without the executive nomination. There may be yet life enough in Porter to rally in the event of Democratic success next fall, but at present his labor for twenty years to undo the bad work of one fatal day seems to have been lost.

"Positively no Chicago meats sold here. Central Labor Union." This is the order of secret labor lodges in New York, protecting members in their business as butchers, pretendedly against the Chicago butchers, but really at the expense of the poor of New York who would be glad to save a few cents per pound on meat. The Central Labor Association is composed of a number of labor societies, the butchers, house-painters, etc., and is a fair example of the lodge war on monopoly under the name of "Anti-monopoly." Three-fourths of the New York shops hang out the sign under threat of being boycotted by the labor lodges, which have put out a circular denouncing the Chicago firms by name, for "supplying the poor working masses of this great city with cheap meat, shipped in refrigerator cars from Chicago which they offer to the public at a much lower price than the meat which is slaughtered in New York." The monopoly of all monopolies is the lodge.

The Democratic convention, which now for a second time this year fills the streets, the hotels and the newspapers of Chicago with the excitement of political strive, is not an assembly to be ashamed in the presence of the men who nominated Blaine and Logan. Some, remembering only the remote constituents of there leaders, have expected to see the familiar marks of carousal, but are surprised to find them no more frequent than in June. The Democrats have sent also men of greater national prominence than composed the working force in the Republican ranks, and they give promise of a meeting of some character and influence throughout the country; and if there shall prove to be as little difference in the platforms as has appeared for several years past, the contest will be simply a personal one between the two great parties. Republicans acknowledge this and count much on the personal influence of their nominees. They have planned well for a campaign without principles, but are likely to lose the game.

Friday was Iowa's greatest Independence day. The will of the people against the saloon came into legal effect as the clock struck twelve at midnight July 3d. The saloons braced themselves for the event by giving away liquor to already drunken crowds. During the national holiday they were quiet, but threaten to defy law and the popular will behind it. The "river towns" on each side of the State will be the seat of war and are raising funds to fight the law. The subterfuges which already appear mark the devilish character of this business, the "father of lies" inspiring it. Whisky flasks made in imitation of prayerbooks are being manufactured for extensive sale in the State. Satan is always for hiding his business behind God's altar.

Carter Harrison, mayor for the third time of Chicago, by the will of the saloons and gambling dens, was nominated for governor of Illinois by the Democratic convention at Peoria, last week. He has received the largest Democratic majorities in this city ever cast, has given the party the prestige of success, and put its machine into such effective order that he is not without hope of being the first Democratic governor for many years. His war on the gamblers has been patched up, or he has persuaded them that the sacrifice is necessary to party success—at any rate McDonald and Mackin, their leaders, have rallied to him after their late castigation. The liquor saloons of the city are beginning to put out their great signs "Democratic headquarters," "30,000 votes for Harrison; united we stand, divided we fall," etc., and so far as Chicago is concerned, where Harrison is at home, it is a campaign with the saloon to the front.

Ben Butler is the sphinx, the phenomenon of the campaign. His Greenback and Anti-monopoly followers promised the trail of blazing rockets and the reverberation of cannon all across the country as he journeyed from Boston, to end with a demonstration on the streets of Chicago that should eapture the Demoeratic convention and make his election sure. The plan failed partially, but there was a popular hurrah for Butler here Saturday evening which Grant in his palmy days, or the Knight Templar Masons of 1880 might have envied. To be sure a crowd is easily raised in Chicago, and a fine evening with a large procession was sure to bring out the curious and the idle, but when the parade of the labor lodges reached the vicinity of the Palmer House they could not get within a block and a half of the stand where their short hero was speaking. Tens of thousands blocked the streets and every window and balcony of the great hotel was full. The whole lit up brilliantly by the electric made such a welcome as any ambition could have desired. Butler held a reception in his room for an hour or so and was thronged upon as if he were already President. Last winter he was one day waiting at the White House to see President Arthur. It was reception day and the throng filed past, he concluded to shake hands also. If he had not the hair he had at least the assurance of Absalom, as with a twinkle of his oblique optics he would remark to each "I hope to meet you here again, sir." Massachusstts joked once too often with Butler and the folly was a costly one. Must the nation learn wisdom ouly by experiment?

The trade union lodges of Chicago are jubilant at the reception of their candidate. When their exultation gets the better of their discretion we shall learn what part the secret orders are playing in this campaign. Lately a bill passed Congress establishing a Bureau of Labor. The President with the evident purpose of attracting the labor vote, appointed John Jarrett of Pittsburgh, to be head of this bureau. But Jarrett is president of the combined iron worker's lodges which controls that handicraft throughout the country; he is, moreover, a strong Butler man. The Anti-monopoly candidate appears therefore to have the backing of the government, and his popularity is causing anxiety among politicians who do not know how these matters are worked beneath the surface.

There is as much difference between the counsel that a friend giveth and that which a man giveth himself as there is between the counsel of a friend and of a flatterer, for there is no such flatterer as a man's self, and there is no such remedy against the flattery of a man's self as the liberty of a friend.—Bacon.

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY VS. PROHIBITION. PROHIBITION VS. LICENSE.

BY GEORGE W. CLARK.

And so the great party of "moral ideas," the great "loyal and patriotic party," the "greatest friend of temperance and reform," has come and gone in its great National Convention, without a word, without a nod, without a smile, or sign of even recognition of the millions of temperance men and women who have been struggling so long and earnestly to save the country from the curse of intemperance, and who have hoped and prayed and appealed to that party, but in vain, to submit the question of liquor prohibition to the people. But this question cannot much longer be thus shuffled off, slutfed off, or sneered off by the politicians, however unprincipled or astute they may be; or by the liquor interest however selfish, mercenary or powerful it may be. The destinies of millions of human beings for weal or for woe, for time and for eternity, are wrapt up in it—the stability and perpetuity not only of the social, civil and political institutions of the country, but the very existence of civil government itself. It is a question compared with which the long string of generalities platituded in the Republican platform sink into insignificance. The question of prohibition has come to stay

Until the right with the might,
And the might with the right,
And the truth shall be;
And come what there may
To stand in the way,
That day the world shall see.

Abolition, like Banquo's ghost, "would not down." It was not only a great disturber of the peace of the slaveholders, but a great troubler of that old and mighty political "Israel," the Whig party, and finally frightened and worried it to its death. That party undertook to play the double game of "good Lord and good devil," as between the unjust and insolent demands of the slave power on the one hand, and the just and righteous demands of liberty and humanity on the other. The consequence was fatal not only to the life and usefulness, but to the very existence of the Whig party, and it was finally crushed to its death beneath the upper and nether millstones of these antagonistic and contending powers, and thus inevitably and ignobly went down and out.

Had the Whig party been wise and true, had it unhesitatingly and unfalteringly identified itself with the cause of liberty and humanity, it would have had a living, permanent and lasting vitality, a power of endurance which would have rendered it invincible and indistructable; it would have absorbed, embodied and combined the moral forces of the country, been enabled to withstand the shock of the pro-slavery rebellion, and might have been a living, active power for good to this day. This is proven by the brilliant achievements and triumphant victories of its successor, the Republican party, which was made up of and combined the better elements of the Whig, Free Soil and Liberty parties. The Republican party is now undertaking to play the same double game between the demands of prohibition on the one side and the demands of the liquor power on the other. "History repeats itself." Let the Republican party therefore take warning from the unwise example and consequent fate of its predecessor, the great and venerated Whig party.

So prohibition, like Banquo's ghost, "will not down." Never, until it has abolished the old barbarous license system which legalizes and throws the broad shield and panoply of the LAW over and around, and thus sustains and perpetuates that great crime of crimes which perverts the wholesome fruits and grains of the earth which God has given for the sustenance of man and beast into intoxicating poisons, beastializing and degrading humanity, demoralizing and sapping the foundations of socicty, causing crimes and miseries so shocking and revolting as to be beyond the power of human language to describe or the human mind to conceive; and the Republican party and the government under its rule and control, by taking the bribe or blood money from the liquor mongers and legalizing their murderous business, whether by "high" or "low license," becomes particeps criminis in the degradation, the crimes and wretchedness which flow from it, and should be held responsible therefor.

The position of the Republican party and the action of the government under its administration put into concise words is exactly this—

> "For so much gold we license thee
> A daught to sell,
> Which bows the strong, enslaves the free,
> And opens wide the gates of hell."

Every day's newspapers teem with accounts of the horrid outrages, the ghastly murders, and heart-rending domestic miseries caused directly by this licensed liquor business—scenes, the very thought of which coagulates the blood in our veins, and humanity involuntarily cries out, "How long, O Lord, how long!" When shall these waves of blood and death be stayed? Not long ago a young man, frenzied with liquor from the licensed drunk-shops in Rochester, brutally murdered an old man, and now lies sentenced, but unhung, in our jail. A short time since another graduate of the same licensed drunk-shops murdered his victim, and now lies in the same prison awaiting the same doom upon the gallows. And yet the "excise board" of Rochester, as if anxious that more of these bloody deeds should follow, are licensing these murder-machines all over the city. Now, what difference does it make with these liquor-depraved and doomed victims, or their broken-hearted wives and mothers, or with the tax-payers when they come to pay the enormous bills imposed upon them in consequence, whether it was "high license" or "low license," or whether there is a little "higher" or "lower" amount of blood money in the city coffers? How pitiable, how mercenary, nay, how wicked this excuse or justification for license flaunted in the faces of the people by the Republican party, viz., the "revenue" it brings to the government.

This is not only humiliating and degrading, but especially disgraceful to a people so boastful of their higher and more advanced civilization, their superior enterprise and wealth, and the plethory of whose treasury is already puzzling our most astute politicians. The grand old premier of England, Gladstone, said: "Give me 30,000,000 sober people and I am not afraid of the revenues." Even the heathen queen of Madagascar prohibited the liquor traffic in her realm, and said, "I refuse to take a revenue from anything that will debase and degrade my people." Examples that should put us to shame. Our own Chief Justice Greer well said, "The authority of a State is competent to prohibit this traffic, and if loss of revenue should accrue, the State would be the gainer a thousand-fold in the health, wealth and happiness of the people."

The consistency and economy of the license scheme, to say nothing of its gross criminality, is like holding at the little spiggot and letting it run at the big bung. It is straining out a very small gnat, while forcing whole camels down the throats of the people. It is a double dose of penny wisdom and pound foolishness.

A certain liquor seller paid his "thirty pieces of silver" for his "license to kill, sold a pint of legal whisky and made ten cents" His victim staggered home, and that night murdered his own son-in-law. The public treasury was enriched by this blood money to the extent of $30; the liquor seller's pocket ten cents. The arrest, trial, imprisonment and hanging of the murderer cost the county a thousand dollars. Just over the line from Cattaraugus county in Pennsylvania, a licensed poisoner filled an Indian's bottle with liquor. Fired by the liquor, the savage went to a farmer's house near by, and in the absence of the husband and father mangled and murdered the helpless wife and five children, all that comprised the poor man's household. What a scene of blood and slaughter for a father to witness on his return from his field of labor! But what a relief and comfort it must have been to this stricken and desolate husband and father to know that the coffers of his town had been enriched to the extent of "thirty pieces of silver," and the grog-seller had made TEN CENTS! These are the pleasant consequences and the economy of the license system.

Our New York city takes a bribe of the liquor sellers of about $300,000 a year, and their drunk-shops thus legalized impose in return a burden upon the tax-payers of over $7,000,000 a year; say nothing of the moral, social and political depravity and rottenness caused thereby, and the 5,000 palsied bodies and murdered souls sent reeking into eternity every year through the ghastly morgue. One of the city attorneys declared that of twenty-two cases of murder he had tried, every one of them was caused by the grog-shops.

Chicago takes a bribe from her drink shops of from $175,000 to $185,000 a year, and then in addition to the Sabbath desecration, the vice and crime and squalid misery produced, suffers in consequence an imposed tax of over $12,225,000! And so our Canadian neighbors, under the same wicked and delusive scheme receive for licenses some $60,000 a year, and suffer a liquor-imposed burden of taxation in consequence of over $40,000,000 a year!

I might continue these illustrations from all parts of this and other countries, showing the utter inconsistency—not only—but the outrage upon every idea of "economy," and the horrid consequences resulting to every interest of humanity from the iniquitous license scheme!

But its advocates tell us we should "license, that we may regulate the traffic." This is not only unphilosophical and immoral, but impossible and absurd. It is opening the flood gates above and then attempting to dam up and stay the rushing torrents below. It is forming and fostering the appetite, feeding and strengthening the morbid desire for liquor, firing the blood, infuriating the passions, dethroning the reason — and then attempting to "control" and "regulate" the wild and reckless outbursts of rage, of fury and fiendishness! As well talk of regulating the cyclone or tornado! As well talk of firing the magazine and then "regulating" the explosion!

The fact is, the whole license scheme is a swindle and a fraud. It is to-day the great prop and support, the great bulwark of the liquor business and its diabolical consequences in this country; and the Republican party is one of its main guys, and panders to the liquor power, as the old Whig party did to slavery—for its votes!

But they tell us—"Prohibition does not prohibit," "can't be enforced," "is a failure," etc., etc.

If in any case prohibition does not prohibit, whose fault is it? Surely not that of the law. Who are the lawless and guilty violators? The liquor men and their guilty allies, the politicians. Why don't they tell us the laws against theft, rape, arson, robbery, murder, etc., are "failures," "don't prohibit," "can't be enforced," etc? These are violated every day, and that too, through the liquor business!

Why not, therefore, give up the entire penal code, and instead, license every crime and so secure for the government a fat internal (infernal) "revenue?"

> No, "ye dare not thus unfetter every crime!
> Ye hold a halter for the wretch who slays
> His fellow man in aught but legal ways!
> Why then inflict your stripes on these, and let go,
> Unwhipt of justice, the still blacker knaves!"

I suggest to our shrewd and astute politicians that they set about correcting not the mistakes of the penal code merely, not the mistakes of Moses — but the mistakes of the Almighty, and repeal the Ten Commandments, and substitute for the crimes therein prohibited, the license scheme — "high license," of course—so that poor Uncle Sam's needy treasury shall be amply provided for, and the murderers of fathers and the murderers of mothers shall be duly authorized and lawfully equipped and protected in their work of demoralization, destruction and death.

Rochester, N. Y.

An anti-secrecy lecturer, some time since, in Indiana, stated in the course of his lecture that every regularly furnished Odd-fellows lodge had among its furniture a coffin containing a human skeleton, either real or artificial. A member of the craft in that place stood up and stoutly denied it. Subsequently the Odd-fellows lodge in that town took fire. There being no fire company or engine, all the good citizens joined in trying to save the building and its precious (?) contents. Cowans and all were freely admitted. A cowan, seeing a lot of stuff piled up in one corner, made for it, but one of the fraternity told him to let that alone, as there were other things which it was more important to save; but he heeded him not, but seizing the nondescript mass he "hove" it out at the window. When it struck the ground below, the coffin burst open, and lo! a ghastly skeleton rolled out, composed partly of real bones and partly of plaster of paris. It was said that prolonged and deafening yells went up around that blazing building, while the boys irreverently gathered up the shattered remains, put them back into the coffin, and had a mock Odd-fellows' funeral, all crying, "Now who tells the truth about the lodge coffin and skeleton?" The last seen of any part of that skeleton was the head, which one of the chagrined fraters picked up and carried off home in a bucket. If any doubt the correctness of this statement, we hold ourselves in readiness to give the name of the place and the and the gentleman who threw the coffin out.—Gath Rimmon.

THE MYSTIC ORDER OF OWLS.

When New Orleans became a part of the American republic it was inhabited by (as we remember), some ten thousand of the Latin race. As that race had its fixed manners and customs before the coming of Christ, it has preserved them to a great extent till now, and ten thousand of them have given shape and direction to the whole population of New Orleans. Hence those trivial Mardi Gras observances; that slackness in public school education; that ambition to be a third hydra-head with Richmond and Charleston in a rebellion against a Puritan republic; and hence a thousand other frivolities that distinguish the city as an American emporium.

In the early days of the war of the rebellion two political generals from New England were sent in succession to command in New Orleans. These generals had not even served an apprenticeship of colonel, as most if not all of the old army officers had done before becoming generals, and were neither military men nor statesmen. They were politicians and traders; and they did far more towards assimilating Puritan New England to Jesuit New Orleans than they did towards assimilating New Orleans to New England.

And now, as one of the consequences of this inefficient management of our war interests, Boston is imitating New Orleans in foolish Mardi Gras ceremonies. The memories of Bunker Hill of the 17th of June are degraded by a long zany-like procession got up under the auspices of what is called "The Order of the Mystic Owl," the extravagancies of which are so foolish as to make a sensible man's head swim. To see a crowd of American citizens, our governors, drunk on folly, is more lamentable than any mere drunken debauch that was ever practiced in honor of a fictitious divinity. The Saturnalia of Rome could hardly surpass it for downright unmanliness and bestiality.

Thus while Boston rears monuments to Bunker Hill, that spot so hallowed by a wreath of Puritan bygone virtues, New Orleans erects statues to rebel generals; and over all the Masonic High Priest like another pope extends his arms in unholy benediction. Generals Butler and Banks, the representatives of two opposite political parties, are both Masons and both have contributed to give up New England principles in exchange for New Orleans ones. The only cement that they have used in binding New Orleans to New England is a Masonic sticking plaster, whose cohesiveness is no stronger than that of the shallowest self-interest.

In the middle ages it was customary for a philosophic prince to have a wise fool. It has remained for republican America to exhibit the extraordinary spectacle of a sovereign people very unwisely playing the fool themselves. If they play the fool at Bunker Hill commemorations, when, in what act of their lives will they ever be wise? Under the rule of such men as get up Mardi Gras ceremonies around Bunker Hill when can honest, serious-minded men ever expect to be honored or even protected?

That Boston has thus been enabled to disgrace itself on this 17th of June, 1884, and exhibit a full-sized Mardi Gras pageant, like a monkey leaping upright into full proportions from a spring hidden in a box, is due entirely to the long Masonic training which has been given to the Bostonians by the "Grand Council of the Sovereign Princes of Jerusalem." The spring that has sent out this owl show into such sudden popular wonder and admiration is the secret religious education that is hidden in the lodge. Raise the lid and the monkey is ever ready to jump up.

It is impossible therefore to prevent our politics from running into monkeyisms, unless we can muster up American character enough to smash the box—that is, the Masonic lodge. To reform and re-Americanize the country without abolishing the lodge, that ark of the devil's covenant, is a moral impossibility. We have folly and extravagances enough to answer for without giving them a permanent organization in the lodge.

Between General Toombs calling the roll of his slaves at Bunker Hill and a Mardi Gras pageant of the Masonic lodge there, in pretended honor of its memories, which was the worse calamity for either the Republic or the Christian church?

AMERICAN.

Two men were in conversation about Freemasonry. One who was not a Mason asked the other who was, his advice as to whether he had better become a member of the order or not. After some moments of apparent serious thoughtfulness, the Mason replied: "I have spent thousands of pounds in securing the degrees I have taken and in supporting Freemasonry, and all I have gained by it is an uncontrollable thirst for rum.—Wesleyan.

WHERE ARE THE MEN?

O heard ye not the thrilling cry?
For men—for holy men—it pleadeth;
For men of faith and purpose high,
Men! men! the Lord, the Saviour needeth.

Men who on sin's dark frowning towers,
Dare plant unfurled the Christian banner,
Intent to hold it floating there
Till all earth's millions shout hosanna.

Men of seraphic, quenchless zeal,
Yet with Christ's own sweet pity tender;
Of brave stout hearts, that true as steel,
Know not the shameful word—surrender!

Men who in classic shades have won
The laurels to the foremost granted;
Than whom, a noble race to run,
No Isthmian's breast more fondly panted.

Men who for duty and for God,
From earth's best gifts and honors turning,
Could choose the path by martyrs trod,
The martyr's deathless glory earning.

"Whom shall ye send? Where are the men
Who through the world, like angels, flying,
God's truth shall bear?"—resounds again,
As Christ's own voice aloud were crying.

Ye gifted men, the young, the strong,
Self-pledged to Christ before his altar,
Hear ye not, sounding loud and long,
His pealing cry?—and can ye falter?

Leave not the souls that hopeless wait,
To linger in despairing sadness.
The hour is come! With joy elate,
Go! Bid them wake to hope and gladness!

Methinks I see a dauntless band,
The summons of the Master heeding;
Right glad to earth's remotest strand
To bear God's truth—the Master leading!

O father, keep not back thy son!
Withhold thy daughter not, O mother!
A crown by crosses shall be won,
Like which no brow can wear another.

"Send me!"—the loud response I hear—
"Send me!"—e'en with the call is blending;
Rejoice, O earth, the morn is near,
Thy long dark night of sorrow ending.

THE CONGO QUESTION.

THE REFORMATION AND SALVATION OF A CONTINENT.

It will be remembered that President Arthur in his last message to Congress suggested that measures be taken to protect our interests in the Congo region in Africa, in common with those of other nations, and that recognition be accorded to Stanley and the Association he represents in their work of suppressing the slave trade in that country. In accordance with this suggestion, the Senate has recently passed a resolution concurring in the views expressed by the President, and formally recognizing the flag of the African International Association. The justice and the importance of this action will be apparent when the aims and character of the organization referred to are understood.

Among the various societies that have been formed in years past for the promotion of civilization in the interior of Africa, none has been more broadly and practically philanthropic, and none have achieved such wide-spread and beneficent results in a brief time as the African International Association organized at Brussels, Belgium, in September, 1876, and confined in its action by a Congress at the same place in the following year, at which representatives from the United States, England and other leading nations were present. King Leopold, of Belgiun, was made its president, in his private, not in his sovereign capacity. The stated objects of the Association are of a purely international and philanthropic character. It proposes to form stations throughout the central portion of the African Continent as centers of civilizing influence, and as the nuclei of future free States which shall ultimately be left to elect their own rulers, and provide for their own maintenance. In the meantime the work of education, Christianization and material development will go on under the auspices of the Association. The traders, as well as the missionaries and travelers of all nations, having legitimate objects in view, are welcomed by the Association and afforded equal rights, advantages and protection.

The work already accomplished by the Association has been very great. It has acquired possession, by treaty or purchase of the native chiefs, of a large tract of territory in the Congo Valley and its branches, extending over two thousand miles of river bank, containing many hundreds of thousands of people, and has established twenty-five stations under the flag of the Association—a banner with a blue field and a golden star in the center. The authority of the Association is generally recognized by the natives and its rights respected. Under its auspices commerce has greatly revived, the slave trade has sensibly diminished, and numerous missionary organizations have been established with success, notably the Baptist mission at Telegu, where a wonderful work has been performed.

But now that under the wise and efficient methods of the Association this portion of Africa is assuming a commercial and general importance, the jealousies and conflicting interests of certain civilized nations seem likely to embarrass further progress, and to partially, if not wholly, defeat the ulterior objects of the movement itself.

Portugal asserts her claim to the region around the mouth of the Congo and commanding the entrance to the interior. This claim is based on a discovery made by Diego Cam, a Portuguese, about the year 1484. The discovery was followed by a nominal possession, and Christianity was established by the Jesuits as the national religion. But through the duplicity, ignorance and cruelty of the Portuguese settlers, no substantial benefits followed, either to the natives or to the nation claiming possession. The Portuguese gradually withdrew southward into Angola and Benguela, and it was not until recent years that they asserted any authority over the region north of the Ambriz river. But a treaty has just been concluded between England and Portugal which recognizes the sovereignty of the latter over that part of the west coast of Africa situated between eight degrees and five degrees, twelve min. of south latitude, including the region around the mouth of the Congo. The terms of the treaty seem fair enough on their face. Freedom of trade, navigation, settlement and religion are guaranteed to citizens of all nations, within the limits mentioned, and solemn pledges are given to suppress the slave trade not only in the Congo country, but in all other Portuguese possessions in Africa.

This compact, however, seems to create great dissatisfaction in all quarters. A vigorous protest has been made against it by various commercial bodies in Great Britain, which claim that the rule of the Portuguese is corrupt and inefficient, that their pledges will not be kept, and that their control will greatly retard, if not entirely defeat, the movement for the development of the interior. It is asserted on good authority that domestic slavery exists in the African colonies of Portugal, and that slaves are shipped every month at her port of Catumbella to labor and die at St. Thomas on the line. Opposition to the treaty has also risen in Holland on account of the interests which the Dutch have on the South African coast; and France comes forward with her claims and insists that there shall be a tripartite treaty, and that France shall be represented in the Congo Commission with Portugal and England. On the other hand, a certain faction at Lisbon is dissatisfied, asserting that Portugal has conceded too much, and that she has placed herself in a ruinous and humiliating position before England. The formal recognition by our government of the International Association may also be construed as a protest against the action of England in assuming to herself the protectorate of a territory over which she has no stronger claims than any other civilized country.

It is difficult to see how any material advantages to the region in question can result from this coalition.

The great object of every movement in that country at present is, or ought to be, to suppress the slave traffic, to elevate the native tribes and promote the general interests of civilization. This is precisely the work being done by the International Association, and in a far more vigorous manner than ever before. The question is, why not allow it to pursue this grand work unembarrassed by the selfish interests of any nation?—New York Observer.

THE DEGRADATION OF RUSSIA'S PRIESTHOOD.

Every parish priest in Russia is obliged to be a married man; that is to say, he must have a wife as a preliminary condition to the possession of a parish, but must be married before he has been ordained priest, for a priest cannot marry. Formerly the rule of a married parochial clergy was enforced so rigorously that when a priest's wife died the widower had to resign his benefice and betake himself to a convent. The rule worked so cruelly, especially in the case of the children thus suddenly bereft of both parents, that it was relaxed in the late Emperor's reign, and now a widowed priest may return to his parochial charge. The parish clergy, however, are still a caste, and a despised caste. In social standing they are little above the peasantry. They are never met in the drawing-rooms of the gentry; and if a gentleman resolves to adopt a clerical career he never dreams of entering the ranks of the "white," that is the parochial clergy; he joins the "black" clergy, or monks, from whom the bishops are invariably chosen. It is curious that a people so devoted to their religion as the Russians should treat the offspring of their priesthood with such contumely. They compel their parish priests to be married, and yet regard descent from a priest as a kind of social original sin, for which there is no laver or regeneration. No wonder that Nihilism counts many of its most daring recuits among the victims of such gross social injustice.—Fortnightly Review.

THE CAMORRA.

THE SECRET ASSASSINS OF ITALY.

[From Chamber's Journal.]

An association of malefactors, organized with grades of promotion for proved valor, like an order of knighthood, and exercising such an influence over the minds of its disciples as to raise them to a perverted heroism of crime; a gigantic monopoly of violence and extortion, forming a state within the state, sometimes treated with on equal terms by its legitimate though feebler rival in authority, sometimes persecuted, never extirpated; an organization of criminals holding formal councils, employing a regular staff of officials, collecting and distributing a vast revenue, exacting a certain amount of relative respectability as a condition of membership, convoking tribunals whose sentences are executed with inexorable rigor—such a mysterious and powerful conspiracy against the established order of society is described in M. Marc Monnier's valuable brochure on the Camorra of Naples.

The author, writing in 1862, from investigations carefully made into the records of the police, speaks in the past tense of the constitution of the Camorra as it flourished during the rule of the Bourbons, and naturally assumes that it must disappear, with the other abuses of that unhappy regime, under the reformed government of United Italy. Twenty years have since then passed away, and the Camorra, energetically attacked by every successive governor and prefect of Naples, is still all-powerful in its subterranean machinations, as a few recent instances of its action suffice to show.

The most striking of these was the murder of Carlo Borrelli, less than five years ago, by formal decree of the Camorra, whose agent, Raffaelle Esposito, was selected by lot to do the deed. The most alarming part of the occurrence was the display of popular feeling called forth by the conviction of Esposito, the murderer, who received such an ovation on his passage through the Toledo as had not been seen in Naples since the entrance of Garibaldi. Flowers were strewn on his path from balconies and windows; the long street surged from end to end with an acclaiming populace, disgorged into the daylight from all the swarming dens between the Porta Capuana and the Mercatello, and the criminal's progress was accompanied by sobs of sympathy and admiration from those clumsy dark-haired women, whose superficial aspect of lazy good-humor masks a capacity for tragic fury. But even more significant as an indication of public sentiment was the posthumous vengeance wrecked by the mob on the body of the murdered man, deposited according to Neapolitan usage, for twenty-four hours previous to interment, in the mortuary chapel of the new cemetery, on the beautiful slope of Poggio Reale, overlooking the bay. Even in that sacred spot, consecrated by the mournful memories of the entire city, the execrated remains were, during the night, mutilated, defiled, and assailed with every outrage and indignity that the fiendish malignity of a savage rabble could suggest. In that carnival of ribald passion, the Camorra showed its unshaken hold on the affections of the people, while it gave a signal example of that insatiable vengeance on the traitor which even his death could not appease.

Much about the same period was committed a crime which caused great excitement among the English residents at Naples, as the victim belonged to their community. He was an inoffensive man, leading a retired life, and his only crime was that, by his cultivation and sale of flowers, he interfered with the monopoly of the market enjoyed by the clients of the Camorra. For this he was murdered one evening in his garden, as a signal warning to all poachers on the preserves of the society.

The next outrage we shall refer to occurred in the winter of 1872–73, and in this case also the sufferer was an Englishman. He was a doctor in good practice, and lived, with his wife and a very large family of children, in a handsome palace near the Chiaia. One day, to his dismay, he received a letter threatening him with assassination unless he consented to pay the sum of a thousand francs, inclosed in an envelope, and addressed in a particular way, to be called for at the post-office. He laid this missive before the authorities, who advised him to send the money as directed, while guards should be stationed in the post-office to arrest the person who claimed it. This course, however, which has often been adopted with success in similar cases, he declined, from timidity, to follow, requesting instead that a personal guard should be assigned to himself. The guard was given, and four men thenceforward watched his house while he was within, and attended him through the streets when he walked abroad. But the perseverance of his enemies was not so easily balked; and one afternoon, as he was passing through a crowded thoroughfare with two municipal guards before and two behind him, a man in brushing by him, hissed into his ear, "Your precautions are useless; if we do not take your life, we will kill one of your children."

The terrible suggestion was enough for the poor doctor, who, hastening home, made all preparations for flight, and giving his wife twelve hours to pack, probably saved his life by quitting Naples that night with all his household and belongings.

The systematic and daring character of these outrages proves them to be the acts of the Camorra; and though they are only a few instances gleaned haphazard among a host of similar cases, they suffice to show that the all-powerful society is still rampant in Naples, despite the efforts of government to eradicate it. It is also a fact that stolen property can frequently be recovered by enlisting the agency of the chiefs of the Camorra (The Times correspondent, writing on September 6th, 1880, mentions this state of things with other proofs of the insecurity of property in Naples), and that ruffians can be hired by an established tariff to inflict any degree of injury on an enemy, from a stiletto between the ribs to a sound thrashing. The extremely low charge—only five francs—for the latter form of chastisement makes it a favorite mode of resenting minor incivilities, for which assassination or permanent disfigurement might even in Naples be deemed too severe a penalty.

What, then, is the nature and history of this mysterious body, so formidable, and yet so dear to the popular imagination of Naples? M. Marc Monnier's pages supply a full and sufficient answer, for while the Camorra has to some extent modified the details of its organization, to suit altered circumstances, its mode of operation, though somewhat more disguised, is practically the same as in its palmy days before the Revolution.

Now, as then, the Camorrist remains the personification of power and heroism to the Neapolitan of the lower classes, and the attainment of similar honor and distinction is the utmost goal of the ambition of the rising generation. Indifference to sufferings and danger has ever been the first requisite for success in the career; and to judge by the tests of courage our author describes him as subjected to, the young aspirant must often have found the path to glory a thorny one. A duel with the knife was the least of these ordeals, and he was liable to be put through others still more formidable. A five-sou piece, for instance, was placed on the ground in the center of a ring of associates, who all tried to transfix it with their knives; and the novice on trial, in the attempt to snatch the money from amidst the gleaming blades, often purchased his promotion at the cost of a pierced and bleeding hand.

Having passed some such trials of valor he became a "picciut disgar," which may be freely translated "bully boy;" "sgarare" in Italian meaning "to brave," and "sgariglio" "a braggart." The neophyte had then an arduous probation before him, being made over as a sort of fag or apprentice to a full Camorrist, for whom he was expected to perform all the most difficult and dangerous tasks. This novitiate might last for many years, unless the disciple had the much-desired opportunity of shortening it, by the performance of some signal act of devotion to the society, such as committing a murder on its behalf; and these occasions of distinction were so emulously sought for by the juniors that they had to be disposed of by lot. Or he might earn his step by accepting the responsibility and penalty of a crime committed by a senior member, a form of self-sacrifice called "accollarsi un delitto," and, strange to say, by no means uncommon in the records of the society. Thus, one of the sect, Filippo Cirillo, when in prison, conceived a grudge against the inspector for some trifling contradiction, and desired his death, which an enthusiastic probationer, one Zellosiello, undertook to effect. The Camorrist, who was about to be removed to another prison, bade him wait twenty-four hours after his departure before carrying out his design. His orders were punctually attended to, and at the time fixed by him his enemy was slain. Zellosiello, arrested, tried, and found guilty of the crime, expiated it on the gallows without ever breathing the name of its real author, thus dying a martyr to his ferocious code of honor.

The "picciotto" who, either by long and faithful service or by the performance of some striking act of heroism, thought himself entitled to promotion made a formal application for admission into the inner ranks of the society, where his claims were debated in solemn council. If they were found sufficient, he was initiated with a theatrical ceremony, in which a dagger, a pistol, and a glass of poisoned beverage played a part; and with his hand dipped in his own blood, the neophyte went through a sort of pantomime, expressing his devotion to the society, even to the extent of committing suicide at its bidding. Presented then by the chief to the assembled brethren with the formula, "Riconoscete l'uomo," the new Camorrist was invested with the full privileges of his order, entitled to take part in all its deliberations, and to share in the division of its spoils.

The twelve districts of Naples had each its separate branch of the society, acting independently of the others, under its local chief. The latter functionary was assisted in his administrative labors by a secretary and accountant, or cashier, whose duty was the equitable distribution of the "barattolo," or weekly revenue of the branch, divided every Sunday morning among the assembled members. This fund, which must have been very considerable, was principally the product of a tithe regularly assessed on the profits of all forms of traffic, lawful and contraband, honest or infamous. The gamester's winnings, the priest's fees, the miserable wages of the sempstress, the huckster's paltry gains, were equally mulcted of their tenth by the ubiquitous agents of the Camorra. But it must be admitted that if the society thus usurped the privileges of regularly constituted authority, it also exercised some of its functions, and the people paid its exactions willingly, because it provided efficient protection against those of others. The Camorrist intervened in all transactions, generally in the interests of justice, insisted on fair-play between the parties to every bargain, enforced a rough-and-ready order, where order besides there was none; and in quarrels often acted as an amateur judge, whose arbitration was preferred by the people, as cheaper, readier, more efficacious, and probably not less impartial than that of the regular tribunals. In the low haunts of obscure gambling, the silent man who looked on a passive spectator, and held out his hand to each winner for his tenth, saved the police the trouble of superintending those re sorts of ignoble vice. The great monopoly of crime thus often acted as a check on its commission by poachers on its privileges, and the wolves constituted themselves the guardians of the flock against the depredations of other beasts of prey.

It was in the Neapolitan prisons, where criminals were herded indiscriminately together, that the Camorra had its origin and focus, no trace of its existence without their walls being found farther back than 1830, though an association exactly similar existed in the Vicaria prison as far back as 1573. Honorary gradations of rank were recognized among the respective associations of these dungeons, the prison of Castel Capuano being pre-eminent over the others in Naples, but in its turn subordinate to the Bagno di Procida. The respective Camorras of "piazza" and "prigione" were, however, invested with co-ordinate authority, and exercised no jurisdiction the one over the other. The convict once within the prison-walls was the absolute slave of the Camorra, whose exactions met him the moment he crossed the threshold with a demand for a contribution for the "oil of the Madonna," a pious tax intended to keep a light burning before her shrine. Then followed a regular system of pillage. All the luxuries of prison-life, wine, tobacco, and gaming, were in the hands of the Camorra, which licensed their use; and in order to enjoy these solaces, the wretched prisoner parted with his food, his clothes, his bed, as he would have parted with his own soul, had it been an equally negotiable commodity. Every game of "morra," every hand at "scopa" or "briscola," paid its tithe; and while each player lost in succession, the Camorra steadily won. Thus, in the Vicaria prisons, its gains from these sources amounted in one week alone to twelve hundred francs.

The maintenance of order within the prisons was almost entirely confided to the society; as deprived of its co-operation, the authorities would have been powerless. A prisoner in Castel Capuano, a noted assassin, committed a serious breach of the prison discipline, refusing on the orders of the turnkey to leave the parlor, where he was receiving a forbidden visit. The turnkey, not daring himself to lay hands on his formidable charge, called to his aid the Camorrist chief Diego Zezza, a still more terrible man, armed with a razor set in a wooden handle, and known to make good use of this tremendous weapon. He had indeed cut a man's head clean off with it in the prison of Aversa, whence he was just arrived. He rushed at his insubordinate companion, seized him by the hair, dashed his head repeatedly against the grating, and flung him on a pallet, where he lay cowed and helpless. This terrific champion of order himself fell a victim to a rebellion against his abuse of authority, as he was assassinated by his companions in the prison of Montefusco.

Many terrible emeutes are recorded among the Camorrists of the prisons, like that in which a dangerous criminal, one Caprariello, was slain in San Stefano by his fellow-prisoners, who conspired to make a simultaneous attack on him. He defended himself like a lion at bay, wounding nine of his cowardly assailants, and retreating finally to an upper gallery overlooking the court, whence, seeing himself overmatched by desperate odds, he flung himself down on the pavement below.

The Camorra, like all other illegal organizations, rested, and still rests, on assassination as the ultimate basis of its authority; and it was within the prisons themselves that its capital sentences, pronounced after a formal trial, in which the case was argued by a public prosecutor, and defended by the prisoner's advocate, were most frequently carried out. The penalty of death was incurred not only by treason or fraud to the prejudice of the association, but also by any act of disloyalty toward one of its members, by violence committed for the benefit of or at the instigation of an outsider, and by failure to carry out the decrees and inflict the penalties of the Camorra, when intrusted with doing so.

The private resentments of these men of violence were, as might be expected, bitter and savage. One of them, after for fifteen years harboring a grudge against a comrade, whom, from his superiority in the use of the knife, he dared not attack, at last, when he was on his trial for his life, thought he saw a chance of gratifying his hatred by volunteering to be his executioner. The course of justice, however, defrauded him of this last hope, for his enemy was acquitted. A dying Camorrist, in the closing stages of lung-disease, heard that in a neighboring tavern of the Vicaria a jest had been made at his expense. He seized his knife, rushed to the spot, and slew the author of the insult; then returned home, and died in a few moments in consequence of the exertion.

The Camorra in its war upon society respects nothing so much as warlike spirit in others, and has been known to reward with honorary membership those who successfully resisted its exactions. A Calabrian priest, when introduced into the prison of Castel Capuano, refused, being himself pennilesss, to pay the usual tax for the Madonna's lamp; and on being threatened with a stick by the Camorrist collector, boldly told him he would not be so daring if he too had a weapon. "That need be no difficulty," cried the Camorrist, piqued at the taunt; and running to the deposit of arms, which the prisoners do not wear, for fear of being searched, but commit to the care of their chiefs for concealment, he returned with two knives, one of which he presented to his antagonist. A duel ensued, in which the Calabrian killed his man—a result which filled him with terror, as he feared to be at once a mark for the vengeance of the society and the justice of the law. Neither, however, resented his offense; on the contrary, the applause of the Camorra was expressed in the form of a bag of coppers left under his pillow that night, his share of the "barattolo" or revenue of the society, thenceforward paid to him weekly during his imprisonment, in recognition of his prowess.

A similar adventure occurred to another Calabrian, who, on leaving a tavern where he had been winning at billiards, was accosted by a man with a knotty stick, and summoned to deliver up a share of his gains in the name of the Camorra. He declined, and, brandishing a dagger, put the knight of the cudgel to flight. Next day, at the same place and hour, he was met by a mysterious individual, again with a stick, which, however, he presented not in menace, but in amity. "Take this stick, Eccellenza," he said, "which I have the honor to offer you, for your gallant bearing yesterday evening." The Calabrian found it in vain to refuse; he accepted this singular gift, and was thenceforward frequently saluted in the streets as a Camorrist by people of whom he had no knowledge.

The most extraordinary phase in the history of the Camorra was its organization as a citizen-guard in 1860, by the Prefect of Police, Don Liborio Romano, then at his wits' end to preserve order in the city. The proclamation of a constitution by Francis II. on the 25th of June was followed by the opening of the prisons and the enlargement of shoals of malefactors, whose first act was to attack the offices of the commissariat of police, burn the archives, and put to flight all the ordinary guardians of public safety. A frightful state of anarchy ensued, during which the sack of Naples by the mob of "sanfedisti" seemed imminent, and warehouses were actually hired by the leaders for the storage of the expected booty. In these desperate circumstances the extraordinary expedient was resorted to of confiding the guardianship of order to the Camorra society, formed into a municipal police, in which the "picciotti" formed the rank and file, and the adepts of the sect the officers. The strange experiment succeeded for a time; the sack of the city was averted, and order maintained for some months.

Among the incidents of this interregnum is one recounted by M. Marc Monnier. A commissary of police, recognized by the mob, was protected from their fury by one of the new officers of public safety, and escorted to his home by a noted Camorrist, Luigi Cozzolino, nicknamed "il Persianaro," who indignantly refused the piaster offered him for his service, with the scornful query, "Do you take me for one of the old police?"

After the entrance of Garibaldi on the 8th of September, the evils of this anomalous state of things developed with startling rapidity; and the Camorrist chiefs took to smuggling by land and sea on so vast a scale as almost to annihilate the municipal revenues, twenty-five sous covering the entire customs receipts for one day! Energetic measures of repression became necessary; and the arrest of ninety Camorrists in one night of December, 1860, was so effectual a remedy that the duties the following day produced three thousand four hundred francs. But such was the popularity of the sect in Naples that when Signor Silvio Spaventa, Italian Minister of Police, waged a deadly war against it, dissolving the citizen-guard and deporting a hundred of its heroes, the populace rose and expressed their displeasure in serious riots.

Since then the Camorra has been reduced to operate in a more obscure fashion, interfering occasionally in elections, extorting money from Bourbonists, under the plea of sheltering them from persecution, and resorting, in fact, to the shabby expedients of ordinary swindling. Still its hold on the minds of the people is little shaken, and the places of the leaders, occasionally arrested in batches of hundreds and fifties, are quickly supplied by fresh aspirants; while the wives of those in prison exercise all their husbands' privileges; and their very children, trained from infancy in the use of the knife in secret schools for this accomplishment, are early invested with some of the terror of their fathers' names. But though the Neapolitan Camorra, like all traditional institutions in Italy, dies hard, it must eventually disappear before the advance of civilization.

Congress, after a troublesome experiment at Sabbath-breaking, yesterday made such progress with business in hand as to give assurance of adjournment to-day. The session has been an illustration of long-drawn-out unprofitableness. Of the 2,367 bills introduced only 128 were passed. The work of seven months might have been done easily in a month. The results of the session, taking in the repudiation of the Morrison bill, are a pretty kettle of fish to place before the Democratic convention.—Inter Ocean, June 7.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

OF KANSAS.

For Vice President,

OF CONNECTICUT.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable;

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights, while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion, or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties, as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it. Yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy; and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living, and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country; "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

REV. N. E. GARDNER in the Richmond Star says: "While the old parties are controlled by whisky and secretism they fear to take hold of any reform measure lest it prove unpopular."

Of the American platform the same writer says: "It is the purest, wisest and best political platform ever before the American people."

WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE.

DETROIT, Mich.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Please allow me a brief space to utter my thoughts of Bro. Nutting's article in the Cynosure of June 26th. That our dear brother is a sharp thinker and writer none will doubt who heard his speech at the convention, or have read the article in hand. But sharp thinking is not always right thinking. Has the nineteenth century a sharper thinker than Pres. Finney was? Yet how far from a right thinker was he in his early ministry, on the question of a Christian life unpolluted by sin. This he confessed and deplored in his riper years. Dr. Nathaniel Emmons was wont to say, "Every man has something to spoil him." I propose to show from brother N.'s article that he is no exception to Dr. Emmons' statement.

What is the principal ingredient in his article that spoils it? It is the cardinal idea, towards which, and around which the entire article circles. It is an unwarrantable inference, from an uninspired prophecy. A prophecy whose historic accuracy cannot be verified. I therefore challenge any man's right to impose upon community a rule of action by the authority of an unwarranted inference from a fallible prophecy.

There was a period in the political history of my native State when ministers of the Gospel were, as women now are, denied the right of suffrage. Whether ministers are, or are not, on a higher spiritual plane, and have purer and more refined sympathies than other men, I will not now deny or affirm. But that men whose very lives are constantly at home with heavenly themes, and whose society is with Him who came down from heaven,—that such men ought to dwell on a higher plane, and that they are generally supposed to, cannot be reasonably doubted. Suppose, then, that when their right to vote was under discussion, it had been affirmed of them, as it is now of women, "if their (political) circumstances are made the same as for other men, the almost inevitable result would be similarity of character," and "with this contact with the roughness and coarseness of the outer world will also largely disappear the refinement and grace which are now the most essential part of the true" minister.

What would have been the response to such logic? It would have been manifold: 1st, It would have been pronounced mere sophistry; 2nd, It would have been deemed an insult. Do you mean to tell me it would have been said that the possession of my right to a voice in deciding who should be a ruler over me, and to a vote as to the disposition of my property, will vitiate or degrade me! It is an assumption unwarrantable and unjustifiable. Out upon it! 3d, They would have said, your informant gives sad evidence of drawing conclusions, not from clear inductions of logic, but from a judgment warped by dislike or prejudice.

I can sympathize with that side of the question, for I was once there myself. But the first church to which in my youthful ministry I was called to serve, "taught me the way of the Lord more perfectly." The profoundest sympathizers, the clearest thinkers, and the most efficient laborers, and executors, were the clear-headed, warm-hearted, educated women.

I do not propose to go into a lengthy discussion of this question. I did that a third of a century ago publicly, with the present excellent President of Oberlin College. I desire now only to say that the American women are not to be forever denied their right to the elective franchise by any amount of hypotheses or uninspired prophecies.

THE AMERICAN PLATFORM.

Rev. Joseph Travis, editor of the Free Methodist, with Rev. B. T. Roberts, superintendent of the Free Methodist churches, attended the late American convention and took a warm yet critical interest in the proceedings. In the Free Methodist of the 2d inst. appears the following clear and strong endorsement of the principles of the party:

Political parties are to be judged rather by their platforms than by the men nominated. True, we may judge of the honesty of intent or otherwise, of a party having a good platform, by the men nominated; for if the men have not hitherto been in harmony with the principles therein contained, or do not give very satisfactory evidence of their change of sentiment, it is inconsistent to make such nominations. A platform that sacrifices moral principles, or disregards moral issues already before the people, is unsafe, and to be eschewed; and it is as sound morals are served thereby that there is that in a political platform which commands the respect and co-operation of intelligent men.

The Republican platform of 1872 declared the party opposed to the enactment of all sumptuary laws; and the chairman of its central committee explained that this was to be understood to mean Sunday laws, temperance laws, and all such. The convention of 1884, with tardiness and much unconcern, listened to a memorial from the Women's Christian Temperance Union, but utterly ignored the great temperance movement; and its candidate is the champion of the policy to sustain our school system by moneys accruing from liquor licenses: thus making calculations for the perpetuity of the license system, and putting it into such a shape that to disturb it would be to disturb the public school system of these United States. In the platform adopted there is not one reference to the temperance sentiment of the people. In fact there is not one moral issue involved. There never was, since the organization of the party (which came into existence upon moral issues), anything so bald of, and cruel to, the moral issues of the day, or the moral instincts of the people.

In contrast we present the platform of the American party. * * * This, it will be seen, is a platform of moral issues. True there may be a plank or two upon which all will not agree, but we challenge its compeer, as an expression of sound moral and political sentiment, and as providing for the real needs of the people.

It is not ours to argue the points involved; if they do not in the main commend themselves to our readers, there let it rest. We see in it substantially the platform that must be adopted to save this nation from moral ruin and miserable overthrow. We most devoutly hope that its managers will not carry it around in their pockets for pet occasions; nor seek to make it subservient to the National Christian Association, nor to any other; but will let it go forth in its beauty and its might, whatever interest other than this may be affected.

The platform of the American party asks a clear stage, and all the straps of secondary interest cast off, and it will win for itself a place in the judgment, heart and votes of the people. It ought to have the hearty support of the thinking, independent, honest voters of this republic, and it will to the extent it is known, if they but understand that it is the honest expression of sentiments and of principles to be embodied in laws when the party shall come into power; and that it is not the mere servant of something else.

—The Home Protector, a strong partisan Prohibition party paper prints a portrait of Dr. McDonald of San Francisco and nominates him for President, at the same time condemning Gov. St. John as a mere carpet Knight for prohibition, because he cleared Kansas of the saloons with the Republican party. The Lever of this city has the same portrait and biography, as if there was a feeble attempt at a "boom."

A disclosure of facts relating to the failure of Senator Pomeroy to secure a re-election in the Kansas legislature eleven years ago has just been made. The Freemasons furnished the plot for his defeat and the Kansas Pacific Railroad furnished the money—$7,000. At the time an effort was made to make it appear that Pomeroy had furnished $7,000 to secure his election, which was not true. A short time before his defeat, Mr. Pomeroy had made a speech in an anti-secrecy convention, and to this is to be ascribed the prime cause of his defeat.—Telescope.

The American party held their National convention in this city on the 20th inst. This is the party whose distinctive principles are, the recognition of God and the Bible in our National Constitution and laws, and opposition to all secret societies. In harmony with some other parties they favor prohibition, international arbitration and other needed reforms. The party embraces some of the strongest, purest and most courageous men in the nation, and in the convention which met here there was exhibited much ability and great sincerity and earnestness. They put in nomination for President of the United States Ex-Senator Samuel C. Pomeroy of Kansas, and for Vice President John A. Conant of Connecticut. Besides the principles above referred to, the platform declares in favor of the use of the Bible in all educational institutions, the observance of the Sabbath, free labor as against depreciated foreign contract labor, reform in patent laws, civil equality of all races, ample and sound currency, reduction of tariff and taxes, the discouragement of lend and other monopolies, the suppression of polygamy, and a direct vote for President and Vice President as against the electoral college.—Christian Worker.

Among the leading Prohibitionists is R. H. McDonald, a Freemason of San Francisco, and John B. Finch, recently elected "Grand Worthy" of a secret temperance order. But liquor is likewise well represented in the lodge. A leading liquor seller in Massachusetts is the "Grand Master" of Masons in that State! and a high Mason is at the head of the Milwaukee Brewers' Association. When Prohibitionists shall discard the lodge they will be more worthy of the support of good men.—Richmond Star.

—The New York Nation says of the Republican platform:

"The platform adopted at Chicago is an admirable specimen of the kind of document of which Abraham Lincoln said: 'For people who like that sort of thing, that's just the sort of thing they would like."

—Sol. Smith, Past Grand of the Kansas Odd-fellows, prints a significant item in his paper, the Troy Chief:

"There is said to be secret organization in New York, having for its object the nomination of Tilden, in spite of his declination. These Democrats, from their long acquaintance with the old man, know that if they cannot reach him by means of an occult organization, with its signs, grips, pass-words, tokens, and ciphers, the case is hopeless."

TEMPERANCE LODGE EXPERIENCE.

NORWICH, IOWA.

Some of our prohibition friends are afraid that a war against the lodges is a war against temperance. I have seen it stated in print that half that has been done in the cause of prohibition has been done in the different secret temperance organizations.

My own little experience and observation leads me to quite a different conclusion. When a young man, through the solicitation of friends, I made application to join a lodge of Good Templars, and was rejected, or black balled on the ground that I had given offense to to some young men who were in the lodge, by preaching on temperance. This thing soon became public, and was a good joke on the preacher, whom everybody knew to be the strongest temperance man in the place. But these young men were never disciplined, but remained in good standing in the lodge till it disbanded. I do not think such lodges as that do much for temperance or prohibition.

Some years after that I was again solicited, and this time joined a lodge in another town. After I had been in a few weeks, and seen some of the members of the lodge come in drunk time and again, there was a resolution offered and discussed and voted on. One side said the resolution if carried might give offense to the saloon element; the other said we were not bound to that element. Finally the vote was taken and the resolution lost, because it might offend the saloons!

That night I with others left the lodge never to enter again. I hope others have had a better experience than mine. I have looked on as an outsider with considerable interest since, and it is my candid conviction that if the last secret lodge in the United States was disbanded that the cause of temperance and prohibition would not suffer in the least from it.

I do not say that there are no temperance people in these lodges, or that these temperance people in these lodges do nothing for prohibition, but my experience leads me to think that these temperance people could do all and more for prohibition and temperance without the lodge than with it. R. W. LAUGHLIN.

AN INVALID'S NOTES.

AURORA, ILL., June, 1884.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—After reading the Cynosure one year I can't well do without so reliable a paper and one that is ready to expose the iniquity of secret societies. Our government has passed into the hands of political rings composed of members of secret organizations who are robbing and plundering it with impunity. They are the men that make our laws and pretend to execute them, but are above all law, as the Star Route trials as well as others is sufficient proof. I was born in Ontario Co., N. Y., in 1806, being over twenty years old at the time of the murder of Morgan; knew personally some of the parties implicated in the affair; read all the testimony on the trials, which was of the most positive character—but not a conviction among the whole. Our churches were divided and broken up; the honest portion withdrawing; another class justifying the murder of Morgan, saying he deserved death as a penalty for not keeping his oath and for revealing the secrets of the order. But the more brazen-faced and infamous ones denied the murder in whole and opened their batteries upon Thurlow Weed for exposing their crimes, but he outlived their base calumny, and died, honored by all honest men.

President Blanchard, Sen., of Wheaton college, has been the most abused man among us by the Masons on account of his opposition to the teachings of all secret societies and his advocacy of more noble principles. But he has withstood all their malice and abuse: kept his place in the college until he raised up a noble son after his own heart to take his place, who like his father is honored and respected by all who know them—except the Masons. The Aurora Beacon in speaking of the resignation of Pres. Blanchard of Wheaton college, says in a sneering manner: "Prof. Blanchard (the Mason-hater) of Wheaton college has resigned—but not until he has raised up a son after his own heart to take his place," or words to this effect. Any parent might be proud of so noble a son.

I was sorry when the name of Pres. Blanchard was withdrawn as a candidate for President. It might have been a matter of policy—not because you got a better man, but one more widely known. It will make no difference as to the result. The Republicans must have one more President; then there will be a new organization of parties, and in 1888 I hope the Anti-masons and Prohibitionists united may be strong enough to elect their man. The Republicans were defeated once in 1836, since then have been successful, as corrupt as many of them have become. Our churches have become most wofully corrupted—filled with members of secret organizations. Rid the churches of all members of secret organizations and lodges could no longer exist. Our churches are responsible for the two greatest evils we have to contend with—intemperance and secret organizations. If the history and doings of Masonry could be written out and read by the people—office holders of this class would be left at home. But the non-reading class go on and vote for them without distinction and some of them talk about its being a benevolent institution and what it does for a deceased brother's widow and children.

I have opposed Masonry since the murder of Morgan, as well as slavery and intemperance, with what little influence I had—and when it was by a vote mine was equal to the greatest in opposition.

I am an invalid, having been confined to my crutches from the effects of a broken limb thirteen years—health poor—but I have thought at times I would give you a little of my experience, and a few of the facts and iniquities of this order against which you are contending from which you might cull a few facts as further evidence of the iniquity practiced by this secret order, which you will find in all relations of life. Our churches, our so-called courts of justice, our legislatures and halls of Congress are contaminated and filled with members of this secret order. They are the ruling power in the land and the greatest curse and guilty of more wrongs than anything else except it be the curse of intemperance. ALVAN FULLER.

LIGHT WANTED.

I read in an English paper as follows:

"Royal City of Rochester Lodge of Odd-fellows (6144) M. U." On Tuesday evening Rev. F. E. Peake, Vicar of St. Margaret and a member of the Rochester school board, was duly initiated an honorary member into the above lodge held at the City Arms, Victoria street. The ceremony of initiation, which was conducted by Bro. Burgess, having been gone through, Bro. Peake, in the course of a few very appropriate remarks, thanked the lodge for the compliment to him in inviting him to become a member, and said if at any time he could make himself useful or render any assistance in the lodge, or to individual members, he should be most happy to do so. He amusingly remarked that it had often struck him with wonderment as to what the peculiarities of the Odd-fellows were, but he was pleasurably surprised to find that the principles of the order were based upon such a high standard; and he said that a member must be singularly odd, did not those principles influence him to become a better and holier man. The Vicar on leaving the lodge received a hearty round of applause. During the evening some capital songs were sung by several of the brethren.

The light I want is, What relation does an honorary member sustain to the lodge? If an honorary member is not a fully initiated member, how he knows "the principles of the order were based upon such a high standard"? How a man having authority from the church to preach the gospel can find in a temple of Bacchus ("City Arms," a pot-house or dram-shop, or larger quantity should you want it), "principles to influence him to become a better and holier man." The light the Rev. F. E. Peake wants is that a fountain cannot get higher than its head; that an order founded on selfishness, hypocrisy, fraud and conviviality makes a man better and holier just as much as the devil gets better and holier. And that just as far as he renders the lodge assistance or individual members help (brotherly), just so far God Almighty will hold him accountable for the blood of souls. May God have mercy. J. C. YOUNG.

The Daily Christian Advocate says of Rev. M. W. Taylor, elected editor of the Southern Christian Advocate:

"In connection with Charles B. Morgan and William N. Hazleton he founded the United Brothers of Friendship, a numerous and powerful secret order among the colored people, which held its first meeting in his mother's house, in Louisville, Ky. He is a firm friend of the Methodist Episcopal church, and has taken a conservative view upon all questions before the Conference."

It seems that to originate a secret society is an achievement to be compensated in the M. E. church. The author of the Good Templar ritual was a Masonic M. E. minister. While the Methodist Episcopal church is "wholly given" to Masonic idolatry in its sanction in the personal relation of its ministers and members, that church did not care to brave the rising tide of public sentiment against secret societies, by giving its official recognition to these clans in such a public and prominent manner. If brought to the test, as a General Conference was once, it would doubtless have given itself, as then, into the hands of the lodge by a refusal to condemn its murderous barbarism.—Wesleyan.

The purpose approved. Nathan, as a pious man, readily falls in with the thought of the pious king. David had only mentioned the facts, but it did not require Nathan's gift of propheey to see that there was a purpose in the king's heart. As a pious, dutiful, grateful purpose, Nathan approves his having it and encourages his carrying it out. It was not a divine communication by the prophet, but a right and pious sentiment of the good man. God himself approved of David's having such a purpose (1 Kings 8: 18): "Thou didst well that it was in thine heart."

What was the sum of the communication? "Shalt thou build me a house for me to dwell in?" It was an argumentative negative. He puts it in the form of a question as intimating that David's pious intelligence would give the right answer. It involves two objections to the king's thought: (a) Am I dependent on king David or any other for a dwelling place? (b) Is this the work specially appointed for thee?

In answer to the first, (a) God declares, verse 6, that he had done all the wonders of Israel's deliverance from Egypt to this day with no more permaneut habitation than a tent. God could show himself glorious without architectural aid. Not only so, but (v. 7) he had never intimated to any one placed in authority over Israel that a permanent and imposing house would be helpful to his glory. A house of cedar was not an urgent necessity. In answer to the second, (b) God recalls the facts of his call of David and the work to which he had called him (v. 8). It was other work than building a temple.

1. It was the work of military enterprise (v. 9). In this God had employed him and given him success till his name stood high among the world's military heroes. Solomon in his letter to Hiram (1 Kings 5: 3) assigns this reason for David's not building the temple. David in his charge to Solomon (1 Chron. 22: 8) giving, perhaps, a fuller quotation from this communication of Nathan, assigned the same reason. "Thou hast shed blood abundantly and made great wars, thou shalt not build an house to my name." God did not disapprove of David's wars. They were his work. But they forbade his building the temple (a) by not giving him time for it; (b) by making him typically unfit. The temple was to be built by the Prince of Peace.

2. His work was also that of civil administration (v. 10). In this verse "will appoint" and "will plant" are in the past tense "I appointed and....planted." As the result of his wars Israel had possession of all the promised land and was being fixed permanently in its possession of it, in the tribal and family portions. This called for constant and wise civil administration. In this kind of work God promises to employ and prosper David, so that the troubles and oppressions the people had experienced during the times of the judges, from Joshua to Samuel, should cease.

But God's purpose does not negative, it only modifies David's purpose.

1. The first thing in God's plan was not his own house but David's house (v. 11). This of course does not mean a palace but a royal family, beginning of a royal line. The house of David is therefore the name of the royal line in God's kingdom (Isa. 7: 2; 22: 22; Luke 1: 27; Acts 15: 16).

2. David's purpose was not long to be postponed (vs. 12, 13). In the person of his son, when David had entered into rest, God would accomplish at once David's purpose of building a house for God's name, and God's purpose of making David a house and giving it perpetual title to the kingdom.

3. God's purpose was absolute, not conditional (vs. 14, 15). When David died his son should not be fatherless. Not as a servant, on conditions, but as a son by right of inheritance of God should Solomon hold the kingdom. Even iniquity, of the liability to which David had sad experience, would receive only chastisement. "The rod of men and the stripes of the children of men" describes the instruments by which God would inflict his chastisements. Hadod, Rezon and Jeroboam are familiar illustrations (1 Kings, ch. 11). Syria, Assyria and Babylon are later and larger fulfillments of the same threatening or promise. But even the falling of the individual king into iniquity would not cut off David's house from the title to the kingdom. How often this promise is mentioned as the reason for sparing the kings and kingdom of David's house, you may see by the following references: 1 Kings 11: 12; 13: 32, 34; 15: 4; 2 Kings 8: 19; 19: 34; 20: 6. The kings and the kingdom might be—would be terribly afflicted, but God's covenant is that the title to the kingdom should never be forfeited (v. 15).

4. The covenant includes the descent of Christ from David's house and the endless duration of his kingdom (v. 16). Indeed this might be said to be the covenant promise and to include all the other promises to David's house. Ethan the Ezrahite certainly so understands it in Psalm 89: 3, 4, 35 37. In no other view can the covenant appear as fulfilled. The same Psalm sadly denies and laments its non-fulfillment in the merely human kings and the temporal kingdom of David's house (vs. 38–51). But Isaiah promising gospel blessings (Isa. 55: 3) calls them "the sure mercies of David," and the word "sure" is just the same as our word "established" here; and Paul quotes Isaiah's words to prove Christ's resurrection. The words "before thee" have seemed objectionable. Some have proposed to read them arbitrarily "before me." There is no authority for the change, and the words have an important meaning. (a) The ending of Saul's house with Saul's life took place before David, in his presence, under his personal notice (v. 15). He saw that no son of Saul succeeded to his throne. In his own presence he should see his own line continued on the throne. This was fulfilled in the very unusual occurrence of Solomon being anointed and seated on the throne of the kingdom, fully invested with the kingly office, while David was yet living. He blesses God for this and perhaps recognizes it as a fulfillment of this part of the promise, and a pledge of the fulfillment of all the rest in 1 Kings 1: 48. "Mine eyes even seeing it" seems to be there the crowning mercy. (b) In the faith it was given to David to exercise, the whole glory of his race made permanent and eternal in Christ, was "before him" in the covenant promise (2 Sam. 23: 5). Peter in Acts 2: 30, 31, explains clearly how it was before David's eyes, "Thy throne shall be established forever."

It was Christ's throne even when David sat upon it. David was not king in his own right. He just administered Christ's kingdom for time (Ps. 110: 1). In the fullness of time, Christ the Anointed, of whom all other anointed ones were only servants and types, would come and assume to himself all the authority that had been exercised by prophets, priests and kings. And he would reign forever. Does forever here mean absolute eternity or the world time? There is no question of the eternity of the Son of God, or of the God-man, but of the kingdom of God as ruled by Christ through David and afterwards by Christ in his own person. Do not Psalms 72: 7; 89: 37; 1 Cor. 15: 24 teach that the kingdom is worldlong in its duration, and that after the resurrection the authority of the throne of David shall be not extinguished by but embraced in the authority of the throne of God?—The U. P. Bible Teacher.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

THE CHURCH AND REFORM.

1. The true Christian will not settle down in peaceful enjoyment of his earthly possessions while God's cause is suffering for his aid. Vs. 1, 2. David had now reached a position of great worldly prosperity, but he could not sit easy in his palace while remembering that the ark of God had no better shelter than a tent. So the Christian feels that the more God has prospered him the greater his obligation—not to rear a costly, perishable temple for him "who dwelleth not in temples made with hands," but to do all in his power to help build up Zion, God's "spiritual house," in which every true disciple is a living stone. In this work laborers for reform bear a very important part, though many people seem to think that it is something entirely outside of and separate from it to talk or write or lecture against the liquor traffic, Masonry, or any other national evil. This is a great mistake. No heart can be a fit temple for God that is not purified from all evil appetites or which tolerates any form of false worship. More saloons means fewer churches. It means more jails and poor-houses. The city of Pullman in New South Wales prohibits the sale of beer, wine, or spirituous liquors of any kind. As the result, with a population of 7,500 it has no saloons but five churches; no jail or poor-house, but two school buildings; no sheriff, but thirteen public school teachers. An increase in the membership of the secret lodges always means a corresponding decrease in the membership of the churches, many of which, especially in country districts, have grown so feeble from this cause that it is hard to get a male member to fill the office of deacon. While we harbor enemies that are destroying the church faster than we can build it up, we cannot consistently expect that God will answer our prayers for her prosperity.

2. God's covenant with us as a nation casts on the condition of obedience. Vs. 7–16. From a humble shepherd lad David had now become ruler of a great and powerful kingdom. Nearly all the famous men in our Republic have risen like him from a lowly origin, while as a people we have grown from a mere handful of simple farmers to hold a place superior, in many respects, to that of any other nation in the world. But if our statesmen refuse to acknowledge God in their public acts and protect crying national sins like Masonry, Mormonism and the rum traffic; if they violate his Sabbaths, and by example "teach others so," we must expect chastisement even worse than befell us for persisting in the sin of slavery. The very fact that God has so highly favored us will bring down sorer punishment, for "where much is given much will be required."

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

How did the ancient Jews excuse themselves from building God's house? Hag. 1: 2. How do people now excuse themselves from aiding much needed reforms? How is Jer. 5: 26–28 a good description of the secret rings that are trying to control our government? How alone can we be blessed as a nation? Is. 33: 12, f. c.

THE MARDI GRAS FOLLY REACHES BOSTON.

The citizens of Charlestown, writes the Boston correspondent of the Chicago Evening Journal, and their neighbors and friends marked the 109th anniversary of the battle of Bunker Hill in a very demonstrative manner all day yesterday as well as the night before. The 17th of June is the great day in the calendar for Charlestown citizens. The great feature of the celebration this year consisted of the two processions of what has been named the Order of Owls, pageants after the style of the Mardi-Gras spectacles at New Orleans and other Southern cities. The legend of the order asserts that the King enters Charleston from a foreign shore on the night of June 16th, and accordingly he holds a reception that evening, and parades the streets then, and on the following day. The morning procession, which was witnessed by thousands of people, was really very fine, much time, money and thought having been expended to make it a success. A gigantic owl was prominent in the van of the procession as the presiding genius of the affair, and the Earl Marshal was seen soon after, surrounded by his noble household, dressed like English courtiers of early days. The Female Labor Reform Convention was elaborately represented by members attired in the latest styles of the dress makers' art, the costumes being of genuine and rich materials. Another division showed the fiends' march, in which the Charlestown Cadets took part, clad in tight-fitting red suits, and with trident, horns and tail complete. Mythology, fairy land and all sorts of legendary lore were depicted in a pleasing way, and the Odd-fellows and woman's rights advocates came in for a share of caricaturing. Later in the day receptions were held by prominent citizens, and many kept open house day and night. Music and fireworks on various squares and parks finished the celebration. A few small fires during the day added zest to the occasion without doing much harm.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD, HENRY L. KELLOGG, } EDITORS.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 10, 1884.

Before this number reaches our readers, probably B. F. Butler will be nominated by the Democrats; and if so, he will doubtless be elected. The Republican party will follow the fate of the old Whig party, and a reform party rise out of the ruins of both.

MRS. WILLARD, of the Signal, warmly commends the stand of the American party for a recognition of God in government, prohibition and woman suffrage, and its protest against secret orders and monopolies.

Is it possible the St. Louis National American can be sincere in advocating prohibition and the election of Mr. Blaine? Does Mr. Walter pretend to doubt that Mr. Blaine's personal habits antagonize prohibition, and that he advocates paying State and county taxes with money derived from liquor?

PRAYING FOR VOTES, is an invention of American women, and at first excited amusement. But we are to pray for "all in authority." Does not that mean the people at elections?

We have received some objections to article six of our platform concerning prison and foreign contract labor. The American correctly states that "It is not intended to keep prisoners in idleness. It only asks that States shall contract the labor of prisoners at prices so nearly equal to the prices of free labor as not to injure honest laborers by the competition." This is manifestly just. The Ohio Legislature lately passed a law providing that convicts should be engaged in such labor as to compete with other workmen, but in such public works as are not generally contracted.

Next week the editors, publisher, and General Secretary and Agent hope to present our united ideas of the wisest measures to spread the Cynosure over the United States; and also the circulation of documents vital to the cause. Meantime please carefully scan the present number. Senator Pomeroy, Secretary Stoddard and Prof. Bailey, as also the editor of the Cynosure and the two women appointed on the Fraternal Committee, expect to meet at Pittsburg, July 23. Don't forget to pray for the Pittsburg Prohibition Convention. Will not the W. C. T. U. appoint special prayer-meetings?

A NEW PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE.—R. H. McDonald, president of the Pacific Bank, San Francisco, and late Prohibition candidate for Governor of California, is brought out as "our choice for President" by the Philadelphia Home Protector and both this paper and the Lever of Chicago, give Dr. McDonald's likeness and a sketch of his life. The California delegates to Pittsburg are instructed for McDonald. The doctor was at Saratoga Springs and attending to his interests in the East last May. The Cynosure has corresponded with him. He defends the Masonic lodge. Under his picture the Lever, July 3d, gives his sketch containing the following:

"Dr. McDonald was one of the charter members of the first lodge of Masons on the Pacific Coast, and is the only one of the little band whose name is still on the roll."

He is thus the lodge candidate for the Pittsburg nomination. If he is nominated and there is not a rupture and flake-off of the open Prohibitionists, that party is doomed, or the lodge must become a Divine institution. For our Saviour said, "Every plant which my Father hath not planted shall be rooted up." If God is mightier than man lodge, deism must certainly fall.

PUBLICLY RENOUNCED MASONRY.

DUBLIN SPECIAL DISPATCH, June 28.—Mr. Winstanley, the home-rule candidate for the mayorality, has publicly renounced Masonry, and it is rumored that Archbishop McCabe will recall his pastoral letter forbidding Catholics from supporting Winstanley, as his withdrawal from Masonry has placed himself outside the pale of the Pope's allocution of Freemasonry.

Our venerated teacher, Dr. Lyman Beecher, used to repeat often:

"Boys, God will bring a remnant out of popery according to the election of grace." Let us hope so. The increase of Romish total abstinence societies, the increase of general intelligence, and the clear condemnation of the secret lodge system are hopeful symptoms. It takes but very little intelligence with sense and honesty to see that the arguments which condemn the lodge, condemn popery also. Both are inventions of men; both require abject submission and subjugation of man to man; and both promise salvation by ceremonies. Jesuitism was invented fifteen centuries after Christ, the celibacy eleven, and the confessional about four hundred and fifty.

"THE KU KLUX KLAN.

ITS ORIGIN, GROWTH AND DISBANDMENT."

This is an able history, defence and apology for an offshoot and imitation of the Masonic lodge, given in the Century for July, by D. L. Wilson and J. C. Lester. The writers seem, by their tenderness for, and concealment of this secret, savage cyclone, to have been themselves members of it. They write like pleasant, gentlemanly men whose minds are blinded, literally blinded, to the nature of what they are writing about. They describe the terrorism, oaths, abject subjugation and despotism of the Klan; its disguises, immense expenditure and waste of time; and its attempt to supercede the civil government and laws, by assuming to themselves the responsibility of public order and correcting abuses; all this they narrate with the utmost naive simplicity, never once seeming to think there is anything improper or wrong in a band of youngsters superceding and setting aside the civil government, law, and officers, and themselves assuming their functions, and to enable them to assume the powers of government without its responsibility, terrifying the ignorant by white masques, and personating the ghosts of dead soldiers, and binding themselves to obedience by the customary oaths, penalties, etc., etc. All these criminal acts and blasphemies seem to these writers very harmless affairs. They say: "The object of all this was amusement, nothing more." And, "at a time when the civil law afforded inadequate protection to life and property, the Klan had afforded security to many firesides, and in many ways contributed to the public welfare."

Their story of the Klan is briefly this:

It was started by college students and the names of its officers were Greek. Its birth was in Pulaski, Giles county, Tenn., June 1866, "solely for amusement." Its name Ku-Klux, a gibberish from kuklos (Greek for circle); and its officers, Cyclops, Magi, etc., were derived from the same language. Their initiation was a savage horseplay, like all such initiations, to inspire awe and obtain secrecy and obedience. Its contrivers were learned and ignorant. They knew enough to invent classic heathen titles, but they did not know that they were inventing a religion for the devil whose lure, as in all ages, was mystery, and its power concealed in worship, oaths, terrorism and ceremonies. The mysteries at Eleusis, thirty miles out of Athens, and the initiation invented by Ignatius Loyola in a cave at night at Enresa, had tracked their way through history with anarchy, lust and blood, and these Pulaski students reproduced a clumsy imitation of all these old initiations whose driving wheels were secrecy, curiosity and terror. They knew some Greek nouns and verbs but they did not know that every African jungle had just such initiations under the name of Purrow and Bondoo, as they were contriving in Pulaski, Tennessee, and that all the civil government there is in Africa, over millions, merely registers the secret decrees of those jungle worships, whose gods are devils and their worshipers slaves.

Well, "they builded greater than they knew." Their engine ran away with them. In the words of our Century writers, "Circumstances carried the Klan away from its original purpose." They personated ghosts; but they did not believe in devils, and that all Gentile worship is paid to and received by them. In 1867 they swore their initiates to "PROTECT PROPERTY, and PRESERVE PEACE AND ORDER." So Masons were sworn to be loyal to the government which they were superceding and destroying! "Bad men had gotten into the order," they said, and were stealing, robbing and murdering by wholesale. The "good men" or asses, who had joined the Klan to regulate society undertook to restrain these "bad men." They called a secret convention in Nashville in the spring of 1867, named the Klan "The Invisible Empire;" and swore to "Protect the weak, to defend the Constitution and laws;" new-named their officers and swore to "protect the States and people thereof," (see Century, July, p. 405). And these writers, Wilson and Lester, with utmost amiableness, tell us: "The majority had up to this time, shown a fair appreciation of the responsibilities of their self-imposed task of preserving social order!" This audacity and effrontery reminds one of the harlot seeking peace and order in the family which her presence corrupts and putrifies, and justifies the language of the Bible concerning false worships.

But all would not do. Arson, rape, murder and robbery by night and by wholesale at last forced Congress to appoint a committee of investigation; and our amiable Century writers say (p. 410): "The Report of the Congressional Investigating Committee contains a mass of very disreputable history." This is like calling war and rebellion with half a million corpses, "the late unpleasantness." And these good gentlemen go on to say: "These persons were acting in the name of the Klan, and under its disguises, but not by its authority." What authority had one of these Klans more than another? And wherein does the Invisible Empire of Masons, Odd-fellows, and Grand Armies, chartered and being now chartered by our government, State and Federal, differ from this Ku-Klux "Invisible Empire?" Are they not alike secret? Do any of them report their action under their charters to the legislature which gives the charters? Have they not all their own laws, courts and penalties, wholly distinct from the laws of the United States, and the several States? The only difference between Masonry and the Ku-Klux is, that Masons are chartered by the government which they are overthrowing. But a general of the Union army informed the Cynosure editor that the robes, masks, and disguises of the Klan worn by both men and horses were kept in the closets of the Masonic lodge-rooms, showing both to be one! and one remedy must answer for both.

Feb. 20, 1869, Gov. Brownlow ordered troops out to quell this "Invisible Empire," and in a few days their head officer who had the power, dissolved the Klan. But the lodge which worked up the Rebellion, and chartered "Pike's Indians" to scalp our soldiers, shot by Masonic bullets, is now sheltered in the city of Washington under a charter granted by our Republican Congress.

Fishes must have air, and lodges must have publicity as well as concealment. Adopt the American platform, withdraw those charters and prohibit their oaths, and our country is redeemed.

"BACKING DOWN."

Under the above heading, the editor of The American (Prof. Bailey) answers a brother who thought he was "backing down on secrecy."

Years since, while the lodge pressure was much more savage than now, Prof. Bailey said to a friend, "The conflict is terrible; but I believe this anti-secret reform is of God, and I will stand by it, if I have to go back to Wheaton and dig ditches for my bread." The American editor's name begins with B., but his name is not "Back down."

We a little regret that the American thought it necessary to open the sittings of the Platform Committee to the public, which is only interested in our beautiful and harmonious results. The Cynosure did not understand the sentiments of that large committee just as the American did. Two important changes were proposed:

1st. To condense the first three articles into one. This might have made the platform look a little less religious; and so please those who shrink from having God, the Sabbath and the Bible recognized in distinct articles as fundamental in the polities of "A Christian and not a heathen nation." But some of us thought that fusing those three articles into one would make them vague; while nothing would be gained by the vagueness. If a man is willing to recognize God at all, he will recognize his Day and his Book. If not, he will be pleased with neither articles.

2d. The second change proposed was to drop—

ART. 5. "That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law."

And to substitute this:

"We hold that political secret societies are inimical to free institutions; that they are the enemies of reform; that political parties should be free from their control, and their extrajudicial oaths should be prohibited by law."

Some of us objected to this change:

1. Because the old article had been twelve years before the public and stood the test of criticism and objection.

2. Because inserting the word "political," would change the whole issue, and saddle on us the burden of proving Masonry and Odd-fellowship to be "political," while they are ready to swear they are not.

3. And because the phrases "inimical to free institutions," and "the enemies of reform," seemed to us weak indictments of the lodge.

We were therefore glad that the large committee unanimously refused to drop the old article and insert the new. But no one of us thought of imputing any "back down" to Prof. Bailey, but believe he intended to strengthen the platform.

—Mr. J. B. Blank, one of the N. C. A. Board, is now visiting friends in Oregon. Letters on Saturday told of his arrival there and admiration of the scenery and climate.

—Pres. C. A. Blanchard of Wheaton delivered the anniversary address at Kossuth, Iowa, last Friday.

—In answer to the inquiry of a friend who evidently has not read the Cynosure very long, we take room to say that the American, organ of the American party, is published in Washington city. It is a sufficient address to direct to the American, Washington, D. C. But, to be more particular, it is published in the National Christian Association building, No. 215 4½ street, N. W.

—F. W. Capwell, president of the National Association, was accompanied by his wife and son to the annual meeting and American convention. After two weeks' visit in Nebraska they stopped a day or two at Wheaton on their return last week, proceeding homeward on Friday.

—George W. Clark, who charms and captivates by the beauty and excellence of his character no less than with his soul-stirring reform songs, has been an almost daily caller on the Cynosure since the convention. With Mrs. Clark he has been staying with a daughter in the city, but left for Detroit on Friday. His song-book should be one of the best campaign documents. It will pay to get and use it in every community where there are Anti-masons.

—Dr. Milton Wright, of the Richmond Star, has removed his family to his old home, Dayton, Ohio, where he resided for some eight years while editor of the Telescope. The Star will still be published at Richmond. The last number has some able articles from Revs. H. J. Becker of Sacramento, Cal., Halleck Floyd, N. E. Gardner, and others.

—In calling attention to an error in the first verse of the song printed last week (page 3) it is a good time to say that Clark's Reform Song Book from which it is taken is just the document for the campaign. Soul-stirring songs to good music will often do more for a good cause than a speech. Send to this office for a copy. The verse should have appeared thus:

We're a-float! we're a-float! on a fierce rolling tide,
True freedom's our bark, and the truth is our guide;
No rest for the sluggard, no peace for the foe,
But through all opposition right onward we go.

—The Star of Richmond, Ind., and the Bible Banner of Philadelphia, publish excellent editorials upon the clearing up of the Kansas Masonic bribery case, by which the lodge hoped to forever bury Senator Pomeroy from public notice. They altogether omitted to reckon upon the providence of Him who can bring forth a man's "righteousness as the light." Let such conspirators remember that justice is the foundation of God's throne, and he will care for the reputation of men who are willing to risk all for the truth's sake. "The wicked plotteth against the just, and gnasheth upon him with his teeth. The Lord shall laugh at him; for he seeth that his day is coming."

THE N. C. A. BOARD of DIECTORS elected at the last annual meeting met on Wednesday last and organized after prayer by John Gardner. Four members of the Board: Blank, Travis, Thomson, and Stratton, were far away from the city, and Dr. Meloy was at the bedside of a sick child; the rest were present. Prof. O. F. Lumry was chosen temporary chairman, Rev. Joseph Travis, permanent chairman, and A. J. Laird, secretary.

The records of the annual meeting, having been referred to the Board, were revised, and the Treasurer's bond conditionally approved. M. A. Gault, A. J. Laird, and J. B. Blank were made committee on Finance; Thos. Hodge, W. I. Phillips, and J. P. Stoddard on Building; W. T. Meloy, L. N. Stratton, O. F. Lumry, and Henry L. Kellogg, on Publications. The editors of the Cynosure were continued as last year, and W. I. Phillips was chosen publisher. The salaries of the two permanent officers of the Association, General Agent and Treasurer, were continued as last year and the same arrangement was voted for the editors. W. B. Stoddard, New York State Agent, was voted a credit of 15 per cent. on subscriptions previously raised in New York. A paper on the Southern work was read and the matter of engaging one or more lecturers and paying them was referred to the General Agent. A deficit of $26 was reported from the Convention just held.

As the Board was about to adjourn George W. Clark desired to say and sing a word of cheer for the encouraging outlook for the reform and to express the pleasure he had taken in meeting, for the first time, with the Board. He sang:

"There's much to cheer in this glorious work,
If we only think to take it;"

and at the request of Prof. Lumry, offered a closing prayer.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, June 27th, 1884.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—With something of sadness and many pleasant remembrances of kind neighbors and dear Christian friends, my family and I stepped on the train at Wheaton, Illinois, at 5:30 A. M., June 25th, and at 2:30 next day safely landed in this city. We were most kindly received by Prof. E. D. Bailey and family, and were glad to find the American doing its excellent work of enlightenment in this beautiful but wicked city.

There is but little of marked interest transpiring. Congress is rapidly completing its business, and expects to adjourn soon. The long contested Mississippi election case between Chalmers and Manning is finally terminated by giving the seat to Chalmers, the only Republican member of the House from that State. He was a Confederate officer.

The President and Cabinet are considering the charges against Gen. Swaim, but have not yet decided when the court martial shall take place. As the General is a 33rd degree Mason, there is no reason to think that it will amount to anything.

At present much interest is awakened by the investigation of recently discovered frauds in the Medical Department of the Navy. It appears that by the use of false vouchers given for articles never delivered, the sum of $63,000 has been taken from the National Treasury. The testimony of a large number of witnesses, including that of Secretary Chandler and Medical Director P. S. Wales, of the United States Navy, who was Surgeon-General up to January last, fully confirms the above statement.

The following is from the Republican of this morning:

"Secretary Chandler had a difficult time when he made up his mind to change Surgeon-General Wales at the end of his four-years' term on January 26th, and also to remove his drunken and dishonest chief clerk, Daniel Carrigan. During the whole four years, Carrigan had been passing fraudulent vouchers directly under the Surgeon-General's eyes, and of course he made strenuous efforts to induce the President to retain his vigilant chief, in spite of the Secretary's objections. Probably grosser carelessness—to use no worse term—was never known in a public officer."

This is a small steal compared with many others, but it is refreshing to know that fear of political retribution does something to promote justice, and prevent malfeasance in office.

Great efforts are being made to infuse enthusiasm into the Republican campaign. The ratification meetings recently held here and in Alexandria, it is hoped will give something more than galvanic life to the party. But time determines all things.

Mid-summer legislation with a considerable more than average mean temperature, is very undesirable, and Congressmen are hurrying their work preparatory to adjournment. The paramount question with most is re-election, and this is a matter they must soon settle with their constituents.

Among the measures that will fail because of want of harmony between the two houses is the bill for the redemption of the trade dollar. Thirty-six millions of these dollars were coined by the authority of the government, and were received in good faith by the people. Now many millions are to be lost to the poor, by the refusal to provide for their recoinage. This is a great injustice, which it is hoped a future Congress will not fail to redress. So, too, the Educational Bill, which is of so great importance to the South and to the nation, is likely to fail, because of its supposed invasion of State rights. This right of the State to preserve and perpetuate ignorance is akin to rights (?) of saloon-keepers to sell, and the drunkard to consume the poisons that engender poverty and crime. No one questions the right of the National Government to protect the States from foreign invasion, and yet the prevalence of ignorance is a far greater danger. The right to do wrong, is neither personal nor constitutional. It were well if some of our legislators had found this out.

The appropriation of another half million for the Potomac Flats is a guarantee that all shall be done that can be to save this city from malarial poison. It were well if a little more attention was given to the alleys which with the abounding heat and moisture are coming to be anything but favorable to the health and morals of the hordes of poor that throng them. I see no objection to protecting the White House from malaria, but the cesspools of the alleys and the saloons on our streets are inconceivably more dangerous than the Potomac Flats.

It has been finally decided that Gen. Swaim is to have a trial by court-martial for conduct unbecoming an army officer, and the officers who are to conduct it have been designated. Much credit is due to Secretary Lincoln for his disposition to make an example of one who perverted a high office to personal ends; but if a 33d degree Mason is convicted and punished it will be a surprise.

The following notice cut from the last night's Star shows the outcropping of the great conspiracy which under multiform shapes and devices pervades every department of society. It cannot be long ere the people will awake to the great danger of entrusting their political, civil, and religious institutions to the hands of men who are but the tools of the secret orders:

ORGANIZED RUFFIANS IN MARYLAND.—Dispatches from West Union, Doddridge county, Md., state that the lawless band of robbers known as the "Red Men," who were troublesome years ago, have suddenly renewed their depredations. Numerous outrages and robberies have been reported. Recently the house of a farmer named McGowan was robbed, and Mrs. McGowan was brutally maltreated and beaten. Annie Weeks was similarly treated.

It took slavery 250 years to develop its character to such an extent that the nation was constrained to put it away. I trust we shall see the end and danger of organized secresy sooner than that. Surely the sooner it is seen the less difficult will be the task of suppression.

LITERATURE.

A WOMAN'S LIFE WORK: the labors and experiences of Laura S. Haviland. With steel portrait of the author and other illustrations; pp. 520. Price, cloth, $1.75; half Russia, $2.25. For sale at this office.

Few readers of the Cynosure were not more or less directly interested in the colored exodus to Kansas five years ago. Next to Gov. St. John, the names best known in that remarkable movement were Laura S. Haviland and Elizabeth Comstock, two Quaker ladies, whose lives had been devoted to relieving the suffering and the oppressed. None will forget their labor of self-denial and love among the poor refugees. But that work was only an incident, a sample of Mrs. Haviland's life-work. Among the slaves in the South, or aiding those escaping to the freedom of Canada, or nursing the sick and wounded in the war, her life has been one of remarkable faith, thrilling incident and glorious success in efforts for the good of men. This is the record of the volume, told in her own earnest, cheerful, pious words, a book worth reading by every one of the millions of young women of America who are looking for their "mission." Geo. W. Clark, long and intimately acquainted with Mrs. Haviland, writes thus of her book:

A WONDERFUL WOMAN, A WONDERFUL LIFE AND A WONDERFUL BOOK!—Laura S. Haviland is a quiet, gentle, unassuming Quaker woman, 76 years of age, yet vigorous, who has had a remarkable career of usefulness, and has now given to the world a remarkable history of her "Life Work," as a teacher, at an early day, of the colored refugees in Canada and in Michigan, where I saw her forty-six years ago, and in other States, as a traveler down South in the guise of a "berry picker," helping out into freedom many slaves; as a nurse and preacher to the sufferers in hospitals during the war, and with Gov. St. John and Elizabeth Comstock, relieving the destitute and suffering refugees in Kansas, etc.

Her book is neither fiction nor founded on fiction, but is an interesting narration of facts of a most thrilling character, as every one will find and testify, who will get and read her book, now on sale at the Cynosure office, 221 W Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

GEO. W. CLARK.

The Century will commence in the August number a series of three papers by Mr. W. J. Stillman, recording the experiences of a classical expedition undertaken for the magazine. His object was to trace the wanderings of Ulysses, as described in Homer's "Odyssey," and to identify, as far as it is possible to-day, the localities visited by the Ithacan king. The articles will have archæological value as well as special interest for modern travelers. The illustrations have been drawn by Mr. Fenn, from sketches or photographs made by Mr. Stillman, who has closely described the localities as they appear to-day. Mr. Stillman made his journey in a yacht, in order to examine at leisure all the localities in question. At Ithaca he discovered an archaic inscription of great interest, a fragment of which had previously been found by Schleimann, and the method of the latter's investigations is incidentally spoken of.

—The United Presbyterian Church of Scotland has just held its annual Synod. It was mentioned as an encouraging fact that of the students who had just completed their course, eight had offered themselves for the foreign mission field, and six had been accepted.

—At the session of the Toronto Methodist Conference the report of the Committee on Temperance advocating prohibition was adopted. A resolution was passed to memorialize the Governor in Council to provide at the next general election for taking the votes of electors on the question of prohibition, also to memorialize a general conference to enact a law ordering the use of unfermented wine in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. The report of the Committee on Sabbath Observance was adopted. It protests against the running of trains, ferries, street-cars, or printing-presses on Sunday, and the mocking farce of Sunday funerals with parades, and in fact all Sunday parades and marches. The Committee also expressed regret that in the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railroad those in authority permitted the continuance of work on Sundays. They suggested the appointment of a commission of three ministers and three laymen to confer with the Dominion Government for the enactment of laws carrying out the wishes of the Conference. The report was adopted. During the discussion the Salvation Army parades were denounced as an intolerable nuisance.

THE HOME.

HIS LOVE.

The love of God is deep—
So deep, no earth-line ever yet hath fathomed it.
Dip in the chalice of thine heart, and steep
Thy thirsty soul in that unmeasured stream;
Filled to the brim, thine overflowing heart
Shall love, and life, to all around impart.

The love of God is strong—
So strong, that death, the strong, lies vanquished now,
And love the victor, stands with crowned brow;
So strong, that human frailty, human fear,
Cannot undo the soul by God held dear.

The love of God is wise—
So wise, it gives not unto us the choice
Of life or death, or even of joy or pain;
He hides the future from our straining eyes,
And leaves our souls content to realize
"He doeth all things well."

GOING ON UNTO PERFECTION.

Terms and human philosophy have darkened counsel and discouraged many Christians who would gladly go on unto perfection. The Bible points out the fact that we may be "holy," "sanctified," "perfect," but avoids all metaphysics and philosophy of the process in the soul. Men "wise above what is written" have ambitiously obtruded their little philosophies upon the truth, to the great confusion of many. Passing by these small philosophers, we proclaim simply the whole counsel of God. Because the terms "sanctification," "holiness," "perfection," have been unwisely and flippantly used by many of high profession, others shrink from the Scriptural terms. And because many advocates of "holiness" have been hot-headed and censorious and controversial, others have avoided the subject. It must be confessed that controversial advocacy and Pharisaical profession have prejudiced the precious truth. Controversy about the soul's perfect love of God is as out of place as about a mother's love for her babe. I will have no discussion with any one over a matter which is the most intimate and sacred experience of the soul. It is as distasteful as discussion with others of my love for my wife. I hope to show the fact in my life, and testify of the truth when proper. But what shall I name this state? The Bible covers the fact in many terms. Many of the distinguished persons quoted above gave no name to their holy experience, while all agree in the fact, and lived, enjoyed, and praised God in the fact. Be sure you seek and find completeness in Christ and you are all right. When you are groaning after a deeper work of grace, you are on the road to holiness. When you love God with all your heart, you have attained sanctification. When hungering and thirsting after righteousness, you are going on unto perfection. When striving in all things to say, "Thy will be done," you are going on unto perfection. When striving in everything to please God, you are going on unto perfection. When striving to have the mind of Christ in you, in all things, you are going on unto perfection. When seeking to be filled with all the fulness of God, you are going on unto perfection. When seeking to be dead unto sin and alive unto God, you are going on unto perfection. When striving earnestly to be just right in heart and life, you are going on unto perfection. In the honest soul, these generically all mean one and the same with "sanctification." It is the reaching of the soul to that rich completing grace. Let us never rest until we have this glorious satisfying experience of the grace of God to save unto the uttermost.

How does this state differ from regeneration? Heb. 6: 11 teaches: as the babe differs from the man; as the foundation differs from the completed edifice; as the blade differs from the full corn in the ear; as the daybreak from the noonday splendor; as a work begun differs from the same work completed. Regeneration is sanctification begun, and sanctification is regeneration perfected. They are not different graces, but the same grace in different degrees. The house begun and the house finished are the same house, in different stages of its history. One stage is much more glorious. The perfected house is far superior to the house in the beginning. Christian perfection is the maturity of the same Christian graces—not different ones—that were implanted in the soul at regeneration. Mr. Wesley said, "Sanctification begins the moment a man is justified." But it is not completed then. Mr. Inskip once said in my pulpit, "Sanctification means a good deal more religion of the same kind that we received in regeneration." Think of a dark room. Open little crevices, and you have a little light. Open the shutters more, and you have more light. Open all the shutters fully, and the room is flooded with light. This is not different light, it is the same light, but vastly more of the same. Regeneration is the newborn soul partially lighted with grace; sanctification is the same soul flooded with the same grace. Beloved, open all the shutters, that your souls may be filled with the light of the knowledge of the glory of God, in the name of Jesus Christ! All we need is more religion! God give us the fulness!

Is this experience gradual or instantaneous? Both. "Let us go on unto perfection." The "going on" is a gradual process. It may be rapid or slow, in fact varies greatly in different persons. Some will make as much progress in the attainment of the necessary knowledge and strength of faith to apprehend Christ as their Saviour to the uttermost, in a few months as others do in many years. Temperance, proper instruction, mental habits, religious opportunities, personal fidelity, providential discipline, all differentiate the swiftness or slowness of the progress. Just as some minds will solve a problem, or learn a language, or master a trade, quicker than others, so some minds will grasp and master the great spiritual truths of the Bible quicker and easier than others. And so the progress toward "perfection," whether slow or swift, is always gradual. But the text has another side, "Let us go on unto perfection." The word "perfection" is the goal. The word unto as emphatically teaches that there is an instant when we reach the goal and grasp the prize. The text does not say "go on towards," but "unto" the goal, till we reach it. There is therefore an instant when we touch the goal. So it is both gradual and instantaneous. One class, fixing the mind on the gradual development toward a holy and sanctified state, quite overlook the moment when the work is completed, and call it all a gradual work. The other class, fixing the mind on the supreme moment of the completed work, and its brilliant joy or deep peace, quite overlook the gradual steps of months, or years that lead on to this instant, and call the whole work instantaneous. It is the old senseless dispute about the color of the chameleon—the foolish fight of the knights about whether the shields were silver or gold, when the exact truth was it was silver on the side of one and gold on the side of the other. There is the same unity and same diversity in the sanctifying of the soul that there was in the conversion. In both states it is all of the grace of God, by faith in Christ through the operations of the Holy Ghost. But also as the conversion of two souls is never just alike in the consciousness, so the sanctification differs in its modes in different souls. God respects our individuality, and men of broad thought do the same. The narrow and bigoted alone would try to make all Christian experiences, like bullets, exactly alike. It is both irrational and impossible without annulling individuality. The statement is correct, then, that all Christians are partially sanctified from the hour of conversion, that as they advance in knowledge and faith and truth, they are more and more sanctified; and that whenever they come to trust Christ as their Saviour from all sin, that instant they are entirely sanctified. Toward this full salvation from sin we ought to steadfastly long and strive, resting not till we are entirely the Lord's. Remember, this is the privilege of each, and we must never rest satisfied with anything less. Then all the Christian graces implanted at the hour of regeneration—love, joy, peace, faith, meekness, goodness and the rest—will mature into the full strength of manhood.

By what means is this state attained? The answer is clear from our previous positions. By the same means by which we attained regeneration. Since it is not a different religion, but simply more of the same kind, we attain it in the same way we reach all religious experience. It is the same sun rising higher that gives us the noonday splendor, and gave us the morning dawn. The conditions are entire consecration to God, and explicit faith in Christ to save us from all sin. Upon these conditions, which are our free acts, the Holy Spirit, who initiated the work of our salvation in the hour of regeneration, perfects that work in our entire sanctification. Prayer and the truth of God's Word are the chief means to be used, the same as in conversion. Of course the means—prayer, and the truth, and the conditions — consecration and faith — have larger meaning and fuller grasp in sanctification! Meditation and experience have given us larger and more correct views of our depravity and need of purity, of Christ's holiness and his will concerning us, of Christ as our complete Saviour, and of the power of the gospel and its ample provisions to save us from sin. Therefore our consecration and prayer grasp these larger truths, and consequently introduce us into this higher life. The time when we shall reach this higher life, then, depends on ourselves. The provisions are ready, and God is ready. God is ready now to save every sinner in the world if they will come to him in the appointed manner; and just so God is ready to sanctify every Christian now, if by consecration and faith they are ready to receive it now. There is no time when sincere Christians may not and ought not to seek and pray, and trust for God to sanctify them and fill them with His ineffable peace. The sooner you see this as privilege and duty the sooner you will reach the goal.

What are the evidences of this state? One word covers all evidences—Love.

Jesus erected this simple test when He said that our whole duty is to love God with all our heart and our neighbor as ourselves. "On these two hang ALL the law and the prophets." When these two commandments are fulfilled in you, you are as perfect as anybody ever was or will be in this world. The Spirit witnesseth with our spirits to the fact, when this perfect love fills our hearts. So that we have the witness of the Holy Spirit as one evidence, and have the fruit of the Spirit, also, as an evidence. —Bishop Peck in Guide to Holiness.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

OUR HOMESTEAD.

Our old brown homestead reared its walls
From the wayside dust aloof,
Where the apple boughs could almost cast
Their fruitage on its roof;
And the cherry trees so near it grew,
That when awake I've lain,
In the lonesome nights I've heard the limbs,
As they creaked against the pane;
And those orchard trees, O, those orchard trees!
I've seen my little brothers rocked
In their tops by the Summer breeze.

The sweet-briar under the window-sill,
Which the early birds made glad,
And the damask rose by the garden fence,
Were all the flowers we had.
I've looked at many a flower since then,
Exoties rich and rare,
That in other eyes were lovelier,
But not to me so fair;
For those roses bright, O, those roses bright!
I have twined them with my sister's locks,
That are lain in the dust from sight.

We had a well, a deep old well,
Where the spring was never dry,
And the cool drops down from the mossy stones
Were falling constantly;
And there never was water half so sweet
As that in my little cup,
Drawn up to the curb by the rude old sweep
Which my father's hand set up;
And that deep old well, O, that deep old well!
I remember yet the splashing sound
Of the bucket as it fell.

Our homestead had an ample hearth,
Where at night we loved to meet;
There my mother's voice was always kind,
And her smile was always sweet;
And there I've sat on my father's knee,
And watched his thoughtful brow,
With my childish hand in his raven hair—
That hair is silver now!
But that broad hearth's light, O, that broad hearth's light!
And my father's look, and my mother's smile,
They are in my heart to-night.

NEW YORK AND CHINA.

A little girl named Mary stood at the study table this morning, looking carefully over the map of Asia.

"Where is China, anyhow?" she asked me at last.

"Never heard of it," I answered. Then a pair of astonished gray eyes were raised to look at me.

"Why, auntie, you don't mean you never heard of China?"

"Oh, certainly not. I understood you to ask a question about 'China-anyhow.' That is a place I never heard of."

Then Mary laughed. "I've found it," she said, presently. "Dear me, what a little bit of a yellow corner it is! I shouldn't think many people could live there."

"How many people do live there?" I asked her.

"I don't know. A good many. Roy Burton said, more than live in New York City; but I don't believe it, do you, auntie? They couldn't all get into this little yellow spot!"

"Roy Burton is very wise," I said, laughing. "Why, Mamie, China has people enough in it to make three hundred cities the size of New York."

The eyes opened wider yet. "Are you joking, Aunt Alice?" she asked me.

"Not a bit. Don't you know that New York has only about thirteen hundred thousand people in it, and in China there are about four hundred millions?"

"I can't think such a large number," said Mamie, gravely; and I don't wonder, do you?

Well, this set me to thinking about the Chinese, with their queer language, and their queer ways of eating and sleeping, and their queer dress, and their queer feet, and, oh, ever so many queer things—above all, perhaps, of their strauge, sad notions about religion. I heard a Chinaman the other day telling a story of his home life. "What did you think at that time about our religion?" a man asked him. And he answered with a grave shake of his head, "Oh, we never heard one word about your Jesus at that time." How shall they hear without a preacher?

"Mamie," I said to the little girl, "suppose your father should conclude that you were not worth bringing up, and should bring a tub of water and put you in it, and hold your head downward until you were drowned?"

"Aunt Alice!" she said, in a voice of horror, "how can you say such a dreadful thing?"

"I was thinking that, if you had been born in China, that might have been your fate."

"Do they do such things?"

"Yes, indeed. They don't think girls are worth raising. I heard a missionary tell of one poor woman who had drowned six little girl babies, all her own! When she came to hear about Jesus, and gave her heart to him, the tears streamed down her cheeks one day, and she cried out: 'Oh, it seems to me I can hear my babies crying, as they did before I drowned them! If I had heard about your Jesus before, I might have saved my babies!" Poor mother! Shouldn't we hurry to let all the mothers know about our Jesus?"

"I can't be a missionary," said Mamie.

"You can't? I wonder why. What is a missionary but one who goes on an errand? Do you mean you cauot do any errands for Jesus?"

"Not in China, auntie."

"I don't see why. Don't you know the South street Sunday-school is supporting a little girl in China, who is learning about our Jesus every day? Don't your pennies go there every Sunday, when you don't forget them? And don't those very pennies help to keep the little girl in school?"

"I'll remember my pennies after this," said little Mamie, thoughtfully. Then I was glad.—The Pansy.

CHILDREN IN JAPAN.

The character of the Japanese houses saves much trouble about children. There are no stairs for them to tumble down, no furniture for them to fall over, no sticky food with which to bedaub themselves. So there is seldom need to reprove them. They are seldom heard to cry, but when they do break forth they make a tremendous racket, yelling with great fierceness. In his travels through the country, Professor Morse only once saw boys fighting, and then they were only slapping each other.

The dress of the Japanese children is the same as that of the adult. The sleeves are open on the inner edge, with a pocket on the outer side. The dress is very simple, easy and free, with tucks to be let down as the child grows, so that, as the fashions never change, and the dress is made of strong silk, brocade, or silk and cotton, it will last from ten to twenty years.

The children's shoes are made of blocks of wood, secured with cord. The stocking resembles a mitten, having a separate place for the great toe. As these shoes are lifted only by the toes, the heels make a rattling souud as their owners walk, which is quite stunning in a crowd. They are not worn in the house, as they would injure the soft straw mats with which the floors are covered. You leave your shoes at the door. Every house is built with reference to the number of mats required for the floors, each room having from eight to sixteen, and in taking lodging you pay so much for a mat. They think it extravagant in us to require a whole room to ourselves. The Japanese shoe gives perfect freedom to the foot. The beauty of the human foot is only seen in the Japanese. they have no corns, no ingrowing nails, no distorted joints. Our toes are cramped until they are deformed, and are in danger of extinction. The Japanese have the full use of their toes, and to them they are almost like fingers. Nearly every mechanic makes use of his toes in holding his work. Every toe is fully developed. Their shoes cost two cents, and will last six months.

The babies are taken care of on the backs of older children, to which they are fastened by loose bands. You will see a dozen little girls, with babies asleep on their backs, engaged in playing battledore, the babies, heads bobbing up and down. This is better than howling in a cradle. The baby sees everything, gets everywhere, gets plenty of pure air, and the sister who carries it gets her shoulders braced back, and doubtless some lessons in patience. It is funny to see the little tots, when they begin to run alone, carrying their dolls on their back.

Where we have one toy the Japanese have a thousand. Everything in art and nature is imitated in miniature. Toys can be bought for half a cent, and elegant ones for eight or ten cents. There are stands on the streets kept by old women, where little girls can buy a spoonful of batter and make their own toy cakes. Then comes along a man with a long bucketful of soapsuds, of which he sells a cupful for the hundreth part of a cent (they have coin as small as that) to children, who blow soap bubbles through bamboo reeds. The babies make mud pies and play at keeping house just as ours do. They are taught always to be polite and say "Thank you." If you give a child a penny he will not only thank you at the time, but whenever he meets you again. Politeness, etiquette, filial piety and modesty are taught in all the schools and colleges.

There is no locking of doors, yet the most valuable articles left in your room are safe. A Japanese gentleman inserted in his gate on the public street a most delicately carved panel, such as we would place in our parlor, and in a period of five years it was not touched or defaced in any way. Noting the contrast this offers to the state of things in our own country, Professor Morse believes it to be owing to our more careless ways of bringing up our children. It may be said that the Japanese are naturally gentle. Yet they make the fiercest fighters in the world. It is mostly in the bringing up.—Home Journal.

TEMPERANCE.

TOBACCO.

Mr. Wesley says to his preachers: "Touch no drink, tobacco or snuff. Lie down before ten; rise before five." These rules are as necessary for people as for preachers.

We all know Dr. Adam Clark's strong testimony against its use. Francis Asbury and the American Methodist fathers omitted tobacco from the list of intoxicants. Among the reasons for this omission, one doubtless was that tobacco was only moderately used at that time by comparatively few persons. And another reason likely was, that tobacco was included in the currency of this country, for it was at one time a legal tender. So many pounds of tobacco was a standard value established by statute. It is still so in this State.

Tobacco is one of the anti-spasmodic remedies used in medicine, in the treatment of spasmodic asthma, and the paroxysm of difficult breathing in emphysema. Asthmatics unaccustomed to the use of tobacco are sometimes relieved by a pipe or cigar, but the effect is lost by continual use. The application of tobacco in some form has proved beneficial in some local diseases, yet medical men agree that the remedy is a dangerous one, as numerous deaths have been caused by it.

To show that the habitual and continued use of tobacco is injurious to body and soul, and should be discountenanced, let us notice, 1st. Its properties; 2d. Its constitutional and local effects upon both body and mind.

Its properties. The injurious properties of tobacco are determined by the following analysis of its chemical contents, by Prof. Johnson of Durham, in his Chemistry of Common Life: They are three in number; a volatile oil, a volatile alkali, and an empyreumatic oil. The volatile oil, called nicotianina, has the oder of tobacco and possesses a bitter taste. On the mouth and throat it produces a sensation similar to that caused by tobacco smoke. When applied to the nose it occasions sneezing, and when taken internally it gives rise to giddiness, nausea, and an inclination to vomit. The volatile alkali, called nicotina, has the odor of tobacco, and an acrid, burning taste. It is one of the most intense of all poisons, approaching in its activity the strongest preparation of prussic acid. A single drop is sufficient to kill a dog. Its vapor is so irritating that it is difficult to breathe in a room in which a single drop has been evaporated. One hundred pounds of dry tobacco yield seven pounds of nicotin. In smoking 100 grains of tobacco, or about one quarter of an ounce, there may be drawn into the mouth two grains or more of one of the most subtle of all poisons known. The empyreumatic oil is acrid and disagrecable to the taste, narcotic and poisonous. One drop applied to the tongue of a cat brought on convulsions, and in two minutes occasioned death. The Hottentots are said to kill snakes by putting a drop on their tongue. Under its influence the reptiles die as instantaneously as if killed by an electric shock. It appears to act in nearly the same way as prussic acid. The crude oil is supposed to be the juice of the cursed Lebenon, described by Shakespeare as a distillation, in the play of Hamlet, Act 1, Scene 1.

I have made some extracts from a little book, on "The Use and Abuse of Tobacco," by Dr. John Lizars, late professor of Surgery in the Royal College of Surgeons, and Senior operating Surgeon to the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh.

Constitutional and local effects. Some of the constitutional effects of the use of tobacco are—giddiness, sickness, vomiting, dyspepsia, vitiated taste of the mouth, loose bowels, diseased liver, congestion of the brain, apoplexy, palsy, mania, loss of memory, amaurosis or blindness, deafness, nervousness, emasculation, and cowardice.

Locally, smoking causes ulceration of the lips, tongue, gums, mucous membrane of the mouth, or cheeks, or tonsils, or velum, and even the pharynx. Many persons by smoking produce cancerous ulcerations of the upper and lower lips.

Dr. Lizars says, "It is truly melancholy to see the great numbers of the young who smoke nowadays; and it is painful to contemplate how many youths must be stunted in their growth, and feebled in their minds, before they arrive at manhood.

"The students attending the American colleges are said to destroy their physical and moral powers by smoking tobacco, so as to unfit them to prosecute their studies, and afterward to become useful members of society.

"The pupils of the Polytechnic School in Paris, settled the tobacco controversy by dividing themselves into two groups, the smokers, and the non-smokers. In the various ordeals through which they passed in the year, the smokers had continually fallen, while the men who did not smoke enjoyed a cerebral atmosphere of the clearest kind, and far excelled the smokers in their studies."

Surgeon McDonald, of the Dunkirk and Hatfield works, who paid some attention to the effects of tobacco smoking on the system, says, "Sailors and navies smoke more than any other class, yet with less injury than those who lead a sedentary life. He mentions one curious fact not generally known, but requiring only to be proved, viz:—that no smoker can think steadily, or continuously, on any subject while smoking. He cannot follow out a train of ideas—to do so he must lay aside his pipe. I think it was the good William Bramwell, who said he could make no religious or serious impression upon a certain man while he continued smoking; but after he had persuaded him to lay aside his cigar, then his conversation produced conviction in the soul of this man."

The author already quoted says: "On woman, smoking takes a sad hold. She soon becomes lazy and indolent, of dirty habits, and makes bad recoveries from her confinements; her children at the breast are liable to erysipelatous and other skin diseases.

"In conclusion," he says, "I may state the germs of premature decay which the abuse of tobacco is spreading through the country, will ultimately, in my opinion, prove more overwhelming than even the serious abuse of intoxicating liquors."

Dr. McCosh, once a professor in the Calcutta Medical College, says, among other things: "Habitual smoking too often leads to habitual drinking; the drain upon the system must be replenished, and brandy and water is the succedaneum."—W. R. Monroe, M. D., in Earnest Christian.

BLACKGUARD MAKING.

Horace Greeley said that he would not say that every tobacco user was a blackguard, but if they would find him a blackguard that was not a tobacco user, he would find them two white blackbirds. He might have gone further, and said that any man who is not a blackguard, yet who indulges in tobacco, is in a fair way to be made one by the habit. Alcohol distorts the judgment, though it does not always benumb the conscience. Indeed, some people are never so pious as they are when partially intoxicated. But tobacco, while it leaves the judgment unaffected, stupifies the sensibilities, and benumbs the conscience. Consequently, habitual smokers have very little regard for the rights of others.

A man takes a roll composed of stinking, poisonous weeds, sets it on fire, and placing it between his lips, draws in the smoke, which circulates among the rotten teeth which adorn his buccal cavity. After it has accomplished its mission of fumigation there he simply blows it into your face, and compels you to breathe it, instead of air. You have to pass through a smoking-car, appropriately described as "hell on wheels," holding your breath to avoid strangulation. You walk the streets, and the street-smoker, classified by some wise naturalist as "the skunk of civilization," goes before you, shedding his perfume on every hand. In a public vehicle, one of these offensive creatures pulls out his pipe or his cigar, and without one thought of the outrage he is committing, or one care as to how many are nauseated and disgusted with his filthy weed, contamiuates the air which is the common gift of God to all around. Says Dr. S. I. Prime, when writing of his travels, in the New York Observer:

"This summer I have observed a great increase in the number of men who have lost their sense of delicacy in the matter of smoking. In every hotel where I have been, the men pay no attention to ordinary rules of civilization in this respect. On the front piazza of the hotel at Nantucket, gentlemen perfect in every other particular, clergymen of high breeding and position, smoked freely in the midst of ladies to whom they were strangers. If the ladies took their seats at the other end of the piazza it was all the same, for the clouds of smoke there were just as dense. I am not saying a word against the use of tobacco; but merely that it is a shame for any man to take advantage of his neighbor, male or female, and compel him or her to endure what is disagreeable."

Cleanly people are likely to grow careless and untidy in their old age; but old tobacco users are proverbially loathsome and filthy. We remember an old minister, a very excellent man, of remarkable intelligence and ability, and yet in his old age he seemed to know nothing but tobacco. He would whittle kindling wood, and eat tobacco like a goat. Memory and intelligence had almost entirely departed, but that filthy drool and drivel remained. Let Christians and men of decency, who do not wish to become utterly loathsome in their habits, put away this nauseous weed. Let ministers of the gospel cast it from them, lest the weak and the dying, sickened by their presence, shrink even from their prayers. And let men who do not wish to become an offense to all decent people forsake this habit.

When a certain prominent minister, of genteel appearance, was arguing, and boasting somewhat of the health and strength of an old preacher, who it was estimated had eaten twenty hogs and chewed no end of tobacco, a quick-witted woman, who had not forgotten some of the marks of tobacco which he had left behind him in his visitations, said, "Yes; and you would no more sleep with him than you would with a hog."

"It is a mean, nasty habit," said the old preacher, but he still continued to indulge in it—a sad evidence of its conscience-paralyzing and will-controlling power. Let those who are wise cut themselves loose from this base indulgence; and let those who have not been entrapped by this snare of Satan, stand fast in the liberty which they enjoy.—Safeguard.

THE CHURCHES.

—The next General Assembly of the United Presbyterian church will be held in Topeka, Kansas. This meeting will have more than usual interest to our readers because of the report of the Grand Army of the Republic; whether as a secret order, membership iu it must be accounted a sin.

—Dr. Nevius has made an estimate that there are, or were, in round numbers about 300,000 idol temples in China; and at the rate of ten idols to each temple, there would be 3,000.000 idols. These temples he estimates to have cost $1,000,000,000! And the money which is spent annually by this people in worship and the repairs of these buildings, as well as the building of new ones, is simply beyond conception. In Soochow, one of the largest temples has recently been overhauled and repaired, at an expense, it is said, of $70,000—largely given by one man, who thereby is supposed to get great merit.

—It has beeu reported in the press dispatches that Mr. Sankey had broken down in health, and was obliged to leave Mr. Moody to complete the meetings alone. But the Presbyterian Banner, of Pittsburgh, says: "Mr. Ira D. Sankey, the singing evangelist and companion of Mr. D. L Moody, has arrived in this country, and will soon be followed by Mr. Moody. Mr. Sankey came in advance, as the recent death of his father in Newcastle, Pa., made his presence necessary in the settlement of the estate. He is in good health and fine voice, and says that Mr. Moody and himself will again enter upon the evangelistic labors in this country."

—The United Brethren church at Monticello, Iowa, came near being entirely consumed by fire on Saturday evening, June 21st, by the falling of a chandelier while being lighted for the quarterly-meeting service. The flames, however, were extinguished by the timely and well-directed help which the cry of fire, uttered by the janitor, soon brought to his aid.

—A new mission to the Jews is about to be established in Tiberias by the Free Church of Scotland, to be called, "The Sea of Galilee Medical Mission." The report given to the "Assembly" by the deputies who had been appointed to visit Palestine to consider the prospects of Jewish Missions there, was very encouraging in its character. They stated that the younger Jews were manifesting a spirit of restlessness and inquiry, and an impatience of old Talmudical authority which made them specially open to efforts for their enlightenment on Christian truth. The signs of the times in relation to Israel are loudly calling for increased concern on the part of the Christian church to bring them to Christ.

—Elmer E. Lansing, M. D., sailed from New York on the 16th of April for Alexandria, Egypt. This new medical missionary of the United Presbyterian church is the youngest son of Rev. Dr. Lansing, of the Egyptian Mission, and was born in Cairo. Coming to this country when about twelve years old he studied at Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., and in the Medical University of Albany, N. Y.

—Mr. Edward Kimball, "the church-debt raiser," has returned to his home in Chicago after two years' absence on the Pacific coast, and lately he helped the Bethany Congregational church raise $5,000 for their new building, which it is estimated will cost about $8,000. The City Missionary Society had pledged $2,000 to the building fund, and with the $5,000 raised by the church there is a prospect of the work of building beginning at once.

—The First Baptist church of Chicago held the first of a series of open air services at the Douglas Monument Park Sabbath afternoon, June 29, when Dr. Henson preached to a large congregation.

—It is announced that the Congregational ministers of Chicago have held their last meeting for the summer and there will be a general exodus. It is better to read that Rev. Charles H. Burr, pastor of Bethany Congregational church, New York, writes: "Until we find that summer weather decreases the tendency to sin, we shall not close our church or Sunday-school for a single Sunday." His summer vacation will however be spent as usual on Lake Champlain. Dr. R. S. MacArthur is equally emphatic. He writes: "Calvary Baptist church will be open all summer. No service on Sunday or during the week will be omitted. We never close. We have by example opposed the church-closing tendency. Our spiritual life has been maintained in summer as in winter. I expect to preach in my own pulpit nearly every Sunday."

—The Friends have just concluded their annual meetings in Ireland and England. At the English meeting Mr. Rufus King, of Baltimore, obtained the sanction of the Society for Religious Work in the south of France, Mount Lebanon, Australia, Tasmania, and New Zealand. Mr. Isaac Sharpe returned his certificate after a seven years' mission, and gave encouraging accounts of his work in Africa, Australia, and the adjoining islands, Madagascar, the United States, Canada, Indian Territory, and Mexico. His certificate was renewed for work in Norway.

—A General Conference of the Evangelical Alliance is to be held in Copenhagen, Denmark; but the American branch will take no part in it, though it has authorized those appointed delegates to the Stockholm conference, to use their certificates for individual membership at the Copenhagen meeting, if they so desire.

—At the reunion of the Presbyterians in Belfast, Ireland, July 4th, a committee was appointed to effect a union of the Irish and Scotch Presbyterian churches. The five American delegates and a number of other Americans attended the session. The delegates to the Pan-Presbyterian Council, which adjourned yesterday, were at the meeting. The text of the telegram from President Arthur, iu response to the greeting sent him, was read. It is as follows: "Coming from a kindred ancestry the kind greetings of the Irish and Scotch assembled in Belfast to-day are especially pleasing and are very cordially reciprocated."

A cable message from Hong Kong received by the treasurer of the American Board, announces the wreck at Kusaie of the Morning Star, concerning whose safety much solicitude has been felt for some time. Fortunately all hands were saved, and will be sent to California by the Oceanic. It is a singular fact that the second vessel bearing this name was wrecked on the same island in 1869. The new Morning Star, now building at Bath, Me., which is to have steam power, is to be completed the coming autumn; but meantime it will be necessary for the Board to charter a vessel at Honolulu to carry on the work in Micronesia.

DISCUSSION IN A LUTHERAN SYNOD.

In the last Lutheran Standard appears a report from the proceedings of the Synod lately meeting at Columbus, Ohio. The subject for doctrinal discussion was in the form of a question thus: "What is the relation which Christian congregations should sustaiu to members of secret orders?" Rev. D. Simon discussed the subject in the following able manner:

In the introduction to the theses, it was shown that we are not discussing this subject so much from choice as from necessity. Secretists are making their power for evil felt in our congregations and it is manifest that we must take hold of them, because they have taken hold of us.

In explanation of the subject itself it was decided to add: Such as Masons, Odd-fellows, and the like. This was done because these two orders are, perhaps above all others, known to be religious institutions. We add, and the like, because there are others very similar in their character.

The first thesis as adopted reads: Secret orders, whether designedly or undesignedly, are at enmity with Christ and his church. The expressiou—whether designedly or undesignedly—was inserted to avoid misunderstanding. When it is said that secret orders are at enmity with Christ and his church, it is not said that it is their design and intention to stand arrayed against Christ and his church; but they stand thus arrayed nevertheless.

It was next shown from their titles and offices and emblems and ceremonies that these institutions profess a religiou of some kind. With this agree the publications of the orders geuerally.

After establishing that secret orders are of a religious character, it was further affirmed and shown that their religion excludes Christ. To show this, attention was first of all called to what everybody may know, to-wit: public ceremonies, such as dedications of temples, funeral rites, prayers used, and the like.

The author of the thesis then affirmed that secret orders would supplant the Christian church, and in this way show their enmity toward the church. To avoid misunderstanding, Synod changed the statement so as to read: secret orders, in their nature and tendency, would supplant the Christian church.

Special attention was called to the effect connection with a secret order has upon the individual. Those not yet in the church are convinced that by faithfulness to the lodge here below he secures an entrauce into the lodge above. The church is thus supplanted in her work of saving souls. One already in the church is gradually influenced to give up the church inasmuch as the lodge not ouly saves the soul, but, as it is thought, better provides for the body.

The second thesis reads: By membership in secret orders, the individual confesses a Christless religion, and places himself iu opposition to the work of the Christian church.

It was observed that people at times fail to see that they are responsible for the principles and character of the society with which they stand in connection. A Christian is recognized by his membership in the Christian church. A member of the Baptist church by the very fact of his membership declares that he believes immersion to be the only right mode of baptism. So every member of the Masonic lodge must be considered a Mason, not only in name, but in principle and character. But since the principles of Masonry exclude Christ and supplant the church, the individual places himself into the ranks of those who stand in conflict with Christ and his church.

The third thesis was considered at some length and changed so as to read: A Christian congregation must therefore not sustain a fraternal relation to members of secret orders, but

a) Those members of secret orders making application should be required to quit the lodge.

b) Those at present in the congregation should be taken into discipline.

In the discussion it was shown that God forbids Christians to hold religious fellowship with unbelievers. By standing ou fraternal relations with those who deny Christ and oppose his church, as those do who belong to the lodge, the church would make herself partaker of other men's sins. In other words: If the congregation fraternizes with a member of secret orders, she fraternizes with the orders themselves.

The difficulty which lies in the way of a person belonging to the church and at the same time to the lodge is simply this: By his membership in the lodge he confesses a Christless religion, whereas by his membership in the church he confesses Christ. How can he do both? And when an individual does both, does not the church owe it to him to undeceive him? Moreover, what can the effect be upon a congregation where such contradictions are tolerated?

The entire discussion was on the basis of the religious character of the orders. Their morality and degrading tendencies were merely touched upon, but the willingness was expressed on the part of some to show their unchristian character iu this respect also.

The last thesis remains over for discussion next year.

THE RELIGION OF INDIA.

Ram Chandra Bose, a convert from Hindooism and delegate to the late Methodist General Conference in Philadelphia, visited Chicago and spoke in several of the Methodist churches on a late Sabbath. From the daily press reports the following interesting summary is taken:

He stated that the term Ram Chandra, which formed a part of his name, was the appellation of the God Vishnu in his seveuth incarnation, when he took on the human form in order to slay the giant of Ceylon, which at one time was so powerful as to oppress both men and gods. Great power, according to the theology of the Hindoo religion, came as the result of austerity. In consequence of this idea various methods of mortifying the flesh were in vogue. One devotee practiced austerity by surrounding himself with a circle of fire on the hottest day of the year; another would gaze at the sun until blind; and in various ways this idea of punishing the body was carried out in order to secure from the God Vishnu special powers.

Hindooism, he said, was a many-sided religion, but yet its variety of sides might be compressed into two—popular and philosophical. Popular religion had to do with the department of works. In that department salvation was not attainable, but the devotee might be prepared for salvation. The work prescribed was three-fold. First was the reading of the Veda, or sacred scriptures of the Hindoos. There was a great deal of importance attached to the reading of them. Even if a person read without understanding he acquired certain merit. If a parrot repeated select portions it would be prepared for salvation. By reading them systematically and critically a Hindoo laid by an extra store of merit. Second in importaucc was held the doctrine of sacrifices. Buddhism anciently made war against sacrifices, but now it indorsed them. Sacrifices were represented as a bark that carried through a tempestuous sea of life to a haven of rest and peace. The third thing was alms-giving, not so much to the poor as to religious mendicants. If a devotee wished to be saved he had to migrate from the department of works to the department of knowledge. To do that he had first to find an accredited teacher. The Hindoo theory of inspiration differed from the Christian or Mohammedan They believed that God himself uttered the whole of the Veda in the hearing of a great sage, who in turn repeated it to a disciple, and so it came down to the teacher of the hour. That excluded a great number of learned men from teaching the scriptures. Max Muller had studied the Veda for twenty-five years—knew them perhaps better than any other man on the face of the earth, but he could not teach them, as he had not heard them from an accredited teacher. It was impossible to find a teacher authorized as required; but granted that a devotee found such an one, his object was to look into the hidden meaning of the scriptures. The Veda consisted of three portions: the hymnal, the ritualistic and the philosophical. The last was what he had to study under an accredited teacher. But the philosophy of the Veda did not lead him up to complete salvation. God was not known by sacrifices or alms-giving, although they were considered very meritorious. And it was said that God was not known even by the study of the Veda. A devotee might study it thoroughly and look into the meaning of every syllable and it might help, but would not bring him to a saving knowledge. In order to get that knowledge he had to retire to a forest and spend days and nights in meditation. God was said to be known only by meditation. In India one mode of meditatiou, during the hottest month, was for the devotee to sit in a riug of fire wrapped up in meditation for several hours or days. The Hindoo philosopher started with this: Is there anything to sustain life in its vicissitudes, and he came to the conclusion that there was not.

The Hindoo belief he characterized as the most monstrous and debasing known to the world. The gods and goddesses were either monsters of vice or monsters of cruelty, and took every shape and form. The people worshiped seas and lakes, rivers and rivulets, monkeys, cats, and reptiles of every description. A population of 253,000,000 had 330,000,000 idols, nearly as many as there were people in China. The principles of the Hindoo faith were that God was the author of all sin. There were 500,000 Protestant Christians scattered through India—souls snatched from the pit of heathenism. The speaker feelingly referred to his own conversion, and said the mission work had but just begun, and prayed that its great and beneficent light would be extended until the veil of darkness was lifted from the souls of all his people, and they could exclaim with him: "Your people are my people, your God is my God."

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

—Chicago Commandery, Knight Templar Masons, took a pleasure trip to St. Paul on Sabbath, June 22. The week was spent in parades, banquets and dances, and the whole affair in Masonic parlance is called a "pilgrimage"!

—The Patriarchal Circle lodges are very sore over their Odd-fellow relations still, and a meeting held in Columbus, O., this week they will decide upon some line of action. A prominent member says: "The action of the Sovereign Grand Lodge of the I. O. O. F. in regard to the circle was adjudged unwarranted and unfraternal, and to protect its members from harsh measures intended to break down the circle, the I. O. O. F. qualification was removed. It is not improbable that an effort will be made to restore that qualification at the approaching conclave. It is also understood that a new feature—in some sense a mutual benefit scheme, comprising several popular features in kindred societies—will be presented for action. The session promises to be one of the most important to this new and popular order which has yet been held.

—The Springfield Republican remarks upon the Pope's encyclical: "This talk must seem violent to people who know Freemasonry and kindred secret fraternities only as they exist in this country. It was even reported some time ago that the Pope would make a special exception in favor of the secret bodies of Great Britain and the United States, or at least a concession to them. He might well have done so; for Freemasonry in these countries is quite a different thing from the Freemasonry of some parts of continental Europe. The Pope's position, in fact, is almost the position maintained by American Masons against the French body. There the drift has openly been toward atheism; here religion is maintained as the corner-stone of the structure, and the Freemasons of the United States long ago removed all affinity with France for this reason.."

—The supreme officers of the Knights of Honor have secured a charter in Missouri, and will locate the offices in the building at St. Louis formerly occupied by the United States customs authorities. They will cut loose from the Kentucky charter, and not permit the order to be ruled by the clique in Kentucky, backed up by its State courts.

—St. Bernard, of Chicago, and other commanderies of Knights Templar, participated in the St. John's Day celebration at Louisville. The temperature was torrid, and five Sir Knights were sunstruck, among them being Major Nevans, Albert Schultz, Mr. Meffert, and George Holly, of Chicago.

—"The Princes of Oriental Consistory of this city," says the Chicago Evening Journal, "have decided to spend their summer vacation at Mackinaw Island, one of the most delightful and popular Northern resorts in this country. They take with them tents and all necessary camp appurtenances, and will be absent ten days, the command leaving by special train over the Michigan Central road via Jackson and Bay City on Sunday, August 3, arriving at the island on Monday morning. While there the excursionists will spend their time in fishing, boating, games of all kinds, dancing and excursions from the island. The President of the village has extended to the consistory the freedom of the island." This is the Masonic body of the highest rank. Their example of starting off for a "spree" by journeying on the Sabbath violates no tenet of Masonry.

—The Sau Francisco Argonaut raises a crusade banner against the chief business of the lodges of that city: "What with dead Irishmen, dead Masons, dead Oddfellows and the dead of other societies whose sole object of membership when living seems to be a display funeral when dead, San Francisco is in constant parade from Montgomery Street to Lone Mountain Cemetery. It is an absurd country practice, this offensive public funeral business; and the sooner San Francisco dispenses with its old black hearses, its dingy, dirty feathers, the solemn faces of the paid undertakers, the procession of crazy old hacks, and ceases to interrupt the business of our streets and impede the passage of our street-cars by long funeral processions whenever an Irishman or member of a secret or benevolent society dies, the sooner will it give evidence of ceasing to be a country village and of entering upon its career as a city."

—The outward hostility of Romanism and Freemasonry is strongly put in the following from the London Tablet, but with the earnest and universal proclamation of a pure Christianity the two systems would find a common ground of large sympathy:

"Not long ago we had one of the Belgian Ministers, M. Van Humbeck, the Minister of Public Instruction, telling the lodge at Antwerp: 'A corpse is weighing heavily on the world; it bars the road of progress. The corpse of the past, to give its true name roundly and without circumlocution, is Catholicism. It is this corpse, my brothers, that we have this day looked in the face, and if we have as yet not cast it into its grave, at all events we have lifted it a little nearer thereto. It is a great result.' English Freemasons, we suppose, would hardly adopt this brutal language toward what, after all, is the most ancient and most prevailing form of the religion that many of them profess—at all events 'from the teeth outwards,' to use Mr. Carlyle's phrase. Still, ever and again, they speak of the Catholic church in language which, if more decent, is hardly less significant. We have before us the report of a speech delivered a few years ago at Sutton, Coldfield, by a gentleman by the name of Parkinson (Mr. J. G. Parkinson, to be precise), who apparently is high in the Masonic hierarchy. At all events he is described as 'Grand Deacon,' 'Deputy Grand Master of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Middlesex,' and 'Past Master' of some other lodge. And the 'Grand Deacon' is stated—the Times is our authority—to have delivered himself thus: 'The two systems of Romanism and Freemasonry are not merely incompatible, they are radically opposed to each other. The first lesson taught to the newly instituted brothers is that Masonry is free. Freedom of thought and opinion, and the broadest toleration of religious matters are of the essence of Masonry. Masonry of itself is a religion of good works, and asks for no priestly intermediary between man and his Maker. Its impressive ritual enforces the solemn truth that a man shall be judged hereafter by his actions; and it enters not into differences between faith and creed.' Is it possible to offer a more complete justification than this 'Grand Deacon' here exhibits to us of the truth of the Sovereign Pontiff's judgment, that the Masonic sect is merely Naturalistic?"

HOLDEN WITH CORDS,

OR THE POWER OF THE SECRET EMPIRE. A faithful representation in story of the evil influence of Freemasonry, by E. E. FLAGG, author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story, accurately true to life because mainly a narration of historical facts. 384 pages. In cloth, $1; per doz., $9. Paper. 50c; per doz., $4.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"There is no important history extant but has connected with it numerous other histories of which it was the initial point, or the dominating influence. The abduction and murder of Morgan set ten thousand secret springs in motion, as the surrender of the charters of so many lodges at that time, and the severing of their connection with the order of some forty thousand of its members indicated. This story is one of these histories, and is a collection of facts woven into a story. It cannot fail to be read with interest."—Free Methodist, Chicago.

"The republication of the Reform Story which ran through the columns of the Cynosure for nearly a year is at last completed, and the book so anxiously expected by thousands of our readers has come from the press of Ezra A. Cook. The book is finely bound and fairly introduces the reader to the treasures within. The publisher has made occasional selections from Masonic works to verify the statements of the text; these make a helpful addition for some who can afford no more complete an armory of this kind."—Christian Cynosure.

"In an incidental way the story tells much about the manner of conducting lodges and much about the spirit and methods of Masonry. The story covers the period of the abduction and murdering of William Morgan. The strategic position from which the author writes put a charm in the book, while it gives a good opportunity to show the workings of the order. We wish all the people would read it."—Telescope.

"It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."—Lutheran Standard, Columbus, O.

"The exciting scenes of the fall of 1826, at Batavia, N. Y., when Wm. Morgan was murdered by Masonry, are woven into the story so as to give the truth of History a setting of attractiveness. The forty chapters of the volume are soon compassed by the eager reader who begins the volume. This volume ought to be read and will be sought as its merits become known."—United Brethren in Christ.

"The story is intensely interesting and the author has succeeded in weaving into it a great deal of information in regard to this mysterious order, which is certainly startling if true, and he gives what seems to be undoubted evidence to prove his assertions. The book is one which should be read by both Masons and Antimasons."—Wayne Co. Herald.

"Our Anti-secret society friends are certainly entitled to great credit for their persistence in their efforts to expose and root out secretism. The object of the writer of this story is to present in its true light the crafty, unscrupulous and exceedingly hurtful influence of Masonry, the parent of all the orders."—Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

THE WHY IN VEGETABLE COOKERY.

Why should beans never be put into cold water to soak, as is often recommended? Because all the nutritious portion of the bean is extracted by the process. They should be washed in warm water, then in cold, be tied loosely in cloth, be put into boiling water with a little salt in it, and be kept boiling for four hours. They are then excellent to serve with gravy, and not with melted butter. They serve as garnish around roast mutton or beef, and are excellent cating served whole or in a puree. To make the latter, when the beans are done, throw them instantly into cold water, when the skins will slip off. Rub the beans through a colander, and mix a lump of butter with them. A little stock, or milk, or cream, is excellent mixed in.

Why should plenty of fast boiling water be used in boiling vegetables, potatoes excepted? Because the greater the body of boiling water, the greater the heat. If only a little water is used the whole affair soon cools, and the vegetables become tough, so much so that no length of time in boiling them will render them otherwise. Broccoli sprouts, in April, if properly cooked by boiling them for eight minutes in boiling water, will be tender as marrow, but if not properly done, hours will not cook them.

Why should onions be always cut in round and very thin rings? Because the fiber is thus cut across, and in so cutting them, whether for frying or for making sauce, they are rendered very tender when cooked. With turnips and carrots it is just the same; neither of the three should be split or cut in any other way.

Why should parsley never be boiled with soda—only boiling water and salt? Because parsley, having no oil in it, would be spoiled with soda, and all flavor would be extracted. All parsley should be picked free from the stem, be put into plenty of boiling water with salt, and in summer be boiled only one minute, and in winter two minutes, and be strained and chopped on the back of a plate. If only a little water is used in boiling it, the water becomes brown and the parsley tough and ill flavored.

—Vinegar is said to be better than ice to keep fish over night. Housekeepers who are obliged to be economical should have their fish sent home toward night, and then, by putting a little vinegar on the fish, keep it perfectly well, even in very hot weather. Fish is really improved in flavor under this treatment. Fish which has been kept in ice during the night, and been exposed on the shop-board during the day, being frequently watered to make it look less stale, undergoes changes which destroy both flavor and nourishment.

—A delicious whortleberry pudding is made of one pint of molasses, one teaspoonful of soda, one cup of sweet milk, one quart of berries, flour enough to make a stiff batter; add spices if you like the flavor. This pudding is to be boiled two hours and a half. A good way to prepare it for boiling is to butter the inside of a tin pail, put the pudding into it, cover it, and set into a kettle of boiling water. Replenish from the teakettle when the water evaporates.

—Some housekeepers have adopted a new method in putting up fruit. They can it, use a little sugar; then when cooler days come, and they are not hurried, they make jam or preserves. This method is highly recommended for those women who do not have sufficient help, and are obliged to put up fruit hastily and with many interruptions, or not at all.

—Provide yourself with a little strainer before you begin the operation of putting up fruit; it is so much more satisfactory to dip with.

—A correspondent says she has canned pie-plant, with good results, by baking it instead of boiling it; she cut the stocks pieces about an inch long, put in earthen pudding dishes, or on pie plates, scattered sugar over it abundantly, and baked; then she put her cans into a pan of hot water on the top of the stove, and when the pie-plant was tender, put it and the syrup formed by the juice and the sugar in also, and when the can was full, sealed it up. She says that the juice thus formed is much richer, and that it takes less sugar to sweeten it than is required in the boiling process.—New York Evening Post.

FARM AND GARDEN.

THE TURNIP CROP.

Ruta Bagas are the most valuable of all turnips, and though we have known a good crop to be made not far from New York City, from seed sown as late as the middle of this month, it is better to sow in June. If from any cause one has omitted sowing turnips until now, he can either risk a late sowing of Ruta Bagas, or sow those which, like the Aberdeen, will mature in a shorter time. As the chances, in a good season, are in favor of making a fair crop of Ruta Bagas, if sown early this month, it will be good management to sow both these and the intermediate kinds, like the Aberdeen. The crop may be greatly hastened by a thorough preparation of the soil. The best cultivators sow on manured ridges. The land is thrown up into ridges thirty inches apart, the manure, the finer the better, is placed in the furrows, and then, using a double mould-board plow, the ridges are split and the soil thrown upon the manure, making new ridges over it. The seed is drilled in upon these ridges, using two pounds to the acre. If the black fly or beetle is abundant, use more seed. When the plants are "in the rough," that is, have made leaves beyond the seed-leaves, they should be hoed and thinned. The usual method is to cut across the rows with a sharp hoe, leaving a bunch of plants at every ten or twelve inches, and then go over again and remove all but the strongest plant. After the thinning, the spaces between the rows must be kept clear of weeds by the use of the cultivator, aided by the hand-hoe near the plants. The varieties of Ruta Baga are numerous, and other things being equal, those the form of which is most nearly globular are to be preferred. Those who grow turnips largely, raise their own seed, and thus secure a strain suited to their land. The Aberdeen and Yellowstone may be sown any time up to August 1st; they are excellent for feeding and for the table, but do not keep so well as the Ruta Bagas. In preparing the land for turnips, a dressing of three hundred pounds to the acre of a good superphosphate, will be a profitable application. The soil must be rich and mellow for turnips.—American Agriculturist.

A VALUABLE COW.—Mr. Fuller has received from a New York gentleman an offer of $10,000 for the calf from his celebrated cow, Mary Anne of St. Lambert, provided the same is a bull, the money to be paid when the calf is seven days old. The butter test of this cow has been carefully conducted for a period of 310 consecutive days, and she has made the unprecedented amount of 838 lbs. 9½ ozs. Efforts will be made to dry her off this month, when it is expected she will have reached 855 to 860 lbs. of butter. She is due to calve at the end of June. Mary Anne has had three calves. The oldest was sold for $6,000, for her yearling $6,000 has been offered, and for her son eleven months old $8,000, and now $10,000 for the calf to be borne. Total for four of her get $30,000. If the cow lives to an average age the price of her get will, apart from other considerations, justify Mr. Fuller in refusing, as he has, $26,000 for the cow herself.—Hamilton (Ont.) Times.

COAL-ASHES are strangely undervalued in the fruit garden. Instead of being a nuisance, as which they are generally regarded, they are of great value not only in ameliorating the soil, but as preventives against borers, when spread around currant or quince-bushes. Dr. Sturtevant relates that in the garden of Mr. B. J. Swan at Geneva, N. Y., there are extraordinarily thrifty currant-bushes, to which coal-ashes have been applied for many years, and which have not only been free from the borers, but also from the attack of the currant-worm. There are also quince trees of equal thriftiness which have been under like treatment, and in the lawn are a number of mountain-ashes, some of which have been treated with coal-ashes and the others have not, and the difference in vigor is extremely well marked in favor of those to which coal-ashes have been applied. The ashes for this purpose are heaped up about the stem to a height perhaps of six to eight inches, and extending about two feet from the trunk.—Am. Garden.

Prof. E. W. Stewart, in his recent useful book, celebrates the cow as "the most remarkable producer among animals." She gives, at her best, nearly seven times her own weight per annum in milk, of food value twice as great as the beef creature of equal size gains during the same time.

It is said to be almost a rule that the poorest gardens in the country are where the natural advantages are the best.

A mixture of 250 pounds of bone dust and 10 to 20 pounds of wood ashes forms a fertilizer that will be useful to any crop.

A horse subject to colic should be fed on cut feed in moderate quantities, and watered only before feeding. A good remedy in a case of spasmodic colic is a pint of oil, with one ounce of sweet spirits of niter.

A Valuable Nerve Tonic.

SOME unprincipled dealers, because they could see a few cents more profit, have been guilty of offering worthless substitutes for the only original and genuine Sulphur Soap—GLENN'S by name. Therefore, the public should guard against this deception, and always ask for Glenn's Sulphur Soap, by its full name, and take no other.

READ the following evidence from a highly respectable source:

C. N. CRITTENTON, ESQ.,

Dear Sir: I have travelled for three years for Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons, publishers, New York, and desire to inform you that I have used your incomparable Glenn's Sulphur Soap exclusively for about four years; also have recommended it to very many persons; my constant experience has been that it possesses all the medical advantages that you claim for it. All to whom I have recommended it say as well as myself, that it deserves its established reputation as the best and most efficacious Sulphur Soap that can be used for skin cleansing, as well as toilet purposes. Some unprincipled druggists have endeavored to substitute other kinds of Sulphur Soap for Glenn's—saying they were "just as good," but having myself tried other kinds, I find NONE so good or so beneficial as the Genuine Sulphur Soap stamped "GLENN'S," and this I have observed always bears the name of "C. N. Crittenton, Proprietor," on the packet.

Yours truly, C. T. Z. DURAND.

IN BRIEF.

The "Osborne" flat-house in New York city, which is almost completed, is fifteen stories high.

The smallest baby in the world was born at New Philadelphia, Ohio, the other day. It weighs just one pound, is fully developed and healthy, and its name is Smith.

The farmers in Southern Minnesota are building cyclone cellars. These are deep vaults, with strong walls and arched roof, with underground passageway connecting with the cellar under the houses.

Colonel A. L. King, of Chicago, says: —"The Luke Voorhees cattle range of Wyoming is the largest in the world, no doubt. It comprises 1,000,000 acres of land, 40,000 of which are enclosed with a barbed wire fence, and has a water frontage of thirty miles. The range will freely accommodate 75,000 cattle. We now have 15,000 head, and as 33⅓ per cent. yearly increase is a low estimate it will not be many years before our ranch will be so crowded that we will want to annex additional territory."

One of the most prominent buildings now in New York city is the gigantic edifice just finished at a cost of $3,000,000, for the Produce Exchange. Three-fourths of the exports of the country pass through its hands and its business amounts to $10,000,000 a day. The building is rectangular in form, 300x150 feet in dimensions. The Exchange room proper is 220 feet long, 140 feet wide and sixty feet high. The Exchange now numbers 3,000 members and a seat is worth $4,100.

Captain John Traynor, of Bath, Me., put out from Morris Cove in his 16-foot boat, in which he will attempt to row across the Atlantic. Two years ago he crossed in an 18-foot dory, but the attempt to row across has never before been made. Captain Traynor's boat is of stanch build, and is provided with air-tight compartments as a safeguard against sinking. Three months, he thinks, is ample time, as it is his expectation to reach Queenstown by the middle of August.

The discussion of the Mexican pension bill in the Senate brought out some queer statistics about the pensioners of the war of 1812. The war ended nearly seventy years ago, and the number of troops engaged in it was not remarkably great; yet to-day there are actually 21,000 pensioners on the roll as widows of that war. They drew last year $1,882,000, or five and a half times as much as the few thousand old soldiers surviving. Of course, the explanation is that some of these widows were married to the veteran warriors half a century or so after the war was over, and they became entitled to their pensions in due time when their husbands died. Thus it is improbable that in the twentieth century a great many of the 21,000 widows will still be drawing pensions on account of the war or 1812.

Captain N. C. Franzen, commander of the Hamburg steamer Suevia, has received from the Emperor of Germany the decoration of the Red Eagle as a token of appreciation for faithful srevices and high character. The captain not long ago completed his 100th round trip between Hamburg and the United States, and has never had an accident. In 1873 Captain Franzen was made Knight in the Ernestine Order by the Duke of Cobourg. The United States has also placed laurels on his brow for his gallant conduct in rescuing shipwrecked American sailors on various occasions, notably the case of the American ship Calhoun, waterlogged in mid-acean.

As Mrs. A. Fritz, a prominent and wealthy lady of Litchfield, O., was walking along the street during a heavy storm June 26th, lightning struck her in the face and followed her watchchain from her neck to her waist, where the current divided, and followed each of the lower limbs, tearing the shoes from her feet. The watch and chain melted. The body was blackened almost to a crisp. The doctors have not despaired of the lady's recovery.

Information has been received of the horrible murder of a child only three years old at Tarbel, N. C. Three boys, aged three, four, and seven years respectively, were left by the mother, Mrs. Fennel, for a few minutes. She gave each a piece of cake, giving the smallest child the largest piece. During the mother's absence the eldest two became enraged because the younger refused to divide, and dragged the little fellow to the river bank, pounded his brains out with stones, and threw the body into the river. They first denied all knowledge of where the body was, but afterward confessed. The body has been recovered. Mrs. Fennel is nearly crazy with grief.

THE STAGE-DRIVER'S STORY.

HOW GENERAL SCOTT'S LIFE WAS SAVED AND HOW HIS DRIVER TWICE ESCAPED DEATH.

The traveler of the present day, as he is hurried along by the lightning express, in its buffet cars and palace sleepers, seldom reverts in thought to the time when the stage coach and packet were the only means of communication between distant points. It is rare that one of the real old-time stage drivers is met with now-a-days. and when the writer recently ran across Fayette Haskell, of Lockport, N. Y., he felt like a bibliographer over the discovery of some rare volume of "forgotten lore." Mr. Haskell, although one of the pioneers in stage driving (he formerly ran from Lewiston to Niagara Falls and Buffalo), is hale and hearty and bids fair to live for many years. The strange stories of his early adventures would fill a volume. At one time, when going down a mountain near Lewiston, with no less a personage than General Scott as a passenger, the brakes gave way and the coach came on the heels of the wheel horses. The only remedy was to whip the leaders to a gallop. Gaining additional momentum with each revolution of the wheels, the coach swayed and pitched down the mountain side and into the streets of Lewiston. Straight ahead at the foot of the steep hill flowed the Niagara river, towards which the four horses dashed, apparently to certain death. Yet the firm hand never relaxed its hold nor the clear brain its conception of what must be done in the emergency. On dashed the horses until the narrow dock was reached on the river bank, when by a masterly exhibition of nerve and daring, the coach was turned in scarce its own length and the horses brought to a standstill before the pale lookers-on could realize what had occurred. A purse was raised by General Scott and presented to Mr. Haskell with high compliments for his skill and bravery.

Notwithstanding all his strength and his robust constitution, the strain of continuous work and exposure proved too much for Mr. Haskell's constitution. The constant jolting of the coach and the necessarily cramped position in which he was obliged to sit, contributed to this end, and at times he was obliged to abandon driving altogether.

Speaking of this period he said:

"I found it impossible to sleep at night; my appetite left me entirely and I had a tired feeling which I never knew before and could not account for."

"Did you give up driving entirely?"

"No. I tried to keep up but it was only with the greatest effort. This state of things continued for nearly twenty years until last October when I went all to pieces."

"In what way?"

"Oh, I doubled all up; could not walk without a cane and was incapable of any effort or exertion. I had a constant desire to urinate both day and night and although I felt like passing a gallon every ten minutes, only a few drops could escape and they thick with sediment. Finally it ceased to flow entirely and I thought death was very near."

"What did you do then?"

"What I should have done long before: listen to my wife. Under her advice I began a new treatment."

"And with what result?"

"Wonderful. It unstopped the closed passages and what was still more wonderful, regulated the flow. The sediment vanished; my appetite returned and I am now well and good for twenty more years wholly through the aid of Warner's Safe Cure that has done wonders for me as well as for so many others."

Mr. Haskell's experience is repeated every day in the lives of thousands of American men and women. An unknown evil is undermining the existence of an innumerable number who do no realize the danger they are in until health has entirely departed and death perhaps stares them in the face. To neglect such important matters is like drifting in the current of Niagara above the Falls.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

—The majority report of the House Committee on Appropriations appropriated $3,270,000 for fortifications. The minority report, signed by all the Democrats on the committee except Messrs. Ellis and Hancock, made it $595,000. The minority give as a reason for the smaller appropriation made, that it would be useless to waste the public money to enter upon the construction or alteration of fortifications in advance of the determination of the exact character of the armament to be provided for them.

—Both houses of Congress sat all day on the Fourth of July and had evening sessions. It was the third time in history that the National holiday was so used. Once during the war was a session, and in 1870, while Sumner, Schurz, and others were making their war on President Grant, sessions were held on Independence Day.

—The President has nominated John A. Kasson, of Iowa, to be Minister to Germany, Ex-Secretary Alphonso Taft to Russia, and John M. Francis to Austria.

—Both Houses of Congress were in session until a late hour Sunday evening. All the appropriation bills were passed except the Naval item, which was provided for by making a temporary provision for six months. Adjournment took place Monday.

POLITICAL.

—The Illinois Democratic State Convention held three sessions at Peoria Wednesday, and nominated Carter H. Harrison, Mayor of Chicago, for Governor, Henry Seiter for Lieutenant Governor, Michael J. Dougherty for Secretary of State, and Alfred Orendorff for Treasurer. The platform adopted denounces protection, advocates a tariff for revenue only, and instructs the delegates to the National convention to vote as a unit on this question.

—Private dispatches were received in Chicago from Samuel J. Tilden, in which he positively declined to allow his name to be used in connection with the Presidency, and reiterating the statements already made in his letter declining the nomination.

—The gathering of the Democratic convention in this city is likely to surpass that of the Republicans in numbers, eloquence and enthusiasm. Mayor Harrison, ready to advance his ambitious projects for a place on the national ticket, has been pushing the repavement of streets, shutting up the gambling houses, and now requests the stores to illuminate till midnight and make an impression upon the visiting politicians.

COUNTRY.

—Allan Pinkerton, the celebrated detective, died in this city, Tuesday, in his 65th year. He was a native of Glasgow, Scotland.

—The Citizens' League has decided to begin a struggle at Milwaukee for the closing of all saloons on Sunday, according to law. A number of brewing companies and 1,000 saloon-keepers will make a determined resistance.

—Preparations for the meeting of the Society of the Army of the Tennessee at Lake Minuetonka, Aug. 13 and 14 are progressing. General Sherman will preside, and General Grant, it is intimated, will probably make his farewell address to the army and the people.

—Northern Cheyenne Indians on the Tongue and Rosebud Rivers who are without rations and starving are killing range cattle in great numbers, and the stockmen threaten resistance if the Indians are not moved away by the government. The situation is regarded as serious.

—An explosion in a colliery at Nanaimo, British Columbia, Monday, killed twenty-four miners and injured many others.

—In the Louisiana House of Representatives, Tuesday, the bill to prohibit prize-fighting in that State was lost—yeas, 42; nays; 43.

—Near Mobile, Ala., Friday, a party of Democrats returning from a political meeting in a wagon, were fired upon by two negroes, armed with shotguns. One man died in an hour, and six others were wounded. The negroes escaped.

—The number of killed and drowned by the railroad disaster near Cunningham, Mo., June 30th, is now stated to be fifteen, and as many wounded. The railroad authorities are reticent. The river is being searched for the victims.

—A windstorm at Sioux City and its suburbs Friday afternoon wrecked the Episcopal Mission School, the plow factory, and Booge & Co.'s packing-house. Glass fronts and weak walls were demolished, structures unroofed, and trees leveled.

—As a train of the Cincinnati & Eastern Road was running over the trestle two miles east of Winchester, the president of the road, W. R. McGill, fell from the door of the baggage car. He was hurled fifty feet to the bottom of the ravine and instantly killed.

—A construction train on the Chicago, Burlington & Kansas City Railway met with a disaster at Grand River, near Sumner, Mo., June 30. As the train was crossing a temporary bridge at Grand River, Neb., the structure gave way, and the engine, caboose and five cars were precipitated into the bed of the river. Fifteen lives are believed to be lost.

—A mass meeting was held in Buffalo by the secret Typographical Union to protest against Charles W. McCune's refusal to make the Courier a union office, and to declare opposition to Governor Cleveland and the Democratic party, favoring General Butler's candidacy.

—Particulars from Rowlandsville, Cecil county, Maryland, from which communications were cut off by the storm last week, show that the little town was nearly swept away by the rising of Basin Run and Octara Creek. The heaviest damage was to the works of the McCullough Iron Company, situated at the junction of the two streams. The buildings were destroyed and the loss will be $100,000. The water rose to a height of twenty-four feet. There was not a bridge left standing. In the country round about most of the houses were washed away. All that were left standing are unsafe, and will have to be rebuilt.

—While laborers were digging a well near Silox, Lincoln Co., Mo., they struck oil, the gushing fluid compelling them to quit work.

—The grand-stand on the race track at Butte M. T., collapsed under a crowd of 500 persons Friday. A boy was killed, the Mayor was seriously hurt, and two persons fatally wounded. Others had legs and arms fractured.

—Rich Hill and Walnut, Mo., were visited early Friday morning by a tornado. The Presbyterian and Methodist Episcopal churches were wrecked and other structures unroofed. Several persons were slightly injured.

—Southwest of Decatur, Ill., Friday night a cyclone ravaged the district, thirty houses and barns being leveled, horses killed, and orchards and crops ruined. Near Boody the Cumberland Presbyterian church and parsonage were wrecked, entailing a loss of $25,000. Two children were fatally hurt, and some persons were rendered homeless.

FOREIGN.

—Lord Granville, the British Foreign Secretary, announces that he received a dispatch from "Chinese" Gordon Saturday, June 28, stating that the latter was well at Khartoum.

—A dispatch from Cairo says letters from Khartoum report that Khartoum was captured during the latter part of May without difficulty. There was no massacre. Most of the Europeans turned Mohammedan. Among those who did not was Gen. Gordon, who is quite safe and allowed the freedom of El Mahdi's camp. El Mahdi himself is at Khartoum. The Europeans are well treated.

—At Brussels it is considered certain that America, France and Germany are about to recognize the Free State on the Congo.

—Lord Wolseley takes command of the expeditionary force which starts for Khartoum in the first week of August. His old Lieutenants, Sir Redvers Buller and Sir Herbert Stewart, accompany him, the former as second in command. Colonel Stewart will not be associated with the duties he so ably carried out in the Soudan, as the cavalry will be under the command of Sir Drury Lowe. He will be Adjutant and Quartermaster General. At the Service clubs in London they are anxiously looking out for the official "tip," as in the Tel-el-Kebir affair, of the number of days and hours which will suffice to crush the Madhi and restore Gordon to his countrymen.

—The London Daily News' special dispatch from Cairo says that 12,000 Arabs have taken possession of Debbah, slaughtering the garrison, which numbered 3,000

—Dispatches from Toulon and Marseilles July 6 tell a deplorable story of panic and distress about cholera, which is far from being on the decline in either city. The mortality in both is increasing. In consequence of the panic and the exodus business is at a standstill, and the usually busy water front seems deserted. Vessels arriving are warned off, and where cargoes are to be unloaded hands are secured with difficulty. At the office of Prefect of Police it was learned at six o'clock this evening that sixty-five new cases had been taken to the hospital, and that nineteen deaths had occurred. At Marseilles fifteen deaths from cholera took place to-day. Consternation is on every face. Business is confined to the most necessary purchases. The prices of the necessaries of life are rising, while the money supply among the poor is almost cut off. The authorities have reported these facts to the government here and state that unless there is some mitigation of the panic they will be face to face with the necessity of feeding at least 75,000 persons. The Cabinet have the matter under advisement, and it is believed here that a system of government relief will be promptly begun. So far the reports of the cholera having reached Paris prove sensational and unfounded.

Persons write occasionally, saying, "I sent a remittance so and so, but the tag on my paper it not changed." Such inquiries are proper, and the explanation is this: when a subscription is received it is entered at once on the book and the letter filed for future reference if needed, but the printed mailing list is not changed until a sufficient number are received to require the printing of a new list. If but few subscriptions are received, the change may be delayed for a month or more, but when the list fills up rapidly it requires frequent revision. TO PATRONS AND FRIENDS:—The discontinuance of the Cynosure to subscribers when their time expired has occasioned unpleasantness which ought to be avoided if possible, with justice to the best interests of the cause which you advocate and for which the Cynosure is published.

After careful consideration it has been decided to continue the Cynosure until ordered discontinued by the subscriber. In this way the giving of offense to old and tried friends will be avoided. Subscribers and friends sometimes forget after their subscription has expired, how fast the weeks and months go by; and it is hoped not only to avoid giving offense, but by your co-operation and the blessing of God to greatly enlarge and increase the circulation of your paper.

IMPORTANT LECTURE NOTICE.

I expect during the present year to devote a much larger portion of my time to the lecture work than I have in the year past. We expect also to enlarge our force of lecturers and colporteurs as we are able and the right men can be found. Will friends wanting lecturers make a note of this and write me so that arrangements can be made to save expense and time by systematizing the work. J. P. STODDARD, General Agent, N. C. A.

MYRON HOLLEY.

The readers of the Cynosure may expect in the next number a fine portrait of Myron Holley, a co-worker with Thurlow Weed, William H. Seward, John C. Spencer and others in the great movement against Freemasonry of 1826 to '33, a sketch of Mr. Holley's remarkable and useful public life and selections from his speeches and public papers. To Mr. Holley's energy New York and the States west owe a debt which was never paid, for to him was due the construction of the great Erie canal, which was for more than a generation the great highway between New England and the new countries of Ohio, Michigan and Illinois. The Holley number will be one of great value.

The Democratic nomination convention of last week gave the country the results of its deliberations in the platform which appears on another page, and in the nomination of Gov. Grover Cleveland of New York, and Thomas A. Hendricks of Indiana. The weak and wordy document, misnamed a platform of principles, unworthily represents the appearance of the large and fine-looking body of men that voted it. The candidates are respectable men of the conservative stamp, who, if elected, would give the country an administration not differing greatly from Mr. Arthur's. It is not probable that they will have the opportunity to show the value of this opinion, because, principles being of little account in either party, the campaign is resolved into a strife for men with the chances in favor of the smartest. The convention brought into Chicago a larger crowd than the Republicans; and, for the external appearance of intelligence and wealth was, perhaps, superior to the June meeting. The crowds in the convention were larger, but there was less enthusiasm and spirit and that peculiar strife between candidates for the nomination which draws out every wile and bargain which a politician dare try.

The convention made a precedent for two innovations upon the usual order of such meetings in the history of the Republican and Democratic parties. The first was the open discussion of candidates, the other a minority report on the platform sustained by an attack on the majority report, which will be one of the best of campaign documents for the opposing party. The Tammany society of New York have been bitterly opposed to Gov. Cleveland, and Kelly, its chief, with his two spokesmen, Grady and Cochran, made a bold fight against him after his nomination. They had been disfranchised in the convention by means of the superannuated "unit rule," and were mad with good excuse. The sympathy of the crowd was for the men that were down and gained a hearing for their scathing review of Cleveland. With Butler they attempted, but too late, to rouse enthusiasm for Hendricks for first place; if they could have postponed the voting they might have succeeded. Butler was opposed to Cleveland as a friend of the New York city monopolies and to the rest of the convention for the verbose but hollow planks on tariff and labor-reform. His speech on the latter was one of the ablest, but was merely tolerated by the convention which proceeded to vote him down almost unanimously.

Butler's name was not presented for a place on the ticket although the Massachusetts delegation was for him to a man. The temper of the Southern delegates was found too high, and their memory of the past too bitter. But the Greenback and Anti-monopoly candidate was none the less a thorn in the side of the "Bourbon" element, who heard his threats of a million and a half voters controlled against them with some trembling. What he and Tammany will do is the question. The labor union lodges are protesting against Cleveland and are getting ready to strike. Another National Convention is called to meet in Chicago, July 30th, in which all labor societies, tariff clubs and employees of mills, mines and manufactures are to be represented. Loud threats are heard on the streets as to the result of this meeting. One authority says Butler's ultimatum to the Democratic leaders will be that they shall form fusion electoral tickets with his party in enough States to throw the election into the House of Representatives, where he hopes to hold the key of the situation.

Congress adjourned on Monday of last week and its work is before the country. Criticize as we may its continual exaltation of party above every other consideration, it is to the credit of the Democratic House that a large appropriation for a new navy was defeated, the only reason for which is in a foreign war, which we are not likely to have, even if Blaine is elected. The aggregate appropriations this year are $193,210,087, last year they were $35,000,000 more on account of the pensions, but a large unexpended balance in this department is yet available. The Secretary of the Treasury estimated the surplus revenue for the year would be $45,000,000, but it is believed that this amount will be reduced one-half. During the seven months Congress has been in session there have been presented 9,872 bills and 381 joint resolutions, of which only 367 passed; fourteen of these were appropriation bills, the rest were laws. But few of these were of national importance; as, the bills establishing bureaus of labor statistics and of animal industry, the reduction of transient newspaper postage to one cent for four ounces, and the enactment in the Consular bill looking to a closer relation with the South American States.

The Chinaman is a trouble in British Columbia as he is in California. The government of the province has represented to the Dominion rulers that among other ills the Chinaman "defeats justice by secret organizations." Hence they claim some legislative protection against the "Heathen Chinese!" Probably the British Columbians if they try could find others than Chinamen among them who are equally expert in defeating justice by secret societies, and who have ten times more business in the courts; or can it be that the Chinamen get ahead even of their secret white neighbors and thus deprive them of their monopoly of secret wisdom?

The burdens of military establishment in Europe are year by year more unendurable by the people and more frequently the leaders who impose them are showing their anxiety that the strain be removed, before too great for the patient and subjugated populace to bear. Bismarck himself, a year since spoke in favor of the general disarmment of Europe; and more lately Prince Dolgorouki of Russia, who is known to be high in the confidence of the Czar, visited the German Emperor and Bismarck. The object of the meeting, it was generally believed, was to consider the possibility of a reduction of the military expenses of both countries, which are such a terrible incubus upon them. The cost of the German army now reaches $116,000,000, and is met with much difficulty. It has been demonstrated that Russia, deeply in debt, can only borrow now on ruinous terms. It has been sometimes remarked that the German people take great pride in their powerful military organization and in its achievements, but a gentleman writing to the Century objects to this opinion and contends that the Germans love war as little as other people. He says:

"We are told: 'Neither in America nor England—countries that are rapidly outgrowing the love of war, for war's own sake, in which respectively an Emerson and a Herbert Spencer have preached that this sentiment is one allied to barbarous times—is it possible fully to conceive that, at our very doors, in this latter nineteenth century, there exists a people strangely like the ancient Israelites—educated, yet combative, advanced in many directions of thought, yet left far behind in one of the most essentially civilizing. In Germany the army is the darling of the nation,' etc., etc. I have passed the better part of a quarter of a century in Germany, and another in this country; I was born and educated in the very heart of Prussia; I served in the Prussian army, in obedience to the law, and can claim that I know its people, not only as they were twenty-five years ago, but, from visits made not long ago, as they are now; and I can truly say that, though I have met thousands of Prussians of all classes, professors, students, artisans, merchants, etc., etc., I have, professional soldiers excepted, never met a Prussian whose ideas of war were essentially different from those entertained by men like Herbert Spencer or Emerson. I distinctly claim that a personal acquaintance in various portions of Prussia, and a study of the papers of the day, newspapers, reviews, magazines, as well as of the most representative books published in Prussia, justify me in asserting that there is nowhere a more peaceful people than the people of Prussia. Spencer and Emerson, as far as their estimate of war is concerned, can be matched by hundreds of the best Prussian and German authors, and they reflect the feeling of the people at large."

Please read carefully the Anti-monopolist, Greenback, Republican and Democratic platforms, and see whether any one could learn by them whether the United States is a heathen or a Christian nation.

"LIGHT ON MASONRY"—WHAT I REMEMBER.

DEAR CYNOSURE.—Thinking that some recollections of the first breaking of the light on this subject, in this region, after Morgan's sad "taking off," might not be unacceptable to the readers of the Cynosure, I have determined to offer the following statements:

This quiet little town had the honor of first seeing and reflecting that light. At that time, in all this region, the community was quietly reposing in the belief that, in sanctity and in importance, that great "Mystery of Iniquity" was second only the church of God! "Jachin and Boaz" had been seen by some, who, when the first blast from Morgan's trumpet "woke the echos," were ready to do what they could to extend and prolong the sound.

Sometime in the winter of 1828–9, one Oliver Coburn, a peculiar, but honest and conscientious man, got hold of Morgan's exposures. "By the laws," said he, "if this is Masonry, the people ought to know it." He took the book to the Rev. Peter Sanborn, a former pastor here, one of those who had seen Jachin and Boaz, and found him ready to enter upon any plan by which the attention of the people might be called to the great subject. A meeting was called. Mr. S. read Morgan's book to the people. A tremendous public indignation was at once aroused. Public meetings, discussions and addresses followed each other in quick succession. Masons here, and from other towns attended, were boisterous, overbearing, and even riotous in their behaviour. This conduct only served to confirm Morgan's testimony and intensify the now unbounded public abhorrence of their pet "institution." Excitement was now at fever heat. One Allyn came and worked the degrees. This, with the Masons, "was the last straw." They caused his arrest. In their warrant, they charged him with "exposing Masonry, contrary to law!" He hadn't obtained a license. This was in the evening and during one of his exhibitions. A night's sleep and a little calm reflection brought the Masons to their senses. They saw then, that in their rage and haste they had simply declared that Morgan's disclosures and Allyn's exhibitions were true, that they had just put their foot into the trap they had set for Allyn! As none but Masons could be competent witnesses to sustain their "complaint," they were a good deal more ready to drop the subject than they had been to take it up! The old Masonic Justice said they had "no case!"

This affair, as might be expected, gave an overwhelming impetus to both public and private discussion. Surrounding towns caught the infection. Their people were aroused and vied with ours in their denunciations of the great "lying wonder." Soon the city of Boston was all aflame with the same excitement. Anti-masonic conventions and public addresses on Masonry, with "work" on the degrees were the order of the day, all around. On every hand Christian men, many of them Christian ministers, finding public sentiment strong enough to shield them from the fury of the lodge, gave their testimony to the truth of Morgan's exposures and renounced forever all connection and fellowship with that great abomination. Honest men too, who were not professed Christians, did, generally, the same thing.

Many churches became quite too "light" for the "mysteries" within them. In some cases, they and their "institution," which they had "exalted above all that is called God, or that is worshiped," were cast out together.

FOX AND DOG OVER A SECRET BONE.

We find in the columns of our worthy cotemporary, the Christian Standard, of Cincinnati, some correspondence and editorial remarks in which the subject of promises under pledge of secrecy forms an interesting point.

Two preachers held a confidential conversation. One said, "I will tell you a secret if you will promise not to give me away in it." The other replied, "Of course I will not give you away." This reply was made "without the least intimation as to the nature of his secret." After the secret was told, the hearer said: "In view of the nature of his secret he had no right to hold me bound." Hence the secret was made known, and then a wrathy letter in response charges the revealer with "dishonesty," and that "he had told a falsehood," for promising "not to give him away," and then saying he "did not feel morally bound" to keep the secret!

The secret itself is of no consequence; but the treatment of it by our able cotemporary (whose sentiments, when he gives them vent, are in general unison with our own in regard to lodgery), seems to fall short of the root of the error of any hearer making a promise of secrecy in regard to what is "hid" or unknown to him. True, our cotemporary justifies the revealer on the ground that it is "always understood between men of professed honor" that what one has "to communicate (as a secret) can be lawfully and honorably held as a secret" by the other. But if there was in it a purpose to do some wrong, then it would be duty to reveal it, and "he has a badly perverted moral sense who would charge me with falsehood because I refused to hold this guilty secret."

Very good as far as it goes. But what do these inspired words mean?—"If a soul swear [or promise, for the greater includes the less], pronouncing with his lips to do evil, or to do good, whatsoever it be that a man shall pronounce with an oath (or promise), and it be hid from him, when he knoweth thereof he shall be guilty!" If such promises or oaths were sinful under Moses, they are certainly included in the prohibition of our Lord—"Swear not at all."

Although every faculty of man has its legitimate and proper use, yet it is always an improper and illigitimate use of the secret instinct of any one to require of another, or to allow himself to be the depositary of any secret, unless the receiver shall be at liberty afterwards to use his own "moral sense" and discretion in the matter. This moral freedom every Christian should feel bound to exercise under the instructions of his divine Teacher—"Let your yea be yea, and your nay, nay, for whatsoever is more than these cometh of the evil one."

A prudent regard to the Divine law under Moses and under Christ would have saved the two preachers from their wordy war, and our cotemporary's columns from the unseemly exhibition. But one of these preachers evidently acts on the lodge principle still, so popular in some parts of our country, but soon we fain hope to disappear like slavery and be numbered among the things that were.

UNITY.

BY JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

Forgive, O Lord, our severing ways,
The separate altars that we raise,
The varying tongues that speak thy praise!

Suffer it now. In time to be
Shall one great temple rise to thee;
Thy church, our broad humanity.

White flowers above its wall shall climb,
Sweet bells of peace shall ring its chime.
Its days shall all be holy time.

The hymn long sought shall then be heard,
The music of the world's accord
Confessing Christ, the inward Word!

That song shall swell from shore to shore,
One faith, one love, one hope, restore
The seamless garb that Jesus wore!

COMMUNISM.

Joseph Cook, quoting from a Western paper, says, "The first qualification for an editor, is to be able to tell where Gehenna is going to break out next." We have not read the horoscope of our times aright if the next great struggle between light and darkness will not be along the line of Communism. It is lifting its hydra heads all over the civilized world and presents the same ugly appearance wherever seen. As is common with all advocates of anti-Christian principles, its supporters are fond of quoting Scripture. They claim that the early Christians were communists, because they sold their goods and laid the price of that which was sold at the apostle's feet and had all things common.

Now mark the difference between the Communism of the early Christians and that of modern socialists. One says, "all that is mine is thine." The other, "All that is thine is mine." One says, "Lift up the poor." The other cries, "down with the rich." One says, "give, give." The other, "despoil, despoil."

One is the frugal, hard working man taking of the riches earned by the sweat of his brow to minister to a needy brother. The other is the prodigal who has wasted his substance in riotous living, coming back to demand half of his brother's earnings. Of the first we can say, Would that there were more of it. Of the other, If it prevails the people will be all poor and miserable together, and there will be none to help them.

Socialism proceeds upon false hypotheses. It premises, that men are naturally virtuous, that they are unselfish and as willing to work for the community as for self or for loved ones, that parents are as much interested in other people's children as in their own, that the affairs of a community can be conducted more economically by public officers than by private parties; all of which are contrary to the experience of mankind. It is only here and there a philanthropist who displays any degree of disinterested benevolence, and it would be impossible to draw out as much attention and application to business from the average man where he has no individual stimulus.

In addition to this it destroys the individuality of men. We are endowed by nature with a variety of talents which belong to us as individuals and which none else can use.

Tennyson represents King Arthur as receiving his good sword Excalaber from the sea, and giving it back again to the sea when he died, because it was for him alone and none else could use it. Each man receives out from the bosom of infinity, at his birth, gifts that are for him alone and none else can use, and without which his life would be a failure. But these levelers count all men alike and put them in a common tread-mill for life. They propose to take the pen from Tennyson—the sword from Von Moltke, the easel from Dore and to give to each a grubbing hoe to help dig out a living for the community. They would wean children as we wean colts that their mothers might spin and weave for community. They would take away a woman's home with all the little notions that minister so much to a woman's enjoyment, because they are marks of her own individuality, and give her a cot in a dormitory and a plate in a public soup house instead. They would take away all our most precious loves, fancies and sentiments in which so much of the real preciousness of life consists, and lay them upon the altar as a sacrifice to Economy. They are great levelers, but they always level down, they never elevate.

Yet, strange to say, this system which ignores individuality; this system that would lay its hands on all alike and make them slaves of society, claims to be the champion of liberty. True liberty is where all men are equal before the law and free to use, to develop and to enjoy the fruits of their own labor and genius.—Midland.

THE FUTURE OF THE NEGRO.

A discussion of this question from various standpoints of friendship and favor and prejudice and distrust in the North American Review draws out the following opinion from Hon. Frederick Douglass:

It would require the ken of a statesman and the vision of a prophet combined to tell with certainty what will be the ultimate future of the colored people of the United States, and to neither of these qualifications can I lay claim. We have known the colored man long as a slave, but we have not known him long as a freeman and as an American citizen. What he was as a slave we know; what he will be in his new relation to his fellow-men, time and events will make clear. One thing, however, may safely be laid down as probable, and that is, that the negro, in one form and complexion or another, may be counted upon as a permanent element of the population of the United States. He is now seven millions, has doubled his number in thirty years, and is increasing more rapidly than the more favored population of the South. The idea of his becoming extinct finds no support in this fact. But will he emigrate? No! Individuals may, but the masses will not. Dust will fly, but the earth will remain. The expense of removal to a foreign land, the difficulty of finding a country where the conditions of existence are more favorable than here, attachment to native land, gradual improvement in moral surroundings, increasing hope of a better future, improvement in character and value by education, impossibility of finding any part of the globe free from the presence of white men,—all conspire to keep the negro here, and compel him to adjust himself to American civilization.

In the face of history I do not deny that a darker future than I have indicated may await the black man. Contact of weak races with strong has not always been beneficent. The weak have been oppressed, persecuted, driven out, and destroyed. The Hebrews in Egypt, the Moors in Spain, the Caribs in the West Indies, the Picts in Scotland, the Indians and Chinese in our own country, show what may happen to the negro. But happily he has a moral and political hold upon this country, deep and firm, one which in some measure destroys the analogy between him and other weak peoples and classes. His religion and civilization are in harmony with those of the people among whom he lives. He worships with them in a common temple and at a common altar, and to drag him away is to destroy the temple and tear down the altar. Drive out the negro and you drive out Christ, the Bible, and American liberty with him. The thought of setting apart a State or Territory and confining the negro within its borders is a delusion. If the North and South could not live separately in peace, and without bloody and barbarous border wars, the white and black cannot. If the negro could be bottled up, who could or would bottle up the irrepressible white man? What barrier has been strong enough to confine him? Plainly enough, migration is no policy for the negro. He would invite the fate of the Indian, and be pushed away before the white man's bayonet.

Nor do I think that the negro will become more distinct as a class. Ignorant, degraded, and repulsive as he was during his two hundred years of slavery, he was sufficiently attractive to make possible an intermediate race of a million, more or less. If this has taken place in the face of those odious barriers, what is likely to occur when the colored man puts away his ignorance and degradation and becomes educated and prosperous? The tendency of the age is unifaction, not isolation; not to clans and classes, but to human brotherhood. It was once degradation intensified for a Norman to associate with a Saxon; but time and events have swept down the barriers between them, and Norman and Saxon have become Englishmen. The Jew was once despised and hated in Europe, and is so still in some parts of that continent; but he has risen, and is rising to higher consideration, and no man is now degraded by association with him anywhere. In like manner the negro will rise in the social scale. For a time the social and political privileges of the colored people may decrease. This, however, will be apparent rather than real. An abnormal condition, born of war, carried him to an altitude unsuited to his attainments. He could not sustain himself there. He will now rise naturally and gradually, and hold on to what he gets, and will not drop from dizziness. He will gain both by concession and by self-assertion. Shrinking cowardice wins nothing from either meanness or magnanimity. Manly self-assertion and eternal vigilance are essential to negro liberty, not less than to that of the white man.

EDUCATION AND CRIME.

Robert Giffin, LL. D., in a very interesting address on the "Progress of the Working classes in England," has this to say concerning education:

"As to education, we have practically only figures going back thirty years. In 1851, in England, the children in average attendance at schools aided by parliamentary grants numbered 239,000, and in Scotland 32,000; in 1881 the figures were 2,863,000 and 410,000. If anything is to be allowed at all in favor of parliamentary grants as raising the character of education, such a change of numbers is most significant. The children of the masses are, in fact, now obtaining a good education all round, while fifty years ago the masses had either no education at all or a comparatively poor one. Dropping statistics for the moment, I should like to give my own testimony to an observed fact of social life—that there is nothing so striking or so satisfactory to those who can carry their memories back nearly forty years, as to observe the superiority of the education of the masses at the present time to what it was then. I suppose the most advanced common education forty or fifty years ago was in Scotland, but the superiority of the common-school system there at the present day to what it was forty years ago is immense. If Scotland has gained so much, what must it have been in England, where there was no national system fifty years ago at all? Thus at the present day not only do we get all children into schools, or nearly all, but the education for the increased numbers is better than that which the fortunate few alone obtained before."

It is interesting in connection with this, to study the facts concerning crime and pauperism.

"Next as to crime: the facts to note are that rather more than forty years ago, with a population little more than half what it is now, the number of criminal offenders committed for trial (1839) was 54,000; in England alone, 24,000. Now the corresponding figures are, United Kingdom, 22,000, and England, 15,000; fewer criminals by a great deal in a much larger population. Of course the figures are open to the observation that changes in legislation providing for the summary trial of offenses that formerly went to the assizes may have had some effect. But the figures show so great and gradual a change that there is ample margin for the results of legislative changes, without altering the inference that there is less serious crime now in the population than there was fifty years ago. Thus an improvement as regards crime corresponds to the better education and well-being of the masses.

"Next as regards pauperism: here, again, the figures are so imperfect that we cannot go back quite fifty years. It is matter of history, however, that pauperism was nearly breaking down the country half a century ago. The expenditure on poor-relief early in the century and down to 1830–31 was nearly as great at times as it is now. With half the population in the country that there now is, the burden of the poor was the same. Since 1849, however, we have continuous figures, and from these we know that, with a constantly increasing population, there is an absolute decline in the amount of pauperism. The earliest and latest figures are:

England	934,000	803,000
Scotland	122,000	102,000
Ireland	620,000	109,000
United Kingdom	1,676,000	1,014,000

THE BUSINESS OF WAR.

Believing that the military profession is not accordant with the benign principles of the Christian religion, I could show, I think, by abundant evidence, did space permit, that the irreligious tendencies of the war system are not confined to "the common soldier's life." I will only advert, however, to the demoralization among our army officers, especially those absent on leave, or stationed in Washington. The Chicago Tribune, after giving the names of a number of those of prominent rank now arraigned for various offences, and after alluding to the drunkenness and gambling, fearfully prevalent, to which their idle life has subjected them, adds the information: "A regular 'poker' ring has been organized, whose members not only play with each other, but spread their toils as industriously and skilfully as the professionals, who gather in and fleece the greenhorns in the army, and in some instances have not only relieved these victims of their ready money, but have induced them to hypothecate their pay for a year ahead." The nature of the subject forbids me to go into particulars concerning that miscalled "necessity," which procured the enactment of the Contagious Diseases Act in Great Britain—the vocation of the harlot thereby receiving, in garrison towns, official recognition at the hands of a professedly Christian State.

Secondly, believing in the Divine inspiration of the Scriptures of Truth, I am so far from conceding that "war is an evil which human effort can never entirely eradicate from this world," that it is a source of inexpressible consolation, in the face of those recurring outbreaks of war, and of the vast preparations for war, which "the lusts that war in [men's] members" still make possible, that those beautiful prophecies of Isaiah and Micah are moving on to fulfilment: "Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." This is surely not said of angels or of the heavenly host, but of men, whose "human effort" must co-operate with the Divine purpose in its accomplishment.

Next, how are we to understand that "the most effective preventive of (war's) dire consequences is a thorough, constant readiness for its terrible prosecution," when we see before us the hapless condition of the continent of Europe, with millions of men in arms or subject to instant call, and the people crushed beneath the terrible burden? What, indeed, are the present political, social, and religious aspects of the German Empire—that European State which, beyond all others, stands the most thoroughly equipped for the "terrible prosecution" of its defensive or offensive purposes? Politically, we behold an empire with an immense standing army and a trained reserve, where, in view of powerful and equally jealous or ambitious enemies without, and ever alert plotters within, the soldier and his occupation hold the first place. As regards religion, the feeling of indifference may be inferred from the fact that, in Berlin, the capital, with a population of upward of a million, less than fifty thousand persons attend any place of worship,* whilst the beer-gardens and all resorts of mere amusement are thronged, and on the first day of the week perhaps more than on any other. It was but a few weeks ago that the Kreus Zeitung, remarking upon the frolicsome manner in which the day of national fasting, prayer and penitence was observed, says: "If we look at the moral condition of our country, must we not be horrified in our inmost soul? What an increase of coarseness and bestiality! Every newspaper tells of murder, of suicide, of terrible derangement in houses and families, of unheard of atrocities, of a moral degeneracy which must fill us with horror. And turning to our social state we see ourselves going downward on the path of destruction." A slight glimpse of the social condition of the people may be had in the following from the London Echo: "A Continental journal states that there are myriads of mendicants wandering over Germany. In some districts the soldiery have had to be used to intimidate them. Their misery is so great that the prisons afford many of them a welcome shelter. In Baden, a most prosperous part of Germany before the war of 1870–71, and in Wurtemburg, the violence and robbery by mendicants are so threatening that many persons have to keep guard over their houses and property with loaded guns. Such are some of the results of Bismarck's militarism."

And Bismarck? "If it were not for me," he once said, when in a despondent and remorseful mood, "the world would have seen three great wars less, and eighty thousand who died in their bloom might have lived; and how many parents, brothers, sisters, and widows would have been spared their grief and tears!" Who is there of us who craves for this republic such an empire and such a leader, where the god Mars, enthroned in his Walhalla, waits in "a thorough, constant readiness for the terrible prosecution" of war, far above the lowly figure of the Prince of Peace?

But, it is further claimed, that "the blessed Master himself" did not explicitly counsel the soldiers to forsake their occupation. Well I remember to have read that when young William Penn became livingly convinced of the truths of Christianity—of the simplicity, the spirituality, and, as it seemed to him, the peaceable nature of the Redeemer's kingdom—he applied to that faithful man of God, George Fox, as to what he ought to do with his sword. Fox replied, "Wear it as long as thou canst." It is needless to say that the weapon was soon unbuckled from the belt.

Now, what do we learn from the whole ministry of Him whose coming upon earth was heralded by the angelic anthem, "Peace on earth, good will to men?" Near the beginning of his public ministry we find him in the Sermon on the Mount, insisting upon meekness, forgiveness of injuries, love of enemies, (not an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth, as of old,) and the promise to the peacemakers of the most exalted of blessings, in that "they shall be called the children of God." Then in the course of his labors, when his face was as though he would go to Jerusalem, and the people of a certain Samaritan village would not receive him, how sternly did he feel called to rebuke those of his disciples who desired their Lord to consume with fire from heaven the offending village. "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of, for the Son of Man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them." And finally, the last public act of his life as a free-will agent (if we may so speak), before his crucifixion, was the lesson so strongly enforced at the hour of betrayal, when, having for the purpose which he had in view, inquired of his disciples concerning the swords, he presently rebuked the impulsive act of Peter in essaying with force to defend him, "Put up again thy sword into its place; for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword."

According to this, therefore, the early Christians, in the simplicity of their faith, believed and practiced; while Tertullian, speaking most forcibly and conclusively hereupon, says: "How will a Christian man war; nay, how will he serve even in peace, without a sword, which the Lord has taken away? For albeit soldiers had come unto John, and had received the formula of their rule; albeit, likewise, a centurion had believed; still, the Lord afterward, in disarming Peter, unbelted every soldier."

It may be said that such advice would serve very well in primitive days, before Constantine and his legions made Christianity the religion of the Roman world, and before the imperious Charlemagne taught the refractory barbarians of the German interior how to accept the same faith at the point of the sword; moreover, that the exigencies of modern civilization and the maintenance of "the balance of power" are such, that it is needless to look for the re-exemplification of such non-fighting principles and practice this side of the Millennium. Can that be our sorrowful case? Read the following strange, but true, narrative, and say whether Christians ought to accept, with the fatalist, so hopeless a conclusion:

Basil Patras Zulu, a Greek, the chief of a band, was born in the year 1804. He was educated as a warrior, with a most intense hatred of the Turks, the oppressors of his nation. When not yet twenty years of age, he took part with his band in the noted defence of Missolonghi, and a few years later, saw the Ottoman yoke cast off. Sickened by the horrible scenes of war which he beheld, and particularly the cold-blooded murder of a captive band of Turks by his own countrymen, he retired from the army with disgust. Leaving his native land he found his way to Dublin. At a hotel in that city he heard prayer offered up by a Moravian woman, which was so different from anything that he, as a Greek Catholic, had ever listened to before, that it immediately secured his serious attention. In short, he became earnestly interested in the history and religious belief of the Moravians, and was taken into fellowship by them, though he scarcely knew how to give up his persuasion that the Lord Jesus Christ and his Apostles, had they been yet in the flesh, would have had no mercy on those bloody tyrants, the Turks. One day, however, Basil surprised one of his new friends by entering his room, and in great agitation exclaiming: "Come now! Come! I see it now!" Hastily leading him who had been his instructor to his own apartment, the late soldier pointed to the text: Matthew 5: 44: "Love your enemies! Love your enemies!" "I see it now—even the Turks! It bids us love our enemies; even the Turks! even the Turks!" He died at the early age of forty, with words of hope and resignation upon his lips, a loving, peaceable, and forgiving Christian, his loss lamented by a bereaved family and a sorrowing church.

Is there not reason, therefore, to unite with that conclusion of President Mark Hopkins, expressed not many days ago, that the world's estimate of war and military glory is "all wrong;" and with the recent remark of the Christian Intelligencer that, in apologizing for war, "the Christian world has borne its inconsiderate part;" so that, should the day come when we too must declare the reason for the hope that is in us, we may take no lower ground than did the conscript Maximilian, of Numidia, when in answer to Dion, the pro-consul, the intrepid young Christian made reply: "I am a Christian, therefore I cannot fight."—Josiah W. Leeds.

*A late observer, residing in the city of Berlin, places the number of attenders at not more than half the above.

THE TROUBLE WITH MORMONDOM.

The Cynosure has often called attention to the necessity of breaking down the Masonic oath system of the Endowment house before the government can succeed in enforcing its laws against polygomy. A correspondent of the American, who has had some experience in the Utah system writes with some feeling on this subject. Read his testimony:

Utah is too much bound up with priest-craft and secret cut throat covenants and Congress is doing nothing to destroy this oath bound traitor priesthood. Many of us intend to leave Utah, as there is no use of our fighting without more aid from the government, where we have been to a certain extent robbed of our water-rights, and are without protection at the District court, where a lawyer will not take up a case unless he is paid down from $35 to $50, besides other expenses. So there is practically no protection for a poor man. The courts and lawyers are Freemasons and the lower courts Mormons. We cannot get a jury without some Mormons, who would not favor one like me, who have belonged to them and have exposed their damnable cut throat covenants. In the "Endowment house" they swear "to avenge the blood of Joseph and Hiram Smith upon this nation". It is a shame—shame—shame for a free government to so miserably to pretect its loyal citizens and allow traitors to have their own way. I know what I speak of as I have been a member of the Mormon "school of the prophets."

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

SAMUEL C. POMEROY,

OF KANSAS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,

OF CONNECTICUT.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable;

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights, while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion, or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties, as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it. Yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy; and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living, and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country; "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

SENATOR POMEROY.

1. While he was one of the most popular of U. S. Senators in 1869, made an able speech against the secret lodge system. Up to that speech no man was so popular in Kansas as he.
2. He was for that speech betrayed, defeated, buried alive politically by the lodge; by means which the Saxon tongue has no word strong enough to describe; falsehood, rascality, scoundrelism, are all too weak.
3. He met the charges of "bribery," "corruption," etc., before the highest tribunal in the world, where the United States paid all expenses of witnesses; his accusers, as invited, did their best and worst; and Pomeroy was triumphantly cleared.
4. The charges themselves of "bribery and corruption" by Kansas Republican politicians, who first nominated St. John, on their own Prohibition platform, and then betrayed and defeated him, and elected a Lecompton Democrat and ex-rebel!—charges of corruption by such men are a badge of honor.
5. Pomeroy stands, and from the first has stood square on the American platform, and not to support him with voice and vote is to be recreant to reason, justice, and the American cause.

THE IOWA CHAIRMANSHIP.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The National Secretaries at Washington, D. C., appointed the central committee of the American party for this State of which they made me chairman. While thankful for the confidence reposed in me, I had serious doubts as to my ability to perform the responsible duties of said office; but my love for the principles of the American party induced me to "do what I could" for the cause. By the assistance of the committee we had our full delegation at the Chicago Convention with their credentials in their pockets. Because of a severe injury received by my wife from a fall on the 22d of January last, my time has been almost wholly employed in caring for her, and as she is but little better, I am compelled to resign the chairmanship, and notify the friends that, by unanimous consent of the delegates at the National Convention, S. E. Starry, of Clarence, Cedar Co., was appointed chairman of said committee.

LOCAL ANTI-LODGE POLITICS IN ALABAMA.

BRANCHVILLE, Ala., June 28, 1884.

I admire very much your zeal in opposition to secret organizations. It is striking a death blow to the lodges. The Masons at this place made a display on the 24th of this month. They are trying to rally, but the people, after reading the Anti-masonic tracts you sent me some time since, worked up a powerful pressure against Masonry. I am using my energy against the order, for I honestly believe it to be dangerous to the Christian religion and to constitutional liberty. Our people are not going to vote for Masons, at least not many of them. We are encouraging Anti-mason candidates for office. Will you please inform me whether or not the Republican candidate for President is a Freemason? Is Tilden a Mason?

Yours in Christ, J. H. VANDEGRIFT.

ANS.—Neither Blaine nor Tilden are Freemasons as we are informed.—ED. CYNOSURE.

ST. JOHN AT PITTSBURGH.

Dr. McDonald of California has been for some time an anxious candidate for the Prohibition party nomination The simultaneous publishing of his portrait and life in prohibition prints was well conceived to give his name the foremost place in that convention, and his offer to use $250,000 in circulating temperance literature was a bribe for the support of these papers, some of which would be glad to handle a part of that fund. But if Dr. McDonald is a sincere temperance man, who deserves the confidence and vote of his fellow citizens, why is he not willing to do the same if any other man is nominated? Why does he not do it for the cause, anyhow, nomination or no nomination. There is a smell of corruption about this matter that sincere temperance voters do well to see to. Meantime beyond the enthusiastic State convention at Bloomington, Ill., little has been done to urge the name of St. John, the New York Witness excepted, which alone to be sure is a host in his favor. But that the heart of the people is stronger than the power of money or lodge bonds, the Lever itself confesses in its last number, thus:

"It begins to look as though St. John would be the nominee of the Pittsburgh convention. If such proves to be the case, one or two kantankerous prohibition journals will have themselves to thank for it. Nothing more helps a man than unreasonable and absurd assaults upon him. When will some people learn this? So far as we know there are none of the temperance papers doing any special work for St. John, yet he seems to be almost the unanimous choice of the West, at least."

Senator Pomeroy has been out of politics for ten or twelve years, but when in public life neither St. John with all his brilliant record in Kansas, nor Russell, nor any other candidate for temperance votes could show a more honest and open record for this reform in proportion to the opportunities of his position. Pomeroy's name deserves presentation at Pittsburgh among the first and noblest.

THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN LODGE-POLITICS AND STATESMANSHIP.

The two Senators from the State of Vermont furnish a good illustration of the very great difference there is between lodge-politics and statesmanship.

At the beginning of the war of the rebellion Vermont offered the best example of a Republican State anywhere to be found in the world. The character of its institutions and its social usages presented a firm platform from which a man of ability could have announced and maintained the sentiments of true statesmanship without the necessity of courting the favor of cliques, rings, combinations, or parties. But the delegation of the State, instead of maintaining this position, gave itself up as so many more cog wheels in the mazy machinery of lodge-politics, in which the Vermont character of independence and freedom was entirely lost sight of. Vermont interests became represented by a soulless machine instead of by the intellect of free and thinking statesmen.

Men who surrender themselves to a machine cannot control that machine, any more than they can control the locomotive that drags the car which they enter. Accordingly on the eve of the great and oppressive financial difficulty of 1873, occasioned by the wild, irresponsible extravagancies of lodge-politics, one of the Vermont Senators, borne onward by the machine, took his back-pay grab, as small and dishonest a measure as low politicians ever engaged in. Finding, however, that the people were not yet prepared for such lodge-morality and that their grab was really too dirty for a statesman's pockets, he emptied his pockets of the grab into the State treasury, the lodge machine standing ready in the legislature to receive it; and some of the more obsequious of the fraternity were disposed to vote him thanks for thus disgracing the State. The machine proved powerful enough to return him to the Senate. To clutch a few thousand dollars from a plundered national treasury, on the eve of great financial depression, and carry it to a State legislature, receiving office in return, is lodge-politics, not statesmanship.

The other Senator from Vermont, a member of the lodge, and of course entirely subject to its movements, left his seat as presiding officer of the Senate right on the eve of another financial depression from lodge-extravagance, and proposed a sinecure of some twenty thousand dollars a year by way of reward to one who even then was engaged as a part of the machine-movement in demoralizing the financial credit of the country. This proposal (which has not yet been adopted, and which doubtless defeated his nomination for the Presidency) was wholly out of accord with the character of the State which the Senator represents, or rather misrepresents.

These instances furnish an illustration of the wide difference existing between lodge-politics and statesmanship. The two Vermont Senators in their action alluded to no more represented the institutions and habits of their State than they did those of Morocco. They represented the lodge and not their State or the National Republic.

There is nothing more silly, flat, and unmanly than lodge-politics. It ranges even below party interests and serves chiefly personal cupidity; for such is the motive power of the lodge. The atmosphere of Washington is infected by it, as that of the bar-room is with the odors of rum and whisky, and men lose both their heads and their characters in it. Let us have a change.

AMERICAN.

THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM.

After two days and a half incubation the committee of the Democratic National Convention, meeting in Chicago last week, presented their platform, interminable, verbose, diplomatic after Tallyrand's definition, and spiritless except when denouncing the Republicans. It was voted without change by the convention although Gen. Butler brought in a minority report radically changing the portions on tariff and the currency and urged his proposition with great force to the discomfiture of many delegates.

The platform reads thus, omitting some long passages which denounce the opposing party and condole S. J. Tilden:

The Democratic party of the Union, through its representatives in National Convention assembled, recognizes that as the Nation grows older new issues are born of time and progress and old issues perish. But the fundamental principles of the Democracy, approved by the united voice of the people, remain, and will ever remain, as the best and only security for the continuance of free government. The preservation of personal rights; the equality of all citizens before the law; the reserved rights of the States; and the supremacy of the Federal Government within the limits of the Constitution will ever form the true basis of our liberties, and can never be surrendered without destroying that balance of rights and powers which enables a continent to be developed in peace, and social order to be maintained by means of local self-government.

But it is indispensable for the practical application and enforcement of these fundamental principles that the Government should not always be controlled by one political party. Frequent change of Administration is as necessary as constant recurrence to the popular will. Otherwise abuses grow, and the Government, instead of being carried on for the general welfare, becomes an instrumentality for imposing heavy burdens on the many who are governed for the benefit of the few who govern. Public servants thus become arbitrary rulers.

This is now the condition of the country. Hence a change is demanded. The Republican party, so far as principle is concerned, is a reminiscence; in practice it is an organization for enriching those who control its machinery. The frauds and jobbery which have been brought to light in every department of the Government are sufficient to have called for reform within the Republican party; yet those in authority, made reckless by long possession of power, have succumbed to its corrupting influence, and have placed in nomination a ticket against which the independent portion of the party are in open revolt.

Therefore a change is demanded. Such a change was alike necessary in 1876, but the will of the people was then defeated by a fraud which can never be forgotten nor condoned. Again in 1880 the change demanded by the people was defeated by the lavish use of money contributed by unscrupulous contractors and shameless jobbers who had bargained for unlawful profits or for high office. * * *

DEMOCRATIC PLEDGES.

The Democracy pledges itself to purify the Administration from corruption, to restore economy, to revive respect for law, and to reduce taxation to the lowest limit consistent with due regard to the preservation of the faith of the Nation to its creditors and pensioners.

Knowing full well, however, that legislation affecting the occupations of the people should be cautious and conservative in method, not in advance of public opinion, but responsive to its demands, the Democratic party is pledged to revise the tariff in a spirit of fairness to all interests.

THE TARIFF.

But in making reduction in taxes it is not proposed to injure any domestic industries, but rather to promote their healthy growth. From the foundation of this Government taxes collected at the custom house have been the chief source of Federal revenue. Such they must continue to be. Moreover, many industries have come to rely on legislation for successful continuance, so that any change of law must be at every step regardful of the labor and capital thus involved. The process of reform must be subject in the execution to this plain dictate of justice.

All taxation shall be limited to the requirements of economical government. The necessary reduction in taxation can and must be effected without depriving American labor of the ability to compete successfully with foreign labor, and without imposing lower rates of duty than will be ample to cover any increased cost of production which may exist in consequence of the higher rate of wages prevailing in this country.

Sufficient revenue to pay all the expenses of the Federal Government, economically administered, including pensions, interest and principal of the public debt, can be got, under our present system of taxation, from custom house taxes on fewer imported articles, bearing heaviest on articles of luxury, and bearing lightest on articles of necessity.

We therefore denounce the abuses of the existing tariff; and, subject to the preceding limitations, we demand that Federal taxation shall be exclusively for public purposes, and shall not exceed the needs of the Government economically administered.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

The system of direct taxation known as the "Internal Revenue" is a War tax, and so long as the law continues the money derived therefrom should be sacredly devoted to the relief of the people from the remaining burdens of the War, and be made a fund to defray the expense of the care and comfort of worthy soldiers disabled in line of duty in the wars of the Republic, and for the payment of such pensions as Congress may from time to time grant to such soldiers, a like fund for the sailors having been already provided; and any surplus should be paid into the Treasury.

We favor an American continental policy based upon more intimate commercial and political relations with the fifteen sister republics of North, Central, and South America, but entangling alliances with none.

We believe in honest money, the gold and silver coinage of the Constitution, and a circulating medium convertible into such money without loss.

Asserting the equality of all men before the law, we hold that it is the duty of the Government, in its dealings with the people, to mete out equal and exact justice to all citizens of whatever nativity, race, color, or persuasion—religious or political.

We believe in a free ballot and a fair count; and we recall to the memory of the people the noble struggle of the Democrats in the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses by which a reluctant Republican opposition was compelled to assent to legislation making everywhere illegal the presence of troops at the polls as the conclusive proof that a Democratic Administration will preserve liberty with order.

The selection of Federal officers for the Territories should be restricted to citizens previously resident therein.

We oppose sumptuary laws which vex the citizen and interfere with individual liberty; we favor honest civil-service reform and the compensation of all United States officers by fixed salaries; the separation of church and state; and the diffusion of free education by common schools, so that every child in the land may be taught the rights and duties of citizenship.

LABOR.

While we favor all legislation which will tend to the equitable distribution of property, to the prevention of monopoly, and to the strict enforcement of individual rights against corporate abuses, we hold that the welfare of society depends upon a scrupulous regard for the rights of property as defined by law.

We believe that labor is best rewarded where it is freest and most enlightened. It should therefore be fostered and cherished. We favor the repeal of all laws restricting the free action of labor, and the enactment of laws by which labor organizations may be incorporated, and of all such legislation as will tend to enlighten the people as to the true relations of capital and labor.

We believe that the public lands ought, as far as possible, to be kept as homesteads for actual settlers; that all unearned lands heretofore improvidently granted to railroad corporations by the action of the Republican party should be restored to the public domain; and that no more grants of land should be made to corporations, or be allowed to fall into the ownership of alien absentees.

We are opposed to all propositions, which, upon any pretext, would convert the General Government into a machine for collecting taxes to be distributed among the States, or the citizens thereof.

In reaffirming the declaration of the Democratic platform of 1856, that "the liberal principles embodied by Jefferson in the Declaration of Independence, and sanctioned in the Constitution, which make ours the land of liberty and the asylum of the oppressed of every nation, have ever been cardinal principles in the Democratic faith," we nevertheless do not sanction the importation of foreign labor, or the admission of servile races, unfitted by habits, training, religion, or kindred for absorption into the great body of our people, or for the citizenship which our laws confer. American civilization demands that against the immigration or importation of Mongolians to these shores our gates be closed.

FOREIGN POLICY.

The Democratic party insists that it is the duty of this Government to protect, with equal fidelity and vigilance, the rights of its citizens, native and naturalized, at home and abroad; and to the end that this protection may be assured United States papers of naturalization, issued by courts of competent jurisdiction, must be respected by the Executive and Legislative Departments of our own Government and by all foreign powers.

It is an imperative duty of this Government to efficiently protect all the rights of persons and property of every American citizen in foreign lands, and demand and enforce full reparation for any invasion thereof.

An American citizen is only responsible to his own Government for any act done in his own country or under her flag, and can only be tried therefor on her own soil and according to her laws; and no power exists in this Government to expatriate an American citizen to be tried in any foreign land for any such act.

This country has never had a well defined and executed foreign policy save under Democratic Administration; that policy has ever been, in regard to foreign nations, so long as they do not act detrimental to the interests of the country or hurtful to our citizens, to let them alone; that as the result of this policy we recall the acquisition of Louisiana, Florida, California, and of the adjacent Mexican territory by purchase alone, and contrast these grand acquisitions of Democratic statesmanship with the purchase of Alaska, the sole fruit of a Republican Administration of nearly a quarter of a century.

The Federal Government should care for and improve the Mississippi River and other great water-ways of the Republic, so as to secure for the interior States easy and cheap transportation to tide-water. * * * * *

With this statement of the hopes, principles and purposes of the Democratic party, the great issue of reform and change in Administration is submitted to the people in calm confidence that the popular voice will pronounce in favor of new men and new and more favorable conditions for the growth of industry, the extension of trade, the employment and due reward of labor and of capital, and the general welfare of the whole country.

"Send me some American tickets at the proper time. I am going to vote that ticket and think I can get others," writes O. Jennings, of New Castle, Ind.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SECRETISM AT HANOVER COLLEGE, INDIANA.

OCEAN GROVE, N J.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—As you are interested in educational matters, a word in regard to one of the oldest colleges in the West may not be amiss. It will show that something more than mere science is being taught these days.

It was my pleasure not long since, to visit the home of my youth; and once more attend Commencement at Hanover College, Indiana. Over fifty years ago, this college was founded by Dr. Crowe; than whom no better man ever belonged to the Presbyterian church. The exercises of the graduating class this year were creditable to both faculty and scholar and also reflected great credit on the management.

There was one thing however, which to my mind detracted much from the former prestige of this institution; and that was the prominence given to fraternity badges, pins, etc. A member of the graduating class had among his floral offerings, emblems cut in paper and woven in straw and flowers, emblematic of the Sigma Chi fraternity. These he placed, with evident pride, in a conspicuous position, so all could see that "he was one of them." I learned with sorrow that these fraternities are threatening the very life of this college, causing jealousies and ill feeling. The sad part of it all is, that while making the experiment of the co-education of the sexes, young women are being tempted to join fraternities, supposing superior advantages would be gained by so doing. Even some whose home training has been adverse to such things are already "in the coils".

It is strange professors have not the moral courage and principle to expel students who insist on organizing fraternities and tempting others into them. But when students are permitted openly to parade their signs, as in this case, in the face of the public, it is evident that professors as well as students are to blame, and lay themselves open to criticism. It shows also, either that they have no law in college on the subject, or if they have, the students defy the law and govern, or that the professors sympathize with such orders. The last it is to be feared is too often the case. The educators, to whom are entrusted the dearest interests of life, are training youth to love the lodge, to disobey parents and teachers, and possibly defy the law of God and the land. It is too much education—it is more than parents bargain for, when they send their sons and daughters to college. Instead of it being an honor and blessing to have a son educated at such a college, it may be a curse. A little wholesome literature might be distributed with effect among professors whose eyes are not yet opened to see the sin of Masonry with all its horrid rites.

It is high time for mothers and fathers to speak and write in defense of their imperiled children, and give their patronage to those colleges that have stamina enough at the head, to suppress fraternities.

MRS. J. S. COLLINS.

SEIZE THE YOUNG FOOL.

Darius, the proud Persian monarch, at first regarded with contempt the youthful Alexander and his Grecian soldiery who menaced his dominions with invasion. At length, alarmed at their success and rapid advance, he ordered his officers to "seize the young fool" and send him bound hand and foot to his capital. The history of Alexander's exploits and the downfall of Darius are perhaps familiar to most readers. The genius of the Persian King has often been manifest in high places of worldly power. Sisera, the general of King Jabin's army, in which were nine hundred chariots of iron, would have seized the young Israelite fools—small comparatively in number—that marched in battle array against him. The Midian power would, no doubt, have been pleased to seize Gideon and his three hundred. King Saul would gladly have seized the young David. The papal power wanted much to seize the young fool, the daring Luther. The priestly church of England would not have been scrupulous to seize the reformers, Fox, Wesley, Bunyan and others. The evil genius of American slavery would have shouted for joy to seize the young fool Garrison and all his coadjutors, and shackled them hand and foot. The rum power would, if able, seize the whole force of young fools, the prohibition agitators, and bind them hand and foot.

Examples are numerous. The dark genius of secretism would seize the opposer and exposer and perhaps serve them as they did formerly Morgan and others. The will is not wanting; but, thanks to an over-ruling Providence, there has ever been an "if." They have shown the propensity to "seize" upon a large scale. They seized

Christ, seized the church, seized the state, and, like Capernaum, thought to exalt themselves unto heaven; but it is becoming evident they seized powers they cannot bind hand and foot forever and they are now in danger of being "cast down to hell." Amen.

QUAKER BOY.

NOT THIS MAN, BUT BARABBAS.

PITTSTON, ME.

About the first of May notice was given in the local paper that the order of Knights of Pythias would attend the Congregational church in a body on the 25th, to listen to a sermon by the pastor. A few of the members of the church felt that it was not keeping God's commands to parade on the Sabbath day, and that the church ought to discountenance it in some way. Accordingly at the evening meeting they requested the church to invite the order to come directly from their homes, and return to the same, and that their hall remain closed for the day.

The question being put before the church, the discussion, which was all on one side, began. First, a member of the G. A. R., and a Mason rose. He saw no harm in the parade. The G. A. R. were going to do the same. It had been the custom for a long time for the different orders to observe one day in the year this way. Therefore it was all right. ("Away with him, away with him." John 19: 15). A second thought that if they did not come to church in their own way, they might do some thing worse. ("Not this man." John 18: 40). Others, including the deacons, saw no harm in it and said it was better to put up with a little of their folly than be too particular. The vote was finally taken, all voting to keep still and allow them to come as they chose. ("And they took Jesus, and led him away," John 19: 16).

The day arrived. The K. of P. came in their regalia, escorted by drummers. It was natural that we expected a gospel sermon well adapted to those men, few of whom ever attend church, telling them the way of salvation. But disappointment awaits us, and why? The Rev. R. W. Jenkins feels the cable-tow around his soul. He has taken the damning oath of the "Sir Knights," also is an Odd-fellow and a K. of P. His gospel consists of "Friendship, Benevolence and Charity." He selects "Friendship," for a topic, based upon the friendship that existed between Jonathan and David, using the text in 1st Sam. 18: 1. "And it came to pass that the soul of Jonathan was knit to the soul of David, and Jonathan loved him as his own soul." The sermon, or address began on this wise: "My friends and brethren of the Order of Knights of Pythias, it is with pleasure," etc. The Knights were the brethren; the congregation, including the church, must have been the friends. One of these brother Knights was arrested for the sale of liquor not long since, and yet he is brother to the minister.

The following are some extracts from the sermon, which as a whole extols secretism before the people, rather than the gospel before those Sabbath-breakers:

"No thoughtful man can fail to appreciate the practical advantage to be derived from this organization and others of a similar nature. It is not always safe to rely on spontaneous charity."

To the Christian this is the same as saying you cannot trust God for friends in time of need. It is better to join some unholy lodge, which will be obliged to help you. The Lord has forgotten his promise, "Verily thou shalt be fed."

"It is a wise thing for men to band themselves together, as you have done, for benevolent purposes; and to pledge themselves to assist each other in times of pecuniary trouble or distress, to which all are liable, by reason of misfortune, sickness and death."

"The friendship of the world is enmity with God.' With all of God's promises no one need depend on oath-bound assistance. "The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof," and they that put their trust in him "shall not want for any good thing."

"I must confess that experience confirms me more and more in the belief that, the more general and the obligatory benevolence fostered by such organizations as that of the Knights of Pythias are of greater practical value in distresses which either misfortune or disease almost daily impose on many in the common walks of life. To me it is not at all surprising that you have made, and are continually gaining large accessions to your ranks. I heartily bid you God speed. In addition to the spirit of Damon and Pythias, the spirit of Jonathan and David, put into your work more of the spirit of Christ who gave his life for the world. Grow in grace."

He places Damon and Pythias first, Jonathan and David second, and Christ last. The first are mentioned several times while there is but one allusion to Christ. We read, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." If this is not breaking the first command, I do not understand the Scriptures. Christ is the only example held forth in the Word; but Damon is preferred with these worthy, so-called, Knights. In all the address not one allusion is made to the fundamental doctrines of repentance and faith "without which it is impossible to please God."

In closing he tells them how they can obtain heaven thus: "There may be much chaff in what I have said (which is true) but there are a few kernels of wheat, which, if steeped in prayer and reflection, will yield you a glorious harvest in time and eternity." Again, the word of the Lord saith, "If there come any unto you and bring not this doctrine receive him not, neither bid him God speed, for he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds." Secret orders do not bring the doctrine of Christ, but that of Hiram or Oriris, Damon and Pythias, some real and some mythical characters; still our minister, who pretends to know the true way of life, sees nothing wrong and bids them "God speed." God's commands are abundant against the secret "works of darkness," but the church as well as the pastor are asleep on the subject. "If the blind lead the blind both shall fall into the ditch." Men can deceive others and themselves even, but God is not mocked. With a pastor hood-winked and cable-towed, and joined with the lodges, one can scarcely expect the Lord to work among us.

It has long been a question with me whether it was to remain in the church. I have come to the conclusion that God organized the church, and there is the place to stand and make war against this spiritual wickedness. I have long since withheld my usual money support. I cannot help pay oath-bound ministers, who are trusting in their ungodly lodges for their pecuniary aid. Lord deliver us from such preachers.

Let every Christian who reads this pray for the church in Gardiner.

TREBLE THE VOTE.

All good people must approve of our platform and the rectitude of our cause. I think we can treble our vote in Nebraska this fall. With prayer that the Almighty may guide you, I am etc.—ELDER S. AUSTIN, Fairmount, Neb.

HOW MANY ARE PRAYING?

I earnestly prayed God for his guidance in our convention at Chicago, and am anxious to hear the result of that meeting. May God ever bless you and grant you yet many years to labor for him.—E. F. WARING, Walla Walla, W. T.

THE PAPER AND THE CANDIDATES.

A friend handed me an April number of your excellent paper. And I am more than pleased with it. I have read and reread it. I will vote for the nominees of the American party. Enclosed you will find two dollars. Send me the Cynosure as long as you can.—D. K. LAWRENCE, Big Springs, Kans.

ENLISTED FOR THE WAR.

It is not my intention to be without your most excellent paper, neither can I afford to be without its weekly visits, as I wish to keep posted in this great reform. I have enlisted for the end of this war as I did in the Abolition movement, which I never regretted. Then as now all had to contend with bitter persecution and misrepresentation in the church and out of it alike. All this should only spur us to duty, while we know that we are in God's work. I am trying to do what I can by way of circulating tracts and books. Since Bro. Mahan's death I am left almost alone here. One half of the leading men in the place are of the secret order, one-half the rest are in sympathy, while the other half, though they talk well against the lodge, are timid and tender-footed, and say we cannot overthrow Masonry, but I say victory for the truth.—WM. D. JOHNSTON, Lexington, Ill.

A GREAT WORK ALREADY DONE.

I do not wish to be deprived of the pleasure and profit I derive from the reading of the Cynosure. I feel interested in the reform it advocates, for it is truly the Polestar, as its name indicates. It is a stupendous work that God's faithful few have accomplished in the right direction. May our Heavenly Father spare them many years yet, girding them with strength for the work until they shall see the final triumph of right over wrong; and as they are called one by one to lay off their armor, and leave the battle to others who may come after them, may they receive a crown, with the plaudit, "Well done." —MRS. E. S. SUTPHEN, Evansville, Wis.

TWO LODGES THAT MUST FALL.

I would further say that if you will send me some of the most desirable tracts for circulation, I will use a hundred or more to good advantage. I have sent copies of the Cynosure away as soon as I have looked them through. I have sent to different States. I was a soldier in the late war, and we are now scattered world-wide; and through them I work. We are prospering gloriously here. Aaron Riley and I have another lodge apiece that we are at work upon. They, as others have done, must fall soon.—S. C. TAYLOR, Pactolus, Ark.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON IV.—July 27, 1884.—Kindness to Jonathan's Son.—2 Sam. 9: 1-13.

Get your Bible and read the lesson.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Thine own friend, and thy father's friend, forsake not.—Prov. 27: 10.

"Is there yet any....of the house of Saul." Saul's sons had died with him in the battle of Gilboa; and few of his descendants were left. David probably had never heard of the existence of Mephibosheth. At Saul's death the child was only 5 years old, and David had then been an exile about six years. His lameness (chap. 4: 4) had prevented him from taking any part in the public contests of the time. Besides, according to oriental notions, the younger son of a crowned monarch has a preferable claim to the succession over the son of a mere heir-apparent; and hence his name was never heard of as the rival of his uncle Ishbosheth. His insignificance had led to his being lost sight of, and it was only through Ziba that David learned of his existence, and the retired life he passed with one of the great families in trans-Jordanic Canaan, who remained attached to the fallen dynasty.—J., F. and B.

"House of Saul." Paul's compendium of the life of David is that he served his generation according to the will of God, i. e., that he made it his business to do good. We have before us an instance in point.—Henry.

"A servant," or slave. The obscurity in which Mephibosheth had been kept is further shown by the fact that those of whom the king inquired were unable to give him the information he desired. They knew, however, of one Ziba, an old and trusted servant of Saul, now a prosperous man with 15 sons and 20 servants, and supposed that he could inform the king.—Kitto.

"That I may shew the kindness of God." A reference to Jonathan's words (1 Sam. 20: 14, 15). Some take this to be kindness or mercy such as God shows to men.—Cambridge Bible. Others, kindness shown in God and for God's sake (Luke 6: 36).—Keil. Others, a very great kindness, an everlasting kindness (Rom. 11: 29).—Cook. And yet others undertake to combine all three ideas. "Kindness shown from indwelling in God will be pure and great kindness such as God shows."—Prof Toy.

"Behold thy servant." This may be a merely oriental expression of courtesy (compare the address of Joseph's brethren to Pharaoh, Gen. 47: 3); or it may seem to confirm the views some hold of the abject spirit of the man. Imagine the scene in the palace. Poor lame Mephibosheth taken before the king. Falls down "on his face" before David. But see how kind David is. Calls him by his name, tells him not to be afraid, tells him what he means to do for him for his father Jonathan's sake. He is to have his family estates again, and to sit at the king's table. How overjoyed Mephibosheth is! How humble! Bows himself before the king. David's kindness overpowers him. He says he is not worthy of all this kindness.—Watson.

"Thou shalt eat bread at my table." A common mark of honor in oriental countries (see 1 Kings 2: 7; 2 Kings 25: 29). The physician Democedes, who cured Darius, was made "a member of the king's table" (Herod. iii. 132); and Histiaeus of Miletus was invited to come up to Susa, and be Darius' "mess-companion" (Herod. v. 24).—Cambridge Bible. David once feared to eat bread at Saul's table (1 Sam. 20: 5).

"A dead dog" (1 Sam. 24: 14; 17: 43). There may be something of policy in this expression as if he has said, "I am weak and insignificant, and therefore cannot injure you. There is no occasion to feel that I may become a rival for the throne." Mephiboshcth calls himself a "dead dog." Agur calls himself "more brutish than any man" (Prov. 30: 2); and Paul declares himself "the chief of sinners" (1 Tim. 1: 15). Nevertheless Mephibosheth was a worthy man, and there were far more foolish men than Agur, far greater sinners than Paul. What then, did they lie? By no means. The man of tender and enlightened conscience knows that in God's sight the very heavens are not clean, and that he chargeth even his angels with folly. The more advanced he is in the spiritual life, the more clear is the perception which he realizes of the holiness of God, the more distinctly he feels how abhorrent all sin of thought, word, or action must be to him, and how it separates the soul from him. —Kitto.

"All that pertained to Saul." Saul's family estate, which had fallen to David in right of his wife (Num. 27: 8), or been forfeited to the crown by Ishbosheth's rebellion (chap. 12: 8), was provided (ver. 11, also chap. 19: 28) for enabling him to maintain an establishment suitable to his rank, and Ziba appointed steward to manage it, on the condition of receiving one-half of the produce in remuneration of his labor and expense, while the other moiety was to be paid as rent to the owner of the land (chap. 19: 29).—J., F. and B.

"As for Mephibosheth." As men do not sit down at table with their wives and children in the East, this constant dining at court was a distinction unaccompanied by any of the drawbacks it would bring to us.—Kitto. The time was to come when David would reap the reward of this kindness, and eat of provisions from this estate secured to his friend's son (16: 1-4).— Gray.

FAITHFULNESS TO VOWS.

1. Intemperance interferes with the keeping of vows. V. 1; 1 Sam. 18: 3; 20: 14-17. Eight years of royalty with its cares and duties had not caused David to forget his vows made when a distressed exile to his noble and loving friend Jonathan. From chap. 8, v. 15, we obtain an idea of the load of responsibility his kingly station brought upon him, and also of the vigor, prudence, and wisdom with which he administered the affairs of his realm. If David had been a drunken sot like Alexander the Great he would very likely have forgotten his vow to Jonathan, or if he had remembered it when sober would have drowned the recollection in his cups. A man who drinks habitually is apt to be unfaithful to his promises, partly because indulgence in one evil habit breaks down the barriers of self restraint as regards other sins, and partly because the alcoholic poison so clouds his brain that he cannot remember his promises. Many valuable lives have been lost through trusting to an intemperate physician who forgot to attend to his patients. David had certainly the strongest reasons to remember the brave, unselfish friend who stood by him when his life was in peril, and resigned without a murmur his own royal rights; but we all have a Friend to whom we owe infinitely more. Yet our vows to him we are continually forgetting. The poor, the unfortunate, the sinful are always with us, to seek out as David did the crippled Mephibosheth and minister unto for his sake. The victims of strong drink are on every side. They belong to him. His heart yearns after them, and we cannot better show our gratitude and love to Christ than by inducing them to reform, and thus giving them back their lost heritage from God.

2. Nations no less than individuals need to keep their vows. A nation faithless to its promises sets a terrible example, not only before the world, but its own people. Like a father whose word his children cannot trust it ceases to be respected at home; and when this is the case its day of ruin is not far off. Our nation has too often dishonored its vows made to the weak and helpless. The Indians have been driven from the reservations which had been solemnly guaranteed to them by government, because dishonest white men wanted their lands. Yet one single Christian Indian during the outbreak in Minnesota in '61, saved the lives of 300 white people. The colored race fought bravely for us, yet the nation has gone back on the Amendment Act which guaranteed to them their civil rights. We have violated our treaty with China by passing anti-Chinese laws, though she has supplied us with honest and industrious laborers. This is national ingratitude as well as bad faith. But if all who are boys and girls now grow up to consider their promises solemnly binding we shall have a generation of citizens who will not allow such national dishonor.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What are we commanded? Ec. 6: 4. How does Christ consider any kindness done to another for his sake? Matt. 25: 40. Was covenant breaking one of the sins of the ancient Jews? Hos. 8: 1; 10: 4; 2 Kings 18: 12.

PRACTICAL QUESTIONS.

Vs. 1–5. Is gratitude due from us to those who have befriended our parents?

Are there any in trouble whom you ought to seek out and relieve?

Are there any promises or engagements which you have failed to make good?

Will true friendship grant favors without thought of reward?

Is it the duty of all to seek out the poor, the wretched, the lame, and the blind, and minister to them?

If we have not the love of Christ in the heart, can we show the "kindness of God" to anyone?

Is fidelity to our business engagements important?

Should our word be as good as our bond?

Vs. 6–13. Is reverence due to those who are our benefactors?

Was Mephibosheth's humility unnatural?

Was it probably real?

Mention two other Bible instances? Prov. 30: 2; 1 Tim. 1:15.

If we appreciate the holiness of God, shall we realize how all sin of thought, word, or deed, separate the soul from him?

Are the most holy always the most humble?

How may we show our love to Christ? —The Illustrator.

FRENCH REFORMED MISSION.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—For the honor of justice and truth, I am forced to use the columns of the religious press, to inform the well bred and read people about the infamous report made on the 7th inst. by the Chicago Tribune, concerning the evangelistic work I am doing here in this corrupted city of ours, or wrong my country-men, the 20,000 French people of Chicago.

The reporter of the Tribune, with the special design to sneer and laugh at the movement with which I identified myself, soul and body and without any means, describes our hall where we gathered, as a dirty and sickly place, when everybody knows that it is the comfortable and beautiful Maskell Hall on Desplaines St. He misstates when he speaks of the number present, and of the collection, and endeavors to be witty at the expense of the congregation. By the side of the infamous article which has been published by the Tribune concerning our missionary work, there was a beautiful advertisement about one the Protestant press of this country has styled "Mgr. Capel, a Snob." That Mgr. Capel, has come to Chicago to see what will be done during the Democratic Convention. I do not see any harm in it: but, that he has preached again, in the Roman Catholic cathedral of Chicago, is where I find fault with the Catholic church.

You are aware, Mr. Editor, that the Rev. Dr. Nevins, chaplain of the American chapel at Rome, has discovered that that Monsignor Capel has been dispelled from Rome, by his pope, and from England by his bishop, the Cardinal Manning. His bad conduct has been so immoral, that he has been forbidden to preach and say mass in Europe, and here he is preaching in the cathedral, and what is worse, here we find a Protestant journal, the Tribune, sold to the Romanists to proclaim and propagate the error in every shape, to advocate the distinguished religious snob.

That he be such a snob, I take it on the authority of the New York Sun, in an article reproduced by the Citizen of Chicago, the 10th of November, 1883:

"Mgr. Capel has the reputation abroad of being a little of a tuft hunter. He boasts, it is said, of his conversions of the rich. We are not surprised, therefore, to find Mgr. Capel declaring that what the Roman Catholic church here needs is "a little higher social standing." "That is one of the things most wanting," he said, in his Sunday sermon before the Xavier Sodality. This is a snobbish suggestion, against which we warn the members of the Xavier Sodality. If they heed it they will damage the cause for which they are working. No, no, Mgr. Capel! We wish to hear no talk about the social standing of a church. There is no aristocracy here, we have no privileged class, and the gospel of Christ is the gospel of the poor.

"Snobbishness is odious always and everywhere, but in the church it is more than that, it is profanity."————

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD, HENRY L. KELLOGG, } EDITORS.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 17, 1884.

TWENTY-FIVE CENTS TILL ELECTION IS OVER FOR A CAMPAIGN PAPER.

The publisher (Mr. Phillips), will send four copies of the Cynosure to four different addresses until after the Presidential election, for the sum of ONE DOLLAR.

There was, perhaps, never a time in the history of American Politics, when a strong Reform Campaign paper had so fair a field, and so good hope of success as now. The Republicans are divided. Butler is dividing the Democracy. The Prohibitionists must drop secrecy or submit to a rupture, or be ruled and betrayed by the Masons. Let us now hear from the "Old Guard."

"Once more unto the breach, dear friends, once more."

The state is "ordained of God" as truly as the church.

Do not cease to pray fervently for the Prohibition Convention, Pittsburg, July 23d.

We were disappointed by the failure to nominate Butler. He was the strongest Democratic candidate, and Cleveland's nomination will help Blaine.

THE LODGE VS. TOBACCO.—A theological professor, who is a learned and good man, said, "I can never agree with you that the church should disfellowship adhering Masons. I am opposed to the lodge, as I am to tobacco. But I agree with Moody, who, when asked: 'Can a man be a Christian and use tobacco?' replied quick, 'Yes, a dirty one.'" This good professor misses the point. There is a difference between chewing tobacco, and offering tobacco to the devil as the Indians did, to keep him from hurting them; that is devil or Gentile worship, which, once established, separates this globe from God! This is to be disfellowshiped.

"Before the meeting of the Chicago Convention we tried as hard as anybody to induce it to speak in favor of the right of Submission. This, we believed, and still believe, it should have done. But we cannot deny the fact that the Republican party is more friendly to prohibition than the Democratic party, and the question comes up, how can we best serve the cause of prohibition? By defeating the former or the latter. The Prohibitionists have it in their power to do either, but more than this they cannot do."—St. Louis National American.

1. Because he is not even a temperance man, let alone prohibition.

2. Because he is in favor of supporting the States and counties by the liquor-tax, which makes the distillery and brewery and saloon the pillars of the Republic.

3. Because the Republican President Arthur has filled the vaults of the White House with liquor, which Mrs. Hayes had cleaned out. This is the party more friendly to prohibition, which keeps two groggeries in the Capitol.

JAMES BARTLETT HOBBS was nominated at Bloomington, Prohibition candidate for Governor of Illinois, and accepts. He is an eminently respectable business man in Chicago, conscientious and upright, clear of the lodge; and the American party will do well to put him at the head of our State ticket to run against Oglesby and Carter Harrison. The other Prohibition candidates for the State are, Jas. L. Perry for Lieutenant Governor; Chas. W. Enos, Secretary of State: Uriah Copp, who is a leading Good Templar, for State Treasurer; Hale Johnson for Attorney General, and Judge A. B. Irwin for State Auditor. Before our State nominating convention, will our friends give us the record of these gentlemen? Excepting Mr. Hobbs, we do not know enough of them as yet, to say whether they or any of them could properly be taken up by the American party.

DISFELLOWSHIPING MASONS.

A brilliant and talented religious editor says, "I have thought this matter out, and I can never agree to disfellowshiping Masons."

But adhering Masons, after loving labor should and must be disfellowshiped:

1. Because God by Paul commands to disfellowship the Eleusinian Mysteries (Eph. 5: 11), which Mackey (Lexicon, p. 135), calls "Spurious Freemasonry;" and so morally identical, i. e., worship of evil spirits. See also Bishop Warburton's Divine Legation, quoted by Macknight in his work on the Epistles, Eph. chap. 5, and introduction.

2. Because, omitting Christ, Masons have neither Father nor Son; but worship the god of this world, Satan (1 John 2: 23); and must be disfellowshiped. Paul says explicitly, "I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils;" "Ye cannot partake" of the cup and the table of the Lord and of devils. This was spoken of the Eleusinian Mysteries, which were Masonry, spiritual "Spurious Masonry" (Mackey's Lexicon, p. 135). Therefore, adhering Masons must be disfellowshiped.

3. Because Masonry and her whelps have filled the churches with false-brotherhoods, so that the word "Brother," from the pulpit, may mean one of a dozen or more "brotherhoods," that is, has no meaning at all.

4. Because Masonry is a political religion like that which Jeroboam "devised of his own heart" (1 Kings 12: 33), which sunk the Hebrew United States, and will sink ours. Read the whole chapter.

5. Because "Ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation," and Masonry is a fundamental antagonism, destroying Christianity by inserting false worships and government by counterfeit oaths. One of the two must die.

6. Because Masonry is "an unclean," that is, idolatrous "thing," which God commands Christians to "come out" of and not to "touch." Therefore it should be disfellowshiped.

AMERICAN PROHIBITION.

The Pittsburg Prohibition convention meets July 23d. One more Cynosure before that convention meets.

The proof that Dr. R. H. McDonald of San Francisco, will be the lodge candidate for the Presidency before that convention are:

1. That California delegates are instructed for him.

2. That his picture is in the Lever, and under it the following:

"Dr. McDonald was one of the charter members of the first lodge of Masons on the Pacific Coast, and is the only one of the little band whose name is still on the roll."

This is his trump card for the lodge nomination. If the Pittsburg convention nominates a secret sworn confederate with distillers, brewers and saloon-keepers, they will lose the confidence of every honest Prohibitionist who understands the case.

Ferdinand Schumaker, whose money helped Ohio poll 323,183 votes for Constitutional Prohibition, and who made a brave run for Prohibition Governor, though not an Anti-mason, is clean of the lodge. Let the Pittsburg convention nominate St. John and Schumaker, and they will do themselves and their cause honor. But if they nominate an adhering Mason, like McDonald, they will forfeit the approbation of God and man; for the lodge, as such men as Seward have abundantly shown, is the enemy of both.

But if the Pittsburg convention should take their candidate for Vice President from the American party, they will unite the two parties into one, and, by recognizing God, conciliate his favor; and in case the Republicans and Democrats continue evenly divided, the American Prohibition party may dictate the policy of our government during the next four years, and elect their candidate in 1888.

The Fraternal Committee of the American party to the Pittsburg convention will, doubtless, address a letter to that body; not only conveying our greetings and good wishes, but discussing the relations of these two reform parties.

THE AMERICAN PARTY AND THE CATHOLICS.

The Holy Catholic church is not Romanism, or Jesuitism, or popery. It kept our Bible for us, and taught salvation by Christ 1,500 years before Loyola and Jesuitism were born, and Jesuitism, which now rules the church was at first suppressed by the Pope as hostile to religion, as it is.

Prof. Claudio Jannet of the Catholic University of Paris, sends us another book against Masonry, entitled, "Freemasonry and Revolution." The Professor says of the National Christian Association, that "It is distinctly Protestant, even prejudiced against the teachings of the church; yet its good faith and Christian sentiments are not to be doubted."

The Cynosure thanks Prof. Jannet for his courteous Christian compliments.

We add below an article kindly sent us by our English correspondent, Rev. John Boyes, of Grimsby. Our readers will devour it; and we shall return to it. Its analysis and condemnation of the lodge are masterly and Christian. Read it twice over before stopping:

A letter from Cardinal McCabe, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin, published yesterday, relative to the contest for the office of Lord Mayor of Dublin, has more than a local interest. There are two candidates—Mr. John O'Connor, publican and Nationalist, and Mr. James Winstanley, boot manufacturer and Home Ruler, and a Freemason. The Cardinal regrets that the Arran Quay Branch of the Irish National League and Registration Association passed a vote of censure on two gentlemen who voted on a late occasion against a candidate for the civic chair of Dublin because he was an avowed Freemason. His Eminence says: I think these two incriminated members of the Town Council acted in the only way open to conscientious Catholics. The candidate to whom I refer was not opposed on the ground of his religion or his country. It is not the habit with Irish Catholics to make religion or country a test of fitness for public favors. The candidate was challenged as a Freemason. He admitted the challenge, and I cannot comprehend how a Catholic could in conscience or honor help to place him in the office of first magistrate of this Catholic city. The candidate in question may be all his friends describe him, but, on his own admission, he is a member of a confederation which has for its object the destruction of religion and the overthrow even of the civil government, which is not amenable to its behests. France, Belgium, Italy, and other parts of Europe will bear testimony to what I say, and the succession of revolutions which have shaken society for the last century can be easily traced to the agencies of societies which cluster round Masonry, and owe their existence and continued life to the irreligious association. Individuals may tell us that they have no sympathy with such designs, but they are part and parcel of a society which, in its corporate capacity, aims at those ends. There is no intelligent man who can now plead ignorance as his justification, and every one who remains within the ranks of Masonry is responsible to God and society for the acts of a body of which he is a member. With these facts before us, and before the echoes of the Holy Father's warnings have died out, I am utterly unable to understand the conduct of Catholics who would seat on the civic throne of Catholic Dublin an avowed member of this condemned sect. Let us not be accused of bigotry or intolerance. We object, and must object, to the candidate for the Mayoralty of Dublin, not because he is a Protestant or an Englishman, but because he is a member of a confederation which is organized for the unholiest purposes. He may plead "non-participation" in the guilty designs of his confederates. This plea cannot be admitted as long as he remains a brother of the men who govern and direct it.—Lincolnshire Express.

—The Kirchen Blatt of Elmira, Ontario, organ of the Lutheran Synod of Canada, publishes a very full notice of a number of the N. C. A. publications.

—The Chicago Christian Association is arranging for a day's recreation at Bartlett, Ill., for its members, friends, and the children of the Band of Hope under its charge, who some of them sadly need a touch of the life-giving country breeze. The last excursion of this kind, to Wheaton last year, was a very pleasant and profitable time, as well as the year before to Lake Bluff.

—A lawyer of central Tennessee of twenty-nine years practice, and who has been employed on one side or the other of every criminal case of any importance in the courts where he practiced gives this fearful testimony against the lodge influence in the courts: "I have always observed, when the judge and one or two of the jury were Masons with the defendant, that there was no use of a prosecution." His observation for nearly one-third of a century indicates that the lodge influence in the courts is indicative of the worst corruption.

—Rev. C. H. Rawson of Battle Creek, Mich., returned to his field last Tuesday after a short visit with his parents at Wheaton. He attended the American convention and is full of enthusiasm for a political platform that will hold up a Christian man. He believes he can distribute 500 tickets in Michigan most of which will be voted.

—Our hearty thanks are due Bro. L. I. Crawford of the Sandy Lake, Pa., News for his wise admonition to his brother editors who seem wilfully ignorant of the really most important political movement of the day. We hope they may pay good heed to his advice and read the Cynosure carefully for the better understanding of themselves and their readers.

—James Auten, of Galion, Ohio, has attended every National Convention since the American party has had an existence. He is a man of faith, of prayer and of abundant works. Although well stricken in years, he expects to see the anti-lodge movement triumph before he departs. He left Chicago after the late convention, and writes from his home of numerous adventures on his journey. May the Lord bless this faithful, self-denying, hard-working brother with health and strength and courage for the duties of the campaign in which he feels the deepest interest.

—The standing of Prof. S. H. Kellogg of the Presbyterian Theological Seminary at Allegheny, Pa., may be understood from the fact of his refusing to conduct the funeral services of a church member when he understood that the lodge was to have a performance of its ceremonies on the same occasion. He was unwilling to take any part in mingling sacred and profane rites at the same burial. The manful Christian stand of the professor made a deep and lasting impression.

—A brother asks us to inform the Cynosure readers whether the colored secret society, "The United Brothers of Friendship," is like Masonry? We have no means of informing him definitely. It is probably like a score or so other colored secret societies to which both sexes are admitted and are of a beneficiary character. This particular society was founded by Rev. Marshall M. Taylor, lately elected editor of the Methodist organ at Charleston, S. C., the Southern Advocate, by the General Conference. This fact is mentioned by some of the papers as if it were an excellent qualification for the office.

—Rev. J. T. Michael of New Wilmington, Pa., has lately published in tract form his reply to a defence of Freemasonry by Rev. E. F. Crane, Baptist pastor at Oil City, Pa., and reported in the Oil City Derrick. Bro. Michael makes effective use of a few extracts from standard Masonic authorities, and from such men as Finney and Bernard who knew the lodge by experiment and whose word is beyond dispute. This strong document will do good if more widely distributed than in the particular locality. They can be had at the rate of fifty copies for 25 cts.

—A Methodist clergyman of the highest standing in the Rock River, Illinois, Conference, came here from Massachusetts, where he was also prominent in the church and —we must say it—in the Masonic lodge also, having taken thirty-two degrees as we are informed. He was there importuned by Masons, Odd-fellows and other secretists to run for an important office, with the promise of lodge support; but he was already becoming annoyed at their company and in order to get rid of them he came West to start anew. During the Moody meetings in 1876, he was greatly revived in vital piety and was led to see the disagreement between Christ and Masonry. He therefore abandoned the lodge forever and talks freely of its evils with friends, but has not, as we have learned, to spoken publicly on the subject.

—The name of Governor Hoadly of Ohio was presented in the Democratic convention last week as one of the candidates for the Presidential nomination. Before his election as governor last year it was published widely that he was an infidel, but a slip from an Ohio paper (our correspondent does not give the name) says that he is a Unitarian; and, moreover, that he cannot be an infidel, because he is a very high Mason and belongs to a Cincinnati commandery; which is given as proof positive, since a Mason must believe in some kind of a god and a Knight Templar must profess to espouse the cause of the Saviour of mankind. If the writer had known that such alliances are one of the greatest encouragements to infidelity and irreligion to-day he would hardly have referred to them.

—The Wesleyan says editorially that, according to good information, the lately elected Bishop Walden, of the Methodist Episcopal church, is a Mason of thirty-two degrees. This unhappy news Bro. Wardner comments severely upon as it deserves. We have been asked for the evidence that Charles H. Fowler, also elected bishop, was a Freemason. Mr. Fowler was pastor for years in this city, especially of the Centenary church before the advent of the heretical Dr. Thomas. He was also president of Northwestern University at Evanston for a few years before his appointment to the M. E. Mission Board. While pastor here he was published as a Mason in the daily press, and we believe a reference to our files would show that he assisted publicly in Masonic rites. While at Evanston he sustained the secret orders among the students, by whom we have been told that he used privately to recommend them to join. This is Bishop Fowler's record in Chicago. Since he has been in New York we will have the charity to hope that he has left the lodge, but no word has appeared to that effect. We know of other Methodist ministers as able as he, though not so ambitious, who have left the lodge and use their influence, privately at least, against it.

A CORRECTION.

"The Cynosure is spoken of by our good Prof. Kimball as political and not religious."—Cynosure of June 26.

The above is a mistake. I have taken the Cynosure for the past fourteen years, and have invariably recommended it as the best weekly religious paper published in America. A standing advertisement in the Christian Witness, placed there without suggestion from any person connected with the Cynosure, declares that to be "the best RELIGIOUS paper in the land." In commending the Christian Witness, I have stated that it is "less political and more religious than the Cynosure," not meaning thereby to undervalue the political features of the latter, but to explain that the scope of the Witness is somewhat different. We do not deem it advisable to occupy much of our space in purely political discussions. The good in each political party is commended, while evil is disapproved wherever found. With unspeakable love and admiration for the grand old Cynosure, I remain,

Your brother in the Gospel, S. C. KIMBALL.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The first session of the XLVIII. Congress expired at 3 P. M. Monday, July 7th. The following from the Star gives the general impression of its character:

After lying in a comatose state for days, the session finally expires this afternoon. Its record has been anything but glorious, and the best praise even its friends can give it is that it has done no great harm. "Well," said a weeping mourner at a wake, after endeavoring in vain to think of something to eulogize in the departed, "well, he makes a good, quiet corpse."

The session of Saturday continued all night. At 7 A. M. on Sabbath morning they took a recess to 3 P. M., and then continued the session most of the night. When Congress adjourned it was nominally at the close of Saturday's session. There had been no adjournment, only a recess. The President and his Cabinet spent most of the Sabbath at the Capitol reading and signing bills—it is presumed not willingly, as they had no interest in the Chicago Democratic convention which was the occasion of this needless violation of the Divine law. The convention must be attended, but God's law could be trampled on. Two or three years ago when Congress was in session on the Sabbath, that remarkable man, John Whiteford, stood up in the gallery of the House and in the spirit of John the Baptist boldly rebuked them. He was promptly arrested, and since then no one has dared to make more than the mildest protest against this national desecration of the Sabbath. And yet there are some prophets who still plead for the truth. Among them is the National Republican of this morning, which has an excellent editorial on this violation of the Lord's day. "Is Saul among prophets?"

Though not much was accomplished during the session just expired, much was attempted, and much that marks the degeneracy of the times. Among these is the Supplementary Anti-Chinese Bill which has for its object to exclude British subjects of Chinese origin. The act of two years ago excluding Chinese laborers was a wide departure from the fundamental principles of our government. It violated a sacred compact with a friendly nation, and trampled on the sacred rights of humanity. It was all the worse because it was the act of a professedly Christian nation towards the heathen whom we are seeking to convert to our religion. The principles of the Declaration of Independence are the principles of the Gospel as applied to civil government. So far as we have conformed to them we have been eminently prospered as a nation. All our national calamities have come from disregarding them. The long series of Indian wars, the war with Mexico, and the great rebellion with many other afflictions have grown out of our disposition to defraud the Indian and enslave the negro. The hand of a righteous Providence has been in all their national chastisements, and if, in the light of past experience, we oppress either Chinaman or Italians, or suffer them to be oppressed, we surely will not escape continued retribution. "For the Lord your God is a great God, a mighty and a terrible, which regardeth not persons nor taketh reward. He doth execute the judgment of the fatherless and the widow and loveth the stranger. Love ye therefore the stranger." Deut. 10: 17–19.

A STRANGE CO-PARTNERSHIP.

I find the following advertisement in one of the papers conducted by the colored people of this city:

"Subscribe for the Christian Recorder, 631 Pine street, Philadelphia. A great family and religious weekly newspaper. Official organ of the African Methodist Episcopal church, official organ of the Masonic Fraternity, official organ of the I. O. G. T. of the world."

When the conductors of a religious journal, the organ of a great religious denomination, join hands with the Masonic fraternity and unite with them in the support of a common organ, they manifest either profound ignorance of the character of Freemasonry or a moral imbecility most painful to contemplate, and which we would be very slow to attribute to professed Christian brethren. If the conductors of the Recorder know what Masonry is, they know that it teaches religious principles directly the reverse of those taught by the A. M. E. church. If they do not know, they have unconsciously insulted the intelligence of all Christians who are better informed. It requires but the briefest study of standard Masonic authors to discover that Freemasonry teaches that men of all religions—Christians, Jews, Mahommedans, and pagans can and do unite in a professedly acceptable and saving worship from which everything peculiar to any form of religion is to be strictly excluded. The great fact in Christianity that distinguishes it from all other religions, is that Jesus of Nazareth is the Divine Redeemer, the great atoning sacrifice for the sins of man. With this fact left out of Christianity, it is as powerless to bless and save men as were the old heathen philosophies; and Freemasonry omits from its forms of worship all confession of sin, all invocation of the Divine Spirit, and especially all mention of Christ. Nay, more, it cuts out his name from the passages that it quotes in its ritual. The A. M. E. church teaches that "there is no name given under heaven whereby men may be saved" but by the name of Christ, and that no man cometh to the Father but by him.

I desire to call the attention of the editors of the Recorder to the following authorities in Masonry:—Mackey's Masonic Lexicon, pp. 16, 297, 298, 404; Mackey's Ritualist, pp. 22–24, 44, 112–114; Synopsis of a Masonic Law by Rob Morris, P. G. M. of the Grand Lodge of Kentucky, in his edition of Webb's Monitor, pp. 284, 285.

I need not add the undeniable fact, that the oaths, penalties, and ceremonies of Masonry are so shocking to the mind of uncorrupted Christian people that they are generally unwilling to believe it possible that Christian men should engage in them, and it is only because Masonry hides itself behind its own abominations that it is suffered to exist.

But let me call the attention of our brother to the fact which some of the colored people are beginning to recognize, that the secret orders of which Masonry is the fruitful mother, are a greater incubus on the colored people than anything else since the days of slavery. They are robbed of their time, their money, and their religion. Statistics published by Masonic authority show that not more than fifteen per cent. of the money paid into the treasury of the lodge ever goes out for charity, but is consumed in running expenses. A poor people cannot endure this, and considered simply as a financial question, it has become abundantly evident that the colored people cannot support both their secret societies and their churches, and that the churches must destroy the orders or be destroyed by them.

In conclusion, we would kindly admonish our brother that God's Word condemns most pointedly, both the union in which he is joined and the advice that he incidentally gives,—"Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers, for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate." 2 Cor. 6: 14–17. Also, "Woe unto them that call evil good and good evil, that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter." Isa. 5: 20. I trust that our brother has sinned through ignorance, and that he would not willingly mislead, but if so it was a most serious error and does not do away with the "woe" which the prophet promises. LITERATURE.

Mill was one of the profoundest thinkers of the century, although he did not always think rightly. His theories of political economy are shaken by later philosophers, but this dissertation on Liberty, with its divisions: "the liberty of thought and action," "individuality as one of the elements of well being," and "the limits of society over the individual," is one of the most valuable of his treatises. Mr. Alden presents it to the public in a charming little volume that tempts the reader even in this summer weather.

FIVE YEARS OF FAITH WORK IN INDIA, or a Brief History of the Telugu Faith Mission, Nizam's Dominions, by C. B. Ward.

The author of this little volume of some 250 pages, entered the missionary work in India, we believe, under William Taylor. His correspondence in the Cynosure has been read with profound interest, and the literature sent him by the N. C. A. for distribution among the missionaries of India and Ceylon was placed in good hands. The Telugu mission is sustained, like George Muller's orphanages at Bristol, England, on the faith plan. Bro. Ward tells the story of a truly remarkable work, and no one can read the sketch without rejoicing in the triumphs of faith and being himself quickened in zeal for the cause of Christ. We shall give the readers of the Cynosure some valuable extracts, and hope their interest will be aroused to assist in supporting so noble a mission. Bro. Ward may be addressed at Secunderabad, India. Send him a contribution and get this book.

Choice Literature for July is also a strong number. "The Unknown and the Unknowable," "Contemporary Life and Thought in Switzerland," "The Sins of Legislators," "Forgotten Bibles," "Dr. Arnold of Rugby," "Travelling in Norway," "The Religious Question in France," "International Rivalries in Central Asia," are among the subjects that first attract attention. This collection from the best magazines of England is a treasury of literature within reach of every one.

In addition to the regular monthly issues of his magazine the publisher of Choice Literature, John B. Alden, New York, is issued an extra which brings to hand beautifully printed such a collection of magazine articles as would fill two or three ordinary 12mo. volumes. Few are able to enjoy the luxury of English magazine literature but here they have it for a trifling sum.

THE HOME.

SUMMER WIND.

It is a sultry day; the sun has drunk
The dew that lay upon the mountain grass.
There is no rustling in the lofty elm
That canopies my dwelling, and its shade
Scarce cools me. All is silent, save the faint
And interrupted murmur of the bee,
Settling on the sick flowers, and then again
Instantly on the wing. The plants around
Feel the too potent fervors: the tall maize
Rolls up its long, green leaves; the clover droops
Its tender foliage, and declines its blooms.
But far in the fierce sunshine tower the hills,
With their growth of woods, silent and stern,
As if the scorching heat and dazzling light
Were but an element they loved. Bright clouds,
Motionless pillars of the brazen heaven—
Their bases on the mountains—their white tops
Shining in the far ether—fire the air
With a reflected radiance, and make turn
The gazer's eye away. For me, I lie
Languidly in the shade, where the thick turf,
Yet virgin from the kisses of the sun,
Retains some freshness, and I woo the wind
That still delays his coming. Why so slow,
Gentle and voluble spirit of the air?
O, come and breathe upon this fainting earth
Coolness and life. Is it that in his cares
He leaves me? See, on yonder woody ridge,
The pine is bending his tall top, and now
Among the nearer groves, chestnut and oak
Are tossing their green boughs about. He comes;
Lo, where the grassy meadow runs in waves!
The deep, distressful silence of the scene
Breaks up with mingling of unnumbered sounds
And universal motion. He is come,
Shaking a shower of blossoms from the shrubs,
And bearing on their fragrance; and he brings
Music of birds, and rustling of young boughs,
And sound of swinging branches, and the voice
Of distant waterfalls. All the green herbs
Are stirring in his breath; a thousand flowers,
By the roadside and borders of the brook,
Nod gaily to each other; glossy leaves
Are twinkling in the sun, as if the dew
Were on them yet, and silver waters break
Into small waves, and sparkle as he comes.

GOD'S WAYS NOT AS OUR WAYS.

What a weary day it had been to Mrs. Miller: how the head ached, and the feet ached, and worse than all the rest, the heart ached.

"Not that I have anything I ought to complain of," she thought to herself as she rapidly pared some apples for sauce; "but I am anything but a happy woman, and I did think, if I married John, and we came off here to live by ourselves, that I would never care to go anywhere or see anybody, just to be with him, and have an easy time doing work for just our two selves, and may be a hired hand the most of the time."

A sudden cackling among the hens, and screaming of the chickens caused her to set the saucepan of apples down on the hearth, and rush out into the yard to find two mother hens fighting over the coop which both wanted for her own family for the night; one of these was quickly shut in, and the other left to console herself for her disappointment as best she might, in any one of the dozen empty coops close by; and Mrs. Miller was back again pouring water on the apples ready to cook.

"Just a half an hour and John and the men will be here; it does seem to me I cannot get supper to-night, there are just forty things to do all at once. I do think John might let me have a girl to help me;" and Mrs. Miller sat down, put both hands up to her face and burst out crying as hard as she could.

Two minutes may be she cried thus, then remembering how much must be done, sprang up, washed a couple dozen potatoes and put in the oven, soliloquizing as she did so, "Biscuit or gems? John thinks he must have one or the other," and then commenced making the first.

Swiftly moved her hands, there seemed not a motion lost, and soon a large pan, and a small one were filled with cakes ready for baking.

She went in the dining room to set the table; and stepped a moment into a room opening out of it to glance at herself in the glass. "Don't look as if I had been crying, I guess, but I feel as if I should cry again in a moment. I do hope John will be," she was going to say, "good-natured," but she didn't, a voice at the kitchen door called out, "Hettie, is supper ready?"

"It can be in ten minutes, John," with a glance at the glowing fire, and the steaming kettle; "will that be too soon?"

"No; say Het, I want to go to town to-night, will you do the milking? fact is I've got to get one of the plows mended before I can work with it in the morning." John Miller did not seem to be looking at his wife, if he was he saw a face grow suddenly white, he surely heard a low voice saying:

"Don't go John, you can't get Williams to do the work to-night, and you will have to take another trip in the morning if you do go. I'll milk, or do anything if you'll stay at home with me to-night; won't you, John?"

"Het, you are getting to be an awful baby, to want some one home with you every night; hurry up the supper I must go to town, I tell you," and he walked away to the barn quite fast.

Mrs. Miller took the large pan of biscuit, put them in the oven; took off the apple sauce and dished it for the table, made the tea, poached a large platter of eggs, set the chairs to the table which at intervals she had been setting, then rang a little sweet toned bell.

In response to its call, five men came in, all hungry, all tired, and all evidently out of sorts about something; they ate moodily, scarce a word passing between them; Mr. Miller finished first, got up, and without a word, started out of the kitchen door.

"Are you going to town to-night, John?" with accent on the are; as she hastily followed him, hearing as she passed out through the kitchen, one of the men say, "going to the devil, more like;" this only served to make the face still whiter, and to make her knees seem weaker; some way she felt scarcely strength enough to walk a step, as John hurried on without even looking round.

She looked after him, such a strained hopeless look in her face; the men noticed it as they went out; one turned back hesitatingly: "Mrs. Miller, can I do anything for you? I would like to if I can."

She started at his voice, and seemed trying to think. "Yes, Andrew, you can milk if you will. I —I—well, I am very tired to-night, but no doubt you are too; never mind the milking, I can manage it, I guess."

"The milking is nothing for me to do, and a good deal for you, with all else you have to do. Mrs. Miller," hesitatingly again, "can't you keep him," with a nod of the head toward her husband, "from going to town to-night? he ought not to go to-night, can't you stop him? go and try."

She did try, but he would neither listen to her, nor look at her, scarcely answering her pleadings, and rode away.

She went in, through the kitchen, dining room, and thence up stairs into her spare room; she turned the key in the lock, and knelt down in the middle of the floor and lifted two great dry eyes toward the ceiling.

"Oh, my God! when thy children in the wilderness turned from their evil ways then thou didst turn to them; see me now, I would turn to thee too; teach me what to do! I am almost beside myself to-night; with weary night watchings, with days full of labor beyond my strength, with the carrying about of a sorrow that is breaking my heart; with the reaping of what I myself have sown; I 'sowed the wind, I am reaping the whirlwind;' I disobeyed thee; I heeded not the teachings of thy word, I took to myself an idol, and loved it more than I loved thee; I took for my husband one who did not love thee; I hoped, through my poor human love, and human wisdom to win him to thee. I dared 'do evil that good might come:' I see my sin, I confess it here to-night before thee; forgive me, oh, forgive me! and show me how to win my husband from his intemperance, oh spare him from the drunkard's doom; help me from this moment to walk in thy laws and to have respect unto all thy commandments; help me to patiently bear the yoke to which I have so willfully bowed my neck, and to be in all points the faithful, forbearing, loving wife that thou wouldst have me be. Show me thy will concerning this matter, and save, oh, save my husband! Show me what I can do, if anything, to turn him from the destruction that yawns before him; pity my bodily weakness to-night, and make me strong to do anything to save my husband's soul."

Mrs. Miller ceased her prayer, there was a pounding on the door below, she rose from her knees and went down stairs mechanically; at the door stood one of her neighbors with a very scared look on his face, she did not notice it however, her mind was with John, and in fancy she could see him at the little town asking for a drink of liquor just now.

"Mrs. Miller"—began the neighbor, and hesitated—

Mrs. Miller came back from her husband to listen —she thought the man asked for him.

"My husband has gone to the town, must be there by this time, I think; anything I can do for you, Mr. Goodman?"

"Mr. Miller"—again began the man; now she saw a strange look in the man's face, something that awakened pity as well as interest and she waited expectantly.

"Mr. Miller is at my house; something has happened, we don't know what, do you think you could go over with me?"

"Happened? do you mean accident to John?" she spoke so quietly and softly he thought she couldn't have understood.

"Yes'm, an accident, perhaps "—another hesitancy, "perhaps he's only stunned."

Mrs. Miller took her sunbonnet from the nail and stepped along beside Mr. Goodman, very slowly she walked; he wondered at it, and more that she asked no questions. Mrs. Miller was asking God to grant her strength to bear to have her prayers answered in God's way instead of her own. She had only thought of one way, now it occurred to her mind that God might have other than that way of hers.

Mr. Goodman was their second neighbor, and soon she found herself at his gate with both of his wife's hands clasping one of hers and she was saying to her, "Really, I am afraid the doctor will be no use, he don't seem to breathe nor anything yet."

Was it all a dream? the worry of the whole day, the anxiety of the early evening, the prayer in the spare chamber; then the fright following close on that? No! it was not a dream; she had entered the house and there on a wide home-made lounge drawn into the middle of the floor lay John Miller as one dead.

She knelt down beside him and put her face close to his white cheek, it was warm; she unbuttoned his shirt and laid her hand over his heart, surely it throbbed; "John, dear John, do speak to me." There was a preceptible quiver of his lips, but no sound, she put her mouth to his ear, "John, do speak to me; can't we turn you so you will get over this faint?" then to those standing by—"Bring me some water, it is a faint, I'm sure it is only a faint, he fainted easily when a boy, I've heard his mother say so."

The water came, she bathed his face, she poured a few drops into his mouth, all the time talking to him. "John, do speak to your Hettie, and tell me where you are hurt!" There was a half gasp —she showered water on his face and head, put more in his mouth; he sighed such a long sigh; then it seemed as if there was no breath left, after a little another sigh, then a breath, another, and the eyes opened wide, the lips moved again as if to speak— and the doctor came: without a word he poured a drop of something on Mr. Miller's tongue, and told him to swallow it, he evidently tried to obey; then the doctor held a bottle to his nostrils, soon he drew another sigh, a moment after he swallowed; then another drop was poured upon his tongue, he swallowed that also—breathing became more regular; pretty soon Mrs. Miller spoke again,

"John, you are better now?"

A little nod of the head, presently he opened his eyes again and looked at her, such a loving look, other eyes than hers caught the expression; so hungrily he kept his eyes on her face, trying to speak; she bent over him.

"Don't talk John, you'll soon be better, then tell me all about it," but he tried all the same, never moving his eyes from her face.

"Don't try to talk, my boy," said the doctor, "wait a little and you may see her home," jesting as most doctors do jest in the most anxious moments.

But he heeded not, and at length the words came, "Hettie, my girl, I was coming back, I couldn't forget your face. I promised God I'd never taste another drop of liquor—while I lived—if he'd forgive me, do you think he will?"

"He has John, has already, if you repented."

"I wish I could prove my repentance to you, Hettie, but—I'm—afraid—God don't—dare—to—trust—me."

It was so hard for him to talk that the doctor rose and forbade him to speak another word. More medicine was administered and when he again grew quiet the doctor inquired where he seemed to suffer most?

"I don't—suffer—only for breath," he made out to answer, then in a moment, by motion of head and hand he signified a desire to be raised up. The doctor passed his arm beneath his shoulders and raised him a little; he threw up his arms toward his wife with the look of intense love, sank back on the pillow, breathed a few times and then "the breath returned to God who gave it." Mrs. Miller had caught her husband's hands in her own at the time he had thrown them up toward her, and still held them until the doctor gently loosened her grasp and straightened the arms down by her husband's side.

Then she began to realize that her prayer was answered, her husband saved but not to her for this life; that she must now take up her life alone, without that love which had three years before been more to her than all else—without him who was even yet dearer than her own life.

"How can I?" queried the sore heart. "My grace is sufficient for thee," suggested the Comforter; "I had my way three years ago and what but sorrow and shame came of my way? My way now would have been a reformed long life for my husband, happiness for us both,"—"My ways are not as thy ways" again whispers the Comforter. "Could it be as John said, that 'God did not dare to trust him to prove his repentance?'" and as her mind pictured him fallen again into the sin of intemperance her whole soul shrank from the sight—and the Comforter whispered, "The Lord redeemeth the soul of his servants; and none of them that trust in him shall be desolate," and her heart replied, "Though he slay me yet will I trust in him," and her neighbors wondered at her calm grief, and whispered to each other, "Poor thing, he drank himself into the grave, you see; life was but a bitter cup for her you know, at best, if he had lived; perhaps she will be happier without him than she was with him." God only knew how the broken-hearted woman went home from the grave, to shut herself once more in the spare chamber where with God and angels for witnesses she consecrated herself anew to the service of her Master; going out from it soothed and comforted as only one is comforted by communion with him who giveth "a peace that passeth all understanding."

Mrs. Miller has grown old in her work for Christ, and sometimes when she sees some young woman about to lose her heart to one who "looks upon the wine when it is red" she tells them the sad story of her three years of married life and its ending.—Sabbath Recorder.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

LITTLE FEET.

Blessings upon them, the dear little feet,
That patter and patter the whole day long
Through alley and lane and busy street,
Never pausing to ask, "Is it right or wrong?"

Straying, it may be, far out of the way;
Wandering from home like a bird from its nest,
Till a soft voice calls, at the close of the day,
"My children, 'tis evening; come home and rest!"

God's pity be over the dear little feet,
And guard them from seeking the paths of sin
Till they near the gates of the golden street,
And the Father calls His children in.

HOW THE GREAT STATUE WAS MADE.

Charles Barnard has contributed to the July St. Nicholas a very graphic and popular account of Bartholdi's great Statue of Liberty, from which we make the following extract: "In the first place, there had to be a sketch or model. This was a figure of the statue in clay, to give an idea of how it would look. The public approved of this model, and then the first real study of the work was made—a plaster statue, just one-sixteenth the size of the intended statue.

"The next step was to make another model just four times as large, or one-fourth the size of the real statue. This quarter-size model being finished, then came the task of making the full-size model in plaster. But this had to be made in sections. For instance, the first section would include the base on which the figure stood, the feet, and the hem of the garment. The next section would include a circle quite round the long flowing dress, just above the hem. The third section would stand above this and show more of the folds of the dress, and reach part way up to the knee. In like manner the whole figure would be divided into sections.

"The quarter-size model was first divided in this way, and then to lay out the full-size plan it was only necessary to make a plan of each section four times as large as the section actually was in the model. Every part of the model was covered with marks or dots for guides, and by measuring from dot to dot, increasing the measurement four times, and then transferring it to the larger model, an exact copy just four times as large was made. For each of these large sections, however, there had to be a support of some kind, before the plaster could be laid on. Having marked on the floor an outline plan of the enlarged section, a wooden frame-work was built up inside the plan. Then upon this frame-work plaster was roughly spread. It soon resembled, in a rude way, the corresponding section of the quarter-size model, but was four times as large. Then the workmen copied in this pile of plaster every feature of the model section, measuring and measuring, again and again, from dot to dot, correcting by means of plumb-lines, and patiently trying and retrying till an exact copy—only in proportions four times as large—was attained.

"The great irregularity of the drapery made it necessary to put three hundred marks on each section, besides twelve hundred smaller guide-marks, in order to insure an exact correspondence in proportion between the enlarged sections of the full-size model and the sections of the quarter-size model. Each of these marks, moreover, had to be measured three times on both models, and after that came all the remeasurements, to prove that not a single mistake had been made.

"When these sections in plaster had been completed, then came the work of making wooden molds that should be exact copies both in size and modeling of the plaster. These were all carefully made by hand. It was long, tedious and difficult. Each piece was a mold of a part of the statue, exactly fitting every projection, depression, and curve of that portion of the figure or drapery. Into these wooden molds sheets of metal were laid, and pressed or beaten down till they fitted the irregular surfaces of the molds. All the repousse, or hammered work, was done from the back, or inside, of the sheet. If the mold is an exact copy of a part of the statue, it is easy to see that the sheet of metal, when made to fit it, will, when taken out and turned over, be a copy of that part of the statue.

"These sheets were of copper, and each was from one to three yards square. Each formed a part of the bronze statue, and of course no two were alike.

"In this complicated manner, by making first a sketch, then a quarter-size model, then a full-size model in sections, then hundreds of wooden copies, and lastly by beating into shape three hundred sheets of copper, the enormous statue was finished. These three hundred bent and hammered plates, weighing in all eighty-eight tons, form the outside of the statue. They are very thin, and while they fit each other perfectly, it is quite plain that if they were put together in their proper order they would never stand alone. These hammered sheets make the outside of the statue; but there must be also a skeleton, a bony structure inside, to hold it together. This is of iron beams, firmly riveted together, and making a support to which the copper shell can be fastened."

DIME NOVELS.

A TRUE INCIDENT.

Willard and Fred Warren had been reading "dime novels" for some time "upon the sly," as they expressed it. Just how they began in such an evil practice I do not know, but undoubtedly in the same way that many other boys begin to do wrong. Their Christian parents never dreamed for a long time that the boys were doing this and thus trying to deceive them. They were careful to provide their children with suitable reading, and many bright, beautiful books were presented to them, but the boys' taste for reading had been corrupted and they did not care for the fine presents in the form of books. The "dime novels" with their false and unholy teachings were leading the boys far away from the path of right and obedience. The blinded boys were injuring themselves far more than they supposed.

Willard and Fred could not always read such books "upon the sly," and at last it was revealed to the parents just what the boys had been doing. They were greatly surprised and deeply grieved, and they entreated the boys to cast such books aside and never look upon them again. Fred, the youngest boy, was moved at the grief of his parents and promised to heed their advice, but Willard, who was nearly four years older, thought that he was able to judge for himself what kind of books to read, and so he made no promise. Fred regained the confidence of his parents, but Willard only grew more disobedient. He would not remain at home the long winter evenings because he was not allowed to read his vile books in the family circle. Soon he left home for good, and became very reckless and wayward. The parents were almost heart-broken, and could only weep and pray. At last he went away, and no one knew just where he had gone. News came after awhile that he was in a western jail, but no one knew whether it was true or not.

Two years passed away, and the parents received a letter from him just before he died in want and degradation. He confessed his folly, and acknowledged that he was led to his life of shame by reading dime novels. He asked to be forgiven, and expressed a hope that God had also forgiven him. Another letter followed this, from another, saying that Willard was dead and buried far away from his friends and kindred.

This is only one of the thousands that are led yearly to ruin by reading dime novels.—Selected.

UNCLE SAM'S DISTILLERIES.

Much has been said and written about the Government's sanction of the liquor traffic, but few are aware that the U. S. Government at Washington actually conducts the entire business of distilling, while the men in whose names it is carried on are but Government agents or employes—its hired workmen. But few are informed as to what a strong, tight grip the Government has on the business, and what miserable bond servants the (nominal) distillers are. About three years ago it was my privilege to be shown through one of the large distilleries in "the Peoria district," by a friend of mine, employed as one of the Government "watch dogs," to keep the rascally distillers from stealing its whisky, and cheating it out of its revenues. Rascals, did I say? Perhaps I ought not to say that; for when I entered the office of the distillery with my friend, he introduced me to the (nominal) proprietor as brother So and So; a member of the———church, at the same time remarking that several of the men employed were members of the same church. "Yes," said the distiller, with a smile of satisfaction, "nearly all of these gin mills are owned by members of the———church."

But now to my story: As my friend showed me through the mill he gave me a statement of the facts I am now about to relate. To begin with, when one determines to engage in whisky-making, the first thing to be done is to cause a plan and draught of the proposed building and premises to be made, showing the exact location, size, form and fashion of everything—mill, store-house, office, hopper, tub, engine, pipe, worm, etc., etc. This draught is then sent to Washington for the inspection of the boss distiller, "Uncle Sam." If approved, a permit is granted to build the distillery. If not approved, it is returned, with directions and specifications as to how "big boss" wants them fixed. At length, when all things are ready for business, our dear old "Uncle" kindly furnishes a book-keeper, a store-keeper, a gauger, and as many more helpers as may be necessary to "hold the fort." When they arrive they take possession. The keys are placed in their hands. Every door, and bin and hopper is locked, and not a bushel of grain can be ground until the appointed Peter chooses to turn the key. When the liquor is barreled and gauged, it is placed in the warehouse and locked up. Inside of this warehouse neither the sub-proprietor nor any of his men dare set foot, without the permission and company of the store-keeper. He dare not, and will not, leave any one alone in the building. Not a barrel can be removed for any purpose whatever without his permission. (Blessed liberty!) How free and independent these liquor men are! They don't believe in having their liberties taken from them by "temperance fanatics."

In the distillery, where the "pure juice," after passing through the worm, issues from its confinement to start on its mission of death, the aperture whence it issues, and the receiving vessel, are enclosed in a glass case so tightly that a rye straw can not be inserted to taste and test its quality. The owner (?) of the concern may stand and gaze at it, as it trickles down into the receiver, and estimate its value—like Judas Iscariot, when he watched the ointment dropping from Mary's albaster box on the Saviour's head—but he cannot draw off a single gill of it, even to give to the poor. (Delightful liberty! No wonder they don't like "fanatics.")

These Government agents, or detectives are never absent. Some of them are always at the distillery, on guard, week days and Sundays, night and day, year in and year out. Yet, with all this vigilance and surveillance, these dear brethren of the———church manage, now and then, to dodge the detectives, and appropriate some of our whisky. (We are the Government.) This they do by various devices; such as covering up a full barrel among the empty ones; inserting a false stave into a tub, so as to enlarge it, after it has been gauged, etc.

Lest the sweet bond of friendship should grow too strong between the Government officials and the proprietors, they are changed, or shifted to other distilleries, about every two months. In this, the Government thinks with the old Quaker: "Thee may be very honest, but it's no harm to watch thee." And this, notwithstanding these agents are the very best men they can find.

At the time above mentioned whisky was selling at $1.05 to $1.10 per gallon. The Government's share of this was 90 cents, and the division of profits is not much different to-day. Besides all this, for every bushel of grain that is put into the hopper the Government must have a certain number of gallons of whisky (I do not now remember the exact amount). In other words every bushel of grain is expected to yield so much. If it falls short, the shortage is charged to fraud, and the distiller must make it good. But if it overruns the estimate, it inures to the benefit of both parties.

And now in view of all these facts, it is pertinent to ask: Who conducts the distilling business in these United States? Who is the boss distiller? Who gives to the business an air of respectability? Who "strengthens the hands of the wicked, that he should not depart from his wicked ways"?

"Well, what are we going to do about it? How else can the whisky tax be collected? Unless we keep them in chains, the distillers will cheat us out of nine-tenths of the tax. Shall we remit the tax, and let them go scot free, while honest men, who follow legitimate occupations, support the Government?" No, by no means. "What then?" Why, abolish the business, and the tax along with it. Then both the Government and the people will be immeasurably better off than they are now. If the people are ready for that, well; if not, we must bear the burden and the disgrace a little longer; and the United States Government must wear the unenviable reputation of the biggest distiller in the world.—Liberal Economist.

BEER AND LIFE INSURANCE.

Life insurance is a business, and is run, not on sentiment or religion, but on business principles. But life insurance men find that they cannot afford to insure beer-drinkers at the same rates as abstainers. Says Col. Green, President of the Connecticut Mutual Company:

"In one of our largest cities, containing a great population of beer-drinkers, I had occasion to note the deaths among a large group of persons whose habits, in their own eyes and in those of their physicians and friends were temperate; but they were habitual users of beer. When I began they were, on an average, something under middle age; and they were of course selected lives. For two or three years nothing remarkable was to be noted But presently death began to strike down the group, until it had dwindled to a fraction; the mortality was astounding in extent, and still more remarkable in the manifest identity of cause and mode.

"There was no mistaking; the history was almost invariable—robust, apparent health, full muscles, fair outside, increasing weight; then a touch of cold, or a sniff of malaria, and instantly some acute disease, with almost invariably typhoid symptoms was in violent action, and ten days or less ended life. It was as if the system within was eaten to a shell, and at the touch of disease there was utter collapse, every fibre being poisoned and weak. This, in its main features, has been my observation of beer-drinking everywhere—peculiarly deceptive at first, thoroughly destructive at last."—Safeguard.

THE CHURCHES.

—Mr. Moody, the evangelist, sailed from England for this country last Saturday.

—C. W. Hiatt, of Oberlin Seminary, and M. Elliott, Jr., of Wheaton Seminary are attending the Hebrew School at Morgan Park Theological Seminary for a few weeks.

—Rev. W. H. Key, a colored clergyman of Tennessee, made the bricks that were used in the construction of his church.

—Rev. Justin D. Fulton, of New York, was married to Mrs. Laura K. Whipple, Monday. Mrs. Whipple has for three years assisted Dr. Fulton in his missionary labors in that city and Brooklyn.

—Rev. P. B. Williams has been greatly blessed in the work under his charge in Indianapolis during the past year. Since his revival meetings closed, over fifty persons have been received into his church.

—At the Free Methodist camp meeting to be held near Fairbury, Ill., on the 24th inst., president J. Travis, and secretary C. B. Ebey have called a meeting of the General Missionary Board of the Free Methodist church. This Board sustains two or three missionaries in India.

—The North western Association of Seventh-Day Baptist churches met in Walworth, Wis., June 26th. Four new churches were received into fellowship, and one or two others were reported as having organized during the year previous.

—Rev. Edward Ebbs, pastor of one of the Aurora churches at the time of the first Anti-masonic convention of 1867, a man of fine talent, and sincere sympathy for Christian reform, died June 24th, at Toronto, Canada, after an illness of but three days.

—Rev. C. O. Brown, of Kalamazoo, Mich., son of Dea. O. M. Brown of Oberlin Faith Mission, has returned from his trip through Colorado and New Mexico. He visited the wonderful ruins of the cliff-dwellers, spent some time among the Pueblo Indians of San Ildefonse, descendants of the Aztecs, and visited Senator Dorsey's great ranch. A large audience was much interested in his lecture describing these places.

—Rev. Edward Anderson left the Quincy, Illinois, Congregational church a year or two since almost bankrupt in respect to doctrine. He openly advocated the lodge there and read a paper in favor of Masonry before the Illinois Congregational Association at Princeton. He is now in Columbus, Ohio, where he has been lately made "commander" of a Grand Army of the Republic lodge.

—The State Camp Meeting of the Michigan Holiness Association will be held in Grand Rapids, August 1st to 10th. Permits for reduced rates on the railroads and other particulars respecting the meeting can be had by writing to Rev. S. B. Shaw, president of the Association, at Grand Rapids. "No gate fee. No huckstering. No sympathy with secrecy or any other popular sin. Let holiness people—regardless of denomination—come together in a spirit of burning love for precious souls.

—The following figures are taken from the Congregational Year Book for 1884: Whole number of Congregational churches, 4,016; whole number of Congregational ministers, 3,796. The churches report 396,246 members. Last year there were 28,377 additions, 14,862 by confession, and 19,362 removals, of whom 6,270 were by death and 1,724 by discipline. There were reported 11,740 baptisms, of which 5,366 were of infants. Of the only 3,077 churches reporting there were $2,638,619.80 given to Christian benevolence. And of the only 2,616 reporting, $3,943,227.80 went for home expenditures. There appears, on the whole, a net gain of 78 churches, 8,627 church members, 12,559 in Sabbath-schools, $1,254,933.90 in benevolent contributions, and $1,009,199.96 in home expenditures.

—The erection of the statue of Luther in Washington city more than anything else seems to have moved a number of Presbyterians to make an effort to erect a statue to John Calvin. They propose to place it in the national capital, and their General Assembly has appointed a committee to carry out the project. It will be the first statue of Calvin in America.

—The Christian church on Paca street, Baltimore, has got into a strange trouble. On a recent Sunday, one saw Elder Thomas Smith, while taking collections, put a dollar bill in his pocket. His enemies accused him of stealing it. He denied it, stating that it was a note he had changed for a lady. The explanation was not accepted, and he was, after a short trial, expelled from the church. The shock has made Mr. Smith's invalid wife dangerously ill. By persistent advertising, the lady who gave the note to Mr. Smith to change has been discovered, and has cleared the elder. The latter is now going to sue the congregation for slander.

—The New York Christian Advocate recently copied from a London paper the statement, that of twenty infidel lecturers and writers sixteen had professed faith in Christ. The editor of an infidel paper addressed a note to the Advocate, asserting that "if the story is not absolutely without foundation, it is so nearly so as to come under the stereotyped heading, 'Christian Falsehoods,'" and a retraction of the report was urged. The editor of the Advocate took the trouble to carefully and thoroughly investigate the facts, and finds the original statement verified by them. Some of the men whose names are given were once as widely known for their blasphemy and boldness as the most noted infidel of the times.—United Presbyterian.

—Letters in the June number of the Missionary Herald, describing the revival at Kioto, Japan, are of thrilling interest. One striking feature is the zeal with which the Bible is read, nearly all of the worshipers carrying a copy of the Scriptures to the preaching services. In Bari thirty-six have been received into the church. At a week-day preaching service in that town the missionaries had "a silent, sympathetic, and appreciative audience" of fully two thousand persons.

—The Danish-American Missionary Society, at Copenhagen, has sent this spring five young ministers of the Gospel to Danish congregations in the United States.

—The Jewish Committee of the Free Church of Scotland will begin a mission on the sea of Galilee. Tiberias is the point selected.

—The Indian census shows that the native Christians are increasing fifteen times as fast as the general population.

—The Methodists in the Fiji Islands are now sending out men and means for the conversion of remaining heathen to New Guinea.

—Funds amounting to $85,000 have been contributed toward the erection of a German Evangelical church in Jerusalem.

—The "Twelve Apostles' Church" is a fair example of the large parishes in Berlin. Forty thousand souls belong nominally to it, the church itself cannot seat more than 1,000 persons. The three pastors performed last year 240 marriages, 1,273 baptisms, 412 funerals, instructed 444 catechumens in 24 sessions and administered the sacrament to 5,891 communicants. In order to meet the wants of the people, Sunday services are held at 8, 9, 12 and 6 o'clock, and there are two or three Bible lectures on week days.

THE REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN SYNOD, meeting at Northwood, Ohio, has given the world some of the strongest testimonies against the secret lodge system of the year. The report of the committee on the "Signs of the Times" says:

"The progress of the truth maintained by the church.

"When she speaks boldly against sin, the effect of her utterances is felt and seen. Though waves of sensuality and indulgence roll on and engulf many, the cause of temperance advances—three States, Kansas, Maine and Iowa have advanced to the high, the only right ground, that of total prohibition; the cause also makes marked progress in Ohio and neighboring States, and also in North Carolina, Georgia and other Southern States.

"Freemasonry with its multitudinous offspring of secret fraternities, is often so turned inside out that the loathsomeness of the whole system with the deeds they do in the dark is often sensibly realized.

"National atheism and irreligion frequently meets and evidently feels the well merited and wisely aimed shafts of truth, and we rejoice that God's truth does not seem wholly to have lost its power even in the legislation of our national Congress.

"We hail with joy the faint hope to which recent legislation gives rise that international disputes will ere long be settled by arbitration rather than by arms; and that the liquor traffic will not always pass unrebuked by the nation.

"The law of the Sabbath is not advocated wholly in vain: in some instances even railroad officials, partly from business considerations, are ready to advocate respect for a rest of one day in seven. The evangelizing and saving power of the Gospel truth continues to be felt throughout our own, and in foreign countries."

Another report has this paragraph:

"Great efforts are made in the work of national reform and anti-secrecy.

"Much effort is put forth and much money freely given to carry forward these reforms. True, it is objected, that there is much fruitless, abortive effort put forth in both these fields of labor and that they are hobbies that men ride; it is true, that in laboring to do a great work not heretofore tried, mistakes may be made and much work done not seemingly successful. It is also true, that some are always ready to ride hobbies, especially if at first bridled and mounted by some one else, but it cannot be questioned that the Holy Spirit so powerfully possesses the souls of many that they hail with joy those lawful efforts put forth for the enthronement of Christ, and his investiture with those honors to which he and his law are entitled in both social and national life."

WEST AFRICAN LODGERY.

J. M. Lesher, missionary of the United Brethren at Shengay near Sierra Leone, West Africa, tells of a late experience with the secret societies among the natives in a letter to the Telescope. Rev. D. K. Flickinger tells more particularly of these lodges in his little work on West African Missions. Rev. H. H. Hinman also has described them in these columns. These African societies are more honest than their kindred in this country, in which the devil worship is concealed with a specious garb of Christian principles stolen for the occasion. The United Brethren should be as harmonious in their war upon the devil in this country as in Africa until it can be proved that in Africa he is another being than with us. Mr. Lesher writes:

May 12th at 3: A. M. we boarded the Mary Gomer for Avery, with orders to stop at Mando to examine the new house. I took John French, one of the mission boys, and a blacksmith by trade, with me to do some work for Bro. Evans. At 11 A. M. we landed at the Mando wharf (but mud beach is a more proper name), one half mile from the town, Mando, and one mile from the mission house. The ebb tide had just begun, and prevented us from going up the river to the mission wharf. I told the captain to keep the boat from going to ground; that we would return in forty minutes. Three men carried me to shore, and John came wading through the mud and water. Two men accompanied me through the swamps, and when necessary carried me over the mud-puddles. When we reached more elevated ground the men turned back. I told them to hurry John up, and I kept pressing on. Hearing a loud voice ahead I soon met two men sitting on a long country drum, and said to them, "How do?" They told me to wait, that the devil was in town. I frankly told them that I was not afraid of the devil. Just then one of the men came running back (no doubt he had heard the voice) to warn me from going into town. He felt sure the devil would catch me if I would enter the town. His plea had no effect upon me. Coming close to the town I found all the houses closed and the people housed within. A Sierra Leone woman opened her door and asked me to come in. I thanked her kindly, and asked the way to the mission house. The woman got terribly in earnest, and began to pull her nose, meaning to say that if I would not come in the devil (or his medicine) would eat off my nose. I told her my trust was in God. "Yes, I trust God for true, but not the Thomah Devil," was her reply. Just then John came along. I asked him what we would better do. He thought we would better stop in or we might cause a palaver. I proposed to go around the west side of town through the bush. "Eh; that's Purrow. Purrow Devil will swallow you." "How about the east side?" "Eh, that's Thomah bush; belongs to the devil." You hear crying now. At last we had to enter the house; and I just thought, Nobody knows what trouble I have. I learned that this town has three different societies—the Purrow, the Thomah and the Bundoo; and when one of their members dies "they open the body to ascertain whether the witches killed him or not. If the liver is enlarged, or any of the internal organs have an unnatural appearance—a very common thing in this malarious country—they say the witches killed him" (Flickinger). Such being the case, the devil of the Thomah society won't bury them. The friends or relatives must bury them. But the girl that died had no witch, so the devil buried her. All the people in town must enter their houses and keep the doors closed when the devil does his work. The relatives of the deceased and members of the society gather at one place and cry, beat drums, and make all the noise they possibly can, while the devil goes and buries the corpse. When the burial is over he makes three successive cries, which is a signal for the people to come out of their houses, and returns to his bush. Oh, what foolishness! What ignorance! What darkness! When will the day come when the people will do away with their heathen gods, ways, and practices. When will the day come when these hearts that have tender feelings, and these minds that are susceptible of obtaining knowledge, and these voices that are capable of making all kinds of melody, will join us in the redemption song. And when will the time come when these beautiful groves, that are now called the devil's belly, be turned into plantations, and these secret abominations be no more known. These and many more thoughts presented themselves while detained and on my way to the mission house. I soon got a glimpse of the house and its surroundings, and new light beamed upon my trouble. Seeing the children that are gathered from the dark homes of the best families in the community and placed in our care, and the number of villages that are reached every Sabbath by the itinerants, assured me that the day is not far distant when these heathen practices will be removed from the land and Christ be Lord of all.

CURED BY FAITH AND PRAYER.

Miss Justitia M. Ashton has written a letter to the editor of the Norristown Herald, describing the manner in which she was recently cured of consumption by faith and prayer. She says:

"In February, 1884, I was taken ill. My mother called in our family physician, in whom we have implicit trust. I believe I owe much to his skill. He several times mentioned a cavity in the left lung, and said: 'If it would only heal.' My sister, who for several years past has made the subject of 'The Healing Power' a study in the family, said to me: 'Why, Justy, if you need healing, you have only to ask the Lord for it, and he will give it to you.'

"On the 13th of May I was more ill than I had been through all my previous sickness; the pain was severe. My mother was up with me most of the night. I felt myself growing weaker with more fever, having to remain in my room later in the morning, and scarcely able to go down stairs at all. My family tell me they were much grieved for me, because my looks and symptoms were exactly like those of my sister, who died with consumption of the lungs.

"On the 22d Mr. Randall called to see me, and urged me to a deeper reliance on and faith in Christ. While he was praying there came to to me a feeling of assurance that the Lord was present and that I was being healed, and I said so. The following afternoon the doctor came and said, 'Why, Justy, you look better.' When he had examined my lungs he looked at me a moment, then examined them again and said, 'Justy, you are well.' My sister and I looked at each other astonished, for we were anxious to hear what he would say that particular day. We did expect to hear him say I was better, for I felt better, but I will never forget the words nor my feelings when I heard him say, 'You are well.' From that time I discontinued my cough mixture, because I felt that I did not need it. I continued with the other medicine for a time, but have now ceased to take any medicine and am rapidly gaining."

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

—The Canadian Masonic Grand Lodge resolved at Brockville, Ont., Wednesday, that the presence of intoxicants on refreshment tables of subordinate lodges was not desirable.

—Hon. (?) Thomas Perry, once a member of the Pennsylvania Legislature from this county, has come down to the worthless little business of organizing Knights of Pythias secret lodges. For this purpose he reeently visited Stoneboro. Sehuyler Colfax after aeting as Vice President, went into the Odd-fellowship business till it was not uncommon to hear it said "How are the mighty fallen." —Sandy Lake News.

—There are 28,000 Odd-fellows reported in California. Their two insurance adjuncts, which are found to be the best arrangement yet invented to prevent members form seceding, have lately united the arrangement being made on the Sabbath day.

—The Order of the Triadic Alliance, a new secret society, a social and beneficial institution, was recently organized in Freeport, Ill., under the laws of the State, with Milo D. Chamberlain, Edwin C. Warner, and Michael Stoskopf as incorrators. These gentlemen constitute the Supreme Council of the order and expect that it will spread far and near and enrich them by the sale of charters.

—A Catholic order of Foresters manned only by papists exists in this city, and has enrolled prominent members of that church. The Vicar General Conway attends the meetings and opens with prayer.

—The Wisconsin Grand Lodge of Masons is in trouble through their Grand Secretary, John W. Woodhull, who defaulted and ran away. He took some $1600 of G. L. funds, and his bondsmen are in some way released.

—The Grand Army of the Republic has its National Encampment at Minneapolis, Minn., this month. The Governor of the State and other officials are to speak and 30,000 members of the order are expected to participate. Among the amendments to the rules of the lodge to be presented is a section stating: "Soldiers and sailors of the United States army, navy, or marine corps who served between April 12, 1861, and April 9, 1865, in the war of the rebellion, and those having been honorably discharged therefrom after such service, and of such State regiments as were called into active service and subject to the orders of United States general officers between the dates mentioned shall be eligible to membership in the Grand Army of the Republic. No person shall be eligible to membership who has at any time voluntarily borne arms against the United States." Another will be presented to allow members of the order known as Sons of Veterans to be admitted as visitors in meetings of posts of the Grand Army of the Republic, except during muster-in ceremonies, that is, initiation.

—On the 29th of September, 1784, on the petition of Prince Hall, Boston Smith, Thomas Sanderson, and several other Masons of Boston, Thomas Howard, Earl of Effingham, acting grand master, under the authority of his royal highness, Henry Frederick, Duke of Cumberland, grand master of the Most Ancient and Honorable Society of Free and Accepted Masons, granted warrant 459 to the first African lodge in North America. Prince Hall was designated as master; Boston Smith, senior warden; and Thomas Sanderson, junior warden. The warrant or charter was signed by R. Holt, D. G. M., and witnessed by William White, G. S. On the 29th of the coming September the one hundreth anniversary will bc commemorated with appropriate ceremonies. —Boston Paper.

—The Knights of Honor is a mutual aid and assurance corporation, created by and existing under the laws of Kentucky. Since its formation seven years ago, it has extended into every State in the Union, and now has a membership of over a hundred and forty thousand persons. At a late meeting held in Chicago, officers were elected and a resolution passed, moving the principal place of business from Louisville, Ky., to St. Louis, Mo. Two members of the society, residing in Kentucky, have brought suit in the Louisville Chancery Court, maintaining that the election held out of the State was void, and seeking to enjoin the order from moving its principal plaee of Kentucky. Judge Simrall decided that the election of officers held outside of the State was illegal and void, and that being a Kentucky corporation, it should maintain its principal plaee of business in that State. A perpetual injunction to that effeet was granted. But the "supreme" officers have determined to remove to St. Louis and will ignore the Kentucky lodges.

—T. V. Powderly, general master workman of the Knights of Labor, and Democratic mayor of Scranton, Pa., for three terms, says of the report that the Knights have determined to oppose Blaine and Logan: "I have never seen a more barefaced lie in print."

—A Boston paper notices the organization of a new lodge of the Juvenilc Templars of Honor. The order is open to boys between the ages of twelve and eighteen, and is officered by themselves subject to the direction of a Governor, and two assistant Governors, who must, constitutionally, be adults, and members of the Temple of Honor. As for the temperance instruction which this order pretends to give, every one knows that it can be done better in every way by the Sabbath-school and other open methods. The only particular in which this lodge work excels is in training the boys to be sly and deceptive secretists.

"SCRIP and STAFF."
BY H. M. HUGUNIN.

This new and attractive volume is now ready. It is composed of thirty nine chapters on nearly as many topics. Neatly bound in cloth with gilt stamp. Priee 60 cents.

The Chicago Evening Journal of May 3, says:

The author of this little volume, for many years a working editor of the EVENING JOURNAL, has here presented us with a variety of topics of a religious character. Among the number we note "The Evils of the Sunday Newspaper," "The Divine Sanction of Church Organizations," "The Good Work and Government of Sunday-Schools," "The Bible in our Public Schools," "Fallacies of the 'Evolution Theory,'" "Chronology—The Age of the World," and "Labor and Laborers." Mr. Hugunin writes as an independent thinker, untrammeled by denominational alignments. His style, however, is marked by the vigor of earnestness and sincerity, and with these characteristics, and with a close adherenee to Bible Christianity, his book becomes a suggestive aid to evangelical workers. In discussing the topics above named, as in others, he deals consistently with questions of public interest and great importance in the reform of individual and social evils.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

A WORD ON COOKING.

Take one or two common dishes as cooked by ordinary servants, and compare them with what they should be; for instanee that much abused dish, "hash." No wonder, as it is brought to the table too often. The odds and ends of meat, left over from many meals, are picked up; some are fresh and some dry, some with tough gristle on, and all chopped together with potatoes (the last perhaps just cooked and hot, which spoils all hashes). It is put into a cold spider, with fat of some kind, and moistened with water, sometimes too much and sometimes too little. When hot it is sent to the table. The real, appetizing hash is something very different and a nice breakfast dish. Water in which meat of any kind has been boiled should be set away to cool, the fat removed and the broth saved for soups, stews and hashes. All gravies should be saved and treated in the same way, and no fat at all left in them. A jar of "Extract of Beef" should be in every house, and if there is neither of the above on hand, a quarter of a teaspoonful of the extract in a half cup of hot water will moisten and flavor the hash, and add very much to its richness. More should be used if the quantity of hash needed is large. Corned beef is always best, but the hash is good when made of cold roast beef, mutton or fowls. A roast beef bone will often have on it meat enough for hash, when there is not enough for the table in any other form. It should be boiled in a very little water (and the water saved to moisten it) until the meat loosens from the bones, then chopped with twice the amount of cold boiled potatoes, seasoned with salt and pepper and moistened before putting on the fire. The spider with a little butter or beef-dripping in it, should be boiling hot, the hash put on and covered until a light brown crust has formed; then turned over on the platter and served.—American Agriculturist for April.

SLEEPING AND EATING.

When people sit up late at night, particularly if they are delicate, they should eat something if only a slice of bread and butter, before retiring. This seems heretical, but it is not. Animals, after eating instinctively sleep. Humau beings become drowsy after a full meal. Why? Because blood is solicited towards the stomach to supply the juices needed in digestion. Hence the brain receives less blood than during the fasting, becomes pale, and the powers grow dormant. Sleep therefore ensues. This is physiological. The sinking sensation in sleepiness is a call for food. Wakefulness often is merely a symptom of hunger. Gratify the desire, and you fall asleep. The feeble will be stronger at dawn if they eat on going to bed. Fourteen hours lie between supper and breakfast. By that time the fuel of the body has become expended. Consequently morning toilet fatigues many. Let such eat at bedtime, and take a glass of warm milk or beef tea before rising. Increased vigor will result. "But the stomach must rest." True. Yet when hungry we must eat Does the infant's stomach rest as long as an adult's? The latter eats less often merely because his food requires more digestion. Seldom can one remain awake until 10:30 or 11 o'clock without hunger. Satisfy it and sleep will be sounder. During the night give wakeful children food. Sleep will follow. The sick should invariably eat during the night. This is imperative. At night the delicate and children may take, slowly, warm milk, beef tea or oatmeal gruel. Vigorous adults may also eat bread and milk, cold beef, mutton, chicken and bread, raw oysters, all, of course, in moderation. Do not eat if not hungry. Eat if you are.—Bow-Bells.

PALE AND LEAN BABE.

A MOTHER.—I am not at all surprised that your babe is both sickly and lean, literally starving, not because it does not get enough to eat, but because it gets too much of a certain kind, that which cannot be digested in the stomach of a babe so young—"five months." I advise you not to bring that babe to the table, to "eat the same as the rest of the family," though he does "seem hungry." Of course he is hungry, simply because his food does not nourish him, not being digested, passing into the circulation, can be of any service. It is very certain that the food "thrown up" can be of no real value, not remaining in the stomach long enough to have any part of it appropriated. "Why does it throw up its food?" The reason is very plain, since it is taking the food that cannot be digested, in an infant's stomach, and vomiting is the most available means of getting rid of an irritant, aside from which it would decay, rot in the stomach, more or less poisoning the whole body. It is a merey that such over-fed babies are able to vomit, thus escaping great pain and suffering. We may refer the paleness of your babe, in part, to that insufficient nourishment, as I have said, the system being unable to appropriate such improper food. No, that "one cow's" milk may not be any better than the mixture of several, as it is often true that such milk may not contain all of the elements of nourishment in their proper relations, particularly if that cow is not in good health. But cow's milk is not as good as the mother's, ordinarily—never as good as that of a healthy mother. I give the decided preference to "Mellin's food for infants and invalids," easy of digestion, as it is scientifically prepared to meet just such cases, nutritious and palatable. I feel confident that its judicious use would prove satisfactory, restoring health and flesh.— Golden Rule.

FARM AND GARDEN.

RAISING SEEDS.

We are asked why we do not encourage people to raise their own seeds, instead of buying them every year. Seed-raising is an art, and requires more care than the average farmer can afford to give to it. Seedsmen have their seeds raised by men who make a business of it, who grow but one variety of a kind, and avoid all chance of "mixing" or crossing. One who has a garden can hardly be persuaded to select his first ripened tomatoes or lima beans for seed; he wishes these for the table. Unless a vegetable can be kept up to its best condition it will deteriorate. Take tomatoes for example; the plants should be raised expressly for seed. As soon as they come into bearing, every plant that does not have fruit quite up to the best of its kind in form and productiveness, is to be pulled up, and all malformed fruits on those that are left, are cut away. Then only the earliest clusters are allowed to ripen, those which set late are cut off, and the whole strength of the plant directed to ripening the first fruit that is set. Take squashes for another example, and it is the same thing with melons, cucumbers, and all of the family. Few who have gardens content themselves with a single variety of squash There are few plants so likely to mix, through the agency of bees. We know of a case in which the Hubbard Squash had been grown in the same garden with other squashes for several years, and the seed was yearly saved and planted. At the time we saw the squashes, they were mostly yellow, and instead of the pointed end, so characteristic of the Hubbard, many of them had the broad, flat, blossom end belonging to other kinds; indeed there was not a typical Hubbard in the lot. If seeds are to be raised, that should be the leading object for which the plants are grown. It is poor economy to sow seeds of doubtful purity, in order to avoid a small outlay for those of good quality.—American Agriculturist.

HUNGARIAN FOR HAY OR GREEN FODDER.

A quick-growing plant is required for a second crop sown on land after oats, or early potatoes have been harvested. Hungarian grass is excellent for this purpose, and with a rich and mellow soil will be ready to cut in mid-summer, or soon after. If the conditions are most favorable, a heavy crop may be obtained in six weeks from sowing. Prepare the soil as for oats, wheat, or other grains, and sow one bushel of seed per acre. It may be sown broadcast and harrowed in lightly. The Hungarian fodder has obtained a bad reputation in some localities, without deserving it, simply because the cutting was delayed too long. The crop should be harvested as soon as the head is well formed, and before the barbed awns become hard and dry. The fully ripened bristles irritate the stomachs and intestines of animals, especially those of horses and have sometimes done injury.

If the crop is grown to help fill the hay-mow, it should be cut and cured in the same manner as Timothy or Red Top, when it makes a good hay. Hungarian grass is especially recommended as a late crop to be fed green, when the pastures are short and dry from close feeding and summer drouth. For this purpose it may be sown in strips weekly, from early June to the middle of July. By growing a few acres of this late crop after an early one, a farmer is able to carry an increased number of farm animals and keep them in good order. Bear in mind, that the conditions of success are a rich, deep, and mellow earth, and on well worn soil this means a plenty of quick-acting manure, applied before the grass seed is sown.—American Agriculturist.

Dear Sir: I have travelled for three years for Messrs. HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.
In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."
The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

IN BRIEF.

The Christian Secretary calls attention to the fact that there are in India 124,000,000 women, who are truthfully described as "unwelcomed at their birth, untaught in their childhood, enslaved in their marriage, accursed as widows, and unlamented when they die." And this with all the "light of Asia" surrounding them!

A strange death of a little girl by accidentally swallowing a lightning bug is reported from Concord, says the Charlotte (N. C.) Observer. The child was playing in the yard with a number of other children, at her parents' house, near Odell's factory, and while laughing and romping about a lightning bug flew into her mouth and made its way down her throat. The little girl became suddenly ill, and though physicians did everything to relieve her sufferings she died within a few hours afterward. This is the first death from such a cause on record.

New York is arranging to try a new method of treating the insane. Under the idea that occupation is good for the diseased mind, the State has purchased a 1,000 acre farm on Long Island, about thirty miles from New York city. All kinds of useful and fancy gardening will give occupation to patients who can be trusted. The experiment will be carefully noted by other States.

The first death which has occurred among the graduates of the Cornell class of '74 took place under most tragic circumstances. The graduate was a Russian named Dobroluboff, who, having been seized at the order of the Czar in company with a number of other young men accused of Nihilistic connections, was condemned and shot with his comrades. His death was heroic. He refused to be blindfolded, and even as the fatal bullets were discharged at his breast he clasped the hands and cheered the courage of his trembling fellows in misfortune.

Old lady (who has met with an accident, but is coming out all right, to her son)—"Josh, ye didn't beller nonc when you thought I was dyin'. I don't b'lieve ye care no grct for me." "Thet ain't no sign as I know on," says Josh. "I was too busy over ye ter beller. I hadn't no time." "Wa'al, ye mought a bellered a little fur look's sake. I weren't so fur gone but what I'd a known't." "I mought beller a little now ef 'twould mend matters any." This with a merry twinkle in his eye. The old lady seemed to think there was more to this than appeared at first, and, after studying the matter a little time, said, "'Pears to me 'twould look a leetle as though ye were sorry I come out on't."—Harper's Bazar.

A suit was tried in one of our city courts the other day against Ulysses S. Grant J., for injury done the plaintiff (a Mr. Bailey) by a vicious horse. Some years ago Gen. Grant had presented to him a pair of Arabian stallions, which were being kept at his son's farm in Westchester County. One day one of the stallions was ridden to a store in the village, and hitched to a post. At this time Mr. Bailey was coming down the road in a twe horse wagon loaded with eleven cans of milk.

Mr. Bailey on the witness stand, told substantially the following story of what next happened: The young man who rode the horse had scarcely entered the store when the stallion threw up his head, pulled off the headstall, and started up the road. He came in contact with the complainant's horses, kicked and bit them, and crowded them into a ditch. The stallion then put his fore feet into the wagon, upset the milk cans, and then he leaped into the wagon like a dog and sat down in the complainant's lap. Then he kicked Mr. Bailey over backward, pawed him out of the wagon, jumped out, kicked over the wagon, tore the harness, and caused the witness' horses to run away. The horse then pawed the complainant in the face, broke a rib on the left side, injured his spine, badly bruising his shoulder, and left him unconscious upon the frozen ground. Mr. Bailey was assisted home and has since been an invalid. The defense was that U. S. Grant, Jr., did not own the horse; that he offered to settle all damages to wagon, horses, milk, and harness, and to pay Bailey's doctor bill, and that the offer was declined. The jury gave Bailey a verdict for $5,000.

—The cholera epidemic is on the increase in Marseilles. There were twenty-five deaths there between Wednesday and Friday. At Toulon in the same time there were ten deaths, including that of the Lady Superior of the convent.

—During the twenty-four hours ending 9 o'clock Sunday night, there were fifty-seven deaths from cholera at Marseilles, and thirty-six at Toulon.

—Dr. Koch, the German physician, gives it as his opinion that the cholera was introduced into Toulon by a British ship.

—As a result of the clerical victories recently in Belgium, diplomatic relations between that country and the Vatican have been restored.

—The yacht of Prince Albert of Monaco was wrecked off the coast of Sweden. The crew were drowned but Prince Albert was rescued.

—The French Admiral Courbet telegraphs to Paris that he has occupied a town on the Chinese coast. The war therefore has commenced.

A NEW STORY.

The author of the popular book, "Holden with Cords," has begun a new story depicting the evils and emphasizing the warnings against the lesser secret orders. We have read the opening chapters of this new story, and believe it will prove more popular and a more valuable contribution to reform literature than the talented author's first work. It is entitled, "BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS." In order to give new and old subscribers, in greatest number, an opportunity to read the whole of this story, we shall not begin its publication until September 4th. Let unremitting efforts be made meantime to increase the number of readers of the Cynosure.

If any doubt that the Sabbath is attacked directly and openly by the lodges of America they will please read the frequent notices of the lodges in the daily press, a few specimens from which are noted on the 13th page. It is not uncommon to see a half dozen notices for lodge meetings on the Lord's day in the Chicago papers. They all take their cue from Freemasonry which begins by casting out the name of Christ and of course to be consistent must ignore his day.

Mr. Moody reached New York Saturday from his London work, and will, it is said, after resting through the summer, begin revival meetings in Cincinnati and Richmond, making a tour of the South. The London Truth last week selected Mr. Moody's career for a critical sketch. The article, say the dispatches, is on the whole laudatory, and in summing up Mr. Moody's qualities and attainments the writer finds that he has displayed a prodigious amount of shrewdness and a degree of common sense almost amounting to genius. The article closes with the declaration that if you were to combine the bench of bishops with the whole Wesleyan Conference and then throw in the Baptist and Congregational unions and make weights the entire body of theologists and pulpiteers would be found to possess between them less practical wisdom than this plain, unlettered American preacher.

The attack of the priests upon the public schools and the use of the Bible in them, was illustrated the other day in the story of the experience of a young teacher of a country school surrounded by German Catholics. He found the directors Protestants, but unwilling to stand by him if he began to read the Scriptures. At the order of the priests the Catholic parents would remove nearly every child from school. Bigotry and ecclesiastical tyranny like this have entered thousands of American schools with a spirit as intolerant as ever Huguenot or Covenanter protested against. The Consistory of Hanover presents in contrast a noble example of respect to the Christian religion, the first element in a useful or liberal education. This body has instructed the school directors and teachers to awaken an interest for home and foreign missions by making frequent and regular mention of these branches of church work during the hours assigned for geography, and for religious instruction. Thus, when speaking of India, care shall be taken to speak not only of the pearls and corals of that country, but also of the miseries of heathenism, and of the labors and trials of its missionaries.

MYRON HOLLEY.

The return of the expedition for the rescue of Lieut. Greely, who has spent three years in the upper Arctic regions, is hailed with melancholy satisfaction. Seven of the twenty-five men of Greely's expedition were found alive, but starving, at the head of Melville Bay. One died in a day or two of joy and the bodies of thirteen are on board the fleet. Had the rescuers been two days later they would have found all dead. Following De Long's fatal cruise to the north of Alaska and Siberia, and with only the barren satisfaction of having reached a point farther north than other adventurers, this luckless search only confirms the sober sense of the country in condemning any further explorations. The hand of God has barred the pole with a thousand dangers, and any further attempts must be regarded as sheer presumption.

John Jarrett is chief of the Amalgamated Ironworker's Association with headquarters at Pittsburgh. This society is the head center of all the iron-workers' lodges of the country and dictates their movements, their wages, and in a considerable degree their politics; and for the rest of the world the price of iron. Mr. Jarrett as mugwump of so mighty a lodge was a bigger man than Gassette, the conclave giant, or any other of the lords of the Philistines, Albert Pike excepted. When President Arthur thought he was showing a deferential and respectful thing toward the working men, by appointing Jarrett head of the new Bureau of Labor Statistics he did not reckon on the arrogance of the lodge. Jarrett went to Washington to get his commission and showed so openly his vulgar disrespect and assumed so rankly the arbitrary and dictatorial air of the lodge that Mr. Arthur has concluded not to give him the commission but appoint a fitter man. When the labor unions begin to rave over this affair, let them remember for how much of it the lodge is responsible.

Just as Congress was adjourning it was discovered that the Democratic members had arranged for one or two investigating committees to work during the recess, until December, in Washington. The Republicans of the Senate stopped that kind of political fun, for the primary object was to start bad stories during the campaign, which would make Democratic voters. But the Republicans allowed several measures to pass which had no more concern with public interests. Thus a committee of seven is sent on a roving expedition to visit all the navy-yards and manufacturing centers to select the best location for the manufacture of guns and engines for the U. S. Navy. Another large committee goes to the Pacific Coast to inquire into the condition of the Indians of California. Another is to travel about at public expense to see if all the fishery laws are obeyed. They have authority to go anywhere that fish are found, and stay as long as they please at public expense. Another officer is sent to examine the condition of the public buildings, on $3,000 salary. These are not all the pleasure excursions voted by Congress, but enough to show what bold pretenses a Congressman can make to get his summer pleasure paid for by the people.

CHRISTIAN VOTING.

REV. A. SMITH.

In this country the people rule. They make and execute the laws through their agents, the officers of the government, whom they elect by their ballots.

The right to vote is a kingly power conferred alike on the pauper and the millionaire. But with this regal dignity, comes great responsibitity.

The people are responsible for the character of the government. Ballots determine whether wise and good men shall make and execute wise and good laws, or whether incompetent and bad men shall make and execute unrighteous laws, whether the righteous shall rule and the people rejoice, or the wicked rule and the nation mourn.

The character of the government greatly influences the prosperity of the church, and no Christian can neglect to vote for the prosperity of the kingdom of Christ.

Christians cannot be neutral in voting. They must either vote for Christ or against him; for God-honoring reforms or against them. They have no right to be careless or ignorant on this subject. They cannot do evil that good may come. Christians profess to do all for the glory of God. They cannot pray, "Thy kingdom come," and then vote for bad men and bad measures in the interests of the kingdom of Satan. Christians must vote with Christ-honoring motives. They cannot vote selfishly, merely for party, to be with the majority, to help their business, for office, to please or displease men. They cannot give or receive bribes, they must vote honestly for the glory of God. Christians cannot endorse political sin, or fellowship political sinners. We are partners with those for whom we vote and are more or less responsible for their political acts.

In deciding how we ought to vote we should consider the characters of the political parties and their platforms, but most of all the characters of the candidates for office.

The mass of a political party may be pure and its principles good, but if its candidates for office are dishonest and corrupt there is every reason to believe that these men, if elected to office, will have little regard for the true interests of their constituents, or the political principles they were elected to support. Corrupt officials cannot be trusted, they will use their power for the attainment of their own selfish ends, and not for the best interests of the nation. Christians cannot vote for wicked parties, wicked platforms and wicked men. We cannot understand how intelligent Christians can vote for any political party whose political platform does not commit them to the earnest support of the great moral reforms advocated by Christians, involving as they do the morality, happiness, and financial prosperity of the nation, and even the very existence of our civil and religious liberty.

We cannot understand how Christians can vote to place in power, men who are the sworn enemies of temperance and other Christ-honoring reforms. Is it not pitiable to hear some of these saints talk and pray for temperance and then vote with political parties whose platforms are as silent as death on the subject, and whose nominees for office either wink at the liquor traffic or are themselves tipplers or rum sellers?

He who is not against the liquor traffic, is for it. The right kind of talk is good but is of little value without the right kind of voting. If the above is true how can a Christian vote with either Democrats or Republicans, as neither of them, in their declaration of principles oppose the rum traffic, and both of these parties nominate for office drunkards and rum-sellers?

We are told that of two evils we ought to choose the least, and that we shall lose our ballots if we do not vote with the wicked majority. In our judgment it is a sin to vote for bad men pledged to the advancement of no moral reform, but who are both instinctively and politically opposed to all true reform. It may be a greater sin to vote with Democrats than Republicans, but we say, Choose neither sin, but rather vote with a small party for the right. Your vote is not lost. God keeps honest books, your record is on high. Toil and wait, truth and righteousness shall conquer at last. Better throw away your vote than throw away your principles, better suffer seeming defeat than violate your conscience. It is a sin not to vote for righteous men and righteous measures.

Christian voters, have you fully considered the importance of your ballots? Have you carefully examined your motives for voting, in the light of the Holy Scriptures? Do you exercise this sacred trust with a single eye to the glory of God, and for the best interest of the kingdom of Christ? If we must give an account to God for every idle word, how great must be our responsibility to God and our neighbor for the proper use of our ballots.

Are you opposed to profanity, impurity, obscenity, bribery, Sabbath-breaking, atheism, etc., how can you support for office men of this character?

Are you opposed to intemperance, how then can you vote for drunkards and rum-sellers, or their accomplices?

Are you opposed to Mormonism, how then can you vote for Mormons or their political partners?

Are you in favor of the execution of righteous laws and equal rights, and are you opposed to rings and absolute despotisms, how then can you vote for members of oath-bound secret societies, especially members of the Liquor Dealers Association and Freemasons? Of these Wendell Phillips says, "Every Freemason swears to break the law, commit the greatest crimes, and repudiate Christianity. History shows them perverting justice; stopping at no crime to protect their mummeries; controlling politics for selfish and personal ends, and interfering with great danger in national emergencies. Every good citizen should make war on all secret societies, and give himself no rest until they are forbidden by law and rooted out of existence."

Are you opposed to the bigotry, superstition, intolerance and despotism of the Church of Rome, how then can you help by your ballots to place in office men who bear supreme allegiance to the Pope of Rome, and how can you trust these members of the papal church with the control of our Protestant civilization and our free institutions, the rich inheritance left us by our Pilgrim forefathers? Is our civil and religious liberty safe in the hands of these tools of the Jesuits and the Pope, who for ages have claimed the divine right to own and rule the world, to burn the Bible, to annihilate freedom of conscience and free speech, and to murder all heretics who dare oppose their blasphemous claim to divine sovereignty?

How can you vote in the interests of a church which is a sworn foe to Protestant education, to the Bible and public schools, and to true intelligence, a church which, if she could, would reduce the nation to the condition which she has reduced Ireland, Spain, Italy, Mexico and Brazil? How can you vote papists into office who are the true successors of the Inquisitors of the murder of Protestants on St. Bartholomew's Day, the persecutors of our Puritan forefathers, and who are only waiting for power to repeat the same atrocities? How can any man who loves purity and truth vote for the emissaries of the "Mother of Harlots?"

Are you in favor of all truth and righteousness? are you a lover of good men, are you a real Christian? Then cast your ballot for true reformers, men who love God and keep his Commandments.

If all professed Christians would live and vote as they ought, the nation would soon be saved from its great perils, and instead of inheriting a curse, the coming generation would be blessed by the prevalence of Christ-honoring reforms. Why not vote with the American party for Christian men?

Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

"ANCIENT AND HONORABLE."

BY ELDER NATHAN CALLENDER.

Is not Freemasonry ancient? I believe it is very ancient. Accepting the fact that a certain form of this institution was taken on in 1717, yet the main principle of it is as old, or older than is claimed by the most enthusiastic Mason known. I do not see that it is wise, to give the fact of its late development in Apple-tree-tavern, London, more than a passing notice. Concede its antiquity, but not that it is therefore honorable. This by no means follows. The central principle of Freemasonry is, conspiracy and rebellion against Emanuel. If we were able to date the event spoken of in Jude 6th and in 2 Peter 2: 4 we could then date the birthday of Freemasonry. How long after this conspiracy came into Eden, is only a subject of conjecture.

When it was that the Father "brought in the only begotten," and said "let all the angels of God worship him," the wisest and best, know not. Neither do we know that this was the time and the occasion of the rebellion in heaven, as some suppose. If the grand apostacy arose against crowning Jesus Lord of all, as seems probable, then Freemasonry is the representative of this same conspiracy, borne to, and born on earth, by the agency of the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience."

If this be a correct view of the case, Masonry is too ancient and infinitely *dis*honorable. It is an established fact, that every attempt to prove the antiquity of Masonry has gone to establish the identity of this institution with the worst forms of idolatry and devil worship of the ages. In the false worships of remote ages, is found all the antiquity claimed by Mackey and his coadjutors.

REV. E. F. CRANE'S DEFENCE OF FREEMASONRY.

A REPLY BY J. T. MICHAEL.

The Rev. E. F. Crane is the pastor of the Baptist church in Oil City, Pa., and our quotations from his sermon on Freemasonry and Knight Templarism are taken from the report in the issue of the Oil City Derrick for April 12, 1884.

Mr Crane says, * * * "It is well understood that in all Christianized countries Masons have universally proved warm friends of the Gospel." There is only one objection which we now make to this assertion—it is not true, and here is proof which in no way can be set aside. Dr. Emanuel Rebold is perhaps the ablest Masonic historian which the order has yet produced. In his description of the Jewish, the Christian, and the Mahommedan God, in his "General History of Freemasonry in Europe," on pages 410 and 412, he gives us the following:

"The God of the Israelites, their Jehoah, or Jehovah, as Moses distinguished the Yoo-piter of the Egyptians, is, if we judge from the manner in which he is represented in the Bible, a despot, a revengeful God, and exterminator of the peoples. * * * It would seem, in hearkening to the priests of these different religions, that their God, whimsical and capricious, eats and drinks like a man: that, in turn, he loves and hates, casts down and uplifts; that, weak as wicked, he nurses his hate; that, contradictory as perfidious, he sets snares for the unwary; that, after permitting evil, he punishes it; that, foreseeing crime, he permits it; that, a venal judge, he is propitiated by bribes; that, imprudent despot, he makes laws which he immediately revokes; that, ferocious tyrant, he confers his favors without a cause, and bends but to the strength of meanness. Now," he continues, "that we have seen, as exhibited by their priests and prophets, the God of the Jews, of the Christians, and the Mussulmans, let us examine him who is revered by the Freemasons." Then comes a long description of the wonderful qualities of the Masonic god.

Again. On page 418 of the same work, we read:

"Now, what is the result of this examination? That the disciples of Christ have surrounded his birth, life and death with miracles which never took place, but which are rather symbolized under solar appearances. That the doctrine of Christ, which is a summary and code of all the truths which were known at this period, is similar to that of the Essenian school from which he graduated, as it is similar to that of the hierophants of Egypt and the gymnosophists of India. In a word, that the Christian religion came out from the mysteries of initiation, and that the creation, the gods, the angels, the occurrences, dogmas, and ceremonies, such as we find them in the sacred books, are nothing but resemblances, more or less faithful, of the ancient gods, angels, dogmas, and ceremonies of the Brahmins, the Magi, and the Egyptian priests."

Are not these magnificent manifestations of friendship for the Gospel? and can Mr. Crane find a system of blatant infidelity which will undertake to produce anything which will surpass them?

Not only is the preacher's statement false, but it is a notorious fact that Ancient Craft Masonry itself is, in its doctrinal teachings, in direct opposition to Christianity. Even in so-called Christian lands it offers salvation to its members without asking them to accept Jesus Christ or to believe in the divinity of the Holy Scriptures.

"To require that a candidate profess a belief in the 'divine authenticity of the Bible' or a 'state of future rewards and punishments,' is a serious innovation in the very body of Masonry."—Digest of Masonic Law, by George Wingate Chase, page 206.

"Freemasonry calls no man to account for his belief of any religion on the globe."—Constitution of the Grand Orient of France.

"Speculative Masonry is a science, which, borrowing from the art its working tools and implements, sanctifies them to the holiest of purposes—the veneration of God and the purification of the soul."—Lexicon of Freemasonry by A. G. Mackey, M. D., article "Speculative Masonry."

"The Master Mason represents a man under the doctrine of love, saved from the grave of iniquity and raised to the faith of salvation."—Hutchinson as quoted by Mackey in his Lexicon, article "Master Mason."

Dr. Mackey is no ordinary authority. He was "Grand High Priest of the Grand Royal Arch Chapter of South Carolina" and "General Grand High Priest of the General Grand Chapter of the United States." Such tremendous titles should indicate something.

Similar extracts might be multiplied a hundred fold, but these are abundantly sufficient to place our zealous Baptist defender of the "ancient" and "honorable" order in a most unenviable position. It should be remembered that his own declaration is unsupported by the smallest bit of evidence. It is merely his ipse dixit, and is unworthy the respect of truth-loving people.

Mr. Crane triumphantly asks, If Masonry "is an immoral association, how happens it that so many of the clergy are not only members but are zealously attached to it?" Questions intended to have the same force as this have been used for centuries to obstruct the thorough work of God. The lovers of American slavery, intemperance, and numerous other sins, have often resorted to them. Indeed, is it not the same argument which was adopted by the haters of the Saviour when they cried out, "Have any of the rulers or of the Pharisees believed on him?" (John 7: 48.) That "many of the clergy" are Freemasons we do not deny, but instead of proving that Masonry is a good institution, it helps to reveal the appalling reality that, instead of following him whom they claim to be their Master in the battle against evil of every kind, they in a most disgraceful manner hinder the glorious cause by adhering to one of the most deceptive "works of darkness" which has ever cursed the world. The attachments of some persons are extremely peculiar, but how any sane man who knows what Masonry is can resist the feeling of intense disgust and loathing for it is hard to imagine. A scheme which breaks the laws of conscienee, which ignores every doctrine peculiar to Christianity, and which fastens to its obligations language which might chill the blood of a cannibal butcher, is not a scheme to which the shepherds of the flock of Christ should be "zealously attached." We are satisfied that it may be safely said that if the congregations of Oil City were fully acquainted with the hidden truth concerning Masonry, there is not a Masonic pastor in the place who could hold his position without real repentance and complete renunciation. Should this be doubted, the way is open for the necessary revelation, and then it may be determined whether or not there is any solid basis for our opinion.

All ministers, however, are not admirers of Freemasonry. Moses Stuart, one of the noblest souls, and one of the best of scholars, expresses his views in these words:

"For a long time I neither knew nor cared about the subject, but recent attention to it has filled me with astonishment, and as to some things contained in it, with horror. The trifling with oaths and with the awful name of the ever blessed God is a feature which I cannot contemplate but with the deepest distress."

The Rev. Nathaniel Colver is very decided and evidently he does not intend to be misunderstood. He says:

"I am free to say that it is my deliberate opinion that the vicious character of Masonry and its guilt-concealing and barbarous oaths are such, as not only to release all from their bonds, but also to lay upon them the solemn obligation to tear off its covering and expose its enormity. I regard it as Satan's masterpiece—a terrible snare to men. It sits at this moment as a nightmare on all the moral energies of our government, and utterly paralyzes the arm of justice."

President Charles G. Finney was a man of masterly intellect and logical power, and was eminently successful as a mighty apostle of God. Before his conversion he was initiated into the mysteries of Masonry. He is the author of the exeellent book entitled, "The Character, Claims, and Practical Workings of Freemasonry," from which we take a single extract:

"Freemasonry knows no mercy but swears its candidates to avenge violations of Masonic obligations even unto death. Its oaths are profane, the taking of the name of God in vain. The penalties of these oaths are barbarous and even savage. Its teachings are false and profane. Its design is partial and selfish Its ceremonies are a mixture of pucrility and profanity. Its religion is deistic. It is a false religion, and professes to save men upon other conditions than those revealed in the Gospel of Christ. It is an enormous falsehood. It is a swindle, and obtains money from its membership under false pretences. It refuses all examination, and veils itself under a mantle of oath-bound secrecy. It is a virtual conspiracy against both church and state. No one, therefore, has ever undertaken, and for the plainest reasons none will undertake, to defend Freemasonry as it is revealed in these books."

Are we to infer that these three, with a host of others who could be mentioned, are the "ignorant" and "foolish" men of whom our earnest advocate of the hood-winked fraternity speaks in such uncomplimentary terms? Surely we have a right to conclude that his own learning should be very profound and extensive. What a pity it is that he did not give us a better display of it in his sermon!

Other objections could easily be made to this remarkable discourse, but its manifest weakness and absurdity plead loudly for mercy, and we forbear. The preacher ought to be ashamed, and his audience ought to be indignant that such a miserable performance was possible in any Baptist church. One might be tempted to think that the choir did feel a little resentment, and that it intended to be faintly suggestive in the singing of the first two lines of one of its hymns:

"Plunged in a gulf of dark despair,
We wretched sinners lay."

The Derrick tells us that this anthem was "rendered with exquisite regard for the sentiment."

It is hoped that the next time Mr. Crane appears before the public he will come with the defence of a cause which is worthy of the support of a Christian minister. The church of God does not need the co-operation of Masonry to enable it to succeed. It needs the Holy Ghost, the baptism of fire, inward and outward righteousness, and a solid integrity which is in harmony with every correct principle and which spurns every wrong one. Then ist onward march would blaze with victory, and every form of reeking iniquity would be crushed beneath its conquering tread, and the earth would shine, and sing, and bloom under the holy reign of him who is rejected by Freemasonry, but who is accepted and adored by all the radiant host of the everlasting heaven.

TRADE UNIONS.

It is natural for men of like employment and common interests to associate for their mutual good. There is strength in organization, and the union may accomplish for all what the individuals separately would be unable to do. Sympathy tends to widen its limits, and strictly "trade" unions easily enlarge so as to include workers of many kinds, but having the common relation of being employes, and the common interest of dependence upon themselves to make their labor profitable against the tendency of capital to keep the wages at the lowest point. The "trade union" thus becomes a "labor" organization.

As these organizations extend, they unite those of common interests in very large sections of the country, and a central authority regulates the movements of all, determining all questions of wages and conditions of work. Thus at a glance we see the power of these organizations in social, political and moral life—a power that may be good or evil, according to the use made of it.

It must be admitted that these organizations have accomplished some good. Labor needs protection against the encroachments of unscrupulous men controlling capital, so that they who are dependent on their strength and skill may not be reduced to the condition of serfs. This has been gained to a very satisfactory degree. The standard of wages has been advanced; the public sympathy is with labor rather than capital; wise and helpful legislation has been seeured, and the courts are mindful of the "common people," and largely interpret the laws in their favor as against the claims of corporations.

These unions have developed a consciousness of strength which is of itself a power. They have encouraged thrift and economy by beneficent organizations and by mutual help. They have also—indirectly, perhaps, yet really—raised the standard of intelligence among the members by the increase of reading and discussion. They have representatives whose intelligence and force as speakers and writers reflect the highest honor upon those whose interests they plead.

Having said this—and more might be said of the good accomplished by these organizations—we must still say that we cannot advise any one to enter such unions, because, as they have been and are yet conducted, they embody dangerous elements and work injurious results to the members and to the community at large.

So far as secrecy enters into these organizations, and it does enter into the larger part of them, they are in conflict with the free, open spirit to be preserved in both church and state, in which all stand on a common ground of equal opportunity. They hold a power which unscrupulous men easily pervert. All class organizations have an element of danger to the state. From their nature they may include so large a proportion of the people as to unjustly subordinate public to class interests, and so furnish an inviting field for demagogues. And whatever may be the reason for it, the pervading spirit of these organizations is not in sympathy with vital religion. We think we do no injustice when we say that there is a tone of infidelity and irrilegion in very much that is said and writted in their interest, and of positive violation of the law of God in connection with their movements. This is notably the case in regard to the observance of the Sabbath.

We also regard these organizations as despotic and, as conducted, in the end injurious to the members. Individual freedom is taken away, and the member, however well satisfied he may be, is forced to quit work whenever a strike is ordered. Violence is done to good order and to the fundamental principles of society by dictating the terms on which others shall conduct their business, and by interfering with all who will not conform to their order. Non-union men are branded, and often abused; manufacturers and others who employ non-union men are denounced, and their business, as far as possible, broken down. Men who are willing to work are terrorized, if not driven away by actual violence. Strikes are of common occurrence, and often attended by violence.

Organized in the interest of the members, they discount skilled labor by placing all of each kind of workers on the same scale as to wages. The skilled mechanic has no advantage over the unskilled one; the reliable man of integrity, whose work is in the highest degree satisfactory, and who is satisfied with his wages, is forced to quit work if the prescribed wages are not given to the unreliable and dishonorable worker by his side. The shiftless and spiritless are a dead weight, to be carried by the self-dependent who are seeking the highest standard of skill. And this evil is increased, and the normal working of social forces is further disturbed, by the refusal to allow whoever may wish and can find an opportunity to enter a given trade as an apprentice. However peculiarly the young man may be fitted for a particular trade, he is not allowed to enter and make his way at his pleasure, but is forced to wait the permission of the "union;" and if an employer, in the exercise of his own judgment, takes even the brightest boy as an apprentice without leave, others throw down their tools, however much loss it may occasion.

We need not follow this line of remark further to show that these organizations, as now conducted, have elements of danger, and do work harm both to themselves and to the general interests of the community. They thus invoke resistance and bring upon their members great loss and suffering, with the consequent increase of bitter class dislikes and hatreds.

And yet they might be made in the highest degree beneficial. The mistake is largely in making the wage question the controlling one. Wages are relative, and are subordinate to higher interests. Manhood is the first great aim; wages are to be considered as only incidental to this. How to live? is a lower question than, What to be? Wages are best and most prominently advanced by raising the standard of life, and advancing the grade of the worker. The man himself, and not his wages, should be the central point in all such organizations. We know it is easy to say, Give better wages and you both dignify the worker and give him the opportunity to raise himself higher. This is true in part, but when wages are kept as the prominent point, and the ever-present issue is about them, the man is degraded. Here as everywhere it is true, that man does not live by bread alone. The ever-present issue should be with the members themselves, to attain a higher standard. Better wages follow this.

If these unions and kindred organizations would seek first the advancement of the moral character of their members; if they would combine all their great influence against intemperance, irreligion and violence; if they would seek to improve the homes and the home life; if they would give all possible encouragement to skilled labor, and when there is a surplusage of labor in a particular department, combine to lead it off by healthful channels, to others, they would build up a firm structure, and secure for themselves and the people at large inestimable blessings. We believe all this is coming. The days of violence are passing away, and intelligence and moral power are coming to the throne.—United Presbyterian.

Why cannot some who wish to keep up a cheap reputation for opposition to secrecy, give some sledge-hammer denunciations of Jesuitism, or the Irish secret societies, or the Ku-Klux? To keep up an occasional denunciation of devil-worship, in the form of the Purrow society, might serve the purpose. Some might be convinced by such display of heroism. But it grows monotonous. Variety is the spice of life. If it takes some "snap" to denounce and discipline devil-worship, why should it not require a tithe at least of courage and "grit" to do the same for a band of Ku-Klux or brigands? Laurels may be won on many a field.—Richmond Star.

MYRON HOLLEY.

ON THE VALIDITY OF MASONIC OATHS.

EXTRACT FROM AN ADDRESS DELIVERED AT LYONS, N. Y.

Freemasonry administers oaths—are these oaths binding? Assuredly not. They are promissory. A promissory oath is the calling upon God to take notice of what is promised, and of invoking his vengeance, by the promiser upon himself, if it is not performed.

Promissory oaths are not binding, where false or erroneous representations and inducements are held out to those who take them. The representation made to the brethren before admission, that "the oath will effect neither their religion nor their politics," is of this character; and so are all the inducements arising from the unfounded pretensions of Freemasonry, heretofore examined.

To take an oath is a solemn and deliberate act of the mind. Understanding is essential to its obligation; on which account oaths impose no obligation upon idiots, lunatics, madmen, or young children; they not having sufficient knowledge, either of the nature of the things promised. or of the penalties of non-performance; and both of these sorts of knowledge are requisite. There can be no moral obligation, in any case, without knowledge. The obligation of obedience to God himself, is no more than co-extensive with our knowledge of his laws; and in respect to the nature of the promises and penalties, in the oaths of Freemasonry, all the persons before alluded to as being free from the obligation of oaths, from the want of understanding, have as much knowledge, as the wisest of the brethren had, before the oaths were taken.

To render a promissory oath obligatory, it is necessary, that both the authority administering it, and the performance of the promise it contains, should be lawful; reference being had in this case, not merely to the enactments of the civil government, but also to the law of a good conscience.

The right to administer oaths, if not wholly denied by religion, is one of the prerogatives of the sovereign power, a right which cannot be enjoyed concurrently, by the government and its subjects. Every man would regard it as both wrong and ridiculous for any individual to pretend to a natural right of administering oaths, in such form, with such penalties, and for such purposes as he might choose to dictate; and such pretension would not be made valid by his finding any man or number of men, who would consent to take them. Even if the form, penalties and purposes were all good, this would be incontrovertible. The right of administering oaths, does not exist anterior to the establishment of government, nor independently of it. Wherever it exists, it is a conventional right, of that description too, which may be denominated resulting; that is, a right springing from the necessities of government, after its organization, and founded on the utility of its exercise. It never exists, in individuals or associations of men; except when conferred upon them by government. There is no rightful government, in this country, but religion, or the laws regularly adopted under our established constitution. But neither of these has conferred upon Freemasonry the right to administer oaths. Would it not be a violation of every man's good conscience, as well as a scandalous breach of his allegiance to our government, for him to administer an oath among us, under the pretence of authority conferred upon him by the Great Mogul? It is equally so, under the pretence of authority conferred by Freemasonry—a government more foreign from ours, and more barbarous than Turkey. This is a kind of unlawfulness, which shows there is no obligation imposed upon the conscience, by Masonic oaths.

It is a gross immorality to administer such oaths on other grounds, and therefore a man is not bound by them. The master of a lodge, without any shadow of authority, in the midst of the most degraded mummery, calls upon a candidate, in a state of indecent nakedness, with a bandage round his eyes, in order that he may have no more of natural, than he has of moral light, solemnly and sincerely to promise and swear, as in the presence of him, in whose sight the angels are chargeable with folly, to do —he knows not what—under penalties the most revolting and inhuman. Is not such a scene calculated most injuriously to lessen the sanctity of all oaths? Must not the frequent repetition of it, amazingly diminish the value of that solemn form of ascertaining truth, by our constituted authorities, in relation to all our dearest rights? Recollect there are near 100,000 Freemasons in the United States, of whom many have taken more than forty degrees, in each of which an oath has been administered. Did not the Father of his country allude to these proceedings of Freemasonry, in his farewell address, when he emphatically asked, "Where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice?"

The performance of a promise to calumniate, to conceal a criminal action, or to assassinate, is always unlawful, and is therefore not binding; because the promiser in these cases, is always under a prior obligation to the contrary. From such prior obligation what shall discharge him? His promise? His own act and deed? But an obligation from which a man can discharge himself, by his own act, is no obligation at all. The guilt of such promises lies in making them, not in breaking them. Whoever makes them is already bound to break them. The Masonic oaths do not require all these unlawful acts, except upon certain conditions. Where the condition exists, there the oaths are imperative. But the acts are unlawful under all possible conditions, and therefore the oaths are not obligatory.

Besides, the penalty of every Masonic oath, is the forfeiture of life, to be taken in the most impious and bloody manner. No man has a right to subject himself to such a penalty. His prior obligations to God and his country forbid it. The penalty is unlawful, and therefore the oath not obligatory.

Herod's promissory oath to his daughter-in-law, "that he would give her whatsoever she asked, even to the half of his kingdom," when she asked the head of John the Baptist, imposed no obligation upon Herod to give it, because it was unlawful.

Christianity interposes other objections to the unlawfulness of Masonic oaths. "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain." "I say unto you, swear not at all." On these authorities many Christians wholly refuse to take judicial oaths. They have univerally, and always, condemned all others. Whatever is against the command of Christ is sinful. All sins must be renounced even the most favorite.

An oath can never bind a man to do what is morally wrong. If it is a bond of duty, let us consider what is the authority of duty. It is the command of God or general utility; opposition to which, is the very definition of wrong. It would be both preposterous and impious, deliberately to call upon God to take notice of what was in opposition to his command. In such ease, to take an oath, would actually involve the guilt of perjury.

A good man always acts under a conviction of the presence of God, and in the fullest expectation of his righteous retributions; that is, under all the sanctions of an oath. And there could be no stronger attestation to the excellence of Doctor Johnson's moral character than that, which is involved in the declaration of one of his associates, that in common conversation, he always talked like a man under oath. What would such a man do, supposing he had taken the oaths of Freemasonry? Could he conceal what he knew to be criminal? Could he derange the business, oppose the interests, or traduce the character of a brother for any cause? He plainly could not; because, he would be under all the obligations imposed by an oath, not to do so, prior to his taking the Masonic oaths; that is, all the obligations arising from the command of God, or general utility.

In reality, the use of an oath is, to bring freshly to the mind of him, who takes it, the obligations of duty, which actually would rest upon him without it. It does not increase those obligations in the least degree. Do not the obligations of duty, then, as with the force of an oath, require all good men to renounce Freemasonry? If, in the honest convictions of their minds, Freemasonry is wrong, in its secrecy, in its oaths, in its injunctions, or in its effects and consequences, they assuredly do.

FREEMASONRY IS REBELLION.

We have a government to which we cannot be too strongly attached. The privilege of establishing it was obtained through trials, sufferings and achievements, which have secured to our sage and heroic fathers, imperishable renown. Its principles have been combined with the most considerate wisdom. And if its administration has not been perfect, it has been conducted with unequalled virtue and success. Under its benignant influence, religious and civil freedom were multiplying, extending, and securing all their benefits. Its power to withstand the seduction and defeat the assaults of foreign governments, has been severely, but triumphantly exemplified. Its reputation abroad is honorable; and its example every year becoming more attractive. It is rapidly preparing the public opinion of the world, for the general introduction and enjoyment of freedom.

Why is our government so effective for good? Why does it attract the grateful regard of all our enlightened fellow citizens, and the admiration of every independent mind? Because it was instituted by the whole people, and not by a part of them only; for the protection of the rights of all, and not for the protection of the rights of a part merely. Because, while it presents no impediment to the useful exertions of any, it encourages the honest and strenuous efforts of all, by offering its rewards to merit and to merit only. Because it intends to secure the safety of all, by enforcing universally, and without partiality, its penalties, upon all offenders—and because its agents are responsible, its proceedings are public, and it is free. Religion, knowledge, charity, are its open friends, the pillars of its strength, the objects of its veneration. It delights in every exercise of benevolence, in every discovery of science, in all the advances of piety. It is impossible to name any attainable good, the pursuit of which, it would not cherish and honor. But this government is eminently a government of law. All its benefits result from the adoption, administration and enforcement of its laws. Humility before God, and before the laws of such a government, are kindred and exalted virtues. With what a proud homage should the laws be obeyed! Where their dominion is universal and supreme, what a cheap defence do they set up, around the great treasure-house of human rights! And how detestable its rebellion against them!

Yet such a rebellion Freemasonry has raised. It has violated the dearest rights of nature, and the most sacred enactments of our laws, and this, in a spirit manifestly treasonable, for it has done this, in pursuance of solemn, deliberate, and voluntary obligations to a foreign government,—I mean its own,—a government more alien to that which claims our allegiance, than any that has ever afflicted mankind. Fellow citizens, let me beseech you to look into the government of Freemasonry. Examine it fully. You can easily comprehend it. You will have to encounter no arduous labor—you will involve yourselves in no perplexing inquiries; and you will arrive at no doubtful conclusions. You will find it a monstrous compound of monarchy and hierarchy, pursuing its objects with all the badges of fraud and guilt. Its power you will justly dread, but that is not invincible. Its distinguishing characteristies you will certainly abhor, but these you can abolish.

WASHINGTON AND DE WITT CLINTON ON MASONRY AS A POLITICAL MACHINE.

Long association in toils and dangers produces lasting friendships. Washington found it difficult, altogether to withdraw himself from Freemasonry at the close of the war. It was natural for him to recollect, with complacency many of the events which it had been made to assist. And its claims were frequently pressed upon him, by old companions. He did not, therefore, wholly renounce it. It had been used by him only for good, and courtesy and consistency required him, not violently and suddenly to cast it off He did not patronize it after the objects of war had been obtained. It fell into neglect upon the restoration of peace, and remained so until his death. He was undoubtedly opposed to its renewal. In 1794 he said to several of his confinential friends: "The real people occasionally assembled in order to express their sentiments, on politieal subjects, ought never to be confounded with permanent, self-appointed societies, usurping the right to control constituted authorities, and to dictate to public opinion. While the former was entitled to respect, the latter was incompatible with all government, and must either sink into general disesteem, or finally overturn the established order of things."

The greatest Masonic authority* in this State, with all the honors of the institution thick upon him, about four years ago publicly declared, that Masonry was sometimes abused to political objects. In our own village, before one of its most respectable magistrates, when in the exercise of his official duty, we have seen a bold attempt to use it for the purpose of procuring impunity from all the legal consequences of imputed crime In forty counties of this State, being all from which authentic information could be obtained, it was ascertained, by the Anti-masonic convention assembled last winter in Albany, that, in the year when Morgan was martyred, there were in office thirty-three Masonic Sheriffs. More than half of the important public offices in the Union are filled by Freemasons, though they do not count one in four of the whole number of persons equally well qualified and eligible to fill them. Inquire for yourselves as to the number of Masons, who have filled the town, county and State offiees, within your knowledge; and you will not fail to discern a striking effect of the inequality produced by the obligations of Freemasonry.

If you have read the statements of respectable men, who have renounced it, you have learnt, that in ordinary times and in many cases, it has successfully assailed the great duties, upon which all our social advantages depend. Its obligations are utterly destructive of that equality of right, which our constitutions and laws are intended to maintain. They are inconsistent with the oaths of legislators, judges, grand jurors, petit jurors, sheriffs, and every other public functionary, because they enjoin illegal and unrighteous favor to brethren, and unjust and oppressive opposition to the uninitiated, in a vast variety of the most important exigencies of life. They are now, and have long been fatal to that political equality, which every freeman should most highly prize, because it is the only effieient means of suppressing all wrongful inequality.

No man would dare to take upon himself the obligations of Freemasonry in public. Or if he did, no man would expect public favor afterwards. And shall we permit their existence because they are taken secretly? Shall we yield up all our rights as a boon to Freemasons, for the favor they have conferred upon us, by fraudulently usurping most of them, through the fatal efficacy of their secrecy, their tokens, their cipher and their oaths? Have we free hearts, free minds, self-respect, social love, intelligence to look before and after us, and shall we be hewers of wood and drawers of water, for an institution rotten to the core? of whieh the principles and deeds have covered all over with blisters the fairest body politic that ever was presented to the admiration of the world? of which the only practical use is to forge, in its gloomy fires, and fasten upon us, and all the uninitiated forever, the chains of a degrading servitude? Will you submit to this? I know you will not submit to it. I know the hour draws nigh when the whole country will be arrrayed in opposition to it, when the Dagon of these Philistines who have come upon us, when the kings and priests of Freemasonry with all their courts, their altars, and their gods shall sink together into everlasting oblivion, and the gavel of Masonic vengeance shall be the weapon of official oppression no more forever.

To abolish the evils of Freemasonry, open and concealed, is the object of Anti-masonry, and what considerate citizen will not approve it? If Masonry be the Pandora's box from which all possible evils to ourselves and country are to be feared, let us shut it up. If it be a noisome seed bed of the most pernicious weeds, let us eradieate the weeds, remove its smothering enclosure, introduce the cheerful light and the wholesome air, dig it over, through all its compartments, and sow it with healthy and nutritious wheat. Whatever it may be likened to, let us take effectual measures to exclude its evils.

How can this be done? By resorting to the ballot-box, and by that alone. And shall we be slanderously and maliciously assailed with insinuations of sinister purposes, and with opprobrious epithets, for betaking ourselves to this resort? Is it not peaceable? Is it not honest? Is it not lawful? Is it not consistent with all the rights of others? If it is not then their rights are wrongs to us, of which we must take the redress into our own hands.

* De Witt Clinton.

A WASHINGTON LETTER FROM PHILADELPHIA.

PHILADLPHIA, PA., July, 17, 1884.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I left Washington on the morning of the 16th. There is comparatively little of interest in that city sinee the adjournment of Congress. All political parties seem satisfied with their nominations and are making vigorous efforts to sustain them. It is greatly to be deplored that politieal influences are so largely from the lowest and worst elements of society. Perry Carson, the colored delegate to the Chicago Republican convention, applied to the authorities for permission to have a Blaine and Logan pole-raising in front of his saloon on Pennsylvania Avenue. Now in view of the fact that nearly all sueh meetings have been attended with fights and brought disgraee on the Republiean party and on the city, his application was refused. Nevertheless it was held, with bands of music and speeehes, but haply no riot. It is the first in this campaign.

The calling on Ex-Senator Pomeroy by the Chinese embassy to express their gratitude for the recognition of the rights of humanity by the American party was most pleasant and significant. How deplorable the fact that great political parties have so much fear of a few unprincipled men led by Dennis Kearney and others of his stamp, that they dare not defend the rights of any but Caucasians or those of American birth!

It is, however, a matter of devout thanksgiving that there yet remains some respect for Christian principles, and that there is at the head of the Post Office Department one who dares to use his authority in opposition to lotteries and other demoralizing influences. The following circular just issued, inaugurates a needed reform. Much credit is due to Josiah Leeds of this city and other members of the Society of Friends for seeuring its issuance.

THE SALE OF PERNICIOUS LITERATURE PROHIBITED ON GOVERNMENT PROPERTY.

In consequence of representations lately made by members of the Society of Friends, and by the Presbyterian and Baptist Ministers' Meetings of this city, to Postmaster-General Gresham, and by him referred to the Treasury Department, relative to the fact that papers of an obscene, immoral and pernicious character generally, were on sale at the news-stand in the new City Post Office, the custodian of the latter building has been notified to "issue such instructions as will prohibit the display or sale of all publications of the character referred to." With respect to the further suggestion likewise made to the department by the above remonstrants—that a general prohibitory order upon the subject should issue, Assistant Secretary Coon states, that as authority has been given in but a limited number of instances to erect such stands, "prompt measures will be taken to abate the nuisance," should complaint be made to the Department that demoralizing literature is offered for sale at any of the allowed plaees.

Since I came to this city I have called on the editors of the Christian Recorder and had a pleasant interview. They disclaim any responsibility for the Masonic fraternity, and say that their paper is the organ of the A. M. E. church only. They say that the advertisement has not been in the Recorder for a long time. Still they do not say that The People's Advocate, the paper from whieh I copied it, had no authority for its publication.

Much interest is being felt in this city in the approaching Prohibition convention in Pittsburgh, and it is hoped that Gov. St. John and Pres. Seelye will be nominated.

Yours faithfully, H. H. HINMAN.

A large celebration was held at Kossuth July 4th, at which Prof. C. A. Blanchard, Revs. T. P. Robb, J. W. Dill, M. A. Gault and others spoke.

This is old battle ground on the question of secrecy. On Decoration Day the secret orders manipulated the programme, securing a tenth rate speaker whose address was only a eulogy on secretism. Yet the friends of light quietly submitted. In arranging for the Fourth, the Covenanters and W. C. T. U's. led off, securing Prof. Blanchard as orator, and running the exercises in the interests of prohibition. Nothing was said on the subject of secretism, yet many of the fraternity men did what they could to break up the celebration.

One of them wrote an abusive letter in the Hawkeye denouncing the Covenanters as a sect who refused to support the government; while it can be proven that morc Covenanters in proportion to their numbers fought for the Union in the late war than any other sect. The W. C. T. U· also came in for a share of abuse for using the day as a prohibition rally. Prof. Blanchard's address was one of his best efforts, and elicited loud applause from the large audience.—Blanchard Record.

Governor St. John was one of the attractions at Henry C. Bowen's Fourth of July celebration at his home in Woodstock, Conn. I wonder if it is "significant of much." The Independent is "semi-detaehed" at present. —Union Signal.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

SAMUEL C. POMEROY,

OF KANSAS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,

OF CONNECTICUT.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable;

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights, while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion, or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties, as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it. Yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy; and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living, and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country; "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

—The Prohibition party hold their national convention in Pittsburgh next week, and a Mr. R. H McDonald, of California, is an aspirant for the nomination. One of the claims set up for him is that he is a member of the Masonic fraternity. He is set forth as a beautiful pony, but Masonry makes him badly lame in the off hind foot. It is a reform party which he aspires to represent —and the idea of calling upon the National Christian Association to vote for a lodge-man! But so it is. The timber which splits easily, continues to split easily, ad infinitum. A new feature in political campaigning has been introduced by the fertile genius of our neighbor, the ladies' Signal—the temperance ladies are uniting in prayer for an increase of votes for the Prohibition candidate. But can the Signal ladies consent to leave the name of Christ out of their political prayers?—The Interior.

S. C. POMEROY IN 1865.

The first National Congregational Council met in Boston, in June, 1865. In the report of a large committee, on the "State of the Country," we find the following with other resolutions:

"Resolved, That wrongs committed against our people and union soldiers, beyond the measure of the laws of war,—such as assasination, arson, introduction of pestilence, the massacre of captives, and the deliberate and systematic slow murder of tens of thousands of prisoners, by exposure and starvation,—are crimes that can find no shelter under the pretext of being "political offenses" and are beyond the pale of amnesties, challenging upon their authors, whenever, and wherever, lawfully convicted, justice from our own government, as well as the wrath of Heaven."

After the report with its resolutions was read to the Council, one after another of the delegates rose and suggested additions and emendations the effect of which, if adopted, would have been to tone down the report as given by the committee. Hon. S. C. Pomeroy of Kansas, who was of the committee drafting the report, rose and said:

"It is not to be supposed that in a single resolution, or two resolutions the committee could report what would be acceptable to everybody. Our only effort was, to hit upon some general topics on which we could all agree, and report them to the Council. The fact is, the report would suit me better, if we spoke out a little more plainly about hanging somebody. (Applause) I am very willing to mingle our justice with mercy to the common people of the South, as has been suggested, but it does seem to me it is time somebody was hung. (Applause.) Some wholesome hanging, I think would have settled this question in the minds of the American people long ago; and I do not believe that a convention, even of this character, composed largely of clergymen, men who love forgiveness and mercy, would be harmed if it adopted a little stiffer resolution on this question. I will only say, that I yielded to this report, on that question, for the sake of harmony, because I thought everybody would go for it; I never supposed that any body would want to temper it more mildly."

The question was then put and the report adopted. See p. 245, N. C. C. report. The stir and strife in our country, the condition of the ex-slaves, and the lawlessness of their oppressors, convince us that our land is not yet purged from blood. Isaiah says, "For behold the Lord cometh out of his place * * * the earth also shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain. In that day shall the Lord of hosts be for a crown of glory, and for a diadem of beauty unto the residue of his people. And for a spirit of judgment to him that sitteth in judgment, and for strength to them that turn the battle to the gates."

We are glad to publish the outspoken utterances of our Presidential candidate in the early days of reconstruction, when the bravest and noblest in the land felt a burning indignation to see Jeff Davis and hosts of his fellow conspirators lift up themselves and go abroad unwhipped of justice.

Is it too late for our government to give some bounty to those who fought bravely for us, and after years of unpaid toil in slavery, were turned out with only the clothing on their persons, to shift for themselves and that in an enemies' country, or too late to mete out even-handed justice to those who, in the language of the above resolution, stopped at no measures as too vile, or inhuman, in their attempt to destroy this fair land, the heritage of the Lord to us? REPUBLICAN MANAGERS IN COUNCIL.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—While waiting a train yesterday in the Salamanca depot, we chanced to step into the eating room connected with which was a bar, and overheard an excited conversation between eight well-dressed men, who were evidently leaders in the Republican ranks in that city. They had a petition which they had been circulating among the saloonists to procure necessary funds to carry on the campaign. One (evidently a leader) swore that Mike somebody, in contributing $25.00 had given too much, as he only netted 50 cts. a keg on his beer after expenses were paid. They had only raised $280 thus far but had high hopes for the future. Occasionally stopping in their conversation, which consisted largely in oaths, they imbibed the old rye whisky, which flowed freely.

We noted that five out of the eight wore the "mark of the beast," on their watch chains, "In hoc Signo Vinces." Doubtless their drinking wine from a human skull assisted them greatly in buying votes for the "grand old party."

And these, O Salamanca, are your office holders! Men who administer your laws! Men to whom you have given the sacred right of rule and to whom you look for justice! How long, O Lord, how long!. W. B. S.

NATIONALITIES.

The numerous foreigners among us naturally cling to their language and religion, but by-and-by become absorbed into our civilization. We have party spirit among foreigners on their old questions sometimes more bitter than even that which divides parties here. The Orangemen and Catholics may serve to illustrate the fact. There are however many minor points which cause foreigners to form clubs and societies of all kinds. The Germans, etc., would do away with our Sabbath! The fact is that however amiable some objects may be, that the best possible reasons exist for AMERICANIZING THEM ALL and dropping every insignia of a different allegiance. But how shall we Americanize them? The easiest and best way would be for them all to join the American PARTY!

CORRESPONDENCE.

AN ODD-FELLOW'S HONOR.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—A lady whose acquaintance we made the past winter at Maple River, Mich., related to us the following respecting her step son, who is an Odd-fellow. This lady had a copy of Bernard's Light on Masonry and Odd-fellowship, and her step son asked her to lend it to him. She objected to lending it to him, telling him she should never see it again; that he would destroy it, or at least would never return it. He most solemnly assured her that he would return it to her. To use her own language; "He promised by all that was good and great that he would return the book." She had at the time one of this step son's books in her house, entitled The History of the Bible. He told her he would leave that book in her possession until he should return hers. Said he, "If I do not bring back your book that book shall be yours." Thus assured she allowed him to take Bernard's book. The book was never returned. The History of the Bible which he left with her as a hostage was not long after slyly taken away, so that she lost both.

GOD AND COUNTRY.

MARYSVILLE, MO.

TO ALL TRUE REFORMERS:—I have only time to say a few things Our work is an unselfish one. Our Ruler is the great God. Our work is to do good. In this short letter I shall mention papers only, or mainly. To my mind it is clear that it is possible for us to have too many reform papers. The same trouble I see as to the church question. In a word, let me tell you how this whole matter looks to me. Our work is one, and the same in church and state. Though there can be no union of church and state, still there is a glorious oneness in each department; so much so, as they move forward in grand harmony,—God's church as the salt and light of the nation; the Christian nation by her just and righteous acts exalted far above heathen nations.

Can we not all see at a glance, the nature and oneness of our work? Hence if we can do more to save our country with two grand papers than we can with twenty small papers, which may be struggling between life and death, which is best? All I want is, to know what is the best plan.

In this reform work we have no more to do with self, than we have to do with the devil. Beloved, at the convention at Chicago lately, I felt deep down in my soul more of the power of God than I have felt for years in the so-called revivals, in these last days. I saw and felt that the holy kiss was given there. Hence I say, beloved, the bond or the tie that binds us together is two fold: first, if we are saved, by faith, through grace. This bond which holds us together is the only perfect one that God ever has or ever will make. Talk to me about the Masonic tie as compared to this, either as to its nature or durability! No use talking, the true American tie is our precious, God-given country, the land of the free, the home of the brave. Hence as God's own reformers, let us first be true to God. Then we shall be true to every citizen in these United States and to all that may come to make their home among us. Let us be true, if we stand alone. Yours, R. SMITH.

A CALIFORNIA LETTER.

HOLLISTER, Cal., June 27, 1884.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It is current in other countries that the United States is the best nation in the world; that the liberty of speech, of the press, of free ballot and of manhood is universal, and the dollar is not made a test of character without any regard to how it may be acquired. But as in the days of slavery, so in the days of Masonic craft, these inestimable blessings are not willingly allowed.

California is a most desirable part of the country. The Creator has filled it with wealth, sunshine and beauty, but some of the works of man in it tend to make the heart sad. The State has had no Sabbath since the last Legislature; but instead, plenty of whisky and lager beer. This month has been opened in the most prominent and central part of the town of Hollister, San Benito county, a lager beer and whisky dead-fall with its doors wide open, enjoying the Democratic privilege of no Sabbath, and its walls covered with glaring notices of its business. This is an exhibition of the shame of the place. The proprietors of this place speak German fluently. On the opposite corner from this one is another using the same language and in the same business. It seems that the people do very much to debase a country.

You say in your issue of June 12 that Blaine is not a Mason. This is a satisfaction to all who have resolved never to vote for any one connected with the Morgan-killing craft. But Republicanism is only an expedient. What is needed is a power in the land, that will turn the people to the fear of God, and love him and prohibition and to hate lager and all its concomitants, and act honestly. Will this ever be before the Second Coming? Shall California have a Sabbath, and lodge craft be no more? God grant it. The writer of these lines had to hold up his right hand to acquire the rights of a citizen, and he finds that there are many native born who need badly to be naturalized in some way.

FRENCH ON BOTH SIDES THE WATER.

The French Canadians have been holding their National Cclebration in Montreal a la Jean Baptiste—commemorating the settlement of Canada and their faithful adherence to the French language and the Roman Catholic religion—at the same time rejoicing in their escape from the dangers of infidelity and from the great French Revolution by the protection of the United Kingdom under whose flag they have proved so prolific and so prosperous, and to which they rejoice to be in allegiance. But they love their own historical inheritance and as Germans and Irish do in this country, they can rejoice in their language and faith and habits and at the same time be perfectly loyal in their political relations.

There is by the way a curious feature of difference between the New France within the Dominion of Canada and the France of Europe to-day. The latter by her irreverent use of marriage and divorce has become the nation least productive of population in Europe, and the French of Canada under what some might call the tyranny of England, but which really is practical self-government, have become a people whose increase naturally is greater than any in Europe. This is ascribed to their reverence for the marriage state and their faithful adherence to the Roman Catholic church.

This New France may be said to have colonies in our country which are represented at such gatherings. The province of Manitoba is, however, the greatest offshoot and nourishes hopefully the growth into the excellencies claimed for Quebec.

All very well in its way, but shall we not hope that the French in our country shall make progress in their ideas as well as people of their origin? Certainly we do, and hence when they become wise enough we may admit them into our own happy family!! F. H.

PITH AND POINT.

NO MASONS IN TOWN.

I must say I like the Cynosure for the truths it contains, which are very rarely found in the papers of to-day. It publishes just what I know to be true. My prayer is for the advocates of truth in every position. I am making friends for the Cynosnre in our town and neighborhood. We have not one Mason in our little town nor do we want any.—T. P. MOON, Emmet, Dade Co., Mo.

CANNOT PREACH CHRIST AND HOLD TO THE LODGE.

How can any of those who profess to preach the word of Christ and to hold him up to their fellow men as an example for them to follow—how can they consistently declare his opcn gospel, enjoin on others to imitate him, and yet they themselves be members of, and uphold an organization which man has created, where secrecy is enjoined, whose doings the world shall know nothing about, but where the vengeance of the society shall be terribly fclt, provided any of its doings shall be made known? It is a mystery to me how any professed follower of Christ and prcacher of his gospel can put himself in the position where his course shall contradict his preaching and his acts deny the example which he would hold up to others. He preaches an open gospel and urgcs upon others to come and embrace it and do as he has done; and he holds up Christ as a teacher above all others whose example was perfect, whose way was righteous, whose course was just, and the following of whom alone will bring immortal happiness and secure eternal life; and yet he himself is a member of an organization into which the world at large must not enter, whose doors are locked, whose doings are kept a profound secret, and which was gotten up not to do good to the world at large and to benefit mankind generally, but for their own personal benefit, pleasure and profit. The select few that are members may be entertained; but the world at large must stay without to take care of themselves and remain in their own needy and unassisted condition. "Oh! consistency thou art a jewel." Do these men imitate Christ, whose doctrinc thcy profess to preach, and whose example they say we must follow? Certainly they do not in this, if thcy do in othcr things, but dirccily oppose him. —DAVID L. CUSHMAN.

LITERATURE.

THE HISTORY OF FRANCE, from the Earliest Times to 1848, by M. Guizot and his daughter Mme. Guizot DeWitt. Translated by Robert Black. Complete in eight volumes, illustrated. Price 75 cents per volume. John B. Alden, New York.

No one who has read the charming History of England by the same author but will desire to read the work of so celebrated an author when devotcd to his own country. M. Guizot, the author and statesman, died only ten years ago at the extreme age of 87 years. His historical works number scores of volumes, and some, as the History of Civilization, have a wide international repute. In 1837 he was entrusted by the government of the United States with writing a Life of Washington. His work procured him the honor of having his portrait placed in the House of Represcntatives. Guizot's parents were Protestants, and he was well known as a defender of Protestant Christianity, of whom France has furnished but few during this century. His father was executed in 1794, during the Revolution. Guizot was very fond of his family and home, although in public life he is described as of a cold and unpopular manner, a man of rectitude and austere morals. "I have never," he wrote, "felt myself truly and completely happy, except through my affections and in the bosom of my affections. Life is in the heart, and the heart is in the family." In the midst of the most pressing political affairs he superintended carefully the education of his children and watched with a fond solicitude the development of their characters, and in turn confided to them, as though of mature years, the cares of his public life. "Those who have seen him," says a writer in the London Academy, "surrounded by his children and grandchildren in his beloved dwelling at Val Richer, will not lose the remembrance. The sight of a numerous family, closely united around a beloved, respected and indulgent head, of whom all are proud, eager to seek from him advice, strength and reward in the struggles of life, eager to adorn and sweeten his old age, is always a beautiful one. But when the head of the family is a man of the importance of M. Guizot, the spectacle is still grander and still more touching." We may from this picture of Guizot's inner life learn the charm of these volumes. Their origin was at the fireside where the aged statesman instructed his grandchildrcn in the history of their country, and adapted his narrative and illustrations to their eager fancy. This gives to his pages a glow of eloquence, the warmth of animation, and the charm of simplicity which entrances the reader and captivates his attention. The fireside discourses were written out and revised and given to the publishers in 1869. This superb American edition, of which three volumes are received, is illustrated with over 400 engravings, and makes a noble addition to our literature, and at such remarkable small cost that every respectable library should have a set.

IS THE BIBLE INSPIRED? By Rev. James H. Brookes, D.D., editor of the Truth, St. Louis, Mo. Pp. 120. Price 50c. Chas. B. Cox, St. Louis.

In addition to the carc of a large church Dr. Brookes is ministering continually through the columns of the Truth and by such volumes of practical Christianity as this to the great congregation of reading men and women. The book has been prepared in accordance with the idea suggested by Prof. Briggs in Biblical study: "The doctrine of inspiration may be constructed by a careful, painstaking study of the sacred Scriptures themselves, gathering together their testimony as to their own origin, character, design, value and authority." Proceeding in this way, the book establishes beyond the possibility of doubt in any mind subject to the word of God the truth of its verbal inspiration. The author approaches the subject by an opening chapter in which he proves by numerous quotations that the inspiration of the Bible has been the universal faith of the church up to a very recent date. The modern theories of inspiration are then reviewed and then the argument proper is taken up and the Scripture evidence of inspiration is gathered from the different parts of the Word in order: Historical books and Psalms, Prophetical books, and the Historical books and Epistles of the New Testament. Dr. Brookes opens up a rich mine which few Christians have explored, and none have made this wealth so accessible. The majority of professing Christians will read this book with surprise and delight.

The current number of The Missionary Review opens with a thrilling article on self-supporting missions, reviewing and highly commending a history of the Bassein Karen mission in the East Indies. The difficulties presented by the Baptist Missionary Union to the successful work of the missionaries among the Karens led to the formation of the Baptist Free Mission Society, whose organ, the American Baptist, under Dr. Nathan Brown, was a power for Christ both at home and abroad, not fearing to proclaim the truth respecting Freemasonry. We would that this article could be read and pondered in every Christian housechold. "Eromango and its Missions," "Presbyterian Polity and Foreign Missions," and a review of Foreign Missionary work reported last year, make up the bulk of this interesting magazine. The Independent Foreign Missions have an honorable recognition in the Review. Published by Rev. R. G. Wilder, Princeton, N. J.

The English Illustrated Magazine gives us a choice Jù ly number. "The Royal Collection of Miniatures at Windsor Castle" gives a reproduction, finely engraved, of some remarkable portraits of historical characters. "An Unsentimental Journey through Cornwall" is continued with its fine views ef coast scenery. No less interesting are the pictures of the "Weasel and his Family" with pcn and graver; and the physiologist will read with delight "How a Bone is Built."

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON V.—August 3, 1884.—David's Repentance.—Psalms 51:1-10.

GOLDEN TEXT.—My sin is ever before me.—Psalms 51:3

"David's sin and repentance." The great sin of David is not to be excused. It was a blot on one of the noblest of characters, "the romantic friend, the chivalrous leader, the devoted father," the broad statesman, the successful soldier, the sublime poet, the devout soul, the self-sacrificing man, the true moralist, the servant of God; but it is well to remember that his case has an exceptional collection of specialties in it. He was a man of very strong passions, a soldier, and an oriental monarch having despotic power; no other king of his time would have felt any compunction for having acting as he did.—Spurgeon.

Many make a mock at David's sin who say nothing of his repentance. It is enough for them to read in one place that he was the man after God's own heart, and in another that he committed these great sins, and forthwith they turn the battery of their scorn on the religion of the Bible. But all such procedure is unreasonable. David did not sin because he was the man according to God's own heart, but in spite of his being so; while if he had not been in the main a godly man, he would have remained in his sin, and would have taken no step of any sort to acknowledge his guilt, or to raise himself from the degradation into which he had fallen.—Taylor.

David's life and history, as written for us in those Psalms of his, I consider to be the truest emblem ever given of a man's moral progress and warfare here below. All earnest souls will ever discern in it the faithful struggle of an earnest human soul toward what is good and best,—struggle often baffled sore, baffled down into an entire wreck, yet a struggle never ended; ever with tears, repentance, true, unconquerable purpose begun anew. Poor human nature! Is not a man's walking in truth always that,—"a succession of falls"? Man can do no other. In this wild clement of a life he has to struggle upward, now fallen, now abased; and ever with tears, repentance, and a bleeding heart, he has to rise again, struggle again, still onward. That his struggle be a faithful, unconquerable one, that is the question of questions.—Thomas Carlyle.

"The Fifty-first Psalm." The whole Psalm. This Psalm is often and fitly called "The Sinner's Guide." In some of its versions it often helps the returning sinner. It has been adopted in all ages as that which expresses best and most fully the true spirit of penitence.—Cook.

Note the three words expressing God's forgiving love. (1) Mercy, favor and pity to one who deserves punishment. (2) Loving-kindness. What a choice word is that of our English version, a rare compound of precious things, love and kindness sweetly blended in one, "loving-kindness"!—Spurgeon.

It speaks of deep, tender, parental sympathy, of an abundance and overflow of those feelings which assure the penitent child of his mother's unalterable love, of her yearnings for his return to her bosom. So great a sin could not be blotted out but by a great outpouring of grace.—Cook, (3) Tender mercies. The gentle compassion which would not break the bruised reed or quench the smoking flax. The other words are singular, expressing infinite depth and breadth, as of the air, or sky, or ocean, measureless and inconceivable; this word is in the plural to express numberless acts of mercy to cover uncounted sins.—Pel.

Note the three words used in this and the next verse to express sinfulness. (1) Transgression signifies the passing over a boundary doing what is prohibited. (2) Iniquity signifies what is turned out of its proper course or situation; anything morally distorted or perverted, what is contrary to equity (iniquity) or justice.—Adam Clarke. (3) Sin. The original word signifies to miss an aim, as an archer does who shoots short of his mark, beyond, or beside it. It is also used for treading aside or tripping in the act of walking. In a spiritual sense it denotes dcviation from a rule whether by omission or commission.—Biddulph. The three involve every kind and degree of guilt, except that of wilful, impenitent wickedness.—Cook.

"Against thee, thee only, have I sinned." The word "only" is striking, considering how David had cruelly injured his fellow men, and the terrible results of his guilt: but (1) sin, as such, is dirccted primarily against God. His law is broken, his name dishonored, and the special heinousness even of such offences as that of David consists in their antagonism to God's will. (2) At the same time the Hebrew idiom must be remembered, which represents secondary and subordinate objects as absolutely nothing compared with the first and highest. Whatever guilt David might have contracted toward man, in the mind of a true Israelite it was absolutely nothing compared with his sin against God.—Cook.

"And in the hidden part thou shalt make me to know wisdom." No one can teach our innermost nature but the Lord; but he can instruct us to profit. The Holy Spirit can write the law on our heart, and that is the sum of practical wisdom. He can put the fear of the Lord within, and that is the beginning of wisdom. He can reveal Christ in us, and he is essential wisdom. Such poor, foolish, disarranged souls as ours, shall yet be ordered aright, and truth and wisdom shall reign within us. —Spurgeon.

"That the bones which thou hast broken may rejoice." He was like a poor wretch whose bones are crushed, crushed by no ordinary means, but by omnipotence itself. He groaned under no mere flesh wounds. He compares the joy that God's dcclaring himsclf fully reconciled to him would produce in his mind, to that inconceivable pleasure which would arise from the instantaneous restoring and healing those bones, after they had been thus broken and crushed to pieces.—Samuel Chandler.

"Create." "A word always used strictly of the creative power of God. The whole spiritual being of the man had, as it were, fallen into chaos." What he needed was such a change as when God created the world. He wanted his whole spiritual nature made over anew from God. The regeneration of the soul is a work of creative power.—Murphy.

"Take not thy Holy Spirit from me." The spirit whereby David was conseerated to his kingly office, and endued with the gifts and graces requisite for discharging its duties (see 1 Sam. 16:13), where it is said that after he was anointed by Samuel "the Spirit of the Lord eame upon David from that day forward."—Cook. He knew well the effect of the withdrawal of God's spirit from Saul. How he grew worse and worse, how wretched he was in mind, how he was continually working out his terrible fate till he fell before his enemies. Against this David prayed.

"Uphold me with thy free spirit" Rather uphold me with a willing spirit: that is, make my spirit willing. A willing spirit is one which voluntarily and cheerfully takes up the service of God.—Todd.

"Free Spirit." Means properly, willing, voluntary, ready, prompt. It would seem here to mean "a willing spirit," referring to David's own mind or spirit.—Barnes.

"Then will I teach transgressors thy ways." None instruct others so well as those who have been experimentally taught of God themselves. Huntingdon's degree of S.S., or Sinner Saved, is more needful for a soul-winning evangelist than either M.A. or D.D. The pardoned sinner's matter will be good, for he has been taught in the school of experience, and his manner will be telling, for he will speak sympathetically, as one who has felt what he declares.—Spurgeon.

"O Lord, open thou my lips." His lips have been closed by guilt: when the conscience is freed prayers and thanksgiving will flow from it fully and copiously.—Cook. He is so afraid of himself that he commits his whole being to the divine care, and fears to speak till the Lord unstops his shame-silenced mouth. How marvellously the Lord can open our lips, and what divine things ean we poor simpletons pour forth under his inspiration! This prayer of a penitent is a golden petition for a preacher (or teacher).—Spurgeon.

"Build thou the walls of Jerusalem." David has just declared that he puts no trust in saerifiees offered for the expiation of his personal guilt; for himself he has but one offering (unfeigned repentance), but as a king he feels differently; he can promise abundant sacrifices if, in his goodness God will complete (i. e. enable him to complete) the building of the walls of Jerusalem. The expressions which he uses are exactly appropriate to his own time, when he considerably enlarged the city (2 Sam. 5:9, 11), and encompassed the whole with walls, according to Josephus (Ant. VII. iii. § 2). It has been lately shown (by Mr. Simpson in an excellent article in the Christian Observer, No. 333) that the walls were in progress, probably approaching their eompletion, just about the time of David's fall. Nothing can be more natural than this allusion under such circumstances, when the king might well feel that his crime might bring with it a punishment which would be detrimental to his people. That David should close a hymn full of intense personal feelings with a prayer for his country aeeords well with what we know of his generous and kingly nature.—Cook.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

THE NEED OF CONFESSION.

1. Confession is the door of forgiveness. Vs. 1–5. There is an old saying that a fault confessed is half amended, and in a certain sense this is true—not because confession can atone for guilt or shield from just punishment, but because it shows that we are prepared to receive forgiveness without injury either to ourselves or our fellow beings. If David could have received pardon before he had confessed and repented of his sin he would have kept on sinning and involved himself and others still more deeply in guilt and unhappiness. Were it possible for God to pardon the unrepentant rumseller, drunkard or Sabbath breaker it would only work incalculable injury both to themselves and the world. God's plan which aims to destroy sin at its seat, the heart, will always be found not only the wisest but the kindest that could be deed.

2. The chief desire of the truly penitent is to be saved from sin—not from its consequences. Vs. 6–14. It is remarkable that David in this whole prayer does not make one petition to be delivered from the punishment due his sin, but more than half of the Psalm is taken up with an earnest cry to be delivered from the sin itself. "Create in me a clean heart, O God," is ever the burden of the true penitent's prayer. "Then will I teach transgressors thy ways; and sinners shall be converted unto thee." No one can warn so effectively against the perils of the intoxicating cup, or open the door of hope so wide to the drunkard as the reformed man. Gough and Murphy owe much of their wonderful success to their own past experience. And if such men as Finney, Ronayne and others had not been enticed into the lodge and by their confession and repentance borne fearless testimony to its wickedness our work against it would be rendered in a large degree ineffectual. "Deliver me from bloodguiltiness, O God," is a prayer which needs to be more universal than it is. Everybody can understand why the rumseller needs to pray this prayer when his business causes 60,000 of his countrymen to march to the tomb every year; or the drunkard, for he is committing self-murder besides rendering himself liable to kill in a liquor frenzy perhaps the one he loves best. But many forget that the moderate drinker who by his example is sending others on their mareh to death, as well as every Mason who belongs to an institution stained with the blood of Morgan and other innocent men needs to pray this prayer; and still greater numbers forget that we all need to pray it—that unless we are doing everything in our power to put down, drink, Masonry and every other evil which either takes life directly or shortens it, we are responsible for these evils and the crimes done by their means. The much forgiven love much and praise much. This Psalm ends with vows of adoration and thankfulness and a prayer for Zion injured so greatly by his fall. The church can have no true revivals till purged of sin by individual members confessing and repenting.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What was the old law of confession? Lev. 26:40; 5:5. How does this last text apply especially to a Masonic sin? How have the purest and best always felt about themselves? Job 42:6; Luke 5:8. What reason have those who are forgiven to be joyful? Rom. 8:1; Col. 1:12, 13. What connection between national confession and repentance and national judgments? 1 Ki. 8:33–50.

OBITUARY.

Inasmuch as it hath pleased our Heavenly Father to remove by death our brother, CUMMINGS NOE, one of the brightest lights of the church on this field of labor, and deeply feeling his loss; therefore,

RESOLVED: 1. That we have received in his death a loss almost irreparable. Yet would we bow in humble, though sad submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well.

2. That we extend to the family of Bro. Noe our deepest sympathy in this, the hour of their bereavement, trusting his God may be their God, and that the comfort with which he in his last hour was comforted may eomfort them.

3. That as followers of the same common Lord, with him we will endeavor to walk in the same path his feet have so faithfully trodden, and bear aloft the banner of the Cross which he only relinquished when the Messenger came to call him to his home.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent for publieation to the Religious Telescope, Christian Cynosure and Dixon Telegraph.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD, HENRY L. KELLOGG, } EDITORS.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 24, 1884.

TWENTY-FIVE CENTS TILL ELECTION IS OVER FOR A CAMPAIGN PAPER.

The publisher (Mr. Phillips), will send four copies of the Cynosure to four different addresses until after the Presidential election, for the sum of ONE DOLLAR.

There was, perhaps, never a time in the history of American Politics, when a strong Reform Campaign paper had so fair a field, and so good hope of success as now. The Republicans are divided. Butler is dividing the Democracy. The Prohibitionists must drop secrecy or submit to a rupture, or be ruled and betrayed by the Masons. Let us now hear from the "Old Guard."

"Once more unto the breach, dear friends, once more."

Masons and Mormons have paid men detailed to watch all the issues of the press.

Read "Pomeroy in 1865" in the great Congregational Council at Boston, by M. A. B. in this number.

Secretary Stoddard is pushing for our annual State convention in Illinois. In connection there should be a nominating convention for a State American ticket. Shall these conventions be held at Monmouth? Mr. James Bartlett Hobbs, the Prohibition nominee is talked of as our candidate. But we want candidates for Lieutenant Governor, Secretary of State, State Treasurer, Auditor and Attorney General. Who will find us the men, capable and clear of the lodge? Write speedily to Secretary Stoddard.

MR. J. S. TRASK of Skidmore, Nodaway Co., Mo., asks: "When were the Hot Springs of Arkansas transferred to the first settlers of that country?"

Arkansas, discovered and settled by the French in 1685, was part of Louisiana Territory, ceded by France to Spain in 1763; receded to France in 1800; and ceded to the U. S. by Bonaparte in 1803, April 30th.

The State of Arkansas was bounded and erected into a Territory by Congress in 1819 when titles could be and were made to settlers. Precisely when the Hot Springs, which are 150 miles back from the Mississippi, were patented to settlers we do not know. Local records must be searched for that information.

The Century gives a sober history of "The rise and DISBANDMENT of the Ku-Klux Klan." The Century article is a ruse. The Ku-Klux are not "disbanded," and will not be till the lodge is. The Klan was merely the lodge with coats changed and directed to a special object, viz., putting up the whites and putting down the blacks. Their masks and robes are still in Masonic closets, and they are rigid with the blood of ten thousand murdered Republican voters. What cares Blaine for that only so that he wins?

HOME MISSIONS.—The old American Home Missionary Society asks this year, ($500,000) half a million dollars for its work; and the American Missionary Association has some years asked as much. They say (see Home Missionary for July), "with the vigorous prosecution of this Home Missionary work, the country stands or falls." The American Missionary Association was started as a reform body, because the Home Missionary Society aided slave-holding churches. Now the American Missionary Association has pronounced against the lodge. The old society has not; and some of its missionaries worship the god of the lodge. But the good Dr. Badger said to the writer, "We will send any tract you will furnish us to every one of our missionaries. Will Secretaries Barrows and Strieby do the same?"

POMEROY VINDICATED.

Ex-Governor Green of Kansas, states to Rev. H. S. Limbocker: "I was present when the trap was sprung on Pomeroy, and knew all the parties, and was satisfied it (bribery) was a false charge. Pomeroy had used no money and needed to use none to buy votes. He had a fair majority without buying votes."—American.

The lodge murdered Morgan by drowning, and when his body was discovered contrived a scheme to prove the body that of the Canadian Monroe by the false swearing of Dr. Lewis, a high Mason. This lodge put $7,000 in York's hands, swore it was bribe money, and sunk Pomeroy as they did Morgan. But Morgan has a monument and so will Pomeroy.

DR. R. H. MCDONALD AND ST. JOHN.

We have received and read, with profound interest the circular and newspaper articles urging the claims of Dr. McDonald for nomination to the Presidency of the United States, and we notice also, in the papers, the withdrawal of Gov. St. John's name as candidate for the same office.

We are not in the secret of these movements, if there is any; but the California circular inspires us with the highest admiration and love for Dr. McDonald; and, at the same time we are puzzled and anxious about the means, motives, and influences which have induced St. John to withdraw. Time will develop all these things; for there is nothing secret which shall not be known and come abroad. The California circular says:

"Dr. McDonald was one of the charter members of the Tehama Lodge of Masons; the first lodge organized on the Pacific Coast, and for sixteen years he has been the only one of the original members."

Now we hasten to notify all concerned that if Dr. McDonald, or his friends at Pittsburgh, do not give the public assurance that, if nominated, he will withdraw from Tehama and other secret lodges, and confine himself to Christ's open methods of reform, the American party will oppose him, and pray for his defeat, much as we admire his record and love the man, for these reasons:

1. Without such withdrawal, every vote for McDonald will be a vote cast for the Masonic lodge which excludes Christ, tramples on the Sabbath, and mutilates the Bible by omitting the Saviour's name from the Scriptures used in the degrees of the Blue Lodge.

2. While Dr. McDonald recognizes his lodge oaths as binding on him, he is in sworn secret confederacy and brotherhood with thousands of distillers, brewers and saloon-keepers who are Masons and who oppose temperance and defy the laws.

We shall see friends at Pittsburgh, and sincerely hope so good and great a man as Dr. McDonald will not offend his Christian brethren who loathe and hate this anti-Christ by continuing to fellowship the "unfruitful works of darkness."

THE DOOM OF UNITED STATES.

The Council of the Amphictyons, B. C. 1200, the League of the Acheans, B. C. 450, and the Hebrew Commonwealth were instances of united states. They were all broken down by spurious worships. While the Amphictyonic Council met at Delphi, and that oracle ruled the rabble-gods of Greece, it protected the twelve states which composed it. But when the sham religion of Apollo was scattered, his priestess found to be bribed by Philip to "philipize," the concern broke down. Every hill and grove and fountain had its god or godling. No oath or promise was sacred; and the hero descendants of Marathon and Leuctra cringed before a Turkish bastinado. The Achean Union, some centuries later, fell by the same cause; viz., a multiplicity of oaths, and a nation of religious swindlers and cheats; till the world's conquerers became the slaves of Turks who believed in but one god.

The Hebrew united states, twelve in number (the same number as the Amphictyons), fell in precisely the same way. Under the presidency or kingship of Solomon, the twelve tribes or states were a unit. Their foreign commerce reached to India, and indeed, to all the considerable nations; and no nation dared invade them, any more than France, Germany or Russia would think of invading our United States.

What scattered and sunk them? Their prophets tell us in these few words: "They have walked after the imagination of their hearts, and after Baalim," (plural for gods.) And he describes the state of society thus: "They will deceive, every one his neighbor, and will not speak the truth." (Jer. 9: 5.) And he states at large, that in the rural districts "men can not hear the voice of cattle:" and "death is come up into our windows;" "to cut off children from without, and the young men from our streets." All this and much more fell upon and exterminated the Hebrew united states. So that wolves and jackals have come back to howl, and owls to hoot over the destruction of Palestine.

If in our late war, we had had four or five copperheads and secret oaths to where we had one, there would be very few cattle heard lowing in our prairies to-day!

The false worships of the Hebrew Baalim (gods), answered exactly to the secret society, spirit-circle, trades union, Ku-Klux worships of to-day. Each is in practice a religion by itself. Bishop Warburton says, "Every god had a secret worship to which none but the initiated were admitted." (See Macknight on the Ephesians, or Warburton's Legation.)

All remember how often the "secesh" would swear to support the Union and the Confederacy, back and forth. Their secret societies had broken them to swearing, to insult God by oaths which meant nothing.

This is what our United States are rapidly coming to. God is omitted from our Constitution and political platforms; and a nation without a God is, or will soon be, a nation of animals or brute beasts in human shape. Like the politico-religious Amphictyons and Acheans, the Hebrew "Baalim" worshipers, Masons, Odd-fellows, trades-unions, spirit-mongers, and the whole army of secret combinations, swear, promise and worship, each to the particular god of his circle or clan; and so take their religion from "devils, not from God;" and hence a universal relaxation of moral obligation; and the 9th chapter of Jeremiah and the history of Greeks and Jews will show us where we are to land, unless we vote for the American party or some party which recognizes the true God.

MYRON HOLLEY.

In the beautiful cemetery of Mt. Hope, Rochester, N. Y., on the sharp apex of one of its many beautiful summits, stands the monument of Myron Holley, one of the most unique and wonderful of men. He was born in Salisbury, Connecticut, April 29, 1779, and died in Rochester, March 4, 1841.

He was one of a large family of children, tall, handsome, eloquent; graduated from Williams' College at twenty years; studied law and was assigned by the court, as his first brief, to defend a man accused of murder; consulted with his client, became convinced of his guilt, went back into court, threw up his brief and never practiced law.

He married at twenty-five; joined a Congregational church at thirty-six; went into the New York Legislature at thirty-seven; devoted himself to public life till his death at sixty-two; handled millions of money; and died a poor but honest man. His monument was unveiled in a speech by Gerrit Smith, in the presence of 6,000 people. This is the outline of the life of the great and good man whom we sketch.

Samuel Adams, "father of the American Revolution," and Patrick Henry, its orator, failed as business men for want of attention to details. Myron Holley was like them. But no one suspected the honesty of either of them. They sometimes overlooked the little hinges on which the great doors of life turn. This was doubtless a defect. Cromwell and Bonaparte are said always to have blown out a second candle, where one would do.

Mr. Holley's life was devoted to three stupendous events: uniting Lake Erie with Hudson River, the overthrow of Freemasonry, and the fall of American slavery. We shall glance briefly at each.

I.—THE HUDSON AND ERIE CANAL.

In 1816 Mr. Holley entered on his labors in behalf of the great New York Canal. A canal of twenty-seven miles had been made in Massachusetts (the Middlesex), but it had made little impression on the country at large. But the Erie Canal from Albany to Buffalo must extend 353 miles through swamps and forests where bears and wolves still retained their pre-emption claims. Emigrants must push their way in wagons through these swamps, over corduroy bridges, to reach the Ohio wilderness and the prairies beyond. The only other way was to scale the Pennsylvania mountains by roads yet unmade. Mr. Holley undertook to open water communication through these forest swamps, and thus open a water-way from London, Hamburg, and the commercial capitals of the Old World, to Cleveland, Chicago and the ports of Lake Superior, through which wealth and population could pour into regions where States, like empires have risen as by the touch of magic. He, with a single assistant was to make contracts and carry out this stupendous undertaking. To do this he must enlighten ignorance; overcome prejudice; supplement scanty and grudged appropriations with his own means and credit; face personal and political opposition; and confront party animosity, more difficult to surmount than malaria and fever and ague by day, with a concert of wolves to sleep by at night. How Mr. Holley acquitted himself in these interesting surroundings we are told by De Witt Clinton himself, in his work printed at Albany, 1821:

"Mr. Holley was a member of the Legislature when the initiatory canal law was passed, which he advocated with the whole force of his talents. This gentleman is a member of a numerous family distinguished for genius. His mind is improved by reading, reflection and conversation, and is distinguished for research and acute discrimination. He has devoted his whole time and attention, mind and body to the canal. . . Whatever he touches he adorns, and whenever he speaks or writes he instructs. His mild and conciliatory manners, his elevated character, his spotless integrity, and his indefatigable business talents, have rendered his services as an acting Canal Commissioner invaluable."

Well, the great canal was completed, and fulfilled to the letter the prophecy of Mr. Holley in reply to its assailants before it was completed: "The wealth of every island and every lake visited by the light of heaven will contribute to weary its water with their commerce."

Nor is the quarter century and more of population and wealth pouring westward, and turning wilderness and prairie into States, the sole beneficence of this achievement. It called into birth and being towns, cities and villages whose enterprise called for and created the magnificent system of railroads which has succeeded and supplemented it.

De Witt Clinton eulogizes Mr. Holley as a Canal Commissioner. He was its treasurer and executor as well; letting the contracts, paying the contractors, planning, supervising and vindicating; in short, more than all others, furnishing the brains and heart of the movement.

He had now nothing to do but to repose on his laurels, at forty-five years of age, and the Canal, which soon silenced all opposition by success, would soon have made him one of the most praised and popular men of New York, if not in the Union. Let us see what he did.

II.—HIS ANTI-MASONRY.

De Witt Clinton, an ambitious man and patriot, the patron and friend of Mr. Holley, was Masonic "General Grand High Priest of the General Grand Lodge of the United States," as written in Salem Town's book. Besides this, Mr. Holley's family connections were Masons. Clinton relied on the lodge, as Clay did, to make him President of the United States. He would doubtless have succeeded but for the murder of Morgan. He failed; and, as Webster and Douglas did, he died as much from disappointment as from disease.

Mr. Holley was no Mason. His instinctive justice loathed a system of secret advantages and separation of families. His Canal was now running; his accounts settled, and his skies fair and bright. He might have still held office and honors. He paid small heed to Morgan's murder (Sept., 1826) till, in the words of his biographer, "He clearly saw, to his astonishment, that the courts of justice were obstructed and overawed by the lodge; then 'he did not confer with flesh and blood.'" Ten thousand Clintons could not have kept him from taking open ground against the lodge.

But neither he nor Seward and their associates understood Masonry. They regarded it as primarily political. They were mistaken.

Masonry started in a London tavern in 1717, and spread throughout Europe and America in twenty-five years; and it flourished alike under every variety of political system, as a system of worship of the god of this world. Like its Grand Master, the devil, it considers the "kingdoms of this world and the glory of them" as its pawns to purchase worship, the worship of our race.

Hence in our Revolution, it was on both sides, Monarchy and Republic. Luther's "salvation by faith" nearly squelched it in Protestant Europe. Popery hated it as its rival. The Puritans loathed it, yet it grew slowly from 1733 to 1812. It then grew rapidly by the idleness of war, and the hope of faring better as prisoners on both sides. Thirteen years after the war of 1812 its oft-quoted orator Brainerd, said at New London, June 24, "*It is powerful * * * throughout the civilized world.*" So indeed it was. No one now can conceive of its power before Morgan's murder. It was like the power of popery before Luther burnt the Pope's bull and was not burned himself.

Against this goblin power, Myron Holley threw himself with the spirit of an apostle and martyr. And when the political shavings-fire of Anti-masonry had burnt out and left Holley poor and unpopular; while Granger and Filmore deserted, and Seward floated among the white-caps on the sea of politics where Anti-masons had lifted him, by silent co-operation with Masons, Holley, who was their peer if not their superior, scorning the lodge in its success, betook himself to his garden, as Cincinnatus to his plow, and sold vegetables for a living! In this occupation an accomplished and aristocratic woman who was a stranger to him, pronounced him "the only gentleman she had seen in Rochester." And another declared that he "sold peas and potatoes with as much grace as he lectured in lyceums." The lodge would allow him to lecture, but excluded him from office which would bring emolument: as, years after, it shut Seward from the Presidency of the United States.

"The wedding of the waters," Lake Erie with the Hudson, took place in the fall of 1825, and Masons murdered Morgan the next year. The ship of Anti-masonry sunk by the ignorance of her pilots, was who took a Mason (Wirt) on board as her captain, who quit the quarter-deck in the heat of action. Wirt in 1832, received two hundred and twenty-eight thousand votes, after he had renounced his nomination! That same year, 1832, Garrison formed the New England Anti-slavery Society, and the god of the lodge used the slave question to protect and postpone the doom of Masonry. Yet 1,500 lodges and above 45,000 Masons gave up Masonry; and the lodge went South and became a "Southern institution." Lincoln was murdered, and Seward was sought to be because they were Anti-masons, and believed in their oaths. Andrew Johnson was spared and made President because he was a Mason of twenty-one degrees, and was the tool of the lodge. In this bloody grapple with the lodge-and-slave-power, Mr. Holley entitled himself "to the everlasting remembrance," which is promised to the just.

III.—AS AN ABOLITIONIST.

Mr. Garrison organized "Modern Abolitionism," and drew about him a motley class of persons agreed in nothing but hatred of slavery. As late as 1838, they voted in convention, that they could neither "hold office, nor vote for those who do," because "civil governments enforce their precepts at the point of the bayonet." And some of them came to adopt sentiments concerning miracles which bastardized the Son of God, and impugned the virtue of his mother. Of this sort was Mr. Oliver Johnson, Henry C. Wright and others. They thus proposed, in effect, to annihilate church and state in order to abolish slavery.

About this time James G. Birney emancipated his slaves and came North, teaching that slavery could only be abolished by voting and by law. But besides the Garrisonian non-resistants and non-voters, a great many good and sound men, like Lewis Tappan of New York, and Judge Jessup of Pennsylvania, deprecated "putting abolitionism into politics."

Myron Holly seemed born for this hour. In October, 1839, a great anti-slavery convention of 400 delegates met at Cleveland. In this convention Myron Holley brought forward a motion for an immediate nomination of candidates for President and Vice President of the United States, and sustained his motion with an eloquence whose reverberations linger yet. He was opposed by Mahan of Oberlin, Ben Wade, afterward Senator, and men of that stamp, and his motion had but a few votes in its favor, and Mr. Garrison's Liberator rejoiced in his defeat. Holley was not discouraged. In Warsaw, N. Y., in November, next month, a large county convention moved by Holley, nominated James G. Birney and F. I. Le Moyne to be voted for in what proved to be the "Log Cabin and Hard Cider" campaign of 1840. The ticket received 6,745 votes; and in 1844, four years later, 58,870 votes. The nomination of Birney and Le Moyne at Warsaw was made, as the battle of Lexington was fought, by the people. There were no officers at Lexington, and no party at Warsaw. But in April, 1, 1840, a hundred and twenty-one men met in the City Hall, Albany, of whom the late lamented Samuel Plumb was one, to "take into consideration the formation of a Liberty party." Abolitionists opposed to political action alluding to the day (April 1), called it "The April Fool's Convention." Dr. N. S. S. Beman of Troy, a strong Whig, spoke powerfully against the nomination, and had the vote been taken when Beman sat down there would have been no Liberty party then, at least.

Mr. Holley spoke two hours in reply. "His voice was smooth, distinct and musical." "He had not spoken five minutes, before," says his biographer, Elizur Wright, "eyes began to moisten, and he held the rapt attention of every auditor till he took his seat." Men said, "That was the most eloquent speech I ever heard." "Eloquent," replied one, "is no name for it. It was divine." Suffice it that the vote in favor of a party was carried by a majority of ten votes; forty-four not voting; but on the candidates, Birney and Le Moyne, the convention was nearly unanimous.

Mr. Garrison's comment was (Liberator, April 10th, 1840): "A more ridiculous farce * * * we have never had occasion to place on record." The cause moved steadily on. In 1848 the Abolitionists met in force at Buffalo, took the name of Free Soil party, in allusion to the struggle to make California and Kansas free States, and cast 291,263 votes. In 1852 they polled 156,149, and for John C. Fremont in 1856, 1,341,262, under the name of Republicans; before whom slavery fell in 1863. Such was the founder of the Liberty party, the pivot of the destiny of the United States.

As this sketch closes, the heart lingers, and the pen moves slow. A thousand heroes march through the writer's memory, and, with nods of recognition, ask, "Are you not going to mention me?" Alas, a list of their names even, would exceed the limits of this sketch. But their names and memories are safe where God keeps the records of the good, and in the eloquent words of Blaine, "They will be held in remembrance so long as the possession of great mental and moral attributes gives enduring and honorable fame."

—Pres. J. Blanchard, of the committee appointed by the National American convention to attend the Prohibition convention, started on Monday morning. He expects to meet other members of the committee, Senator Pomeroy and E. D. Bailey from Washington, and E. W. Kirby from Philadelphia. Pres. C. A. Blanchard will attend as Secretary Stoddard's proxy on the committee.

—The holding of a mass convention about September 1st for Anti-masonry and Christian politics is a grand idea Bro. H. A. Day, State Agent, is working up for the Michigan friends. The place selected is Macatawa Park, on Lake Michigan, in Ottawa county. Further particulars will soon be given.

—Several encouraging letters have already come in which are a promise that many friends of the reform regard the Cynosure as one of the best campaign documents and will take advantage of the campaign rate of four copies for a dollar, to circulate thousands of copies of the paper.

—The lecturers whose names have appeared week by week in our columns, deserve an occasional mention for their willingness to serve the cause and stand as a target for the shafts of lodgery. As by accident most of their names were omitted from their usual place they are all inserted properly on the 13th page.

—The friends in Michigan are reminded by Bro. H. A. Day, agent of their State association, that many who subscribed last year as members of the association have not been heard from. Their first payment has not been made and the second will be due in September. Bro. Day feels that financially the work does not show much encouragement. Let him have such assurance as will make him amend this statement.

—I. J. Gilbert of Derby, Conn., writes encouragingly of the work in his State, and orders tracts for distribution. He speaks of meeting a friend in the depot at New Haven, engaged in a similar work, who is also a reader of the Cynosure. He failed in the haste of departing trains to get the name of his brother colporteur and would be glad to receive a card from him should he read this note. Co-workers in the anti-lodge reform should cultivate each other's acquaintance and the Cynosure has no superior as a means of introduction and interchange, therefore write short articles for its columns, and get your neighbors to take it.

Washington's Farewell Address condemns secret societies, though not by name. As the terms of the address are general, they can of course be understood to apply to every organization which they fairly describe. June 15, 1876, the Cynosure published an account of the New York Tammany Society, which has figured so largely in all the late Democratic National Conventions. This account was republished from the Weekly Ithican, of Ithica, N. Y. The society was organized in 1789, and was called the Columbian Order and was a rival of the society of Cincinnati. The article says that in 1798, "For a year or two after this the society did not flourish to any great extent, as President Washington's denunciation of secret societies in general had almost killed it." And again: "From the organization of the society Alexander Hamilton was its most determined opponent, and when President Washington's Farewell Address appeared in 1796 he was the first to apply the reproof against secret societies contained in it to the Tammany organization. Hamilton favored the society of the Cincinnati, of which he was the projector and acknowledged leader, and he foresaw the danger to the country which would arise from a corrupt use of the power of a series of secret political societies of which the Tammany Society, or Columbian Order, might be the head."

To Patrons and Friends:—The discontinuance of the Cynosure to subscribers when their time expired has occasioned unpleasantness which ought to be avoided if possible, with justice to the best interests of the cause which you advocate and for which the Cynosure is published.

After careful consideration it has been decided to continue the Cynosure until ordered discontinued by the subscriber. In this way the giving of offense to old and tried friends will be avoided. Subscribers and friends sometimes forget after their subscription has expired, how fast the weeks and months go by; and it is hoped not only to avoid giving offense, but by your co-operation and the blessing of God to greatly enlarge and increase the circulation of your paper.

IMPORTANT LECTURE NOTICE.

I expect during the present year to devote a much larger portion of my time to the lecture work than I have in the year past. We expect also to enlarge our force of lecturers and colporteurs as we are able and the right men can be found. Will friends wanting lecturers make a note of this and write me so that arrangements can be made to save expense and time by systematizing the work. J. P. Stoddard General Agent, N. C. A.

THE HOME.

"POWER FROM ON HIGH."

O Christ, Thou heavenly Lamb,
Joy of the Father's heart;
Now let Thy love my soul inflame;
Fresh power to me impart!

Power to know the loss,
Suffered, dear Lord, by Thee;
Power to glory in the cross
Thou didst endure for me.

Power to feel Thy love,
And all its depths to know;
Power to fix the heart above,
And die to all below.

Power to keep the eye
Forever fixed on Thee;
Power to lift the warning cry,
To souls from wrath to flee.

Power lost souls to win
From Satan's mighty hold;
Power the wanderers to bring Back to the heavenly fold.

Power to watch and pray,
Lord Jesus, quickly come;
Power to hail the happy day,
Destined to bear me home.

Lord Jesus, then to me
Power divine impart,
To swell redemption's song to Thee,
For worthy, Lord, Thou art.

Then unto Thee I'll raise,
O Holy One in Three!
A song of undivided praise,
For power bestowed on me.

THE DIVINE ANOINTING.

Mr. Moody remarked: "If these young disciples would learn in the morning of their experience, one secret of success in Christian life and usefulness, it would save them from a great many dark hours. Conversion is one thing; the power of the Holy Ghost resting on us for Christian life and service is another thing. Many forget to look and pray for this latter blessing, and hence ninety-nine Christians out of a hundred have no abundance in life, and there is no power with their testimony to win souls. At the close of Christ's life, the one thing he taught his disciples to look for was power, and they were to look for that because the Holy Ghost was to come. They were 'sons of God,' but without this special power, this 'enduement of the Spirit.' Hence Christ's words, 'It is expedient for you that I go away, for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come. When he is come he shall guide you unto all truth, and he shall take of mine and show it unto you.' After he arose from the dead, he breathed on them and said, 'Receive ye the Holy Ghost;' so they must have had the Holy Ghost in some sense before. He told them to tarry in Jerusalem till they should be endued with 'power from on high,' I can imagine them saying, 'Why we have the power. Is not this a mistake to tell us to go back to Jerusalem and wait till the Holy Ghost comes?' Now converts, I entreat you to look for this enduement, and if you are thus anointed your influence will be far and near. We may all get in position, where God can and will take us up and use us. Then men shall not think so much of us, the instruments, as of God himself. Some Christians who once had the power have lost it. They work still, but without the anointing; they speak, but without unction."

MR. MOODY'S EXPERIENCE.

"Eight years ago I was anxious for ministers and workers to see this truth and seek for this power. I remember that dear man, the Rev. James Robertson of Newington, telling me that when the work began in Edinburgh, he could only preach once a week. He was suffering from heart disease. He prayed, and the Spirit of God came upon him; he seemed to be anointed for his burial. 'And now,' said he, 'I have preached eight times a week, for months, and enjoyed better health then for years gone.'

"I can myself go back almost twelve years, and remember two holy women who used to come to my meetings. It was delightful to see them there. When I began to preach, I could tell by the expression of their faces that they were praying for me. At the close of the Sabbath evening meetings they would say to me, 'We have been praying for you.' I said, 'Why don't you pray for the people?' They answered, 'You need the power.' 'I need power?' I said to myself; 'why, I thought I had power.' I had a large Sabbath school, and the largest congregation in Chicago. There were some conversions at the time. I was, in a sense, satisfied. But right along, these two godly women kept praying for me, and their earnest talk about 'anointeng for special service' set me to thinking. I asked them to come and talk with me, and we got down on our knees. They poured out their hearts that I might receive the anointing from the Holy Spirit, and there came greater hunger into my soul. I did not know what it was. I began to cry as I never did before. The hunger increased. I really felt that I did not want to live any longer, if I could not have this power for service. Then came the Chicago fire. I was burnt out of house and home, at two o'clock in the morning. This did not so much affect me; my heart was full of the yearning for Divine power. I was to go on a special mission to raise funds for the homeless, but my heart was not in the work for begging. I could not appeal. I was crying all the time that God would fill me with his Spirit. Well, one day, in the city of New York—oh, what a day! I cannot describe it; I seldom refer to it; it is almost too sacred an experience to name. Paul had an experience of which he never spoke for fourteen years. I can only say God revealed himself to me, and I had such an experience of his love that I had to ask him to stay his hand. I went to preaching again. The sermons were not different; I did not present any new truths; yet hundreds were converted. I would not now be placed back where I was before that blessed experience, if you would give me all Glasgow—it would be as the small dust of the balance. I tell you it is a sad day when a convert goes into the church, and that's the last you hear of him. If, however, you want this power for some selfish end—as for ambition, you will not get it. 'No flesh,' says God, 'shall glory in my presence.' God does want to bless Glasgow. May he empty us of self, and fill us with his Spirit." "Amen, so come Lord Jesus."—D. L. Moody.

TRAMP! TRAMP! TRAMP!

Luke 11: 5-8.

I heard the other day of a poor, hard-worked doctor, who was quite worn out with his labors during a very busy day. Home he went, got into his slippers and dressing-gown, and said to his wife—

"In five minutes I shall be in bed and asleep. I am so tired and so thoroughly worn out, that even if anyone sends for me in the night I shall not go. So if you hear the night-bell ring, just put your head out of the window and tell them so."

It was already past midnight, and the doctor was soon in bed and fast asleep.

It was about 3 o'clock, in the cold, gray mist before the dawning, that a man hurried up the street and pulled the night-bell vigorously. The drowsy doctor turned in bed; his little wife got out, and, throwing up the window, asked who was there and what he wanted. The man below replied that his wife was taken very ill, and that Doctor H. must come immediately.

"It is impossible," said his wife; "he is completely tired out. You must wait until the morning."

"But I cannot wait; he must come," urged the man.

"I tell you he cannot, my good man. He will come in the morning."

"How soon does he get up?" demanded the man.

"Well, about seven, I think."

"Then I'll just bide here till he comes; I don't go without him."

"You can please yourself," replied Mrs. H.; "but you will certainly have to wait four hours, and I should advise you to go home instead and wait there."

So saying she shut the window and went to bed again, she and her husband—who was broad awake by this time—congratulating themselves that he need not stir, and preparing to go to sleep again.

But alas! prepare as they would, sleep came not. Outside the doctor's window the man walked up and down. Tramp! Tramp! Tramp! The monotony was maddening; the sound grew terrible. In vain they pulled the clothes over their ears and tried not to hear. At the end of an hour the doctor jumped out of bed and pulled his clothes on.

"My dear, I'm going with that man; I cannot stand that tramp any longer. One might as well go as be annoyed with his importunity."

And the man got the doctor.

Does not that remind you of to-day's portion? It is an occurrence in real life that is just like the parable in Luke 11: 5, 6, 7, 8. "Because of his importunity" the man in the parable got his three loaves." It is only to teach us that God likes to be pleaded with. The Lord Jesus, our great Physician, is never weary, or worn out, or sleeping; but he loves to hear the cry of a sin-sick soul outside the door of heaven—"Lord, heal me;" or again, the pleading of some brother for a sister, or a friend for a friend—"Come and heal her, and she shall be whole."

And if the Lord does not accede to your prayer at once, methinks it is because he likes to listen to his children's feet, as they wait for his coming and his answer. He likes to hear them say, "I will not let thee go except thou bless me."

In spite of discouragements, do not leave the Lord until he hears and answers you. Do not only "ask," for that is but the cry of the voice; do not only "knock," for that is but the action of the hand; but "seek"—let hand, eye, tongue, feet, and your whole being be exercised to obtain the blessings you want from God's hand.

And if a doctor, not loving or caring for the unknown patient who needs him, will rise and go to the patient "because of his importunity," how much more will Jesus—the loving Jesus who "careth for you," Jesus who longs to heal you—rise and do for you more than you can ask or think, if you only continue to plead with him!

Do you want forgiveness of your sins? Jesus has it ready to give you. Do you long for a broken heart, with all the coldness and hardness gone out of it? "He is exalted a Prince and a Saviour to give repentance and remission of sins.' Do you desire rest of soul? "I will give you rest."

"Only ask and thou shall receive;
Since Thou hast said it, I must believe."

Will you just come to Jesus in that spirit, feeling you must, you will have a blessing? and you will see how quickly he will rise and give you as much as you need.—Selected.

The habit of self-laudation is a hindrance to a successful ministry. Parade of titles and academic honors, insertion of laudatory articles in the newspapers of himself and his work, publication of the numbers that he has gathered into the church, enumeration of the revivals that he has started, all these are sickening forms of the vanity of small minds, and show a spirit out of harmony with the self-forgetful movement of the divine life.—Howard Crosby.

Remember the word of the Lord Jesus, how he said, "it is more blessed"—that is, it is a greater happiness—"to give than to receive." In many enterprises in which men engage the cost is more than the profit, "the play," as the French proverb has it, "is not worth the candle;" but here there is always blessing; blessing in the consciousness that we have the means of doing good, blessing in entering into fellowship with God, whose happiness is that of giving out, and the joy of the recipient comes back to us and redoubles our delight.—W. M. Taylor.

HOE HANDLE MEDICINE.

On a bright pleasant summer morning, a young man with a silk muffler around his throat, and a woe-begone look on his pale face plied the big knocker upon the doctor's dwelling. A lady answered the summons, and informed the applicant that the doctor was in the garden at work. To the garden the young man went, where he found the man of medicine engaged in hoeing his sweet corn.

"Well, sir, and what is the matter?" the doctor asked, when the applicant had stated that he had come for medical advice and assistance.

"Well, doctor," with a lugubrious face, and whining, moaning tone, "I feel poorly all through. My head has spells of aching: my appetite is poor; my food does not set well; and I am very weak. Really, I need help."

"Yes, I see. Let me look at your tongue. Ah! yes. Now—your pulse."

The pulse was felt, and, after due deliberation, said the doctor:

"Look you, young man, you do certainly need help. Now, see: I must attend an important case at 10 o'clock, and I must have this corn hoed before I go. So while I am gone, you take my hoe, and go on with my work here. You know how to use a hoe?"

"Yes, my father was a farmer; but I haven't worked on a farm since he died."

"And you haven't worked much anywhere else, I take it"—the doctor threw in pleasantly.

"No, I am not obliged to."

"Very well. I'll warrent you the work here won't hurt you; so go on with it until I come back."

With that the doctor trudged off, and the young man went at the work of hoeing. He hoed to the end of the row, and there removed the light muffler from his neck. Then he went at it again. Half way down the second row he stopped and looked up, but no doctor was in sight. At the end of that row, as the absent one had not yet appeared, he pulled off his coat.

The third row he hoed more slowly, stopping several times before the end was reached; but he finished it, and after a good rest attacked the fourth row. There was but one more row, and the fancy seized him to have it done before the old fellow got back. It would be a surprise to him. It quickend his pulses and gave him renewed vim. He had just completed the last hill of the last row when the doctor came back.

"Well, well, my young friend, how are you feeling now?"

The patient really had to consider. He had been looking to see what the physician had brought with him of medicine; but he had brought nothing. His hands were empty. "The work hasn't hurt you, has it?"

"Oh, no," his face glowing with the exercise.

"I thought not. Let me feel your pulse again." He held the young man's wrist for a brief space, and then—

"It has worked to a charm. Now do you go home, and repeat the dose twice a day, every morning and afternoon; do it faithfully, and be honest with your diet; don't use tobacco; and if that doesn't work a cure, come and let me know. My fee is one dollar."

"One—dollar?" gasped the astonished youth.

"That is all I charge when patients call at my door."

"But in mercy's name! what is it for? Where is your prescription? What have I taken of yours?

"My prescription, my dear young friend, I gave you before I left you here with my hoe; the medicine you have been taking in my place– a health-potion which I should have enjoyed had I not given it to you. And now I will tell you frankly, you are rusting out, literally tumbling to pieces for want of exercise of both body and mind. That is all. You can follow my prescription and be cured, or you can take your own way."

The young man paid the dollar, and went his way. Not then could he be cheerful; but afterwards when he had allowed reason fair play, and had come to prove the life-saving and the new life-giving virtues of the doctor's prescription he came and thanked him.—Banner.

THE BEST GYMNASIUM FOR GIRLS.

The exercise that is best adapted to develop all parts of the body in a natural, healthy manner is domestic labor. It is always at hand; it can be taken regularly every day, and there is such variety that almost every muscle can be exercised. Housework should never be considered menial or degrading; it is nature's laboratory, in which the girl may obtain not only the best physical development, but most valuable knowledge that will fit her for the practical duties of life. This training may be supplemented by other kinds of exercise, such as walking and outdoor sports. The very general introduction of foreign help into domestic service has proved most unfortunate for the health of American women. Closely connected with this neglect of physical training at home is an evil of great magnitude—that is, supreme devotion to brain work. The practice pursued very generally at the present day of confining the girl in school or seminary for a series of years consecutively is attended with the most serious evils. In the language of a popular writer "it is educating our girls to death." While I would not discard education in all its various departments, extending to the highest culture, we maintain that it is no advantage or blessing if it is to be obtained at the expense of the physical system. There are other parts of the body besides the brain that need faithful training. The highest accomplishments and mental acquisitions will not compensate for impared constitution and poor health.—Our Continent.

THE NIGHTINGALE'S LAST SONG.

During the last eight years Mrs. Bennett, of Canaan, in this State, has owned a beautiful Virginia nightingale. She named it Bob; and when in an adjoining room she said, "Bob, do you want a fly?" the bird would ruffle his feathers and respond with a whistle or some little note, manifesting his delight, which his mistress understood. Last August Bob had a fit. He rolled over on his back and stuck up his legs. His mistress was alarmed. She soaked his feet in warm water, gave him pepper-corns and little aconite pills. He revived a little, sitting upon his perch solmenly and stupidly. His plumage was not so smooth as formerly. His sweet notes no longer charmed the household. Not a note escaped his throat for three months. Old age had mastered Bob, and pepper-corns could not rouse him to the singing pitch. But one day in November, after three months of sickness and silence, Bob suddenly broke out in full tune, and sang his old notes over again. Mrs. Bennett says in his best estate the bird never sang more sweetly nor cheerily. Full, musical and lively was every note; and she was delighted at what appeared to be a complete recovery of her pet bird. But the moment he had finished the last of his round of notes beautifully and sweetly, Bob turned over upon his back and died.—Hartford Times.

TEMPERANCE.

NOTHING AND SOMETHING.

"It is nothing to me" the beauty said,
With a careless toss of her pretty head;
"The man is weak if he can't refrain
From the cup you say is wrought with pain."

It was something when, in after years,
Her eyes were drenched with burning tears,
And she watched in lonely grief and dread,
And startled to hear a staggering tread.

"It is nothing to me" the mother said,
"I have no fear that my boy will tread
In the downward path of sin and shame,
And crush my heart and darken his name."

It was something to her when her only son
From the path of right was early won;
And madly cast in the flowing bowl
A ruined body and sin-wrecked soul.

"It is nothing to me," the merchant said,
As over his ledger he bent his head;
"I am busy to-day with tare and tret,
And I have no time to fume and fret."

It was something to him when over the wire,
A message came from a funeral pyre;
A drunken conductor had wrecked a train,
And his wife and child were among the slain.

"It is nothing to me," the voter said,
"The party's loss is my only dread."
Then gave his vote for the liquor trade,
Though hearts were crushed and drunkards made.

It was something to him when, in after life,
His daughter became a drunkard's wife,
And her hungry children cried for bread,
And trembled to hear their father's tread.

Is it something for us to idly sleep,
While the cohorts of death their vigils keep?
To gather the young and thoughtless in,
And grind in our midst a grist of sin?

'Tis something, yes all, for us to stand
Clasping by faith the Saviour's hand;
To learn to labor, live, and fight
On the side of God and unchanging right.

DRUNKENNESS IN ENGLAND.

A clergyman, whose work lay much among the laboring classes, told me that he felt utterly powerless before this vice, which was a constant quantity in the problem that he was called upon to solve. I knew a lady who was a district visitor in a suburb of London, one of those ministering angels who in England, more, it seems to me, than any other country in the world, give themselves up to the work of helping and bettering the most wretched and degraded of their kind, and who carry Christian love and purity and grace into dens of filth and sin and suffering which, if they did not see them, would be beyond their chaste imaginations; and I asked her one day if she met with any encouragement, and if she thought she had been able to do much real good. With a sad, sweet smile she answered, "Very little. The condition of these people seems hopeless; and they are hopeless. All that we can do is to help them from time to time; and we find them always where we left them, or if possible yet lower, more degraded, more wretched. At the bottom of it all is drunkenness. The men are always more or less drunk, and the women are almost as bad. They earn a little money, and they get drunk. Husband and wife get drunk together; they quarrel; they fight; and the children grow up with this before them. They are really never quite sober unless they are starving or ill. What can be done for such people? How can they or their condition be made better?" The tears gushed from her eyes as she spoke. I knew it was so. My own observation, very small and of little worth as compared with hers, had yet shown me this. And I was struck with horror at the besotted condition of so many of the women—women who were bearing children every year, and suckling them, and who seemed to me little better than foul human stills through which the accursed liquor with which they were soaked, filtered drop by drop into the little drunkards at their breasts. To these children drunkenness comes unconsciously, like their mother-tongue. They cannot remember the time when it was new to them. They come out of the cloud-land of infancy with the impression that drunkenness is one of the normal conditions of man like hunger or like sleep. Punishment for mere drunkenness, unaccompanied by violence, must seem strange to them, one of the exactments which separates them from the superior classes from whom come to them as from a sort of Providence both good and evil.—Atlantic Monthly.

—The General Assembly of the United Presbyterian church of 1884, resolved that "total abstinence is the only safe rule for the individual, and that the prohibition by the State and nation of the manufacture and sale of all alcoholic liquors as a beverage is the true method of dealing with this monstrous evil." How many in these Christian churches will ignore the "deliverances" of their highest earthly church courts, by voting as if they thought these testimonials against the liquor traffic but a vain and foolish waste of words.—Sandy Lake News.

RAILROAD PROHIBITION.

The railroads that cross the State of Iowa are beginning to shut up the saloon department of the dining cars, while on prohibition soil. The Northwestern railway with its network of Iowa lines, says to its employes that after to-day, July 3, no liquors of any description will be sold on its cars; that as soon as the westward train touches the bridge of the Mississippi the wine cupboards must be locked and sealed, not to be opened till the same point is reached again on the eastward bound trip. The penalties for violating the law, are so severe that the company notifies its employes that it will not stand between them and harm in case of any infraction of these rules.

The Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railway line has become tee-total if that is possible. An employe found drunk or known to have been drunk, either on or off duty will be discharged; so says its most recent order. Also persons who are known to even visit drinking places shall not be employed and no man once discharged for this cause shall be employed again. This is stringent, but necessary. Science demonstrates that alcohol is a foe to that certainty and security which the railways promise to their passengers, and the officials are only applying the conclusions of science to the benefit of travelers —Union Signal.

SAVE THEM FROM THEMSELVES.

These men of appetite for strong drink cannot run the gauntlet of so many inebriate restaurants, so many wine-cellars, so many bar-rooms. These unfortunates cannot from morning to night get out of the sight of these places. They are in every street of every city, before them, behind them, on every side of them—an all-encircling fire of demoniac bombardment. For God's sake give these overwhelmed men a chance to escape, and let let it be possible for a man to walk the whole length of Fulton street, and Atlantic street, and Broadway, and State street, and Chestnut street, and LaSalle street, and Pennsylvania avenue without inhalation of alcoholic malodors. On the petition to the next Congress for the enactment of a national law against the manufacture and sale and importation of intoxicants, if such petition be well circulated, there would be the straggling signature of hands tremulous with dissipation, against which unsuccessful battles had long been waged; signatures written, if need be, like the names of the Scotch Covenanters, in blood dipped from their own veins, if that would make the petition any more importunate. That was a wild scene last Tuesday, when a madman rushed through the crowd, at Broadway and Fourteenth street, and, with a pair of sharp compasses, stabbed right and left till wounded men and women and children filled the city ambulances. It was well done when a stout man threw the maniac to the pavement and others helped to make him powerless. But there is the thousand-armed maniac of alcoholism rushing through the streets of all the cities, stabbing to the heart whole families, whole neighborhoods, the whole nation. Who will help the United States Government throw the foaming demoniac? Who will help the wounded from under the paw and tooth of the red dragon?—Talmage.

Some of Iowa's saloon keepers are closing out already and going to the Black Hills, where they think no prohibitionists will bother them. Congress should be impartial in this regard and serve other territories as well as it serves the Indian territory.

A Methodist temperance colony has been established in Assiniboa, in the north west of Canada. The colony was established two years ago and covers an area sixteen miles long and fifteen in breadth. The land is said to be excellent, and about 120 settlers with their families are already in the colony.

The saloons of St. Louis under high license are expected to pay $1,000,000 into the city treasury. They produce eighty per cent. of the crime and poverty of the city. They cost the people of St. Louis $15,000,000 annually. They make drunkards every year of more than 1,000 young men. Does high license work satisfactorily? —National American.

The leading brewer of Emporia, Kansas, declared he would run his business "law or no law." A correspondent of the City Republican called on him the other day and interviewed him. He was boarding at the jail, and in answer to the question, Does prohibition prohibit? answered: "Mein Got in himmel, I tink it do." His opinion on that subject was affected by his environments.

Joaquin Miller in Philadelphia Press: Ten years ago, when writing letters from this city to London, I was compelled to chronicle the fact that it was no strange thing to see United States Senators drinking, drunk in public bar-rooms along with knots of lobbyists and loafers. And it was all true then. But it is not true now. The world moves. There is hope, for the great American heart is good, perfect. State a folly or a wrong fairly to the people, keep it before them, so that they may not forget it, and my word for it in less than five years it will be swept away.

Joining in the amusements of others is, in our social state, the next thing to sympathy in their distresses, and even the slenderest bond that holds society together should rather be strengthened than snapped.—Landor.

Peter McKenzie's advice is good: "If you have a greedy disposition, and the devil comes to you when you are in the act of giving, and tells you, 'You can't afford it,' say to him, 'If you don't keep quiet I'll double it,' and he'll soon give it up."

THE CHURCHES.

—Elder J. L. Barlow is settled with the Baptist church at Lima, Indiana, and all correspondents should address him at that place.

—Rev. C. C. Foote, of Detroit, is helping the Salvation Army in that city day and night. He reports large crowds, a number of conversions, and great wrath among those who love not the Lord or his Christ.

—Mr. Moody, it is said, will doubtless spend July and August at his secluded Massachusetts home, and will visit Chicago the middle of September or early in October. Though their plan of work may be somewhat modified, there is no reason to suppose that Moody and Sankey will not continue their united labors as in the past twelve years.

—Rev. P. A. Seguin, pastor of the French Evangelical Tabernacle of this city, has gone to lecture this evening in Belvidere, Ill., on the subject of "Education as Given in Romanism and Protestantism." He speaks also in Marengo on the doctrines and dogmas of Rome, and in Freeport on his personal experience as a priest during fourteen years in the Church of Rome. Mr. Seguin is lecturing at the request of ministers of the various denominations.

—A West Side Chicago Chinese Sabbath-school was organized June 29. The school opened under favorable auspices, having been adopted by the First Congregational church. Thirty-two Chinese were enrolled as pupils. On the following Sabbath there were fifty scholars. A night school will be carried on in connection with it. It is to be hoped that other denominations will take up this work, as there are several hundred Chinese in this city, many of whom might be reached and Christianized by proper kindly effort.

—When the London Missionary Herald of the British Baptists lately announced that the society had decided to send fourteen new missionaries to China, the whole of the $10,000 required was contributed by friends in Bristol.

—In Bolivia, South America, where, in 1877, a devoted Italian Bible colporteur was cruelly murdered on account of religious hatred, two agents of the Bible Society last year passed through the same region, were kindly received, and sold 581 copies of the Scriptures in four days.

—The Young Men's Christian Association of London has formed a foreign missionary society. During the year four young men from the ranks have gone forth to distant lands to labor for God and for souls. Six others are now in training for the field, while many more are waiting for the way to open up.

—The Second Reformed Dutch church of Freehold, N. J., sued a wealthy member of the congregation to recover $600 pew rent. The defense was that he had a deed of the pew, and was not obliged to pay rent. The court ruled, however, that the deed was not an absolute title, but only allowed the holder to use the pew subject to the discipline and control of the church, and did not allow him to occupy it without contributing to the support of the church.

—Dr. F. F. Ellinwood, one of the Secretaries of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, in addressing the late Assembly said: "We thank the women of the church who have contributed through their societies (during the past year) over $200,000, and who in individual gifts have added not less than $50,000 more. Since the reunion the women of the Presbyterian church have raised over $1,700,000 for Foreign Missions alone."

—Rev. A. M. Milligan, D. D., has kindly sent us the following extract from the minutes of the Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church, August, 1828:

"The order of the day was called for. This was the consideration of the case of Mr. Robert McKee.

"WHEREAS, Mr. Robert McKee has confessed the truth of the fama clamosa of having united himself to a society of Freemasons in Nashville, State of Tennessee, therefore

"Resolved, That this Synod view his conduct in the premises as utterly inconsistent with his obligations as a Christian, and particularly as a member of this church and a preacher of the everlasting gospel, and do stamp it with marked disapprobation and refer the whole case to the presbytery under whose care Mr. McKee is at present placed."

—A young Baptist missionary lady's convictions against dancing recently proved very profitable in Coahuila, Mexico. Invited to dance by the governor of the State, she declined on account of religious scruples. This led to the interest of the governor in the mission, and a gift from him of property valued at $140,000.

—The Rev. G. M. R. Brown, D.D., a Roman Catholic priest, who has been a professor of theology and metaphysics in the Mill Hill Missionary College, recently applied for admission to the Church of Scotland. His application was granted, and he was admitted to the status of a minister.

—Large numbers of the Esquimaux, it is said, are leaving their native land and settling in Alaska. The Moravians, who have so long and so nobly cared for the spiritual interests of Greenland, are taking steps to follow these emigrants to their new sphere, and to provide them with Gospel privileges.

—A Chinese Sunday-school Union has been organized in New York which intends to found a Home where Chinese boys may meet together for social pleasure and mental instruction. There are about 4,000 Chinamen here and in Brooklyn, about a fourth of whom are in the schools represented in this Union.

—If men only knew what missionary work is accomplishing in lands to which the Gospel has recently been carried, they would give more liberally for its propagation. The testimony as to the results attained is abundant, yet often it does not reach those who should be influenced by it. The English papers announce that a gentleman in Nottingham has made a bequest of $75,000 to the London Missionary Society, and that he was influenced to do this by the testimony of Miss Gordon Cumming, concerning the marvellous results of missions in the South Sea Islands, given in her volumes on "At Home in Fiji," "A Lady's Cruise in a French Man-of-War," and "Fire Fountains."

—The London Congregational Directory states that there are in London 251 churches of that denomination, with the same number of "chapels"—as English Nonconformist churches are called. Besides these there are 145 preaching stations. The oldest of these churches is said to have been formed in 1573. Most of them, however, have been organized since 1800. There are 222 ministers in charge.

—A recent cablegram from London says the committee engaged in revising the Old Testament have finished their labors, and after submission to the convocation the Testament will be issued to the public. Twelve of the twenty-seven members have died during the revision.

—A telegram to the Inter Ocean from Freeport, Ill., indicates that considerable local interest was arroused in that city by Mr. Seguin's lectures there: The Rev. P. A. Seguin, the reformed French Catholic priest, pastor of the French Evangelical Tabernacle at Chicago, lectured in the Baptist church in this city Monday night, and in the Second Presbyterian Tuesday night. The first night he spoke concerning his fourteen years' experience as a priest, severely denouncing Catholicism and the Roman church in general. Last evening his subject was education as taught by the Catholics and Protestants. There were several Catholics in the audience on each occasion, and last evening two of them were resident priests. They sat quietly through the lecture and at the close desired to make reply to some of the statements made, but were not granted the privilege. The request was unknown to the Rev. Mr. Seguin, who, this morning expressed a willingness of meeting them in debate at any time on certain questions.

—The statistics of the Reformed Presbyterian church are as follows: Presbyteries, 11; ministers, 110; congregations, 124; communicants, 10,671; Sabbath-school teachers, 1,199; S. S. scholars, 9,777; baptisms, 475. Increase—by profession, 520; by certificate, 335; total 855. Decrease—by censure, 17; dismisson, 439; purging roll, 236; death, 160—total, 802. Contributions—foreign missions $13,264; home missions, $3,340; freedmen's mission, $3,585; national reform, $4,764; theological seminary, $2,901; education fund, $16,273; church erection, $31,949; pastors' salaries, $83,926; miscellaneous, $52,932—total, $216,893.

—It is not generally known how extensive and strong the work of Protestant Sunday-schools is even in such Roman Catholic realms as Italy. According to a little work published this year at Florence, the Waldensians have no fewer than 2,044 Sunday-school scholars; while the Methodists have 1,140, and the Baptists have six Sunday-schools of which the membership is not given. The Free Christian church has 672 scholars, and the Christian Apostolic 362. These figures are certainly encouraging, and show that the good work is making strong and steady progress there.

—Professor Joseph Henry Thayer, late professor of sacred literature in Andover Seminary, has been chosen to fill the chair of New Testament Criticism in Harvard College, made vacant by the death of Ezra Abbot. Dr. Thayer is a Congregationalist of a liberal type.

—Fourteen auxiliary organizations, in as many American cities, are now assisting in the support of the McAll Mission at Paris. The first of these auxiliaries was that of Philadelphia, organized in April, 1880, eight years after the work had begun abroad. The mission now has forty stations in Paris, and ninety stations in France. The high estimation the French themselves put upon the evangelizing work it is doing, is evidenced by two bronze medals struck by the French government and given to Mr. McAll as a memorial of what he and his wife and his assistants are accompishing.

—The Baptist Missionary Union has assumed the care of the Mission on the Congo in Africa, which has hitherto been in charge of Mr. and Mrs. Grattan Guiness, of London, and has appropriated $3,000 for the furtherance of the work. Mr. and Mrs. Guinness are at the head of a training school for missionaries in London, and when it became known that Livingstone had discovered the Congo, students were immediately sent out to establish a mission. About $100,000 have been spent already in developing it, and the enlargement has been so rapid that its founders felt called upon to relinquish that or the training school. At this juncture an offer was made to transfer the work to the American Baptists, with the result herewith stated.

THE DARK CONTINENT.—The religious aspect of the Dark Continent is the supreme motive which should stir us to aid international reform in Africa. On what spot could I speak on that subject with more appropriateness than in Boston? Yonder sit, in the rooms of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, certain statesmen, as I love to call them—advisers in great international religious affairs. Not long ago an American citizen gave $1,000,000 to that Board, and the wise men governing the funds appropriated a generous portion to the support of missions in the Dark Continent. A scholar whose recent separation from us we mourn, a hero of religious reform, a man of most unselfish, devout, chivalrous spirit, who had been in Africa in his earlier years, was sent to Europe to make inquiries as to the proper ground on which to found a mission. He visited England, France, Germany and Belgium, and had a long interview with King Leopold. Rejecting seven other places, the Board selected one called Bihe, in the upland tract east of Benguela, and is there founding a mission which it is hoped will be a lighthouse for vast regions of Central Africa. In Umzila's kingdom, north of Natal, another watch-tower is being erected. I make my best plea for the support of all missions in Africa—Baptist, Presbyterian, Episcopalian, even Catholic, as well as those of the American Board. I do this in the name of the saintly one whom we all loved! I do it in the name of him over whose grave we are standing—John Oliver Means, of this city—whose memory may God bless and make a pillar of fire, leading us into more enthusiastic endeavor for the reform of the Dark Continent! I do this in the name of all the missionaries now on African soil or buried beneath it. I make this appeal in the name of Livingstone himself. On the first day of May, 1873, in Chitambo's village in Italy, the explorer was alone in his hut in his last hour. He rose and knelt at his bedside, and in the morning was found in the posture of prayer with his life fled. That picture of Livingstone dying in the attitude of supplication for Africa, commending the Dark Continent to the avenger of the oppressed and the Saviour of the lost, let it stand colossal and draw unto Africa enterprises from all the world in support of his schemes for the introduction of commerce, the abolition of the slave trade and the promotion of Christianity.—Joseph Cook.

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

—The St. Paul road ran a special train from Chicago to Minneapolis Sunday, carrying the Commander-in-chief, his staff, and 200 members of the G. A. R., who will attend the reunion at Minneapolis.

—Gen. Logan will accompany the Grand Army delegates from the department of the Potomac to the National Encampment which meets at Minneapolis, Wednesday. They left Washington Saturday night, reaching Chicago Monday morning, traveling all day Sunday.

—Father Beckx, the "General" of the Jesuits, has resigned on account of feeble health and 90 years. The new general of the pope is Father Antonius Anderledy, a Swiss by birth.

—Thomas Ewing Sherman, eldest son of Gen. W. T. Sherman, is now one of the scholastic brethren of the Society of Jesus at Nashotah, Wisconsin.

—The corner-stone of Nebraska's new capitol was laid last week under the direction of the Grand Lodge of Masons. Other societies participated.

—The Oriental Consistory of "Sublime Princes of the Royal Secret," 32d degree Masons, are arranging an excursion to Mackinaw Island next month. Like most of the lodge excursions this year Sabbath violation is a particular part of it. The notice is: "A special train of sleepers will leave the Michigan Central Depot Sunday afternoon, Aug. 3, at 2 o'clock, arriving at camp the following day in time for breakfast." This unhallowed pleasure excursion is hypocritically called a "pilgrimage."

—Gov. Hoadley of Ohio has been referred to as a Mason. At the late annual "conclave" of the Patriarchal circle order in Columbus, O., Hoadley made a fulsome address: "He welcomed them to the great State of Ohio. He had not the honor of being one of them, but he believed in circles of all kinds, for, said he, what is a circle but a ring. The speaker here made several jokes on the words circle and ring which kept the house in a roar for some time. He said he had been a Mason since he was twenty-one, and was able to say that he knew there was good coming out of secret societies. Charity and discipline he understood to be their underlying principles. These were noble and necessary principles in a good order such as would do good for the State and mankind in general. The more order and discipline the better for us all. As Chief Magistrate he would bid them hearty welcome to the State, and hoped they would not have cause to regret their visit."

FARM AND GARDEN.

WHAT YOU AND I MAY HAVE TO PAY FOR.

For the vicious acts of unruly domestic animals, like kicking, hooking or biting, the owner is generally liable. If a man owns an ugly beast, it is his duty to prevent it from doing injury, both on his own premises and everywhere else, so that people may not suffer from its dangerous disposition. He must use due care to prevent any harm resulting from its evil propensity, and his liability will depend upon some negligence on his part, some failure of his duty to exercise due care. Of course if he does not know that the beast is dangerous, he cannot be expected or required to take extra precautions; if he has not had what in law amounts to notice of the evil disposition, he cannot be held liable for not guarding against it. Consequently, where a horse or an ox suddenly, and without any previous exhibition of bad temper, does a vicious act, like kicking or hooking a bystander, its owner is not, and in reason should not be, held liable. As to what amounts to notice of a vicious temper, the rule is that it should be sufficient to put a prudent man on his guard. It is not necessary that the animal should have already done harmful and vicious acts; if it has manifested a disposition to do such things, that is sufficient to notify the owner of the danger (25 Conn., 92).

It is no defense to a vicious injury by a domestic animal, that it was committed on the owner's own premises, and that the person injured was at the time a trespasser (17 Wend., 496). A man cannot defend his premises by such means as a ferocious beast, any more than by setting man-traps, or spring guns (37 Iowa, 613). So therefore, if the farmer keeps a savage dog, allows him to go unrestrained about the farm, and he attacks and injures a person who is casually crossing the land, the farmer will be liable, nay more, if the person be at the time a trespasser, hunting in the farmer's woods on Sunday, the farmer will have to pay for his lacerated legs, although he did not set on the dog (17 Wend, 497). Likewise, if the farmer has an ugly and ferocious bull, which he allows to traverse through his fields, and the animal pitches upon strolling fishermen, trespassers though they may be, the farmer will have to pay for their broken ribs, or broken necks as the case may be (3 C. & P., 138: 124 Mass., 49). One may doubtless defend his house against burglars by a savage dog, but if it bites and injures any one coming to the house on any innocent purpose, he will have to pay for the damage (41 Cal., 138). Some sort of negligence, however, on the part of the owner of the unruly beast, is necessary to create a liability. If one's horse breaks loose from him on the street, and there injures some one, or smashes a carriage, he is not liable merely because the horse got away. Some negligence must be shown, as that he left the horse unhitched, or his harness or wagon was known by him to be out of order, or unroadworthy, etc. (3 Allen, 565).—American Agriculturist.

A NEW WAY TO RAISE EARLY TOMATOES.—Just before frost, go into your garden and cut from your tomato vines as many plants as you wish for early tomatoes next summer, selecting good thrifty vines. Select a box, say about eight or ten inches deep, fill it with six or eight inches of good earth, and plant your cuttings say two inches apart each way. Put your box in the cellar, or where the frost won't injure the plants, water now and then during the winter, and as soon as the danger from frost is over in the spring, plant in the ground. This plan is pursued by many market gardeners, and the result is tomatoes several weeks earlier than from seed in hotbeds in the spring.

CLOVER AS A FERTILIZER.—A stick of wood burned on the surface mostly passes off in gas, leaving only the ashes; but the same stick, if burnt in a coal-pit, excluded from the air, forms a mass of carbon of nearly or quite its original size. Now, all decay of vegetable matter is a slow combustion, and when this is done under the soil, not only are the gases retained in the soil, but more carbon is formed, and this carbon has the power to appropriate the valuable gases always present in the atmosphere. The great value of clover as a fertilizer is due, first to the carbon furnished by the decay of the plant, and second to the fine mechanical effect upon the soil, which renders it porous, so that the atmosphere penetrates it and deposits plant-food. It is clear that better fertilizing effects will result from the ploughing down of the crop to decay in the soil. Ordinarily more can be made out of the tops than they are worth for manure, and, if rightly managed, the roots will supply the needed fertility.—Pennsylvania Farmer.

THREE BEST FOWLS.—Mr. I. K. Felch being asked the three breeds he would select, if confined to thoroughbred fowls, answers: Light Brahmas, Plymouth Rocks and White Leghorns. But were he to give up all save those from which he could secure the very best results in eggs, broilers and roast fowls, he would keep the fine Light Brahma hens, in numbers that, mated to a white Leghorn cock, would lay eggs enough for incubating purposes—the laying stock, broilers and poultry thus begin a cross-breed Brahma and Leghorn. They will lay the best in all seasons of the year, and while the eggs are larger and generally dark-colored the hens lay as many as do the pure Leghorns, while the poultry is as nice as can well be. There will be enough among them that will become broody in the whole, and much annoyance often experienced from sitting hens is in this way dispensed with.—Prairie Farmer.

—An experienced sheep-raiser says that a good way to control a flock of sheep is to take a ewe lamb to the house and make a pet of it. Use nothing but kindness, and give it a name, teaching it to come at the call. Whenever the lamb obeys give it something as a reward, such as a grain of corn, piece of bread, or anything that is acceptable, but never give it a blow. When the lamb is grown, place it in the flock and you will need only to call that one sheep, and all the others will follow. As sheep follow their leader the training of one is the training of all, and it is a saving of time and labor to do so.

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE.

A Reliable Article.

Dr. E. CUTTER, Boston, Mass, says: "I found it to realize the expectations raised, and regard it as a reliable article."

SOME unprincipled dealers, because they could see a few cents more profit, have been guilty of offering worthless substitutes for the only original and genuine Sulphur Soap—GLENN'S by name. Therefore, the public should guard against this deception, and always ask for Glenn's Sulphur Soap, by its full name, and take no other.

READ the following evidence from a highly respectable source:

C. N. CRITTENTON, ESQ.,

Dear Sir: I have travelled for three years for Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons, publishers, New York, and desire to inform you that I have used your incomparable Glenn's Sulphur Soap exclusively for about four years; also have recommended it to very many persons; my constant experience has been that it possesses all the medical advantages that you claim for it. All to whom I have recommended it say as well as myself, that it deserves its established reputation as the best and most efficacious Sulphur Soap that can be used for skin cleansing, as well as toilet purposes. Some unprincipled druggists have endeavored to substitute other kinds of Sulphur Soap for Glenn's—saying they were "just as good," but having myself tried other kinds, I find NONE so good or so beneficial as the Genuine Sulphur Soap stamped "GLENN'S," and this I have observed always bears the name of "C. N. Crittenton, Proprietor," on the packet.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

COST OF A CONVENTION.

The total expense of the Republican National Convention in June it is said will amount to about $16,000, that of the Democratic, $26,000. But outside the Conventions themselves the bills ran up wonderfully so that the money left in Chicago and paid the railroads must aggregate a fabulous sum. The Daily News gives us a glimpse of the hotel business:

"The hotel proprietors and clerks all profess to be glad that the convention is over and that the throng has departed. The professions of the former, however, may be doubted, for to them the week was an enormously profitable one. Every hotel in the city did a thriving business. During this week nearly three thousand people were accommodated at the Palmer, 1,200 at the Grand Pacific, 800 each at the Sherman, Tremont, McCoy's, and Leland, 600 at the Commercial, 500 at the Matteson, and in general it can be said that all the hotels were comfortably filled during the entire week. The crowd was considerably greater than it was during the Republican Convention, and much more money was spent. The hotel bars last week took in more money than they will for the month to come. So far as was learned all bills were paid up promptly and without complaint. Four years ago, it will be remembered, there was a great deal of talk about unpaid bills left by some of the delegations, particularly of the John Snerman boomers.

It is said that at the Cincinnati Convention Tammany left one of the hotels in the lurch to the tune of $600 or so, and warning was received at the Palmer to be on the lookout against the time when Kelly's adherents should leave the city. There appeared to be no necessity, however, for anything of the kind, for the bill, which was for several thousand dollars, was promptly paid. Edgar M. Johnson, of Cincinnati, the financial man of the Hoadly boom, paid $30 a day for a parlor at the Palmer. Hubert O. Thompson was the financial agent of the Cleveland boomers. By his order rooms were engaged outside the Palmer for the accommodation of a portion of the New Yorkers. These rooms were not used, but when an item of $800 for them in the bill met Mr. Thompson's eye, he simply asked "What's that?" and after explanation was given said "All right," and drew a check for the entire amount without a murmur. Speaker Carlisle did not arrive here at the opening of the fray, but he was here long enough to run up a bill of over $100. Mr. Brobst, of the Palmer, says Mr. Carlisle, was much surprised at the smallness of his indebtedness. The adolescent Gibbons, who came to Chicago to engineer the Flower boom, paid bills to the amount of $1,000 or $1,200 at the Palmer, besides several hundred dollars at the Pacific, it is said. Some one was heard to remark that he went home with less to represent the money he had spent than did any other man who came to the convention. All of the hotels report that considering the immense crowd complaints were remarkably few, and that none were made of any imposition or loss. All that were made were occasioned from the fact that, owing to the great rush, that attention usually paid to guests could not possibly be given.—News, July 14.

BY H. M. HUGUNIN.

This new and attractive volume is now ready. It is composed of thirty nine chapters on nearly as many topics. Neatly bound in cloth with gilt stamp. Price 60 cents.

The Chicago Evening Journal of May 3, says:

The author of this little volume, for many years a working editor of the EVENING JOURNAL, has here presented us with a variety of topics of a religious character. Among the number we note "The Evils of the Sunday Newspaper," "The Divine Sanction of Church Organizations," "The Good Work and Government of Sunday-Schools," "The Bible in our Public Schools," "Fallacies of the 'Evolution Theory,'" "Chronology—The Age of the World," and "Labor and Laborers." Mr. Hugunin writes as an independent thinker, untrammeled by denominational alignments. His style, however, is marked by the vigor of earnestness and sincerity, and with these characteristics, and with a close adherence to Bible Christianity, his book becomes a suggestive aid to evangelical workers. In discussing the topics above named, as in others, he deals consistently with questions of public interest and great importance in the reform of individual and social evils.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

—It is expected that the number of letters mailed in the United States will be greater by twenty per cent. this year than it was in 1880. That year 1,046,000,000 letters were mailed.

—The treasury department has been informed by one of its agents on the Canadian border that paper rags supposed to have been collected in the cholera-infected districts of Egypt, Turkey, and South Faance are being imported into the United States through the Canadian ports, They are described as a low grade and likely to contain the germ of the disease. A large lot was recently shipped to this country from Liverpool.

—There is a renewal of the ugly rumors about the selling out of the house committee on postoffices to the lottery swindlers. It is asserted that the committees were at first in full sympathy with the Post-master-general in his efforts to stop the lottery companies from using the mails, but that they suddenly changed their opinion, and refused to report the bill which had been sent to them, and which looked to the preservation of the mails for honest purposes. The rumors are that it cost the lottery companies about $25,000.

—There is a very serious hitch in the appointment of John Jarrett, of Pittsburgh, as chief of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the President having intimated his intention of revoking the appointment. Mr. Jarrett, who had an interview with the President yesterday, returned home to-day, and says the trouble is caused by misrepresentations made, relative to expressions in his speech at a Blaine-boom meeting held in this city in March last.

COUNTRY.

—New Jersey and New York brick manufacturers will shut down Sept. 20, which will result in reducing the production of 20,000,000 bricks.

—The estimated loss by June rains on the wheat crop of California is placed at 135,000 tons, and of barley 80,000 tons. The hay crop was injured 40 per cent.

—The schooner Deborah H. Diverty, coal laden, foundered off Beck's Beech, N. J., on the night of June 27, in a hurricane, and the ten persons on board, including the captain and steward's wives and a child, perished.

—A well being dug at the factory of Duke & Sons, at Durham, N. C., caved in burying seven men. Three were taken out, one badly injured. Four remain in the well dead. One was heard begging for succor, saying the water had risen to his neck, and that he was about to drown.

—A fire, attended with the probable loss of four lives, occurred here this evening. The flames broke out in the ice houses of the Buckey Brewing company, and spread so rapidly that they soon encompassed the dock and the ice house of J. W. Wasson. The men who were lost were asleep on a sand scow.

—Two blocks in the business district of Cedar Springs, Mich., burned Friday afternoon during the prevalence of a high wind. Two hotels, the railroad depot, Johnson & Link's mill, and fully two-thirds of the residences are among the structures destroyed. Three men and a boy perished in the flames.

— Henry C. Pedder, manager for Arnold, Constable & Co., of New York has transferred his valuable New Jersey property to the firm, from whom he has embezzled, it is alleged, between $100,000 and $500,000. Herbert Seymour, the confidential book-keeper of the company, is said to be a defaulter in the sum of $50,000.

—Andrew Carnegie, the millionaire iron manufacturer, reports the iron trade in England in a wretched condition, that American rails are selling lower than ever, and that many of the mills will probably shut down.

—Rev. L. O. Thompson, a popular author and preacher, his son Sidney, and another lad named Freddie Bishop, were drowned in the Illinois River at Henry, Wednesday afternoon by the skiff capsizing in the eddies near the dam.

—Two hundred kegs of powder composition in Laflin & Rand's mill at Cressona Pa., exploded Friday, wrecking the barrel mill, in which it was being mixed, and the surrounding buildings, but fortunately missing the magazine, containing 1,000 kegs of powder. Timbers were thrown 500 yards to the public highway, and the report was heard thirty miles away. A large crowd had just left the mill, where a cow had been dying from drinking nitrate-of-soda water. The only persons near the mill were the superintendent and engineer, who were severely hurt by falling debris.

– Five miles west of Harrodsburg, Ind., at three o'clock Monday a terrible explosion occurred, causing the instant death of three persons, and perhaps fatally injuring four others. The shock could be heard for miles. It seems that a new inspirator had recently been placed on the engine, which would not work, and it exploded while experimenting.

FOREIGN.

—The French Ministers of the Interior, Commerce, and Public Works have been to Marseilles on a tour of inspection. The Prefect informed them that over 46,000 of the inhabitants had fled by railway, and 20,000 by other roads. There is threatened a more terrible scourge than the cholera, namely, unprecedented want and misery.

—General Diaz was formally notified by the electoral college Tuesday, of his unanimous election as President of Mexico. Great enthusiasm prevails at the capital.

—Bismarck has ordered the preparation of plans for a canal from the Baltic to the German ocean; also that the necessary credit be asked of the reichstag at its coming session.

Fifty-seven deaths at Marseilles and twenty-four at Toulon for the twenty-four hours ending 8 o'clock Sunday evening.

—Advices from China indicate that th Chinese troops have been withdrawn from the Tonquin frontier, as was demanded by France. This, it is thought, will avert war between the two countries.

—The trial of 420 peasants, at Pesth, for complicity in the anti-Magyar escutcheon riots of September last, resulted in the conviction of 296, the remainder being acquitted. The convicted were sentenced to imprisonment of from three days to ten years.

—The funeral of the Prince of Orange took place Thursday with great pomp. The procession was headed by King William, the Grand Duke of Saxe-Weimar, Prince Albert of Prussia, the Count of Flanders, and representatives of all the royal houses of Europe. The Prince of Wales sent a wreath in his capacity of Grand Master of the Freemasons.

—Orders have been given the Austrian police to arrest all Mormon missionaries caught endeavoring to secure converts.

—A dispatch from Pondicherry, the capital of the French possessions of India announces that a rocket exploded during the celebration of the fall of the bastile. The building contained a large quantity of fireworks and a fearful explosion resulted. Fifteen persons were killed and many injured.

—The trader's committee of London are making arrangements to have a procession of 200,000 persons at the demonstration in Hyde Park Monday next, to awe the Lords into passing the franchise bill. A majority of the workshops in London will close that day. The enthusiasm over the movement for the abolition of the House of Lords is at a high pressure.

—A plot to blow up the palace at Warsaw during the Czar's stay has been discovered. A justice of the peace named Barbooski is suspected of complicity, and has been arrested. A quantity of arms and dynamite belonging to the conspirators was also found. Firearms, bombs, daggers, and a printing press were found in the residence of Justice of the Peace Barbooski, arrested in connection with the plot to blow up the palace. The dynamite was brought by a Russian having in his possession letters to the Russian officials.

—A committee of the Commons has agreed to recommend a loan to the Indian government of $140,000,000, for the purpose of extending the railway system of that country.

—An express train on the Manchester and Sheffield railway was wrecked Wednesday. Twenty-five persons were killed and forty seriously injured. It seems the axle of the engine of the express train broke, and the train jumped the track and fell through the bridge. The scenes underneath the bridge after the train had fallen were terrible to witness. The carriages were reduced almost to splinters. The groans of men and the shrieks of women and children were heartrending in the extreme. Some delay was experienced before the victims could be extricated.

A Wonderful Life,

A Wonderful Book.

Laura S. Haviland is a quiet, gentle, unassuming Quaker woman, 76 years of age, yet vigorous, who has had a remarkable career of usefulness, and has now given to the world a remarkable history of her "Life Work" as a teacher, at an early day, of the colored refugees in Canada and in Michigan, and in other States, as a traveler down South in the guise of a "berry picker," helping out into freedom many slaves; as a nurse and preacher to the sufferers in hospitals during the war; and with Gov. St. John and Elizabeth Comstock, relieving the destitute and suffering refugees in Kansas, etc.

Her book is neither fiction nor founded on fiction, but is an interesting narration of facts of a most thrilling character, as every one will find and testify who will get and read her book, now on sale at the Cynosure office, 221 W. John B. Finch of Nebraska, who began the uproar in the Prohibition convention is a Freemason, and was lately elected "Right Worthy Grand Templar" of the Good Templars Grand Lodge of the World. Two or three years ago he abusively attacked Prof. H. A. Fischer of Wheaton, for some remarks on the secret temperance lodges at Lake Bluff, and aroused thereby the indignation of some of the prominent members of the W. C. T. U. who were present. Finch is the pet of the Good Templars who claim in one of their publications that it is the "universal testimony" that he "has no superior upon the temperance platform," a judgment which people outside the lodge are slow to confirm. The Wisconsin delegation are several times mentioned in the press dispatches as especially opposed to any recognition of the American party. That delegation was led by Samuel D. Hastings, also a prominent Good Templar, which order and the Temple of Honor have had a great patronage in that State. It is more than probable that the whole Wisconsin delegation were from the lodge ranks. These facts help to explain the condition of things at Pittsburgh; and are points of information of special value to genuine prohibitionists.

A good authority informs us that only about thirty members took part in the outcry against the representative of the American party in the Pittsbuugh convention. Many came to the fraternal committee disclaiming against the disgraceful scene. One prominent prohibitionist offered to present a resolution rebuking those who made the disorder, but the committee persuaded him not to do so. Many delegates conferred with the committee, declaring that they would never, after this explosion of lodgery, allow any Mason to be nominated to any high office in the party. Others spoke heartily in favor of open temperance work; one proposing that a resolution in favor of open temperance work be adopted in the convention. Others said if secrecy was the only barrier to the union with the Americans they would abolish all secret temperance orders. Had there been a little more time for consultation there was every probability of a union with a declaration against the lodge, as a considerable majority of the delegates seemed ready for it.

If the Republican party has a strong grip on the soldier vote through Logan and the Grand Army, the Democratic expectation is in reverse ratio in the same direction. Cleveland's vetoes will lose him hundreds of thousands of the workingmen's votes, though they may bear an explanation in favor of this class; but no explanation will satisfy a G. A. R. lodge that he is not their enemy. A prominent politician at the July convention told a reporter the reason, thus: "Why, the soldiers of the late war who belonged to the Grand Army of the Republic were seriously annoyed and often disgraced by men wearing the badge of their order who never were soldiers and who had no right to wear it. A bill was passed making it a penal offense to wear a badge of the G. A. R. without authority. This bill Gov. Cleveland vetoed, and you can bet he has no friends among the Slocmus and other old soldiers."

The letters of acceptance of the Republican candidates have been given to the public and if length could win the victory it would be theirs. Cry him down as they do, Mr. Blaine's political opponents can but have for him the greater fear after reading the exceedingly able document he has compelled the hostile papers to print. From the Republican standpoint it it well written, logical and convincing—the keynote which the stump will re-echo through the land, and bearing more marks of statesmanship than any like document of the two great parties for years. We could only wish that such ability were employed more worthily than in defense of the Republican party in its present condition.

A year and a half ago the great Irish conventions and the National League outgrowing from them filled the thought of Irish-Americans, to whom the promise of independent Ireland seemed almost fulfilled. But as an index of public opinion it is interesting to note of how little account the League and its work has been during the last twelve months. Another national meeting is to be held in Boston, August 13, and in preparation for it delegates are wanted. But here in Chicago it is found that of about fifty branch leagues in operation a year ago there are not more than five which have now even a nominal existence. This is an evidence that the condition of Ireland is much improved under the Gladstone laws, and the Irish in this country are satisfied with the improved condition of affairs. In lieu of auxiliaries the National League officers have just arranged to take into the organization every lodge of Ancient Order of Hibernians; which looks as if the whole movement had sold out to secretism.

To a press representative who met Mr. Moody on his arrival in New York the great evangelist said he could not feel satisfied with the results of his work in England although greatly rejoiced at what had been done. "I have made," he said, "many observations while in London, and must say that we can learn a great deal from the Englishmen. Frankly speaking, London is the most religious city in the world. This is saying a great deal, but, nevertheless, it is true. The Sabbath day is observed in London better than in any American city. I attribute a good deal of this to the revisions in the church of England. The church is more Christian than it was ten years ago, and when I came to enter upon my mission they took a hearty interest and helped in every way. The churchmen offered their services and encouraged me in the good work. It is easy to get a large audience in London and our tabernacle was always filled. The cause of temperance is far advanced. Life in London is different from our social custom. It was a hard thing to argue temperance when such men as Spurgeon, Canon Farrar and Canon Wilberforce had wine at the table, where it formed as much the part of a meal as the bread or meat; but when these great ministers donned the blue ribbon and advocated the cause from the pulpit, it was a great victory. There are many members of the house of parliament today who attend the sessions with the blue ribbons in their coat lapels."

As the light which illuminates our atmosphere, and gives brightness to our dwellings, and vision to every eye, is from the sun, and is dependent on its rise and motion every day, so we and all our mercies, and all our strength, for every day and hour of our lives, come from God, and are dependent on him.—Bate.

We stand erect, with open eyes, when we are seeking truth; we fall on our knees with closed eyelids, when we are seeking God! Religion is not the rule of three, but the golden rule; it is not the major and the minor premises and copula of logic, but the sacred instinct of the soul, which Jesus Christ has satisfied and guided and owned and directed in an inestimable way.—Bellows.

MAINE, BLAINE, AND BOWDOIN COLLEGE.

BY REV. HENRY T. CHEEVER.

I am just back from the 79th Commencement of Bowdoin College, Brunswick, in the State which Governor Robie, at the Alumni dinner, affirmed to be the most prosperous State of the Union, with the smallest proportion of illiteracy and crime. Mr. Blaine had said the same heretofore, and had ascribed it to the prevalent Prohibitory policy, and to the thoroughness of its public school system and excellent colleges. The observed of all observers, Mr. Blaine was now crowned with the laurel of LL. D., an honor to which his late literary work of "Twenty Years in Congress" has well entitled him. He was honored also with a most enthusiastic reception from gray-haired veterans and an applauding host of graduates and under-graduates. In his speech the thoroughness and vigor of the Bowdoin course of study and discipline were warmly commended; and the confessed pre-eminence and efficiency of Bowdoin graduates in the world's field of action were charged to that and to the strong religious influence that has been prevalent in the college.

The space for brief after-dinner speaking by Alumni was contracted by reason of the time taken in the admirable speeches of Messrs. Blaine and Edward Everett Hale and Senator Fry. But the Brunswick Telegraph prints some of the premeditated eloquence that was not exploded, and in part a salutation and toast by your correspondent. The same is now quoted here for its bearing upon the times, and for its utterance of the views of educated men at the East upon a great political policy and a public man. This was the bi-centennial of the class of 1834. Ten patriarchs were present out of the thirty-five that graduated fifty years ago: Hon. Peleg W. Chandler, Hon. John C. Dodge, and Dr. James Ayer of Boston, Henry T. Cheever of Worcester, Charles Beecher of Georgetown, William S. Sewell of Sangerville, Me., pastors; Cyrus Hamlin, D.D., President of Middlebury College, Vt.; Daniel C. Weston, D.D., of New York; John H. C. Coffin, LL. D., of Washington, D. C.; Edward Woodford of Lawrence, Mass They dined superbly together at Mr. Chandler's elegant mansion. The two most prominent men of mark in the class hitherto are Rev. Dr. Hamlin, thirty-five years missionary in Turkey, the prime mover, procurer and organizer of Robert's College, Constantinople, and the late Professor Henry Boynton Smith, of Union Theological Seminary, New York.

As one of the survivors of '34 on whose wrinkled brows there is to be read not dimly Longfellow's word MORITURI, revisiting now my native State and college after fifty years away, and reviewing its roll of honor, I am justified in the hearty salutation, MATER MAGNA VIRORUM! MAINE, the steady Pole-Star State—far in the prow of our great National Confederacy—whose soil the foot of a slave, from Agamenticus to Mount Katahdin, never trod but in the welcome flight from bondage: may God keep her in scions worthy of her sires! May the stock of her Moodys, her Emersons, her Sewalls, her Abbotts, her Allens, her Appletons, her Kings, her Cliffords, and her other Cs and Ds, and all never run out! Where are not her accomplished daughters and energetic sons as model wives, leading educators, professors, masterful merchants, physicians, jurists, journalists, senators, statesmen, judges, generals, prime ministers, pastors, and honored missionaries at home and in foreign lands?

Quis locus, quae regio torrae non plera noster laboris?

Her enduring staples are her timber, her granite, her ice, her men, her Maine Law. Her duteous sons abroad say of her—the loyal alumni of Bowdoin—in the spirit of Henry Clay's toast to the shoemakers of Lynn (May your manufactures be trodden upon by all the world.) May her ships continue to carry the commerce, her ice to freeze the creams, her granite to build the monuments, her Prohibitory Law to head the Legislation of the land! And may her glorious Old Orchard and York Beaches and Bar Harbors never fail to give a welcome and temperate hospitality to the gathering guests of the nation, her blue waters to cool their throbbing brows, and her men and her women still to mould the minds and manners of the country at large? And the name of her honored Blaine, beloved and chosen of Garfield, known and read of all! May we see it ere long high emblazoned in the fore-front of victory, its knightly bearer, by the grace of God and the unbought favor of the people, the typical American President of this Nineteenth Century! the consummate flower of its ripe Christian civilization!

The phenomenal patriarch of Bowdoin College is the widely known, beloved and revered Professor Alpheus S. Packard, who has been connected with this institution as student or teacher for more than seventy years, the last year also as acting president—his eye not dim, nor his natural force abated. At this Commencement, although 85 years of age, he rolled out the sonorous Latin with all the grace and force of youth. Not less remarkable were the filicitous diction, pathos, and unction of the prayer in which he commended, with touching tenderness and fidelity, the graduating class, the students, the college faculty, the alumni, the trustees, overseers and benefactors to the blessing of heaven.

Between the years of 1831–37 Bowdoin College was the subject and scene of very extraordinary revivals, which brought into the kingdom not a few men whose mark has been mighty on their day and generation. Through the personal labors and lectures of that great man of God, Prof. T. C. Upham, and the preaching of Drs. Pond, Tappan, Adams and Shepard, together with the internal hand-to-hand fidelity and prayerfulness of pious students, there were wrought wonders of grace and reformation. These scenes were renewed at the alumni prayer meeting of Commencement-day morning, by veteran participants and witnesses to the power and glory of the Holy Ghost. There were those of us who spake that which we knew and testified that we had seen of the good word of God and of the powers of the world to come. Earnest prayer was made that yet again the great power of the Spirit might be manifested as then in conviction, conversion, surrender and consecration.

It is not a new departure, nor a new creed, nor a new theology that is wanted by the Congregationalists of Maine, either in their college or their churches; but it is a new baptism of the Holy Spirit, and preachers with a passion for souls and a spirit of prayer like Payson and the Elder Sewell—in the spirit and power of Elias. I am glad to know that men still survive in Maine, like Dr. John O. Fiske of Bath—Nestor and Achilles in one,—who hold to the faith once delivered to the saints. Nor are they afraid of the fling of being fossillized old fogies when they protest against foisting in without warrant new creeds and doubtful eschatology, or leaving out hitherto cherished articles of the old Puritan faith. With the valiant help of the old but young Christian Mirror of Portland, may they not be trusted to keep orthodoxy in Maine from lapsing into weak, uncertain latitudinarianism?

On my way home I called at Portland upon Neal Dow, Napoleon of temperance, virtual commander-in-chief of the forces (raised or to be raised) that fight for prohibition. I found him at work in his library, hale and hearty, good apparently for another decade of aggressive warfare in the interests of humanity, if not for the whole round century. He informs me that the record of Mr. Blaine is clear and positive as a total abstainer. He is free, too, from all complicity with the lodge—clear in morals, manners and antecedents—an attractive and affable Christian gentleman, a broad-minded, liberal and experienced statesman, whom the country at large may unite in and safely trust; "the reform sentiment of the nation" be well satisfied with; and the Republican party through him be lifted to a higher plane.

The only sign of blast or decay which I saw in a pleasant drive around charming Portland with Mr. Dow, was at the old brick brewery whose manufacture is death-struck, its occupation gone, its drinking constituency scattered and cowed if not reformed, its windows pelted and broken in by the boys of the period, its baleful business blasted and tabooed forever. Mr. Locke, the Nasby of the Toledo Blade and Basset's Four Corner Grocery, lately saw it when he came to Maine, a skeptic, to see for himself the workings of its law. He saw, too, in the complete suppression of the dram-shop in Saccarappa, Westbrook, Gorham and other places, that Prohibition does prohibit, and what it has done for the marvellous prosperity of those towns, and for nearly all the State; and he went back to Toledo saying, "It can be done. Pulverize the liquor traffic." And that is now the motto for his life and the watch-word of his paper. PULVERIZE THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. Dow is confident that Maine will give a strong majority for the Constitutional Prohibitory Amendment that is to be acted upon by the people at the September State election. A representative of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is to be present at every polling place in the State, and to offer an affirmation ballot to every voter. It is felt that a large majority in favor of the amendment is of the utmost importance. NULLA VESTIGIA RETROSUM, is now the wordfor Maine as for reformers everywhere.

WEEK-DAY SERMON.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

"A text for tired people," somebody has called the thirty-first verse of the fortieth chapter of Isaiah. And in truth it is. Yet why are so many Christians fainting and weary and earth-bound? They are verily the true servants of God. If another era of persecution should arise they would be ready to go to prison and death for the love they bare him. Yet their eagle's wings are folded—the wings that should bear them rejoicing over all the muddy, miry places of this working day world.

The other day a dear Christian friend, hard pressed by household care, remarked to me sorrowfully, "This unceasing whirl of domestic occupations so fills up and distracts my mind that I seem to have no place for thoughts of Heaven or my Saviour." Yet I know her to be a woman of saint-like temper and life—and why the folded wings? "I should think it would have been very hard to keep up a spirit of prayer and meditation in the midst of such constant, wearing toil," I once said to Mrs. F. when she was relating some of her experiences as a hard-working wife and mother in the rough life of a newly settled Western State—to which she only said with a quiet smile, "I could always work and worship."

Happy they who have this divine secret, who make their paths of daily toil as sacred as cathedral aisles; who can wash dishes and mop floors, and mend the most distressing rents and tears in a spirit so exalted that their household drudgery seems no more "common or unclean" than lighting the lamps or preparing the beaten oil for the sanctuary. Yet is there any reason why we should not all be sharers in a secret so important? For surely no other can bring more happiness to ourselves or glory to God. We may speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and give our bodies to be burned, but if our religion cannot bear us on eagle's wings over the common trials and crosses of life it profiteth us little. I have noticed that those who succeed best in blending work and worship are always careful to give worship the first place, by never allowing their cares to press so hard as to leave them no room to pray and labor for the good of those outside their immediate circle. Living as she did on the borders of a slave State Mrs F's. sympathies were stronglyenlisted in the Abolitionist cause, and many a barrel of warm clothing for the hunted fugitive did she find time to pack by filling up the nooks and crevices in her busy life with this blessed work for him who has said, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these my brethren ye did it unto me." No wonder she found it easy to "work and worship" when such labor sweetened and glorified her "common toil." I have in my mind another woman, the mother of a large family whose hands are hard and rough with toil, yet she keeps her heart as fresh and unwearied as a child's; and I believe it is due in a large measure to the warm interest which she takes in mission work. She finds time—nobody knows when or how—to read the latest missionary intelligence, and by close and loving economies to send her mite yearly to convert the world to Christ. And she has her reward. Her hobby, as some people call it, gives her wider knowledge and broader sympathies, and leads her out of the ruts of her daily toil to walk in the vastness and beauty and grandeur of that field which is the world.

Dear toiling sister, remember that you are the Lord's free woman, and do not let your household cares, however necessary and important, bring you into bondage. Laboring in a spirit of liberty and gladness more will be accomplished, and it will be better done. Take up some distinctively religious work for the Master, let it be temperance or reform or Sabbath-school work; and be not deterred from the fact that you cannot do much or give much—you can pray the more—and see how it will lift you up as on eagle's wings into a higher spiritual atmosphere. Women, especially Christian women, from the peculiar nature of their life lot need to cultivate a warm intelligent interest in the world's moral and social progress, and in every philanthropic question of the day. Such a one will never be a drudge. She will be Mary with Martha's busy household skill, and Martha with Mary's sweet unworldly spirit of devotion:—if not the coming woman, at least as near that ideal as our world will ever see.

TOBACCO THE HANDMAID OF INTEMPERANCE.

BY ELDER ALBERT SIMS.

It cannot be questioned that between the habits of tobacco-using and drinking there is a close connection, and that the one is very often productive of the other. If the testimony of some tobacco-users and medical men are of any weight, one of the most radical methods of keeping the young from being led to intemperate drinking is to deny them tobacco. The use ot tobacco among boys, says a good old clergyman, is "Satan's seed corn." Significant name! The youth who loves the weed will, ten chances to one, make a tippler; its early habitual use is the training school for drunkenness.

A British physician states that he examined the health of thirty boys, between the ages of nine and fifteen, who were smokers. In twenty-two of these cases he found various disorders of a serious nature, and more or less marked taste for strong drink—a taste which he found had been generated by tobacco.

The use of this weed is, we think, one of the great attractions to the tavern and parlor of the gin-palace; hence tavern-keepers are always glad to serve their customers with tobacco, and willingly give pipes. The blandishments of the rum-seller draw, and the insatiable thirst superinduced by tobacco drives the poor victim to the cup—"the cup of devils." Tobacco incessantly feeds the appetite for alcohol, and the poor drunkard, attempting to rise, is like a man climbing a perpendicular sand-bank, who comes down as fast as he goes up.

The late Rev. G. Trask asks the following pertinent questions: "Tell us how it is that drunkards are tobacco-users, nine to ten—probably ninety-nine to a hundred? Horace Greeley would say, 'Show me a drunkard that don't use tobacco, and we will show you a white blackbird.' Tell us how it is that drunkenness on distilled liquors and this habit were about contemporaneous—began the world together—and, like the Siamese Twins, in close bonds and loving style, have come down to us from past generations? Tell us how it is that dram-shops and tobacco-shops are generally identical, or one and the same? Tell us how it is that a dram-shop has a dialect of its own? How is it that poor, drivelling wretches, amidst smoke, saliva and toddy, say as is proverbial, 'I love to smoke because it makes me love to drink, and I love to drink because it makes me love to smoke,' and so on in endless slang? Tell us how it is that our men of science, our reliable physicians, Muzzey, Alcott, Woodward, Agnew, Twitchell, and Warren, Brodie, and a host in Europe, hold it to be a physiological doctrine that one artificial appetite generates another, and that tobacco, by wasting saliva, parching the throat, and inflaming the chest, creates thirst for drink, and paves the way for downright drunkenness? Tell us how it is that a drunkard who merely drops his cups but holds on upon his tobacco—often taking the more—has cravings for liquor well-nigh irrepressible; whilst, on the other hand, if he stops his tobacco such cravings are wont to die away? Talk with any poor fellow you see, who has actually passed this ordeal, and he will verify this statement. Tell us how it is that the votaries of tobacco have periodical seasons of depression and goneness, and that multitudes, by confessions, resort to the bottle as an antidote?"

Hence the significant prayer of the Indian, who said, "I wish for three things—first, all the rum there is in the world; secondly, all the tobacco there is the world; and, then, more rum!"

"I have no hesitation in averring," says one of the oldest, most able, and experienced temperance advocates (Mr. Joseph Bormond), "that gigantic as are the evils arising from the use of strong drink, these of smoking exceed them." "I know of no single vice," says the late Mr. Solly, "which does so much harm as smoking."

A well-known temperance advocate writes: "I have known members of the church to break the pledge, but it has nearly always been the case that such have been smokers, and have blamed the pipe for it. So far as I have observed more members of our temperance societies fall from being caught in these snare, than in any other."

Another writer says, "The use of tobacco is one of the most powerful accessories of the temptations to drinking which surround British youth." The late Dr. Jas. Hamilton remarked, "Extinguish the pipes of London, and you will go far to shut up the public houses."

It is a fact that in most cases of breach of the Good Templar obligation the man has been a smoker.

In the State's prison in Auburn, N. Y., were 600 prisoners, confined there for crimes committed when they were under the influence of strong drink; 500 of them testified that they began their intemperance by the use of tobacco!

Opium and alcohol, it is said, place their victims in an abnormal condition. Tobacco does the same, though in multitudes of cases in a far more thorough and intense degree than alcohol. An inebriate on alcohol may plunge into a debauch to-day and for a while be abnormal; he may, however, emerge to-morrow, and be himself again. The victim of tobacco, it should be said, is in a different condition. He, in some sense, is constantly using it from morning to night. He is thoroughly permeated, and saturated with the insidious and subtle poison. He lives and moves and has his being amidst its nauseus fumigations and saliva, and in strictness of speech, so long as under the power of the poison, he is never in a normal state, and never himself again. Hence the man who is but occasionally drunk on alcohol, is a more hopeful subject of the grace of God than the man who is all the time under the hallucinations of tobacco!

If this is not intemperance, what is intemperance? for does not the Bible clearly define true temperance to be the proper use of good things, total abstinence of bad things?

This intoxication on tobacco can hardly be said to have much distinction from that of the whisky inebriate. Drunkenness is drunkenness whether effected by alcohol or tobacco; and "Drunkards shall not inherit the kingdom of God," no matter whether they become such through the influence of spirituous liquors or narcotics. Some—and not a few—smoke themselves to death; some drink themselves to death; and which are most guilty, or least guilty, in the sight of God, we are not anxious to determine. We have heard of cases where the lover of the weed—though a professor of religion—has been led into drunkenness, and become a backslider through the use of tobacco. An eminent Baptist minister, in writing on this subject, says: "I have had to exclude from church membership many smokers who have fallen into the sin of intoxication!"

Nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God. 1 Cor. 6: 10.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE.

[Judge Noah Davis of New York in the North American Review.]

The marital relation is the normal condition of adult mankind. Whoever of either sex voluntarily lives out of that relation is at war with nature and her laws, and consequently with the best order of society. The rebellion may not be henious enough to call for any punishment, beyond what it carries as its own consequence; nevertheless it fights incessantly against the true interest of organized communities. This is proven by the fact that marriage alone is the mother of the family; and the family is the organic unit of civil society, and the sheet-anchor of its good order. Without marriage, there can be no family in the sense in which I am using that term. Think for one moment what society would be without the family. Blot out the relation of marriage. Annul its obligations and duties. Conceive, if possible, of all women forever husbandless, of all men forever wifeless, of all offspring forever bastardized. Imagine the home, the hearthstone, the family circle with all their loves, their tender friendships, their lifelong sympathies, their parental, filial, and fraternal ties, their hopes, fears, and cares of infancy and youth, in joy, health, and life, in sorrow, sickness, and death; their rights of heritage and heirship, of lineage and name, all shattered and gone forever, and the race turned loose in a pandemonium of selfish and indiscriminate lusts and crimes. No Dante could paint such a hell; nor could its fires be extinguished, save by the slow expiring ashes of universal dissolution. He studies man and his origin, nature, and history to little purpose who fails to see that the family and marriage, its creator and preserver, are of all things foremost in importance to the peace, happiness, and progress of the race.

The subject of marriage is so deeply interwoven with the public interest that the State, whatever be its form of government, must, as a matter of self-preservation, take the institution into its charge by provision of laws enacted for its control and protection. The question at once suggests itself, whether it should be treated as a religious or as a secular institution, or as one combining both of those qualities. For my own part, I confess to a leaning toward the religious side of the question. Not that I am a religionist in any narrow sense of that term; but because I like the ceremony of religious solemnities in marrying and given in marriage, and the better provisions they usually afford for preserving proper evidences of the transaction. This latter reason is not of trifling significance, but of serious importance, especially to the wife, and the children that may be born of the marriage. But in our country, where no state religion does or can exist, it is doubtless wiser that the state should recognize marriage as a simple contract which may be entered into by persons who are free from all legal, mental, and physical disabilities. The state should, therefore, recognize the validity of all marriages between competent persons, made in any mode or form that indicates the making of a civil contract.

But the question of the manner of forming the relation is of little significance when compared with that of the nature of the relation when formed. That is not a mere co-partnership of individualities created to intensify individual advantages and enjoyments, but a God-ordained union of bodies, hearts, minds and souls concentrated to the perpetuation of the race by the creation of the family, through which organized society obtains its surest and holiest guarantees of happiness and progress. Whether created by simple contract or the most solemn religious ceremonies, it is an institution public as well as private in its nature, because of its intimate relations to society and posterity. In this light only, I insist, can the marriage relation be rightly viewed.

But there seems to be no great good in the world without some great antagonizing evil. Every Eden has its serpent. Marriage is no exception, for over against it stands its antipodal foe, Divorce. The State, society, good government, good order, and all their attendant blessings are, from the necessities of their nature, hostile to divorce. A few words may demonstrate this, for divorce disintegrates and destroys the condition of things out of which these spring and grow to their supremest beauty and strength. If a state of society could be found in which no present recognized ground of divorce did or could exist, the folly and crime of inventing a ground would be monstrous. All the conditions of perpetuity through the family, by growth, prosperity, and power, other things being equal, would be guaranteed to such a state; and the introduction of divorce would be, like the dynamite of modern Irish warfare, a devil's ingenuity. As it is the State—society—that is most deeply interested in the existence and continuance of the family, and marriage its founder, so it is society that is most deeply wounded when divorce disrupts and terminates those conditions of life; because it invades the home, defiles its sanctities, lays open its privacies, dishonors its parentage, shames its childhood, and arrests the only pure revenues of human life.

Therefore, in considering the subject of divorce, the interests of society are first and paramaunt; those of individuals are subordinate and secondary. In entering upon the marriage relation, the parties contract with society to respect and perform all the functions and duties of that relation for the welfare of society: to set up the family, to create a lineage and rear it to good citizenship for service in war, and in peace, in order to maintain the State. This contract they have no power or right to annul without the consent of the State.

Herein lies the fallacy of the notions of some of the modern advocates of free-and-easy divorce. They ignore the supreme conditions and purposes of marriage, and elevate the individuality of the parties above the supremacy of society and the State. They treat marriage as a simple contract, affecting them only who make it, and who, they say, can therefore unmake it at pleasure. They wholly discard the idea of the life-unity of one man and one woman in a relation sacredly consecrated to any high, or holy, or other purposes than those of caprice or passion. They ignore the family and exaggerate the individual, and wholly discard the claims of the State. This is no new idea. It has always been a central idea of barbarism. It has prevailed through the most licentious eras of all peoples. It is the culminating thought of the harem. It has been the curse and degradation of women, making her the slave and man the master, a creature for the shambles, bought and sold at the price of lust—higher in her bloom, lower in her decay, than "the dumb driven cattle."

The time spent by many people in devouring column after column in the newspapers descriptive of crimes of various kinds, and other useless reading, would equip them, if rightly used, with an amount of useful information that would surprise them. A writer in a literary journal makes a somewhat exact calculation of what could be accomplished by a persistent and regular reader. Hear him:

"Two columns a day in the newspapers which I could easily have spared, for they were given mainly to murder trials and the search for corpses, or to the romance of the reporter concerning the same, having during the last ten years absorbed just about the time I might have spent in reading a very respectable course in history—one embracing, say, Curtius and Grote for Greece, Mommsen, Merivale and Gibbon for Rome, Hume, Macaulay and Green for my own roots in Saxondom, Bancroft, Hildreth and Palfrey for the ancestral tree in America, together with a very notable excursion into Spain and Holland with Motley and Prescott—a course which I consider very desirable, and one which should set up a man of middle age very fairly in historical knowledge."—United Presbyterian.

VOTE FOR THE RIGHT!

Would ye know and serve the Right?
Would ye cherish honor bright!
Would ye worship Love and Light?
Choose your side to-day!
Aid this Struggle while you can—
Voting for an honest man;
Let no blight of bribe or ban—
On your ballot lay.

Has your vote no higher aim
Than to bolster deeds of shame?
Would you see your country's name
Doomed to infamy?
Come and sternly answer, No!
Let your vote for virtue go!
Let it swell the tides that flow
For the Good and True.

Do your duty—God will aid,
Dare to vote as you have prayed;
Who e'er conquered while his blade
Served his open foes?
Right established would you see?
Wrongs and outrage made to flee?
Strike for that which ought to be,
The Lord will bless the blows.

A STORY WITHOUT A MORAL.

Is John Occult wealthy?

He is well to do.

Then he is doing well?

Splendidly. He belongs to no less than half a dozen secret charitable societies.

Is that of any advantage to him?

Advantage? I should say so. Why look at Charley Grip's ease. Charley only belonged to two societies, and when he died he had a bang-up funeral. Both lodges turned out with full ranks, and marched all over town in stunning regalia, and headed by a drum corps. And then you ought to have seen the flowers! The interior of the church looked like a conservatory.

Yes, that must have been very gratifying to Charley, supposing that he was fond of flowers; but didn't they do anything for his widow?

Do anything? They did everything. They passed splendid resolutions, chuck full of allusions to "an all-wise providence," "our beloved brother," "love and regard," "heart-felt sympathies," and all that sort of thing, and printed them in all the newspapers, besides sending her a copy. If two lodges did all that, what might not one expect of six? That's why I say John is well to do. —Boston Transcript.

GLOOMY OUTLOOK FOR INFIDELITY.—Somehow, skepticism and infidelity are making poor headway. Their ventures against Christianity all come to naught, and their insane expectations turn to ashes. Of course this cannot be otherwise, for "the Lord has them in derision; the Lord shall laugh them to scorn." Their puny efforts against the Almighty arm and will is less than nothing, for it is turned even against themselves. They are even beginning to give utterance to their disappointment and despair. One has said; "After all we have done for the past thirty years, the people flock to hear these ministers and fill up their mourners' benches and anxious seats, and give their money, and we can't get any money for anything." Yes, you have got to the truth at last. Just look back through the entire history of infidelity. Has it not always been so, and is it not even more so to-day than ever before? Is it possible that you cannot read your doom in this? How many months will it be after the infidel is dead, and gone to his own place, before he will be utterly forgotten by the world? But the church of Christ will live on, for it is founded upon a rock. It has prevailed, it does prevail, and it will prevail to the end. No infidelity, on the one hand, nor hypocritical, unfaithful professors on the other, can stay her onward march, or even seriously check it.—Christian at Work.

Speaking to a brother who is very much opposed to Masonry but unwilling that the public should know it, Dr. Blanchard recently said, "You remind me, dear brother, of a beautiful cat I once had. She was very fond of fish, but she would not wet her feet to get them." The old Doctor is a master of satire as well as of invective. Speaking of public sentiment on this question he said, "If you touch it, it will hiss like a tailor's goose." And this recalls a passage at arms between two young men—long ago—who were rivals for the smiles of a young lady. One of them, Mr. A., sat on a sofa with a young lady on each side of him, the object of the jealousy being one of them. Mr. B. sauntered up and put a conundrum: "Ladies, why do you remind me of two poor tailors?" A merry laugh and they "gave it up." "One goose between them!" Mr. A. arose, acknowledged himself vanquished and remarking that "to the victor belong the spoils," offered his rival his seat, which was accepted. "Now ladies," he remarked, "why do you remind me of two peasant market girls?"—and walked away, leaving the mischievous beauties insisting upon Mr. B. to help them guess the conundrum!—The Interior.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

SAMUEL C. POMEROY,

OF KANSAS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,

OF CONNECTICUT.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable;

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights, while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion, or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties, as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it. Yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy; and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living, and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country; "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

Americans are doing well to scatter the Cynosure among their neighbors during the Presidential campaign. Party ties are so weak that Democrats are becoming Republicans and vice versa,—many doubtless would become Americans if the principles of the American party were known. Shall they be known? Pray and talk for these principles; send the campaign paper to your neighbors; and then furnish them tickets to vote with you for Pomeroy and Conant, and freedom from lodge and rum rule.

Roll on the American ball.

A MORNING STAR IN THE POLITICAL HEAVENS.

BURRELL, Pa.

Light shoots forth from the American platform, like luster from the morning star. I have no delicacy in speaking a word of praise, inasmuch as it is not my platform. I watch with intense interest, as that little pugnacious, irrepressible party fights for principle—fights its way up towards the high places of the nation. It seems to be the embodiment of the spirit, intelligence, and determination of the heroic ages of reformation. The ranks are thin, yet they carry the banners, that carry the mottoes, that shall rally the masses, and make the earth tremble under their tread. There can be no mistake about this statement. For their principles are eternal, universal, and God has written on those principles the prophecy of success.

The platforms of the two great parties are much like unto great, black masses of clouds, shutting out the light of heaven, and suffering not the people to see the great moral and religious truths, that underlie civil government. And they are clouds that shut out of sight, all responsibility to God; blinding the voters as to their allegiance to the Prince, Messiah. And they are clouds dark below, but bright on the upper side, as the anger of the neglected God of this nation glares upon them, generating electricity, which will sooner or later precipitate a furious storm upon this country.

We are glad to see the truth gleam from the American platform, not because we are on it, but because it is in line with our hopes and prayers. It seems like the morning star in the political heavens; the herald of a coming day; a day of national glory and greatness, such as the world has not yet seen. And we behold more than the star. We see the rosy dawn ascending the eastern skies, and tipping the highest mountain tops of statesmanship in the land. The grand ideal set before the nations is to be in alliance and allegiance with King Jesus. And here in this platform we have God mentioned, who is the Father of Christ; and we have the Bible mentioned, which is the word of Christ; and we have the significant adjective "Christian" written with its significant capital "C." There is much comfort in this. It is Christ's glory appearing in the crystalizing politics of the land. And we trust it shall continue to increase, till "men shall be blessed in him, and all nations shall call him blessed."

But Christ's name is not found even in the American platform; it can be inferred; but it is not expressed. We cannot think the party fears to express it for the party fears nothing; not even defeat. The party then must either have overlooked this matter, or have considered it improper. But is it improper? The Bible tells us that he is to be the chiefest Statesman, the highest Prince, the greatest Ruler, in every nation. "The government shall be upon his shoulders;" "His name shall be called the Prince of Peace;" "Yea all kings shall fall down before him, all nations shall serve him;" "Be wise now therefore, O ye kings; be instructed, ye judges of the earth, * * * * kiss the Son, lest he be angry;" "And he was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood, and his name is called the Word of God;" "And out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations;" "And he shall rule them with a rod of iron;" "And he treadeth the wine-press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God;" "And he hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS."

Christ occupies a throne that rules the nations. The Scriptures assert this truth, in strongest language. And it is neither whimsical nor sectarian, neither ungenerous nor non-philanthropic to assert that he sways a scepter that commands every nation, whether Christian or Pagan, Protestant or Papal. It is a truth most powerfully urged by the Bible. Jesus sustains then, a national relation to every nation. And it becomes every nation to acknowledge that national relation. But that acknowledgement is wanting. "The kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together, against the Lord, and against his Anointed, saying, let us break their bands asunder, and cast their cords from us." The Anointed Son of God shall yet be honored with this acknowledgement. "All nations shall call him blessed." And if this acknowledgement come peaceably, if not forced by terrific discharges of heaven's batteries, which have desolated Egypt, Babylon, Syria, and Palestine; if it come peaceably, we expect it to come at first through a political platform, as the platform is the living voice, or fetid breath, of dominant parties.

Then as the American party has boldly championed the great reformation principles that shall yet transform our nation with millennial glory, why should it leave the name, that is above every name, out of sight, unexpressed, if not suppressed? Why does it not write that name in great capitals, in the first lines of its platform, and demand that it be engraven on the nation's palladium;—the nation's constitution? Why does it not emblazon that name on every banner that waves over its soldiers of truth and Christianity? Why not follow the leadership of him, of whom it is written, "And behold a white horse; and he that sat upon him was called faithful and true; and in righteousness he doth judge and make war"? Why not follow his leadership into the fierce battle of Armageddon, and fight till the beast be taken; and the false prophet; and the dragon, that old serpent, which is the devil, and Satan, be bound with a chain, for a thousand years? Into this conflict are they marching with steady tread and lions' hearts; and why not follow under this leader? And give him the honor of leading, by emblazoning his name on their banner? This party in moral principle, and Christian statesmanship, is so far ahead of all other political parties, that they are left altogether out of sight. And yet without the inspiration of a prophet, with the instruction of the Bible alone we can say, that this party too, if it kiss not the Son, shall "perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little." "Blessed are all they that put their trust in him."

J. C. M'FEETERS.

A LESSON FROM PITTSBURGH.

The wisdom of pushing the American party issues was fully demonstrated at Pittsburgh. There is every reason to believe that a very large percentage of the Prohibitionists are not in sympathy with the lodges. They are earnest, frank, out-spoken, and thoroughly sincere, and in heart are opposed to methods requiring outside and inside guardians to protect them from the scrutiny and co-operation of their conscientious neighbors. They have never studied the secret system and do not know its wiles or how to meet and defeat them. They need what the American party can and ought to give: information, encouragement and support. The next thing to be done is to hold a convention in Illinois and put a full ticket of State officers in nomination. This should be done not later than the 18th of October, and every friend in the State, and those outside who can, should be there. It has been suggested that the National Committee meet at the same time and place, to more thoroughly perfect arrangements for pushing work all along the lines. The National Convention was held so recently in Chicago, that it would seem desirable to select some other point for a State meeting. Where shall it be? Monmouth, Galesburg, Springfield, or where? J. P. STODDARD.

THE PROHIBITION PLATFORM.

The platform adopted at Pittsburgh last Thursday is reproduced below. It is needlessly prolix and argumentative, and the convention itself recognized the fact by referring it to a committee to reduce its length and simplify its intricacies. After the adoption of the platform John P. St. John of Kansas was nominated for President, and William Daniels of Maryland for Vice President:

1. The Prohibition Home Protection party, in National convention assembled, acknowledge Almighty God as the rightful sovereign of all men, and from whom the just powers of government are derived; to whose laws human enactments should conform, and that peace, prosperity and happiness only can come to the people when their laws of the National and State Governments are in accord with the Divine will.

2. That the importation, manufacture, supply, and sale of alcoholic beverages, created and maintained by the laws of the National and State Governments, during the entire history of such laws, is everywhere shown to be the promoting cause of intemperance, with resulting crime and pauperism, making large demands upon public and private charity, imposing large and unjust taxation and public burdens for penal and sheltering institutions upon thrift, industry, manufactures and commerce; endangering the public peace; causing desecration of the Sabbath; corrupting our politics, legislation, and administration of the laws; shortening lives, impairing health and diminishing the productive industry; causing education to be neglected and despised; nullifying the teachings of the Bible, the church and the school—the standards and guides of our fathers and their children in the founding and growth, under God, of our widely extended country, and which, imperiling the perpetuity of our civil and religious liberty, are baleful fruits, by which we know that these laws are alike contrary to God's laws and contravene our happiness; and we call upon our fellow-citizens to aid in the repeal of these laws and the legal suppression of this baleful liquor traffic.

3. The fact that during the twenty-four years in which the Republican party has controlled the General Government, and that of many of these Statcs, no effort has been made to ehange the policy. Territories have been created from the National domain and governments for them established and States from them admitted to the Union, in neither of which has this traffic been forbidden or the people of these Territories or States been permitted to prohibit. That there are now over 200,000 distilleries, breweries, and retail dealers in these drinks, holding certificates and claiming the authority of the government for the continuation of a business so destructive to the moral and material welfare of the people, together with the fact that they have turned a deaf ear to remonstrance and petition for the correction of the abuse of civil government, is conclusive that the Republican party is insensible to, or impotent for the redress of those wrongs and should no longer be intrusted with the powers or responsibilities of government. That although this party in its late National convention was silent on the liquor question, not so its candidates—Messrs. Blaine and Logan. Within the year past Mr. Blaine has publicly recommended that the revenue derived from the liquor traffic shall be distributed among the States, and Senator Logan has by bill proposed to devote these revenues to the support of schools. Thus both virtually recommend the perpetuation of the traffie, and that the States and its citizens shall become partners in the liquor crime. The fact that the Democratic party has in its National deliveranees of party policy arrayed itself on the side of the drink-makers and sellers by declaring against the policy of prohibition of such traffic under the false name of "sumptuary laws," and when in power in some of the States refusing to remedy legislation, and in Congress refusing to permit the creation of a board of inquiry to investigate and report upon the effects of this traffic proves that the Democratic party should not be intrusted with power or place. That there can be no greater peril to the Nation than the existing competition of the Republican and Democratic parties for the liquor vote. Experience shows that any party not openly opposed to the traffic, will engage in this competition, will court the favor of the criminal classes, will barter away the public morals, the purity of the ballot and every trust and object of good government, for party success, and patriots and good citizens should find in this practice sufficient cause for immediate withdrawal from connection with their party.

That while we favor reforms in the administration of the government in the abolition of all sinecures and useless offices, we favor the election by the people of the postoffice officers of government instead of appointment by the President; that competition and sobriety are essential qualifications for holding a civil office and we oppose the removal of such persons except so far as it may bc absolutely necessary to secure effectiveness as the vital issues on which the government is intrusted to a party; that the collection of revenues from alcohols, liquors, and tobaeco should be abolished as the vices of men, and not a proper subject for taxation.

5. That revenue for customs duties should be levied for thc support of the government, economically administered, and when so levied the fostering of American labor, manufacturers, and industries, should constantly be held in view.

6. That the public lands should be held for homes for the people, and not for gifts to corporations, or to be held in large bodies for speculation upon the needs of actual settlers.

7. That all money, coin and paper, shall be made, issued, and regulated by the general government, and shall be legal tender for all debts, public and private.

8. That grateful eare and support should be given to our soldiers and sailors, their dependent widows or orphans, disabled in the service of the country.

9. That we repudiate as un-American, contrary to and subversive of the principles of the Declaration of Independence, from which our government has grown to be a government of 55,000,000 of people, and a recognized power among the nations, that any person or people shall or may be exeluded from residence or citizenship with all others who may desire the benefits which our institutions conferred upon the oppressed of all nations.

10. That while these are important reforms, and demanded for the purity of administration and the welfare of the people, their importance sinks into iusignificance when compared to the reform of the drink traffic which annually wastes $800,000,000 of the wealth created by toil and thrift, and drags down thousands of families from comfort to poverty; which fills jails, penitentiaries, insane asylums, hospitals, and institutions for dependency; which destroyes the health, saps the industry, and causes loss of life and property to thousands in the land, lowers intellectual and physieal vigor, dulls the cunning hand of the artisan, the chief eause of bankruptcy, insolveney, and loss in trade, and by its corrupting power endangers the perpetuity of free institutions.

11. That Congress should exercise its undoubted power and prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating beverages in the Distriet of Columbia, the Territories of the United States, and in all places over which the government has exclusive jurisdiction.

12. That hereafter no State shall be admitted into the Union until its eonstitution shall expressly prohibit polygamy and the manufacture and salc of intoxicating beverages.

We earnestly eall the attention of the laborer and mechanic, the miner and manufacturer, and ask an investigation of the baneful effects upon labor and industry caused by the needless liquor business, which will be found a robber, which lessens wages and profits—the destroyer of the happiness and family welfare of the laboring man; and that labor and legitimate industry demand deliverance from the taxation and loss which this traffic imposes, and that no legislation can so healthily stimulate production or increasc a demand for capital and labor, or produce so much comfort and content, as the suppressing of this traffic would bring to the laboring man, mechanic or employer of labor throughout our land.

13. That the activity or co-operation of the women of Americe for the promotion of temperance has, in all the history of the past, been strength and encouragement which we greatly acknowledge, and the methods, the earnestness, zeal, intelligence, and devotion of the mothers and daughters of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has been eminently blessed by God. Kansas and Iowa have been given her as "sheaves" of rejoicing, and the education and arousing of the public mind, and the constitutional amendments which now prevail, are largely the fruit of her prayers and labors: and we rejoice to have our Christian women unite with us, sharing in the labor that shall bring abolition of the traffic. She shall join in the grand "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," when by law our boys and firesides shall be free from legal drink temptation.

14. That believing in the civil and political equality of the sexes, that the ballot in the hand of woman is right for her protection, and would prove a powerful ally for the suppression of the drink saloon, the execution of the law, the promotion of reform in civil officers, and the removal of corruption in public life, we delegate the practical outworking of this reform to the discretion of the Prohibition party in the several States, acecording to the condition of the public sentiment in those States.

15. That gratefully we acknowledge and praise God for the presence of his Spirit, guiding counsel, and granting the success which has been vouchsafed in the progress of temperance reform, and looking to him for all wisdom and help, we ask the voters of the United States to make the prineiples of the above declaration a ruling principle in the government of the Nation and of the States.

THE PITTSBURGH GOOD TEMPLAR ROW.

The press reports of Wednesday afternoon in the Prohibition convention pictures that disgraceful scene in more glaring colors than even the Cynosure editorial correspondence. The Pittsburgh Press thus describes it:

The secret society question was sprung on the convention this afternoon and a storm was created, the like of which has rarely been witnessed in this eity. It was shortly after the call to order and one or two items of routine business had been disposed of and the report to the committee on credentials was about to be read, when Rev. Charles A. Blanchard, of Chicago, son of the venerable Dr. Blanchard, editor of the Anti-masonic Cynosure, and president of Wheaton College, was called to the stagc. Prof. Blanchard seemed to act on some of the delegates like a red flag on a battle. He was greeted with cries of "time!" "Let us have the report!" "Proeeed to business!" But order was restored and the speaker was allowed to proceed. He told the convention that he had just eome from the convention of the American Prohibition party. [Cries of time.] That party he said, had a history very like that of the Prohibition party. It was organized as a party at the same time and for the same reasons, because its anti-secret society principles were not taken up by either of the great parties. Both of these parties favored the prohibition of the liquor traffic. When the mother has worked hard and deprives herself of the comforts of life to educate her son the State had no right to lay a snare for her feet. [Applause and cries of louder.] He was strongly in favor of women suffrage, and was warmly applauded when he declared that the State should put into the hand of woman the sword of the ballot, that she may cut the liouor traffic out. "We believe also," he said, "that men should not be allowed to enter into secret obligations inconsistent with the good of the State." This was the signal for the storm of interruptions. Hisses were heard all over the hall. "It is recorded in history, Rome was once saved by the cackling of geese," said Prof. Blanchard, gazing steadily into the face of those who were interrupting him, "but it was not by the hissing of geese."

This was the signal for a new outburst. Delegates all over the hall leaped to their feet, some stood upon chairs and tried in vain to make themselves heard.

"I protest," shouted John B. Finch, of Nebraska, the head of the Good Templar's organization. "I protest against such an insult to delegates of this convention."

"Wisconsin protests," shouted Rev. Henry Coleman, D.D., formerly of Milwaukee. Protest! Protest! Time! Time! Give us the report! Sit down! The cries came from all parts of the house. Chairman Daniel, who is evidently none too well versed in parliamentary law, made frantic efforts to restore order, but the sharp, quick strokes of the gavel only increased the din. Professor Blanchard meantime stood erect and unmoved. He gazed full in the face of his audience as if he was receiving a round of applause. His clear, full voice rang out above the tumult without showing the slightest quiver of emotion. He spoke steadily on, but nobody heard what he said—not even the reporters, who got close to the stage.

"I second the protest of the delegate from Nebraska," yelled A. L. Smith, of Illinois, a nervous young man with a light moustache. "This is an outrage," re-echoed another delegate.

"Mr. Blanchard has the floor," said Chairman Daniel, with a loud rap of the gavel, and amid a loud chorus of cries the speaker went on. "I want to thank you, ladies and gentlemen, [Report! Report! Sit down!] and to express the hope [Give us the report!] [Time!] that the time will soon come when the great principles of the two parties shall prevail, [a storm of hisses] and when the licensing of the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be a thing of the past." Mingled hisses and applause filled the air as the defiant young Westerner stepped back on the stage. A dozen delegates were on their feet and old Dr. Blanchard who had taken in every feature of the performance with the keenest interest, leaned back in his chair and laughed loud and heartily.

The Chicago Herald had a very full report of the convention, and described Mr. Finch's little time thus:

When the convention reassembled at 3 P. M., after prayer by Rev. Dr. Hayes, of Illinois, and some laughter over the proposition of a delegate to make people keep their feet still, telegrams of congratulation were read from the Prohibitionists of Missouri, Middletown, N. Y., and Eastern Pennsylvania, and it was decided to send a congratulatory dispatch to the temperance convention which meets in Indianapolis to-morrow. At this point the Chairman announced that Rev. C. A. Blanchard, president of Wheaton College, was present as bearer of greetings from the native American (Anti-masonic) party. It was unanimously resolved that the reverend gentleman be heard, and he was loudly applauded when he took the platform. He briefly referred to the circumstances under which the American party came into existence. He referred to the fact that two of its cardinal principles were prohibition and woman suffrage. Proceeding, the speaker said: "There is only one point in which we do not agree—we of the American party do not believe in people who are members of a secret society holding public office."

This expression was the signal for an uproarious scene. Following this outbreak came hisses from all parts of the hall. In vain the speaker endeavored to proceed. The audience howled itself hoarse. Men stood on their chairs and shook their fists at the platform. Finally, with a few words of thanks, which could not be heard a yard away, the speaker quitted the platform. Delegate Smith, of Illinois, mounted on his chair, and evidently laboring under great excitement, voeiferously declared that the remarks of the preceding speaker were a gross insult to a large and respectable body of men, and moved that no other representative of a political party be allowed a hearing during the remainder of the convention. This was loudly applauded, but was shelved for the time being by a reference to the Committee on Platform. The Committee on Credentials was called upon for a report, but no response being made, "Old Hundred" was sung. John B. Finch, of Nebraska, was loudly called for, but rising in his seat, begged to be excused from making a speech, saying that he was here as a delegate, and desired simply "to work with the boys."

THE PROHIBITION PARTY.

The following summary of the work of prohibition in politics is from the Wooster, O., Herald. The compiler classes the prohibition work in Kansas, Iowa and Ohio as the work of the party, whereas the Republican party was the party of prohibition in those States.

The first national nominating convention of the Prohibition party assembled in the Opera House at Columbus, O., February 22d, 1872.

A declaration of principles was adopt d and the following nominations were made: For President, James Black of Pennsylvania; for Viee President, Rev. John Russell, of Michigan.

In five States electoral tickets were put in the field; total vote polled, 5,508.

The second national nominating convention of the Prohibition party was held in Halle's Hall, Cleveland, Ohio, May 17th, 1876. Hon. Green Clay Smith of Kentucky, was nominated for President, and Hon. Gideon Stewart of Ohio for Vice President.

Electoral tickets were put in the field in seventeen States, and 9,757 votes reported.

The third national nominating convention was held in Cleveland, O., June 17th, 1880. Gen. Neal Dow, of Maine, was nominated for President, and Rev. H. A. Thompson, of Ohio, for Viee President.

Electoral tickets were put in the field in fifteen States, and 10,305 votes reported.

In 1882 the aggregate vote in eleven States for State officers was 75,822.

In 1883 the aggregate vote in seven States for State officers was 58,205.

In 1880 a prohibitory amendment to the State constitution was submitted to the voters of Kansas. It was adopted by a majority of 7,998. There were 92,302 votes cast for it and 82,304 cast against it.

In 1882 a prohibitory amendment to the State constitution was submitted to the voters of Iowa. It was adopted by a majority of 29,729. There were 155,365 votes cast for it and 125,636 cast against it.

In 1883 a prohibitory amendment to the State constitution was submitted to the voters of Ohio. Notwithstanding the fact that the issue was complicated by the submission of a lieense amendment at the same time and hat the vote had to be given at a general election, 323,-189 votes were cast for it while only 98,849 votes were cast for the lieense amendment.

Up to the present all the national Prohibition eonventions have been held in Ohio. Two Ohio men have received the nomination for Viee President: Stewart in 1876 and Thompson in 1880. Ohio was also the first State to place an Independent Prohibition ticket in the field, which was done in 1869—the convention, we believe, was held at Crestline, O.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MASONRY IN THE NATIONAL SOLDIER'S HOME.

MILWAUKEE, Wis.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Having read an article in your paper from a veteran of the Soldier's Home, as to their treatment, and being a Mason myself, I was led to inquire of another Freemason as to the truth of those matters, and found it correct. My friend being an inmate of that Home, he said that an inmate of State-prison would not be so harshly tyranized over, and that Andersonville had less terror. My friend strictly charged me not to make his name known, "For," says he, "when I went there they began this eussedness upon me. I did not let on that I was a Mason until I had satisfied myself that noue but a Mason could be safe and free from jeopardy, and then on on an occasion when my crank sergeant was trying to tyranize, I says to him, 'Now old crank, you want to let up on this'! and making myself known as one he begged all manner of pardons and remarked, 'You know we have all manner of trash here and we have to deal accordingly.'" Says my friend, "How do you discriminate between trash and others? You took me for one." Here is the point, a Mason is not trash, however heartless. But, says my friend, they removed Hall from being Provost Marshall because of cruelty, and put in Moyer, a worse desperado than Hall. The Sentinel of our city has blustered much over the eruelties practiced at the Home, but it does not tell boldly that a Masonic curse is upon it. The Home is thronged with officers suffieient to guard the city of Milwaukee; and to make it appear as a case of necessity, they seek after men as a hound on the rabbit's track.

The following are the pretexts for imprisonment: for stepping on the grass, for being heard to sing, for speaking loud enough to attract attention, for taking a piece of bread and butter from the table to eat because you have not finished before the waiters snatch your plate from under your knife, for giving reasons why you should not be accused of a matter which you know not of, for not fixing your bed just to a wrinkle in a sheet just as you are told to, also for being found with liquor in you. I have seen a Mason police so drunk his nose would shine like the sun in a foggy morning, lugging a poor old harmless man to the guard house that one could scarcely detect had tasted any; but the poor old victim could not place his thumb under his nose and brush up and down the ridge of his nose with his fore finger as well as they could. All these sip the government appropriations to euhanee their power and Masonic eraft, and humanity beneath them groans piteously under the burden. Go into your State-prison, see the convicts pass to the table under the eyes of many guards, as is it at the Home near our city; whether you go in or out, sit down or stand up, from three to a dozen men are staring like so many hungry dogs at a carcass, ready to seize on to you, each one performing his Masonic gestures: rearing the Mizpehs, guaging the level and plumb, forming the squares, brushing the noses, wiping the eyes, pulling flies from under the ear, winking with the eye, and all with barbarous boasting that they have got the Guard house full of the Royal family.

When strangers go to visit them, a man wearing a girdle band called "Officer of the Day" meets them gladly at the door to escort them speedily through, lest they by chance should hear the pitiful tales of bereaved souls; and so intimidated are some of them that they dare not speak lest their oppressions be heaped heavier upon their necks; and some even go so far as to lie for their oppressors hoping for clemency, but they find it only for the moment, and when the inspectors come around they are diverted from the purpose for which they came, and return with a lie in their mouth that all is well,—and still, not a lie, for they mean "with the Masonic brethren." It is really amusing to see a man come into the home to be a pauper with the rest, with heart full of the pride of life, and upon feeling the first pang of offenee he rises up to assert his manhood, saying, "They can't ride me." But time passes; he feels the iron hand sinking him lower and lower beneath the wave of gloomy subordination. If any man dare to question or deny the truth of this statement just mark that man for a liar, although he be my brother in the craft; but I cannot stand it to see honest humanity so shamefully treated. Pray do not call that a soldier's home, but a Mason's bank and a non-Mason's hell. It grieves me much to be obliged to so charge my brethren, but God knows when the eagles, as they call themselves, flee to the spoils at the expense of human liberty, charity and mercy, then I say it is time that they be made to suffer the torment they have pressed upon others. The principles of Masonry are good in their place, but like the Pharisees they have made it a den of thieves so that the temple needs abundance of salt and fire. The Soldier's Home, the Credit Mobilier, the "Salary Grab," the land grant, Wall street swindles, monopoly encouragements and promises of pensions to all soldiers in the future, have their root in the voracious hearts of Masons, and the soldiers at the Homes not Masons are pressed lower than State-prison convicts.

Yours truly, S. J. ROSE.

CONTROVERTING ROME.

"Reasons for Doubt in the Church of Rome," by the Earl of Redesdale in reply to Monsignor Capel, tries to prove that Rome is unsound from Capel's own standpoint. Because:

First, Rome sets up her own teaching in opposition to Christ's words; e. g., by substituting the wafer for the cup, thereby preventing obedience to Christ's command to "drink of it." In fact Capel himself says, "The commandment of our Lord was clear and absolute, and no power on earth can change it." The reply is, that the Church of Rome, after fourteen centuries, did change it! A very good reason for doubting Rome, certainly.

Another cause for doubt is papal infallibility—accepted by the church only in the nineteenth century! Paul withstood Peter because he was to be blamed. Gal. 2: 11. Peter was fallible by this proof of Scripture.

The third point is that Rome "refused to accept what the universal church has decreed" at the Chalcedon Council.

It seems that Capel does not hold papal supremacy as a dogmatic article of faith, but holds the church as infallible. As the church speaks through its councils, what right had the pope in the fifth century to admit one part and refuse another of the council of Chalcedon? This too is a good ground for doubt of the Church of Rome, for it is thus shown to be but a part of and not the whole of the universal church.

Such is the style of controversy between claimants for some other supreme authority than the Christ of the inspired Scriptures. How happy should we be that we are free from anxiety about human creeds and authorities, and that we have the Scriptures themselves. We may not study Christ's and his apostle's words as we ought, but we know them to be the truly authoritative instructions for his people, and so plain that "the common people" easily understood them. It is the veriest devil's logic to persuade men that the priests must interpret Scripture for them, and that a man cannot himself "Search the Scriptures" and know that "they testify" of the Saviour of the world.

What an absurdity it is for men to have faith in the words of men instead of faith in the word of "God in Christ!" As it was when Jesus walked among men, so it is now. His teachings are scorned by many who boast of their divinely authorized "blind guides," who too oft are but modern "scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites." The Scriptures testify of Christ. Sinner: Believe in and obey HIM, and you are saved! T. H.

GENERAL SHERMAN AS A SENTIMENTALIST.

At the close of the war Mr. Seward seemed desirous of having General Shermau go to the Holy Land in the Quaker City, by way of diplomatic sentimentality, in which Mr. Seward was exceedingly fond of indulging. The General preferred to go to Constantinople and the Caucasus; though what the diplomatic meaning of the voyage was in either case men of mere practical sense will never understand. A band of so-called Knights Templar subsequently went in the Quaker City.

The spectacle, however, of General Sherman in a sentimental attitude in a graveyard on Decoration day, weeping over the memory of dead soldiers is something quite extraordinary. It seems to have some political significance, and reminds us of those samplers of needlework which young ladies used to delight in sixty years ago, in which was often sentimentally portrayed the figure of a weeping woman, handkerchief held up to her brimming eyes, under a weeping willow, at a marble monument, urn on top, and upon one side of which were the words —"Sacred to—"

When we consider the lodge machinery for getting office and "liberalized" pensions of which Decoration day observances bear such an important part, this sentimental posing of General Sherman in its interest rather inclines us to doubt the quality of that military reputation with which he popularly stands accredited. It does not seem to resemble much that material of which the military character of the Duke of Wellington was made. Which of the two is the more improper fruit for great generalship to yield, Marine Banks or Decoration day sentimentality, it would be hard to say. OLD SOLDIER.

PITH AND POINT.

SUN-STRUCK SUN-WORSHIPERS.

Naughty sun, to strike his devoted children so! Why did he not strike the rest, or let the five go unstruck, and serve them all alike? Perhaps the five charged too heavy, and fired too often, and the recoil was too heavy. Or did they offer "strange fire" to their god? Sun-worshipers should be very sincere in Louisville, in a torrid temperature, and not offend their deity. As to St. John the Baptist, Masonry is under special obligations to him. A Masonic oath took his life; while a Masonic kiss betrayed Jesus, and Knight Templarism is the Judas kiss over again. Defenders of the Christian religion, spare thy kisses, lest he who wields the suns and systems strike thee with eternal death. Great God, defend thy church from her defenders (?) N. C.

NO INFIDELS IN MASONRY.

Mr. L. Solomon, a Jew and a resident of Keokuk, Lee county, Iowa, and a Freemason, a member of Eagle Lodge No. 12, personally told me that he did not believe there was any Christ. I also heard this same Jew damn our translation of the Bible in the presence of a Red Cross degree Mason. This conversation took place in the month of March, A. D. 1878. Now, Mr. editor, if this is not fellowshiping men who reject Christ as the true Messiah, I would like to know what is.—JOHN MCLANE, Keokuk, Iowa.

LODGE PROSTITUTION.

From personal observation I know the lodge prostitutes the affections of its votaries from dearest relatives, the Christian church, and even one's own family. That it creates an uncharitable clique or ring, and worst of all gives its dupes a false hope of heaven and eternal life.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON VI.—August 10, 1884.—Absalom's Rebellion.—2 Sam. 15: 1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Honor thy father and thy mother: that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee.—Ex. 20: 12.

"Any man that had a controversy." Better a "suit," as ver. 4. There was a fitness in Absalom's currying favor with such persons. The majority of those who go to law are eager, self-seeking, enterprising persons, and natural tools for a conspirator to practice with. And, of course, if they lost their suit, in the fury of their disappointed self-will, they would be ripe for an attempt on David's government. Even so every man that was in debt, or discontented, turned in with David against Saul. —Hanna.

"There is no man deputed of the King." Absalom implies that decisions were given hastily and arbitrarily, and that his father needed assessors to help him. There is no reason to suppose that David was neglecting his duty as a judge; but the task was growing too heavy for one man to perform it (see Ewald's History, 3: 176).—Cambridge Bible.

"I would do him justice." Imagine the kind of justice the land would have under such a judge! A man guilty of murder, ready for parricide, and afterward openly guilty of incest.—Hanna.

"So Absalom stole the hearts of the men of Israel." The elements of this astonishingly successful move may be found among the following: (1) the fickleness of the people, love of change, impatience at long-continued prosperity; (2) the loosening of the bonds of fidelity and obedience in consequence of David's personal sins and the disorder in his family; (3) David's loss of popularity through his withdrawal from the people; (4) Joab's haughty temper and impunity in bloody crime; (5) Bathsheba's unpopularity, and her intriguing for the succession of her son; (6) the great number of the disaffected; Bathsheba's relations, Saul's old adherents, the tribe of Judah; (7) Absalom's address; (8) but chiefest of all, this rebellion must be regarded as one of the retributive effects of David's great sin; the hand of God was in it. Nathan prophesied it (chap. 12: 11), David acknowledged it (chap 16: 11). And the punishment came from the same source as the sin.—Peloubet.

"Let me go and pay my vow." To blind the eyes of his father he became very religious in appearance. The sins of Absalom were many; and one of the most dreadful was this putting on of the cloak of religion. He knew his father's piety; and that his sore heart would be delighted by any appearance of piety in his sinful son. And he plays upon this piety to gain his purpose.—Hanna.

"Two hundred men . . . that were called." Invited to the sacrificial feast as Absalom's guests. In all probability they were men of distinction, and would naturally be regarded, both at Jerusalem and at Hebron, as accomplices in the conspiracy. No doubt Absalom hoped that many of them, finding themselves thus compromised, and seeing the number of his supporters, would decide to join him; or failing this, they might be held as hostages.—Cambridge Bible.

"They knew not anything." This shows the extreme secrecy with which the conspiracy was conducted, and accounts for David's having no suspicions. We may note Absalom's taste for giving large entertainments (see 13: 23-27).—Cook. That which happens at every insurrection happened also here, only the ringleaders knew what was aimed at, while the great mass, who had nothing to lose, but hoped only to gain, were drawn almost blindfold into the whirlpool.—Krummacher.

"And David said, ... Arise, and let us flee." (1) He would not fight against his own loved son. (2) David's kind nature induced him to spare Jerusalem the horrors of a siege, and the risk of being taken by assault. (3) He probably judged too, and rightly, that delay would be unfavorable to Absalom's plans, an opinion which Ahithophel held too (see 17: 1, 2), and Hushai (17: 7-13). (4) It must also be remembered that in a time of peace David had no standing army with which to resist this sudden attack from so unexpected a quarter. (5) Possibly, too, the remembrance of Nathan's prophecy (12: 10-12) tended to paralyze David's natural vigor, and incline him to gentle counsels.—Cook. His flight was not from cowardice, but from prudence; for he felt he should be fighting against God. So he appears as a penitent man rather than a vigorous captain.—Sanctius.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

THE DANGER OF SECRET SOCIETIES.

1. Masonry seeks to win as Absalom did, by fair speeches and a show of unlawful power. Vs. 1–7. In this lesson we have a picture of the successive steps by which a secret conspiracy can overthrow the most stable government. J. G. Stearns, in commenting on the fact that the French Revolution, with all its terrible atrocities, was entirely the handiwork of the secret lodges, says, "Secret societies in America may become as corrupt as they ever were in France, and then they would be equally as dangerous. In one day they might strike a deathblow at the liberties of our happy land and crown one of their grand kings monarch of Ameriea." Many other wise and good men have asserted that "Freemasonry was treasonable to the state," and "a virtual conspiracy against society at large." Said the martyred Morgan, "If my life must be forfeited I owe to my country an exposure of its dangers." Through the Grand Army and other secret orders it is now openly seeking to control our next Presidential election, and no one can tell what it may do in the future if allowed to have its way unchecked. "Absalom prepared him chariots and horses and fifty men to run before him." This was assuming far more of regal state than did the true king, besides being in direct violation of the Hebrew constitution (Deut. 17: 17); but it served its purpose in dazzling the eyes of the people. Masonry in like manner dazzles the unthinking with parades, brass bands and smart regalia, and by bestowing such titles as Grand Worshipful Master, Grand High Priest, Sublime Prince Elect, and many others far more grandiloquent than any sovereign of Europe would think of assuming. This is in direct violation of our Constitution, which forbids any title of nobility. Though Absalom pretended such a strong desire to see all wrong and oppression done away with, he would in all likelihood, had he ever attained to the throne, made a very despotic prince. So Masonry claims to be a great friend to freedom and a foe to all tyranny while it is itself the most monstrous system of despotism that the world has ever seen.

2. Masonry wins by its hypocrisy. Vs. 7–9. Absalom's pious words at the very time when fratricide and rebellion were in his breast lulled every suspicion of his treason to rest. So Masonry has always used religion as a cloak to prevent men from suspecting its true designs.

3. It wins by the ignorance of its followers. V. 11. "Two hundred men went with Absalom out of Jerusalem." "They went in their simplicity," the narrative adds; "they knew not anything." Probably the idea of keeping them in ignorance was to involve them so deeply in the plot before their suspicions were aroused that they would be afraid or unable to turn back. Masonic conspiracies are known only to a few leaders. The rank and file go "in their simplicity," sworn to obey unknown superiors without asking questions. It is easy enough to see how men weak or simple minded enough to do this can be made partakers in the most treasonable plots. Our only safety is in demanding the prohibition by law of an institution so dangerous to our liberties.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What graphic picture does David draw of a company of secret conspirators? Ps. 64: 2–5. What is the difference between the simple and the prudent? Ps. 14: 15; 27: 12. Can a man show greater simplicity than to take solemn vows without knowing what he is swearing to?

SUGGESTIONS TO TEACHERS.

We have to-day a lesson on "Filial Ingratitude." 1. An ungrateful son. Absalom, loved by his father, not punished for his crimes (chap. 13: 21, 39), tolerated (chap. 14: 24). As a consequence of his training, he is found to be revengeful, headstrong, treacherous, hypocritical. In the lesson to-day, he takes advantage of his father's forgiveness (1) to steal the hearts of the people (vers. 1–6), (2) to organize a rebellion (vers. 7–12). 2. An afflicted father. David had been disciplined in his early years, coming to the kingdom only after 18 years of strife, yet his heaviest trials were reserved for his old age. A civil war broke out; led by his eldest son, and counselled by his nearest friends (Ps. 55: 12–14), he flees (vers. 13, 14) from his own home and city, recognizing in this stroke the hand of God.

The lesson also gives us "The Harvest of Sin." 1. (1) David had sown the wind (a) in his polygamous marriages, (b) especially in marrying Absalom's mother (Deut. 7: 3; Ex. 34: 16), (c) in his relation to Bathsheba, (d) in his weak indulgence towards his children, (e) in his treatment especially of Absalom. (2) He reaped the whirlwind, (a) in the dishonor brought upon his family (chap. 13: 19), (b) in the death of his oldest born (chap. 13: 28), (c) in the loss of his people's hearts (chap. 15: 6), (d) in the open revolt (vers. 13, 14). 2. (1) Absalom had sown the wind (a) in the spirit of hatred cherished for two years (chap. 13: 22), (b) in the murder committed (chap. 13: 28, 29), (c) headstrong passion (chap. 14: 30). (2) He reaped the whirlwind in proceeding to (a) treachery against his father (vers. 1–6), (b) hypocrisy (vers. 7–9), (c) open rebellion (vers. 10–12).—Peloubet.

Friends will see at a glance the sacrifice that is being made to furnish the Cynosure during the campaign so cheaply, and will remember to send not less than four names at a time and one dollar.

OBITUARY.

Father JUDSON C. HALSTEAD, of Cortland, Ohio, was born in Austintown, Mahoning Co., Ohio, June 22d, 1816. He was converted during a revival in Martinsburgh, Pa., about 1852, and joined the Wesleyan Methodist church, organized at that place, about a year afterwards. He was S. S. Superintenent and steward of this church for a period of years, and aided very largely in the erection of its edifice. Returning to Ohio he resided at several points in Turnbull and adjoining counties, moving from Windsor to Cortland in April, 1882. He passed peacefully on to the better world in the afternoon of July 4th, 1884, aged 68 years and 12 days, after a renewed attack of asthma, with which he had been an invalid for some years. The funeral services were held in the U. B. church on Sabbath afternoon, Bro. J. D. Nutting, of the Congregational church, preaching the sermon, from 1 Cor. 15: 56—"Death, its sting and our triumph."

Father Halstead was known throughout his Christian life as an earnest Christian worker, both in ordinary directions, and in the special line of reform against slavery, intemperance, and the secret lodge. Popularity with men was never his conscience; popularity with God was. "So shall we be forever with the Lord"—and so only.

BUDS AND BLOSSOMS

Is a charming illustrated magazine, published by J. F. Avery, Halifax, Nova Scotia, containing forty pages monthly of anecdote and argument for the Christian home. Every number is profusely and finely illustrated. We shall be happy to introduce this magazine to hundreds of American homes, and have secured a special arrangement from the proprietor. Buds and Blossoms is 75 cents per year; with the Cynosure the two will be $2.50, or any subscriber who has already paid for this paper can get the magazine at the same rate.

A Wonderful Woman, A Wonderful Life, AND A Wonderful Book.

Laura S. Haviland is a quiet, gentle, unassuming Quaker woman, 76 years of age, yet vigorous, who has had a remarkable career of usefulness, and has now given to the world a remarkable history of her "Life Work" as a teacher, at an early day, of the colored refugees in Canada and in Michigan, and in other States, as a traveler down South in the guise of a "berry picker," helping out into freedom many slaves; as a nurse and preacher to the sufferers in hospitals during the war; and with Gov. St. John and Elizabeth Comstock, relieving the destitute and suffering refugees in Kansas, etc.

Her book is neither fiction nor founded on fiction, but is an interesting narration of facts of a most thrilling character, as every one will find and testify who will get and read her book, now on sale at the Cynosure office, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill. Price, cloth, $1,75; half Russia, $2.25.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD, HENRY L. KELLOGG, } EDITORS.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 31, 1884.

The author of the popular book, "Holden with Cords," has begun a new story depicting the evils and emphasizing the warnings against the lesser secret orders. We have read the opening chapters of this new story, and believe it will prove more popular and a more valuable contribution to reform literature than the talented author's first work. It is entitled, "BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS." In order to give new and old subscribers, in greatest number, an opportunity to read the whole of this story, we shall not begin its publication until September 4th. Let unremitting efforts be made meantime to increase tne number of readers of the Cynosure.

SENATOR POMEROY was interviewed by the press at Pittsburgh and won "Golden opinions from all sorts of people." A Mason informed Pres. C. A. Blanchard that he knew of the trap to destroy Pomeroy; that it was laid in the lodge, and he went to Pomeroy and told him not to admit Col. York to an interview, if he did he was ruined." But he said Pomeroy was so confident with his known majority—and simple-hearted, and a little vain withal of his skill as a politician, that he neglected the advice, fell into the Masonic trap, and was overthrown. What a thing is the secret, sworn, murderous lodge!

JOHN B. FINCH, who led the lodge row at Pittsburgh is a Mason and has just been elected head of the Good Templars of the world. He wore, as the convention closed, a pre-occupied and troubled look. He is not past learning as he shows by incessant flattery of Miss Frances E. Willard. Finch is not past hope. Let us pray for him.

THE PROHIBITION CONVENTION.

Enthusiasm of the Delegates—Masonic Bluster—Popularity of St. John—McDonald under a cloud—Opening speeches—The American fraternal committee expects the courtesy of gentlemen but is met by a howl of lodge savagery—The Convention loses its head—The Masons cowed and downcast.

LAFAYETTE HALL, PITTSBURGH, PA., }
Tuesday morning, July 22d, 1884. }

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Though the day before the convention, delegates are marching up to their hotels,

"All the while Sonorous metal blooming martial sounds."

Now the band has come up into the hall and are playing "Nearer, my God, to Thee," which is much sweeter to the earnest men and women coming in than "Dixie" or even "Yankee Doodle." Surely American politics are being, as said in my Farwell Hall speech, "turned back to God whom our party platforms have deserted." Mr. Lewis of Willimantic, Connecticut, comes to me and says, "I should be glad to vote for St. John and Conent, I am a Conant man all over. I have not yet met Senator Pomeroy, but hope to soon."

Dr. McDonald's picture and sketch are being circulated through the hall, while the workmen's hammers are ringing on the last touches for accommodating the audience, and already a hundred or more good-looking men and women are chatting, earnest and happy. At my hotel I met Mr. Schumacher of Ohio. He is anti-secret, but quietly so. He introduced me to a Mason at table who has been lodge master in New Jersey and belongs to nearly all the secret societies. He is loud and earnest, and says, "Don't undertake to oppose secret societies here. You'll split us, if you attempt it. I care nothing for your Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist and what not, but touch my lodge and you'll raise a row at once." Some good Wesleyan Ohio delegates said, as our Masonic friend blustered out of the room, "Don't mind him, he is a swearing, blasphemous man with no goodness in him." Yet you would think he had a monopoly of prohibitionism, and he loudly declared he could "initiate me into the lodge without going out of the Bible." Such men will quit the lodge as soon as it becomes unpopular, and office is to be had by opposing it.

Ferdinand Schumacher says he wishes Dr. A. A. Miner of Boston to head the Prohibition ticket. Others are strong for Gideon T. Stewart, who is here, and spoke to a small crowd last night.

They are putting down carpets on the widened platforms, and eight or ten bags of green vines for ornamentation are just pitched down by me as I write. Good old matrons sit smiling, and a bevy of young women and lassies are flitting about through the crowd with busy tongues and fingers. In short, the hall resembles a bee-hive just before a shower, when the swarm are gathering, buzzing, and piping about "Their sad-eyed justices" who survey them with quiet dignity and satisfaction increasing with the crowd.

This, be it remembered, is the day before the convention in the morning, and flaming badges are thickening on all sides. W. F. Dunn, chairman of the reception committee, calls the crowd to order and asks everybody to march to the depot to meet and welcome the Illinois delegation, and the band is giving us a loud, lively ditty as a foretaste of the march. A bright young man asks me who I am and whence, and on learning of the fraternal committee of seven from the American Convention, cries, "Good, good!" I have neither seen a cigar or smelled tobacco in the hall yet! What are American politics coming to? Mottoes are being nailed up all over the hall. On each side of the platform in large letters are the words: "Dare to vote right and vote the truth." Can it be that the masses are regarding Republican and Democratic professions as hollow, empty and untruthful? The crowd will soon go to greet the Illinois delegation. More when they come.

TUESDAY, JULY 22D, 3 O'CLOCK, P. M.—Well, the Illinois delegation are here. The committees are in session and the great hall is already almost full, and singing, prayer and speaking are going on while the light hammers of the young women are nailing up flags and mottoes, till the hall is bedizened with them. Haney of the Illinois delegation is called out and the hall is getting still while he tells the crowd that, as in the old negro's sermon, "the Republican party leads to hell and the Democratic party to damnation, and 'dis ere chile is taking to the woods.'"

I saw Miss Willard passing to the National Committee room at the hotel parlor.

"Hope elevated and joy brightened her crest."

I saw Gideon T. Stweart at the dinner table, before he went in to his committee. I saw also the Illinois delegation at their hotel, and the face of St. John looking down upon them, with the words:

in large letters on canvas under his picture.

Coming into the hall, by request, I called the crowd to order, and asked Rev. A. M. Pilcher of Wisconsin, whose voice is stentorian, aided by a choir of young women to sing, and he then led in prayer. The hall got still and the speaking went on, till the band came up with the Michigan delegation of more than 100, most of them bearing flags. The hall grew wild with shouts and the choir led the crowd in "Tramp, tramp, tramp the boys are coming," and the delegates kept step. The band is now playing "The Star Spangled Banner;" the crowd having just sung, "All Hail the Power of Jesus Name." The crowd are now dispersing to meet at their hotels, by delegations, for consultation. I learn that St. John will not refuse to accept, if nominated. I am told by the Chairman of the National Committee, Mr. Stewart, that the fraternal American committee will probably be heard during the convention; and, best of all, that the lodge candidate "has not the ghost of a chance for a nomination." I hope it is true.

WEDNESDAY NOON, JULY 23, 9 A. M.—Last night the hall was full above and below. What the crowd will do for room to-day, none can guess. After singing and prayer a lady born in Alabama but representing Maryland opened with a couple of eloquent rhapsodies. Her dress and manners savored a little of the stage, but her speaking was very effective.

The song, "A thousand years, my own Columbia," was finely rendered by a young Pittsburger. He was encored, and gave Mrs. Julia Ward Howe's Battle Hymn of the Republic, aided by the choir, and the whole crowd arose and joined in the chorus with enthusiasm bordering on rapture.

Rev. John Russell then spoke on the necessity of a Prohibition party. I have heard Lord John Russell in the House of Commons, while he was leader, out of power, against Sir Robert Peel, and I have seldom heard two men speak and look so like each other as these two Russells. Clear, logical, distinct in thought and utterance, if there were two opinions of the necessity of a Prohibition party when he began, he left but one when he was through; and his peroration was absolutely sublime, and was echoed by shouts, cheers, and tumultuous applause.

But the thing noticeable during this speech, was, that the points applauded were the points of argument and clear powerful thought. It differed from the screaming and yelling in the Republican and Democratic conventions as widely as the audience itself differs from a drinking, tobacco-using crowd. Yet Mr. Russell made a brief mention of the Good Templars, the only name of a secret society mentioned thus far.

On coming down at the hotel this morning, Mr. Lewis of Connecticut said, "The California candidate is out of the question, this morning."

"Who objects to him?"

"Oh! Eastern men and others."

"What are their objections?"

"Oh! his vinegar bitters, etc."

"Do they object to his Masonry?"

"Not a word."

I have circulated a Cynosure editorial containing Dr. McDonald's Masonic membership in Tehama Lodge, and President Thompson of Westerville, and one of the Oberlin faculty came to me and declared that the nomination of a Freemason for either President or Vice President would surely split the party. We shall soon see.

Gideon T. Stewart, Chairman of the National Committee calls to order. The band plays "My Country 'tis of thee;" Dr. A. A. Miner of Boston opens with prayer and the call is read by Mr. Nelson of Chicago. Hon. A. L. Rose of Pittsburgh made a speech of welcome in which he said: "This is the only political party which favors woman suffrage." He needs to read the newspapers. Mr. Stewart replies to the address of welcome. He says "slavery was born of the liquor crime. Cargoes of rum sent to Africa brought back cargoes of slaves. If Prohibition had been born forty-five years ago there had been no war. He argues at length from the history of the Republican party, that prohibition, not compromise or regulation, is our only security and duty. As the speaker mentions Frances E. Willard, the house salutes her name with shouts, waving of hats, fans, etc., many rising to their feet.

Mr. Stewart then nominated in behalf of the National Committee, Hon. Wm. Daniels of Maryland, as temporary chairman, and Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge of the Ohio W. C. T. U. as temporary secretary.

Mr. Daniels makes a good, strong, practical speech, which is warmly applauded. The general government issues 165,000 licenses to sell liquor, and receives millions of revenue from liquor, and is the fostering protector of the liquor traffic. "We must therefore strike at the general government, and we can only do this by a great national Prohibition party. If true to ourselves we will at the next election break the back of one or both the old parties." He argues ably from the three States now for prohibition. and from the action of the railroads and Cunard Line that public sentiment will sustain the prohibition movement. He uses very effectively the allusion to Gideon's army who were reduced to the 300 who took the water. Mr. Daniels voted for abolition in 1864. He met the prohibition movement in his first legislature, was warned by his friends against opposing the liquor traffic, but he ran against the saloons and was twice returned to the Legislature and then went to the State Senate. Mr. Daniels alludes to the Good Templars and Sons of Temperance. This is the second allusion to them and that is very slight. The speech itself excels every one yet except only that of John Russell. The crowd is singing with great gusto, "Dare to be a Daniel."

Business is called for. Dr. Jutkins reads the members present from twenty-one States, an even 500 delegates; more to come. This is preliminary. After some miscellaneous business adjourned till three o'clock P. M.

Re-assembled at three o'clock. Letters and telegrams were read, when Rev. James Haney, youngest son of Dr. Richard Haney of Illinois, stated that Pres. C. A. Blanchard is here to bring the greetings and good wishes of the American Prohibition party, and moved that he be heard. The temporary chairman, Hon. Mr. Daniels, put the motion amid a few "protests" and it was carried. President Blanchard came forward and said:

"Ladies and Gentlemen, I thank you for the honor and privilege of bringing you the greetings of a large and respectable convention lately met in the city of Chicago. These two parties, I believe, came into being in the same year, 1872, and were, perhaps, brought into existence by the same causes—the derelictions of existing political parties. We believe that when a mother has given birth to a son; toiled for his support through the day, and held her breath at night to keep from disturbing the sick child's slumbers; that when that son is grown, and traps are set for his ruin, it is the duty of any and every political party to co-operate in taking those man-traps out of the way. (Applause.) The American party further hold, with this convention, that when that mother has toiled, turned her dresses inside out and upside down to save means to educate that child, and political parties persevere in licensing men for gain, to rob that son s father of his wages by taking advantage of his diseased appetite, thus consuming the bread of that mother and child; and if the government refuses to protect that patient sufferer, we are in favor of putting into her hands the sword of the ballot for her own defence. (Great applause.) There is, however, one point on which we may possibly differ somewhat in opinion, to which it is proper and becoming that I allude. The American party hold that men who have entered into secret obligations to one part of the community are thereby unfitted to rule over the whole."

Here the speaker was interrupted by angry disturbance by a minority of the crowd; with calls of "Time! Time!" "Sit down!" Others cried, "Hear him!" "Go on," etc. The chair vigorously used his hammer, and called "Order! Order! The gentleman has the floor."

During this confusion Pres. Blanchard stood smiling and good-natured. As soon as he could be heard above the noise he said, "Ladies and gentlemen, I am nearly through,"—but here his voice was drowned, though he went on for a few minutes. The noise had shrunk to a comparatively few, but their tones grew harsh and hoarse, and the speaker good-naturedly gave way, after speaking less than fifteen minutes. I have no means of knowing how many were at the bottom of the tumult, but they were a small minority of the whole.

While I have written this account, the convention seems not able to regain its balance. The hall is like a beer garden, "Question," "Point of order;" eight or ten screaming "Order" at once, and several attempting to speak. The hammer falls, "rap," "rap," "rap;" and when at length a question is put the noise of the voices is literally deafening. The chair in despair waves to the band who are now playing a rousing tune. The dissension is on the question whether delegates present, few or many, shall cast the full number of votes to which each State is entitled. The band is through, and the noise and confusion returns. Loud talking all over the hall, and at length a motion is made to call the roll for a committee on permanent organization. There is another deluge of "Points of order," and at least twenty voices are sounding as I write these words amid the rap, rap, rap! rap, rap, rap! At length the call of States proceeds for the committee, and the noise and confusion subsides.

In the midst of the cyclone, Miss Willard procured a few minutes truce to introduce the mammoth petition which she had borne to the other political conventions. She accompanied the presentation with a neat and popular speech.

The committee has retired and bedlam has broken loose again,—noise, loud talking and disputing the chair; motion to adjourn taken and lost; motion that no member speak but once on one question till all have spoken, carried. The chair seems to be an able and pleasant officer, and there is no visible cause of the tumult; no members seem angry, but the hall is in confusion again, and the chair, after rapping and appealing and rapping in vain, says: "I can't hear and unless we have a constable and a hundred policemen, I know of no way to compel order." A lady in the rear of the hall, says, "I cannot regard this as a convention; it seems to me a perfect powwow." The tumult quiets a little and the call for a committee on resolutions proceeds, and the committee is filled. Motion to adjourn till 8 o'clock this evening, cries of "Vote it down;" and amid the hammering of the chair, and cries again all over the house the motion is put; the sides scream at the top of their voices and the chair can't decide which has it. There is a division called for and had; heads are counted, adjournment is lost. Now several call to the chair, and at length one gets in a resolution in favor of woman suffrage which is referred. Motion to alter the name of the party by striking out "Home Protection," leaving the name "National Prohibition party"—referred. Roll of States now called for a committee on rules; less noise, but the talking still continues. Adjourned.

THURSDAY MORNING, JULY 24.—Last night a permanent chairman was chosen. The convention did business quietly and the Masonic Good Templar roughs who howled down Pres. C. A. Blanchard are now throwing the blame on the temporary chairman, Hon. Wm. Daniels of Maryland, who is an able and good man and moderator. But yesterday an angel could not have stopped the lodge men who defied the moderator and all law but their own rage. They were like wild animals in stampede.

This morning the talk runs terribly against them. Several have said they should vote the American ticket. Rev. Mr. Mills of Oberlin, O., a clear, cool man said at the hotel table, "I have not been on President Blanchard's side, but if the Masons wished to object, they had an opportunity to do so when Mr. Haney moved that he should be permitted to appear for the American party; not invite him to speak and cry him down the moment he stated the point of difference between the two parties, as he was bound in fairness and propriety to do. People in Boston would not have treated Bob. Toombs so, had he vindicated slavery and secession in that city in 1864; because they were right and Toombs wrong. If the Masons were not wrong they would not have given us yesterday's scene of disgrace."

Nearly half at the table were Masons, one a blatant master of lodges, but naturally a fair man. He, Mason as he was, owned that Mills was right, and said he had not joined in crying President Blanchard down. The delegates will make nominations to-day.

THURSDAY, A. M.—St. John will be nominated by acclamation in half an hour.

I am informed that John B. Finch was the first to rise and cry down Pres. C. A. Blanchard. It was a small minority of Masonic roughs who made the trouble and disgraced the convention. But the sentiment runs so powerfully against them, that they (Finch especially) look dispirited and cowed.

Dr. Miner of Boston and ——— the list would be too long to write, are strong for President B.

Senator Pomeroy and Prof. Bailey are still here, and things are going to the satisfaction of us all. It is a powerful convention. The women have covered themselves with honor; I will try and name them hereafter. Mrs. Lathrop of Michigan, and Mrs. Hoffman of Missouri, spoke powerfully, but Frances Willard, in seconding St. John, still beyond all the others reminds us of Hesperus > —"that led

> The starry host, rode brightest
> And brought in the dawn."

PERSONAL.

—The health of Rev. A. M. Milligan, D. D., of Pittsburgh, is steadily improving, and he is expecting as a means to more complete recovery to spend the fall and winter in Europe.

—Pres. J. Blanchard remained at Pittsburgh over the Sabbath and possibly longer. He was appointed to preach Sabbath evening in the Third United Presbyterian church. His editorial letters written while at the convention will be eagerly read.

—Rev. A. J. Chittenden of the College church, Wheaton, last Sabbath used the Pittsburgh row as a striking illustration of the text, Luke 2:34, 35: "That the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed."

—Mrs. Pres. J. Blanchard has been for more than a month past with her invalid sister, Mrs. Moses Pettengill of Peoria, in this State. Mrs. P., though now more comfortable, is still very feeble. Will not those interested in the Cynosure and its reform work pray for her recovery and continued interest and aid in our great and self-denying work.

—Pres. Kephart of Avalon College is determined to be independent of cliques that conceal their methods from the public. He refused to dance attendance on the Grand Army of the Republic on "Decoration day." The lodges in revenge got up a celebration July 4th, ignoring all the anti-secret citizens. But the latter made their own arrangements and carried them out grandly to the great chagrin and discomfiture of the lodges. The local paper took the wrong side of the battle and found himself sixty or seventy subscribers short.

—The editor of the Cynosure and Pres. C. A. Blanchard are expceted to aid in the State National Reform Convention to be held at Monmouth and Milwaukee this fall.

—The Cynosure was made happy the other day by a call from Rev. Wm. Morrow, pastor of a prosperous Presbyterian church near this city, who accompanied a brother from Oakland, California, to our office. This brother has been actively associated with Rev. N. R. Johnston, of the Covenanter church in his assiduous and successful efforts for the education and conversion of the Chinese. At a meeting of the Morrow family last week, at Chenoa, Illinois, there were present eight brothers and sisters who have not before met since 1849—thirty-five years. One of these brothers has been for some years pastor of the United Presbyterian church of Paxton, Ill.

THE WISCONSIN AGENT.

Bro. Bancroft reports his work in June amounting to but fifteen days. A part of the month was used in settling private business. He writes: I traveled 169 miles, visited 195 families, and gave six lectures or sermons. Two of these were given in East Troy, one in the Congregational church and one in the M. E. church, with small attendance. It was rainy weather. The next two were given in Caledonia in a Welch church, with good attendance and good attention, and I think good done. The other was in a school-house, well attended and good degree of interest manifested. My next was at Pikeville M. E. church to a small congregation. Notice not given out properly, but quite an interest manifested. The next was in New Port M. E. church; good attendance and quite an interest; all seemed to be interested.

My July work I may as well report now, as I shall not be able to do any more work this month, I presume. I left the place where I left my horses on my way home at Milburn in Illinois on the 7th of July, and preached the Sabbath evening previous to a large audience, and all seemed to be interested. Had a good time. Several came and spoke to me after service and thanked me for the sermon. Their pastor was absent in Iowa. On my way home I traveled 127 miles, and delivered one lecture and visited 147 families.

The sum of my report for this time will be: Time spent in the service of the society is twenty-one days; miles traveled, 296; sermons preached, seven; miles traveled, 342. ISAAC BANCROFT.

WORK FOR ILLINOIS.

Elder J. F. Browne, well known to all our readers as an able advocate of the prineiples of the N. C. A., has been engaged to spend seven weeks working in Illinois. He will begin (D. V.) about August 3d, probably at Decatur, and proceed north along the line of the I. C. R. R. He will preach and lecture wherever desired, and make a special effort to extend the circulation of the Christian Cynosure. Friends will hear from Bro. Browne personally, and can reply as he may request. But you should not wait. If you want leetures, write at once to this office and get tracts and sample copies of the Cynosure to scatter among your neighbors, and so prepare the way for enthusiastic meetings when Bro. Browne reaches your town or neighborhood. We hope to announce the place and time of the next State meeting soon.

J. P. STODDARD.

IOWA STATE MEETING.

The Annual Meeting of the "Anti-Secret Christian Association of the State of Iowa" will be held in Washington, Washington Co., Iowa, Aug. 26th, beginning at 7:30 P. M. Arrangements will be made for an interesting programme; the place is easy of access; let all come.

LITERATURE.

MILTON'S POETICAL WORKS. Complete in two volumes. Fine cloth, red edges. Price, per set, 75 cents. John B. Alden, New York.

The works of the greatest writer of pure poetry in the English language are given here in a beautiful and attractive style, with good, clear type, and lines numbered for convenience of reference. For the price we doubt if an edition of equal beauty was ever issued in this country.

A CONCISE CONCORDANCE to the principal poets of the world, embracing titles, first lines, characters, subjects, and quotations. Compiled by Charles A. Durfee. 639 pages Library edition, cloth, $1.00. John B. Alden, New York.

After immense and persevering labor the editor of this poetical concordance has compiled work of great value for every library of any pretensions. Forty-eight of the greatest English American poets have their works made immediately accessible. The concordance embraces titles, first lines, characters, subjects and quotations. The work must have been one to discourage only the most persevering editor.

The Century for August is the Midsummer Holiday number, and opens with a brightly illustrated paper on "A Glance at British Wild Flowers." The other illustrated papers are the third part of the series on "Recent Architecture in America," and "On the Track of Ulysses," a description of a yacht voyage to the places visited by Ulysses during his adventures as related by Homer in the Odyssey. The serious side of this number includes an important paper by Isaac L. Rice, who lays out "Work for a Constitutional Convention;" he would have cabinet members sit in Congress and be responsible to the country for the inception of legislative work and the execution of the law of the land; a striking paper by the Rev. Dr. Washington Gladden, on "Three Dangers" to Society, meaning Intemperance, Divorce, and Business Gambling. The latter subject is also discussed in "Topics of the Time." The biographical sketch of Gen. Sam Houston tells the story of one of the most striking and naturally noble characters in frontier history.

St. Nicholas is bright with illustrations of the Central Park, New York, sheep and their faithful dog keeper, of paper manufacture, and of street scenes in Constantinople during a fire. These, and one or two natural history articles, barely make amends for several articles that instruct as little as they profit morally. The fine class of work in the illustrations is itself a great source of education and model of good taste to all the young readers of this magazine.

THE HOME.

NOTHING BUT LEAVES.

"And when he came to it he found nothing but leaves."—Mark 11: 13.

I stand where flowers have budded, bloomed and paled,
Sweet scented flowers,
As ne'er before such fragrant breath exhaled
From earthly bowers.
I came—as I have oft before—to bind
My flowery sheaves,
But ah! amid the withered waste I find
"Nothing but leaves."

'Tis thus through life. God gave rare flowers to me
Of perfect mould,
Aye, gave me more from His Infinity
Than I could hold.
And so I watched them one by one depart,
And memory grieves
That I must gather to my desert heart
"Nothing but leaves."

'Tis well. God gave and took in love
What he had given;
Transplanted my poor flowers from earth above,
To bloom in heaven.
And yet, through all its mute, life-lengthened hours,
My heart still cleaves
To the lost remnant of its withered flowers—
"Nothing but leaves."

My spirit sighed for honors, so I sought
For envied Fame—
She told me she could never bring me aught
Besides a name;
But still I higher climbed, and reached to grasp
Her laurel wreaths,
When, lo! I held within my tightened clasp
"Nothing but leaves."

I prayed for riches, as if wealth could buy
My soul from sin;
As if bright gold and gems could satisfy
The life within.
And heavy, heavy weights the glittering crown
My brow receives,
And so I flung the worthless bauble down—
"Nothing but leaves."

A painful wreath from Pleasure's gilded bowers
My brow adorns—
I, in my eagerness to clasp its flowers,
Forgot the thorns.
Fair is the crown, though filled with scorpion stings,
That Pleasure weaves;
And what are all the boasted offerings?—
"Nothing but leaves."

O Earth! with all your honors, wealth and show,
Can you not give Something to satisfy the heart below,
Something to live?
Can you not proffer aught from out your store
That ne'er deceives?
Or shall we seek, and find forever more
"Nothing but leaves.

My heart, be patient; through all suffering
Be calm and mute;
Believe from all thou'st sown in tears shall spring
Life's perfect fruit.
And when the angel reaper comes to bind
Love's scattered sheaves,
In Christ's rich garden thou no more shalt find
"Nothing but leaves."

CONSECRATION.

REV. GEORGE F. PENTECOST.

We are apt to fall into two mistakes. Some people regard sanctification or consecration entirely with reference to the personal life—they seek personal holiness. They are always viewing themselves, and trying to determine whether they have reached sanctification, to the exclusion of thought about service. Others seek consecration for service only, and in the midst of their arduous and busy work neglect their personal life. We need both kinds of conseeration. We need first to be consecrated ourselves. See Gal. 5: 16, 17: "The flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh; and these are contrary the one to the other; so that ye cannot do the things that ye would." This last clause is freed from misinterpretation in the new version: "Ye may not (or need not) do the things that ye would." The spirit may be triumphant. Two parties have grown up about the possibility of entire sanctification, and two classes of passages are cited. But there need be no difficulty. As with other doctrines of which two sides are apparently irreconcilable, let the believer come before God in communion with him, and he will understand and reconcile the two great truths in his own soul though human language will fail him to tell about it.

Now as to consecration for service, see Ex. 4. The rod of Moses was the emblem of his occupation as a shepherd. He laid it down before God, and took it up endued with new power. So whatever our occupation may be, let us throw down the plough, the plane, the yardstick, the library, before God; and when we take them up again, our daily occupations will be made the means of service for him, in the power of the Holy Ghost. A servant who consecrated her dish-cloth and did her work faithfully as before God was the means of the conversion of a very worldly family. In Heb. 13: 21, it says, "May God make you perfect." The Greek word here is the same as in Matt. 4: 21—"mending their nets." The Holy Spirit is to mend our tempers—or any defect in our Christian character—and thus make us a greater power in the world. We must be faithful. "Well done, good and faithful servant." A husband was absent for years; suitors told his wife he must he dead, but she remained faithful. In high station or low it is ours to be faithful to Christ. Dr. John Hall said to a young minister: "If you want a large charge, make yourself conspicuously useful where you are." A waterfall in these hills goes on just the same whether one visitor or a thousand beholds it. So let us do service for Christ, without ceasing, and all we can just where we are.—Sel.

THE NECESSITY OF PRAYER.

The first true sign of spiritual life, prayer, is also the means of maintaining it. Man can as well live physically without breathing, as spiritually without praying. There is a class of animals—the whale family—neither fish nor sea-fowl, that inhabit the deep. It is their home, they never leave it for the shore; yet, though swimming beneath its waves, and sounding its darkest depths, they have ever and anon to rise to the surface that they may breathe the air. Without that these monarchs of the deep could not exist in the dense element in which they live, and move, and have their being. And something like what is imposed on them by a physical necessity, the Christian has to do by a spiritual one. It is by ever and anon ascending up to God, by rising through prayer into a loftier, purer region for supplies of divine grace, that he maintains his spiritual life. Prevent these animals from rising to the surface, and they die for want of breath; prevent him from rising to God, and he dies for want of prayer. Let me breathe, says a man gasping, or else I die. Let me pray, says the Christian, or else I die.—Guthrie.

WHAT HAS INFIDELITY DONE?

Has infidelity ever raised a man or woman from the haunts of vice, and made a sinful life clean? Has it ever taken a drunkard from the gutter, the gambler from his cards, the fallen from a life of shame? Has it ever found a man coarse and brutal in character and life, and made him a kind husband and faithful father? Has it ever gone out into the heathen land and found a people ignorant and barbarous, delighting in rapine and murder, and by the power of its teachings lifted them out of their degradation, until they adopted the customs of civilized nations? Has it ever written down languages, translated literature, prepared text-books, planted schools, established academies, seminaries, colleges, and universities? Has it ever founded hospitals, builded asylums, established orphanages, and brought blessings to the poor, the sick, the maimed and the blind? What discoveries has it made? What improvements has it introduced? Is there in all the history of infidelity a story of its moral triumphs that will match the regeneration of the Fiji Islands under the labors of the missionaries? Has it added anything to the sum of human happiness? Does it bring one ray of comfort into the chamber of death, filling the soul of the dying with peace, and the hearts of weeping friends with hope? The religion of Jesus Christ has done all these things. "The tree is known by its fruits." Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles? Does infidelity bear figs or thistles?—Sel.

WOMAN'S SAVIOUR.

What Christ and the Gospel have done for woman can never be fully told. The religion of Jesus is wonderfully adapted to her condition and her special neeessities. What other religions have done for women is known and read of all. The dark and baleful shadows which heathendom casts upon womanhood, are the best answers to the empty boasts of heathenized Christians who talk about "the light of Asia," and who boasts of the excellent teachings of the oriental sages. Sages may advise, but Christ can save. Women in heathen lands, when made acquainted with the Gospel of Christ, are quick to recognize the difference, both in teaching and in practice.

"A young wife in a Hindoo zenana recently said to a German Christian lady who had made her acquainted with the Christian Scriptures, 'Really, your Bible must have been written by a woman: it contains so many kind things about us; our Shastras say nothing but what is hard of us.' This reminds one of the touching passage in Newman's 'Callista,' where the young Greek wishes to know him who spoke so kindly to the woman who was a sinner. Ah! woman's heart knows the voice of woman's best friend—Jesus."—Armory.

THE MILLENNIUM AS A FINANCIAL ENTERPRISE.

What an expensive thing vice is. Careful estimates as to the cost of intoxicating drinks, based upon reliable statistics, has made it out to be approximately one thousand millions of dollars annually. This, no doubt, is the largest single item to be placed to the score of vice in this country. Then there are prostitution and robbery and all kinds of debauchery. Then there are locks, keys and safes, courts, lawyers' fees, marshals, police, and last of all standing armies, the expense of which would no doubt, foot up another thousand millions in a year.

Suppose all this could be spent by some wise system for the improvement of the country, what glorious results would be achieved. It would build a well-equipped college in every county seat, make every river in the country navigable for the largest boats, build levees high enough to protect every village against floods, pave every street, gravel every public road, drain every swamp, irrigate every mountain side, build a large airy hospital in every village with snowy beds and professional nurses, and provide an asylum for every unfortunate citizen of the nation. These are some of the things that may be done with the surplus money when the millennium shall put a stop to vice.

Ah, but you say these are only material considerations. Well, they are enough, if there were no others, to make us long for its coming, and they, even from their low plane, appeal to us, as we love our country, as we love our fellow-man, to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ and to pray for the reign of the Spirit in the hearts of men, for that godliness which is profitable unto all things having the promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come.

And this suggests some thoughts upon another kindred topic.

If the nation would kill the goose that lays the golden egg, let it tax the churches. Forty-four thousand earnest preachers from as many pulpits every Sabbath day plead with men to live quiet and peaceable lives in all godliness and honesty. They do more for the peace and happiness of society than as many government policemen, and shall the government charge them for the privilege? There is no way of estimating the amount saved to the Government every year by the moral influence of the church in the country, but who doubts but that it compensates the State a hundred-fold for all the protection it receives at the hands of that sister institution. It would be like a husband taxing his wife for the privilege of keeping his home bright and cheerful, and training up his children for him. Take away the church from the State and leave public morals to go into bankruptcy; and of what value will the tax be to it? Instead of taxing the churches, kings should become their nursing fathers, and queens their nursing mothers, that they may be mutual blessings to each other.—Midland.

"WITH ALL YOUR HEART."

Only fear the Lord and serve him in truth with all your heart: for consider how great things he hath done for you

Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice.

I have found David my servant: with my holy oil have I anointed him.

The battle is the Lord's.

Annie Clark read the first verse over the second, even the third time, with a cloud on her face. Then she spoke to the duster in her hand.

"There are plenty of people who can serve him, but I don't see how I am one of them. Sweeping, and dusting, and setting tables, and cutting pie, and seasoning turnips, and potatoes, and waiting on children: that is my work."

Her lip curled a little, it looked like such mean work. There were so many things she wanted to do! For instance on this Thanksgiving day she would like to put on her new brown suit, and her new hat with a bright plume in it, and go to church, and sing in the anthem that the Sabbath-school was going to give just before the sermon; but this she could not do, for the turnips were to be peeled as well as seasoned, so were the potatoes; and uncle John and aunt Sarah, and all their hungry children, were to be there to dinner: all of them a good deal older, or a good deal younger than Annie, so that she did not look forward to having much pleasure in visiting with them.

The rest of her thoughts she kept to herself, and went on dusting the parlor, but with the cloud still on her face. She would not have dared to say, in words, that it did not seem to her as though "great things" had been done for her; but that is the way she felt. Thirteen years old, the oldest daughter, with a taste for drawing, and a taste for study, and a chance to take drawing lessons of a splendid teacher, and a chance to study French under Madame La Blanc, who, all the girls said, was "just lovely!" and she unable to do as the other girls did, and go to school, because it would "cost so much," and "business was so poor," and the family was so large.

"Uncle John has money enough, if he only thought so; but all he cares for is plenty of turkey and pumpkin pie!"

This she said aloud to the discreet duster, and her face was beginning to grow positively cross.

There was a long streak of black on the window seat. Annie rubbed vigorously; it looked as though she would have to go for soap and water. While she worked over that spot, a carriage went by—a carriage of peculiar shape—black, with nodding plumes all about it, and drawn by white horses. The hearse! She knew whither it was going. The Morgans, who lived only a few blocks away, had not so large a family now; there would be more time in that house. Little Sadie would be carried out to-day in the hearse, and left in one of the cold receiving vaults at the cemetery. Annie shivered as she thought of it. What if it were their little Kate? She took up a great deal of time, so did Ned. What would the house be without them? How still it must be at the Morgans! "Consider how great things he hath done for you." The words came back to her, as she stopped her rubbing to follow the hearse. Yes, he had; she could hear at this moment the glad shouts of Ned and little Kate.

Someway, after that, Annie's face grew clearer. Quiet she was, for awhile, but presently she trilled a little song as she worked. "Serve him with all your heart;" she said those words over. What, by paring potatoes, and keeping up fires, and setting table? Yes, just in those things. Didn't the Bible say "do with thy might whatsoever they hands find to do?" And didn't it say "whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God?" She would try it on this Thanksgiving day. There was much to be thankful for, even though she could not take drawing nor French. The Lord had done great things for her. The more she thought about it, the more things came trooping up to be considered. So she sang over her work.

Down in the kitchen her mother was saying with a sigh, "I suppose Annie is dreadfully disappointed about not going to church to-day and singing with the girls, but I don't know how to spare her."

Just at that moment Anuie's voice rolled through the house, reaching to the kitchen. A snatch from the anthem. "Consider," it said, "Consider how great things, how great things he has done!" Over and over the triumphant strain repeated, and the father listening, smiled as he said: "She dosen't seem to be very broken-hearted; that voice doesu't sound like it."

Busy? I think you would be sure of it if you could have looked on her. Uncle John and aunt Sarah, and all the little "Johns" and "Sarahs" had splendid appetites, besides, there were the Marshalls, aunts and cousins and friends, and to make matters more busy and bewildering, there was a bride, quite new to the family, coming with the Marshalls. Mrs. Clark was hurried and nervous. She had only poor help in the kitchen. But there was one who had enlisted to-day with her whole heart.

"Dear me, Anuie! How late it is, and they will be here in a little while, and there is the parlor in confusion."

"You had better not say that, mother, the parlor is spick and span. Even aunt Sarah can't find any dust, if she puts on two pairs of glasses."

"Oh, Annie! I forgot the front hall. And the rubbers and umbrellas are there from the storm, and the children's rubber cloaks. That ought to be put in order right away."

"Done, mother. The front hall is perfection."

"Annie dear, do you suppose you could get time to light the fire in the back parlor?"

"Oh, I lighted it when I ran up to answer the bell a few minutes ago. I saw it was getting late."

Now that is just a little hint of the way things went all that day. Annie was always on hand "with her whole heart," and it made the greatest possible difference. At every turn were traces of those busy hands. Little Kate's hair that the mother nearly always had to curl because Annie hated to do it, and pulled so that Kate always cried, got itself done as if by magic, and the two youngest children appeared in the parlor in due time, with smiling faces and perfect toilets. Then, when the mother rushed out in dismay, lest the table would be late for dinner, she found it complete in all its appointments, not a spoon or fork lacking.

As the busy day wore on, Annie became interested in the experiment of working with all her heart. How many steps could her heart save her mother? That became the problem at which she worked. It seems almost a pity that she could not have heard the mother as she dropped into her chair at the end of that long exciting day for a moment's breath, and a word with father, say, "What I should have done without that blessed child to-day, I don't know. She has been hands, and feet and eyes all day. I couldn't begin to tell you of all the things she has thought of, besides the hundred I have set her at."

Uncle John was helping himself to a glass of water, and heard this. "I've been watching that girl," he said, and he shook his fat sides with laughter. "She's a real team; makes things stand around; she will make a good farmer's wife one of these days, and have the highest price for butter, and raise the most chickens."

"Her tastes do not lie in that direction, I think," the mother said, with a smile which hid a little sigh.

She was sorrier than her daughter knew, that the direction in which they did lie cost too much to be noticed for the present.

Uncle John and his family drove home by moonlight, and it was three days before he came again.

"Here." he said, hurrying into the kitchen to set on the table a jar of golden butter, "Sarah's tastes lie just in this direction, you see; and she can't be beat on her butter. I thought I'd bring you a jar, since your Annie won't be likely to make you any. Dick says she's for French, and drawing, and all that nonsense. I don't much believe in those things; think it spoils a girl for work; but I guess it will take a good deal to spoil Annie. She goes into it as though her heart was bent on doing her best, and that kind don't spoil easy. So here's a Thanksgiving present for her that she will like better than butter, I guess."

He tossed them on the table, a green ticket and a pink one; and Annie gave a curious little smothered squeal of delight. She recognized them; one would admit her to the drawing class, the other to Madame LaBlanc's French for a whole term. PANSY.

TEMPERANCE.

BOYS IN DANGER.

Every observer of the young life in his own community must have been impressed with the growing prevalence of habits that indicate great laxity in home government, and an unprecedented indulgence in what is confessedly fraught with harm to both body and soul. A recent canvass made as to the habits of boys in a certain section of the country, in using tobacco, liquor and profane language, brought to light the following facts. From one locality came this hope-inspiring report:

1. Out of 20 boys none use tobacco.
2. " " " " liquor.
3. " " " " profane language.

From another was revealed this darkly contrasted condition of things:

1. Out of 27 boys 26 use tobacco.
2. " " 27 " liquor.
3. " " 27 " profane language.

The cities, which are supposed to be bad places to raise children, report more favorably. One large ward school shows that,

1. Out of 115 boys 67 use tobacco.
2. " " 18 " liquor.
3. " " 76 " profane language.

The general average of all reports is as follows:

1. Out of 100 boys 35 used tobacco.
2. " " 22 " liquor.
3. " " 51.4 " profane language.

In a large western city, whose average moral condition could not be affirmed to be as low, perhaps, as some others, a confidential circular of inquiry was sent out to parents, teachers, mayor, police, judge, and well-known citizens, and the tabulated returns were as follows:

1. To what extent does profanity prevail among the young?

To an alarming extent. At one public school profane students were estimated at five-sixths.

2. To what extent are tobacco and intoxicating liquors used by children and youth?

Nine-tenths of the boys and some of the girls use tobacco. In many instances liquor is used by the boys, and they are seen resorting to saloons, and are known to buy beer for home consumption.

3. To what extent is obscene and vulgar language used?

Almost universally among boys, and by not a few of the girls.

4. Are there any obscene pictures or obscene literature in circulation among the young?

Bad papers, to a great extent, and obscene cards and immoral pictures, to a considerable extent. Some of these cards have been found in possession of school children. Business cards with immoral sentiments or devices have circulated somewhat among school children.

5. To what extent do falsehood and deception prevail?

To an alarming degree.

7. Have you observed any special rudeness on the part of boys on the street toward strangers and others, that demands attention?

Very generally, especially toward foreign citizens, to those intoxicated, and to the extent at times of insulting ladies and gentlemen going their own ways.

Some of the replies to the questions, referred to the temptations and perils resulting from the non-enforcement of municipal law forbidding the sale of liquor to minors, and requiring the saloons to be closed on the Sabbath. Also to the fact that almost nothing was done to prevent the exhibition in the windows of newspaper stores and saloons of obscene illustrated papers, and the open sale of bad books in the former. These returns, as will be observed, attempted to give no exact figures, but they are quite as valuable as if they did, because they embody the observations and findings of persons in every walk of life, Catholic as well as Protestant; including officials no less than private citizens.

It is estimated that there are four and a half million children growing up in our country to-day, unreached by the Sabbath-school, or any distinctive religious instruction. In the city of Chicago reliable returns put the number of children outside of all Sabbath-schools at 75,000. Some light is also thrown upon the trend of the young life of our land by the criminal statistics published. The record of arrests of youths from six to twenty-one years of age from Feb. 1 to Aug. 15, 1882, was 296; from Jan. 1 to Aug. 1, 1883, 361. The Grand Jury of New York recently said, "Not far from three-fourths of the complaints are against boys from twelve to eighteen years old." Fifty per cent of all the "criminals arraigned in our New York courts," said an officer of the Prison Association, "are under twenty-one."

And as indicative still further of how difficult it is to save youth, even by transplanting them to a new and better environment, statistics show that out of twenty-five children brought into one State in the Northwest—of those under thirteen years of age, 103 were reported as doing well; while out of 125 over thirteen, but sixty-one turned out well.

We do not believe these facts above given over-color the actual condition of things among American youth. In every village, town and city, it is evident that smoking and drinking are more general than twenty five years ago. The growth of the cigar trade, the multiplication of saloons and low places of entertainment, show plainly enough that a larger proportion of their patrons than ever before comes now from the juvenile part of the population. The wide circulation of sensational or vicious publications written for the young exclusively, tells its own story, as to the character and number of readers of the same. These are but signs of the fastness of our age, of the results of secularized education in our public schools, and of the lack of those same restraints which so largely condition the safety of youth.—Advance.

THE SALOON IN THE COURTS.

SALOONISTS HAVE NO RIGHTS UNDER THE LAW.

DECATUR, Ill., July 20.—Judge Dawes decided last evening, in a test case, that the common council had the right under the law to revoke all liquor licenses at will and without cause. The case grew out of the council's action in issuing fifteen licenses to run a year, and revoking them without cause two days later. The decision has caused general rejoicing among prohibitionists.

THE PROHIBITORY LAW SUSTAINED.

MUSCATINE, Iowa, July 20.—The prohibitory law stood its first test in this county yesterday when James Weir was found guilty on two counts and was fined $100 on each—the full limit of the law. Saloon men, a number of whom were united in the defense, fought the case bitterly and have appealed it to the District court. The Prohibitionists are determined to maintain the law, and have apparent assurances of success.

THE AID OF A LEGAL QUIBBLE.

IOWA CITY, Iowa, July 22.—The first case under the prohibitory law was brought into court to-day on an application for an injunction restraining Conrad Grafs from operating his brewery. Several cases for violation of the law were pending in the justice court, as also a suit for damages for the school fund. Grafs' defense was that he had a right to sell beer on hand made before July 4, and acting on this he had been selling right along. The court approved an agreement of the counsel by which an injunction is to issue to-morrow, the stock being about closed out.

MARY BLANK ASKS FOR MERCY.

MARSHALLTOWN, Iowa, July 22.—The trial of Mary Blank, who was arrested so many times last week for selling beer, resulted in her conviction, a fine of $250 being imposed. When the second case against her was called this morning she submitted a statement that she had discontinued her business, promised that she would hereafter desist from selling beer contrary to the law, and asked to be shown as much clemency as possible. The prosecution, after considering the matter, consented to abandon the two remaining cases, the costs so far accrued being taxed against the defendant.

ESCAPES ON A TECHNICALITY.

MUSCATINE, Iowa, July 22.—James M. Weir, a saloonkeeper, who was convicted before Justice Mountain on two counts for violating the prohibitory law and fined $200, was released on a habeas corpus to-day, and discharged by Judge Hayes on the ground that Justice Mountain failed to enter the case on the docket and did not require a commitment of the prisoner until Monday morning, the case having been tried and a verdict rendered the Friday night previous.

The sweetest life is ever to be making sacrifices for Christ; the hardest life a man can lead on earth, the most full of misery, is to be always doing his own will and seeking to please himself.—Edward Bickersteth.

THE CHURCHES.

—During the past few weeks there has been a blessed revival spirit at the Moody church in this city. Every Sabbath evening from twelve to sixteen persons have been hopefully converted. While other churches are nearly vacated and the ministers off fishing, those who seek for souls at home do not fail of a blessing.

—Rev. W. H. Chandler and wife, of Dover, Illinois, says the Telescope, have recently been called to pass through a deep affliction. On the 15th instant they buried their little Jessie, a daughter of nearly two summers. On the 17th Bro. Chandler wrote: "Clara, our eldest, and Gracie, now our youngest are very low, with but slender hope of recovery. Emma, our second born, and Allie, our third, are now better, and are probably the only ones we shall be able to save from our family of five." These sad afflictions but lead the bereaved nearer to their sympathizing Lord, and call forth many earnest prayers that sustaining grace may be vouchsafed to them.

—During the past winter season over fifty persons have united with the church of which Rev. J. F. Avery of Halifax, Nova Scotia, is pastor. Bro. Avery is the editor and publisher of the charming illustrated magazine for young and old, Buds and Blossoms. Among the converts were several noted characters. His church is large but poor and his support solely from voluntary offerings.

—The Young Men's Christian Association of New York has in progress three new buildings. One of these is on Second street, for the German branch; another is to be on Second avenue, near Ninth street, also for Germans. The cost of these two buildings will be about $50,000. Many young Germans are interested in Young Men's Christian Association work.

—The Church Missionary Society of England has established a home for the children of the missionaries. Not long ago it was desired to remove the home from London to a rural district, when a gift of $50,000 was received to aid them in the work from an English clergyman and his wife.

—The David Williamson, a new mission steamer, built by subscriptions of the children of the United Presbyterian church for the use of the missionaries of Old Calabar, West Africa, has been launched at Dumbarton, Scotland. This increases the number of the mission fleet to eleven.

—A meeting of the Northern Presbytery of Japan was held lately. The membership reported was 1,081, an increase of 150 in half a year. The amount of money contributed for church purposes by the native Christians was Yen 1,344, a sum nearly equal to $1,344. This is an average of about $1.24 for each member. One young man was examined and ordained as an evangelist, and has since gone to his field in a distant part of the country. One new church of forty-seven members was reported organized since the previous meeting in Hakodate.

—From the report of the Statistical Secretary, presented at the National Sunday-school Convention recently held at Louisville, Ky., we gather the following: The total number of schools in the United States and British American Provinces is estimated at 103,516. Total number of officers and teachers, 1,089,229. Total number of scholars, 8,456,799. Total, 9,146,028. Gain over previous report, 966,168. The estimated population of the entire country is placed at somewhere from 56,000,000 to 58,000,000.

—According to the statistical tables just published, the Methodist Episcopal church is composed of 12,546 itinerant and 12,026 local preachers; 1,601,072 lay members in full connection and 168,462 probationers, making the grand total of membership Jan. 1st, 1884, 1,782,090, an increase for the year of 32,582. The total collections for general missionary work (home and foreign) during the year were $765,167, an increase of $33,308. Besides this the collections for church extension were $120,403; for Tract Society, $15,280; for Sunday-school Union, $16,232; for education, $64,900, and for Bible Society, $27,260, making the grand total for missionary work of all kinds, $1,029,241.

—The Danish-American Missionary Society, at Copenhagen, has sent this spring five young ministers of the Gospel to Danish congregations in the United States.

—The residents of Galicia, the northeastern province of Austria, are petitioning the Emperor to expel all Jesuits from that province. Their demands are so extortionate that the people are unable to pay the government taxes and keep from starvation.

—Early in May two-thirds of the Presbyterian church in Humboldt drew out and organized an independent "People's Church," taking the pastor with them. A lady is putting up a building for the new enterprise at her own expense for about $8,000.

—Rev. M. F. Keifer, the pastor of King street congregation, Chambersburg, Pa., has been afflicted for quite a while with diphtheria and has been unable to fill his place in the pulpit. He and family are now visiting in Virginia with the hope of regaining his health more rapidly than he would likely be able to do at home. His daughter has won the first prize offered by Rev. W. S. Titus through the Telescope for the best essay against secret societies.—United Brethren in Christ.

THE PAN-PRESBYTERIAN COUNCIL at Belfast discussed on the sixth day some interesting topics. In the report of the United Presbyterian report we read that two committees—one European, the other American—were appointed to consider how far union and co-operation could be effected in the foreign mission field among the churches forming the Alliance. Dr. Murray Mitchell reported that both the Established church of Scotland and the Free church of Scotland were heartily in favor of co-operation. Dr. Mitchell reported likewise upon the amount of union already realized, especially in Japan, where three Presbyterian churches had united to form one church, and soon another would be joined to it. The New Hebrides Mission was supported by eight different Presbyterian bodies. Union had also taken place in Trinidad. Professor Calderwood moved that the Council strongly recommend the encouragement of self-government and self-development in the native churches under Presbyterian order, and, further, in view of reported restrictions and hindrances, the Council agrees to take steps to remove them.

The Council then proceeded to hear a report on the "Eldership," from Mr. James Croll, of Montreal. Rev. Professor Chancellor, of Belfast, read a paper on "The Qualifications and Duties of Elders." Dr. Monro Gibson, of London, read a paper on "Lay Help to Church Work, Including Deacon's and Woman's Work." The Rev. R. M. Patterson, D. D., said he adopted the theory of Dr. Witherow on the eldership, and said that several of the Northern Presbyteries recognized the correctness of this theory, electing elders to the moderatorship, and the Cumberland Presbyterian church appointed an elder to be moderator this year. Dr. John Hall said he had twenty elders in his congregation, and each one had 100 members under his care, and, therefore, he felt a very deep interest in the subject of the eldership. For his part he could not really understand why the respected elder who presided over the Council the other evening should have been obliged to ask a minister to pronounce the benediction. He ought to have done it himself.

ANTI-ROMANISM AT MARENGO, ILL.

Rev. P. A. Seguin, the ex-Catholic priest, has just given us four lectures at this place and Belvidere, on Catholicism, and I wish to say to the readers of the Cynosure that I find him to be evangelical in his teachings, and well qualified by reason of his long experience in Catholicism to speak correctly and forcibly on this great question. While he is not rash in his denunciation of the Roman system, he speaks plainly and fearlessly. No threats can intimidate him. He speaks as the messenger of God.

His lectures were all interesting, especially those on education and purgatory. I write this in hopes that he may have a wider field of usefulness, and that ministers and others may prepare the way for him to lecture in scores of cities and villages throughout the country. One who has had courage to renounce allegiance to the pope for Christ, should, it seems to me, be supported and encouraged in his self-denying labors by a generous-hearted, Christian public. E. C. BEST.

HOW A FAITH MISSION BEGAN.

Bro. C. B. Ward, missionary to Secunderabad, Deccan, India, tells in his brief history of the Telugu Faith Mission how that interesting and important work (which may be assisted by any who can send their contributions to Mrs. A. R. Kean, care S. A. Kean, 100 Washington street, Chicago):

The Telugu Mission had its origin in a prayer meeting attended by two persons in the home of the one in Goolburga, February 22, 1879. The one party was the pastor of the Methodist church in Bellary, and the other an assistant engineer in the Nizam's department of public works, then resident in that station. These two persons were the subscribers to this publication. The great famine of 1876, 1877, 1878, in which 5,000,000 souls perished, had closed. Copious rains had fallen, but as yet no crops had been harvested; and famine prices, famine want, famine diseases, famine poverty, and helpless famine sufferers abounded. On the understanding that "famine was over," government relief camps had all been closed except here and there one kept up simply as a hospital. The consequence was thousands were yet left to suffer and die for want of food and medicine. In Goolburga, where famine camps were still in order, a few residents of the Goolburga station united to open and carry on a small private charity for the benefit of orphans, and in some cases destitute children with their mothers.

The time had now come when these friends thought there was no longer any necessity for the continuance of their "poor house," as they styled it. There were, however, a few children left in the "poor house" who had no known parents or relatives. After a few had been taken, five remained for some friend to take. The local committee dissolved itself, and A. C. Davis took the five remaining children—four boys and one girl to rear for God. In the course of my work as a Methodist preacher, I chanced to be in Bro. Davis' house the night of February 21, 1879. In the course of the evening Bro. Davis narrated to me the history of the "poor house," and wound up with saying he had taken the remaining five children. I innocently asked him what he intended doing with them. He said he intended training them for the work of the Lord. If after they were grown he found them fit for the work he meant that they should accompany him as he moved about at his work, and they should preach the gospel to their heathen countrymen.

The idea of rearing these boys and girls for God went through my soul as a revelation from heaven. As I remember, I said little, if anything, at the time. I retired, but not to sleep for hours. There passed before my eyes the haggard, bony, starving forms of hundreds of poor children I saw again and again at the various stations along a thousand miles of railway. I was accustomed to travel frequently. The possibility of saving any number of these little ones for God and his work. Was it possible? Was it not possible? I had passed over two years at Bellary in the height of the famine; had seen the bones of many thousands at Avama's Tope and Adoni; had seen the dead and dying in and by the road with never a thought that I could do anything till my eyes became used to sights that ordinarily would have made me sick. But in those waking hours God called me to cast in my faith with Bro. Davis, and endeavor to do what could be done in the line of his undertaking with the remnant from the "poor house." I came to India with my soul burdened for the salvation of the heathen. I was appointed to English work in which I allowed myself to be fully engrossed. At the Madras Conference in December 1878, I had asked an appointment to native work, but was halted by the query, "Where will you get your support?" I had not apostolic faith then. But God took my case in hand, and in less than three months after the Madras Conference began to show me as well as my brethren where the support was coming from. The Lord gave me an appointment to native work, and at the following conference my brethren unanimously approved it, leaving me to select my own field.

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

—The Ogle County, Press gave a little notice of Rob. Morris's junketing visit to the Masons of Polo, Ill. The wonderful "bloody sacrifice" which Morris used heavily for advertising purposes is described: "The description of his initiation at midnight by the Arabs, in a low dale, about half a mile from Jeruslem, was very interesting. A Mohamed Priest 94 years old, doing the work, and giving the lectures, lasting until about daylight."

—At a meeting of the Cook County Directory, Ancient Order Hibernians, held Sabbath afternoon, July 13, Father Fitzgerald, of Cahirciveen, County Kerry, Ireland, addressed the members in behalf of the O'Connell memorial church, urging them to subscribe.

—California is said to be probably the richest Odd-fellow jurisdiction in the world, and it is said that its payments pro rata far exceed that of any other. In the State there are 287 lodges with a membership of 22,248, and the total assets are estimated at $1,923,182.22, being an average of $86.44 per member.

—The Knights of Pythias, as do all the other lodges, find their oaths are not binding enough to hold their members, and so have invented another degree, which brings in an insurance dodge to grip the indifferent member's pocket if it cannot his throat. The secretary of this part of the lodge business says of it: "This rank is distinct from the other ranks of the order, and receives its authority from and is under the direct supervision and exclusive control of the Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias of the World. The organizations are called sections, and are numbered consecutively without regard to location, with officers elected by the sections, and have an obligation peculiar to this rank. It is dependent solely upon the order of Knights of Pythias for its membership, being composed of Knights in good standing in their lodges, who are physically qualified and not over the age prescribed by the laws. In the first class the maximum benefit is $1,000; in the second class it is $2,000; in the third class $1,000, and in the fourth class either $1,000, $2,000 or $3,000 as the applicant may designate.

—Oatmeal ginger-bread is highly recommended for the children's lunch. Use oatmeal instead of flour.

—The Age of Steel publishes ninety letters from engine-builders, woodworking machinery, steam-pumps, hardware specalties, and iron-roofing manufacturers east of St. Louis, showing that trade is in a good condition, that sales thus far this year have exceeded those for the last six months of 1883, and that wire manufacturers and others are working to their fullest capacity. The dullness in some lines and low prices are attributed to lack of confidence induced by recent failures.

—The cholera scourge in the south of France is having a marked effect upon continental travel. Many American tourists who have arrived here with the intention of making the continental tour during the summer holiday have changed their plans and will confine their visit to the British Islands.

—According to the Shanghai correspondent of the London Times an influential party in China is instigating a war between that country and France. It is said a repudiation of the recent Franco-Chinese negotiations has been resolved upon by a number of prominent officials, including Marquis Tseng. It is believed that the island of Formosa will be claimed by France as security for the payment of indemnity.

—The excitement over the proposed Orange demonstration at Newry, Ireland, on the 12th inst. is increasing, and from present indications promises to be the largest gathering of Orangemen that has been seen in Ireland for years. It is announced this evening by the committee having charge of the affair that from the number of letters they have received from Orange societies throughout Great Britain they expect at least 50,000 Orangemen to participate in the demonstration.

—Dispatches from Cuba tell of a desperate state of commercial affairs throughout the island. Failures follow each other rapidly, and the branch office of the Spanish bank at Santiago de Cuba refuses to discount notes or advance money on sugars.

BY H. M. HUGUNIN.

This new and attractive volume is now ready. It is composed of thirty-nine chapters on nearly as many topics. Neatly bound in cloth with gilt stamp. Price 60 cents.

The Chicago Evening Journal of May 3, says:

The author of this little volume, for many years a working editor of the EVENING JOURNAL, has here presented us with a variety of topics of a religious character. Among the number we note "The Evils of the Sunday Newspaper," "The Divine Sanction of Church Organizations," "The Good Work and Government of Sunday-Schools," "The Bible in our Public Schools," "Fallacies of the 'Evolution Theory,'" "Chronology—The Age of the World," and "Labor and Laborers." Mr. Hugunin writes as an independent thinker, untrammeled by denominational alignments. His style, however, is marked by the vigor of earnestness and sincerity, and with these characteristics, and with a close adherence to Bible Christianity, his book becomes a suggestive aid to evangelical workers. In discussing the topics above named, as in others, he deals consistently with questions of public interest and great importance in the reform of individual and social evils.

LUCILE VERNON.

THIS is a pleasant surprise in many ways. The author is Rev. W. T. Meloy, of the United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and the book is published by the Board of Publication of his denomination. It is a love story, not "fascinating," but with so much of genial interest that the reader is in no danger of laying it down unfinished. * * * The moral purpose of the book is to describe and vindicate Christian character, in its more heroic aspects, and it is a success. We congratulate the author and the United Presbyterian Board of Publication on this literary lily of the valley.—The Interior.

"LUCILLE VERNON" is evidently not an ideal sketch, but the fictitious names used represent to a great extent real men and women of flesh and blood. The characters of many of them are by no means attractive, but are perfect counterparts of querulous, obstinate and parsimonious professors who are thorns in the flesh of many a pastor in all the churches. But as in all the churches, there were also good and true men and women at Lansington, who upheld and encouraged the pastor. * * * In its author will be recognized the worthy pastor of the First United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and a welcome contributor to these columns.—United Presbyterian.

IT belongs to the class known as the religious novel. It is a love story written in the Pansy style, and so constructed as to teach sound moral and religious principles, in connection with quite an interesting narrative. Indeed, when the writer sat down to examine it, he commenced as a critic on the sharp lookout for blunders, but soon he became absorbed in the story, and forgot altogether his critical duties. He also noticed that when the members of his family commenced to read it, they had but little time for anything else until it was completed. Tried as a work of art by the practical test, it must be regarded as a success. Its influence will doubtless be good in correcting false views, and in helping the reader to sounder principles and to a better spirit. * * * Some may think some of the scenes depicted are not true to nature, but the critic would be likely to find, on inquiry, that the very incidents which he would select as unnatural are actual facts. "We often find that truth is stranger than fiction."—D. A. W. in the Christian Instructor.

The heroine, who becomes the bride of the pastor of the church at Lansington, is a wonderful exemplification of how a woman who is a true wife and help-meet may throw her life and energies into the great work of saving souls; aiding, by gentle words and sympathy, wise counsel and brave endurance, the husband having charge of a congregation where the Demon of Misrule held full sway. We follow with interest the history of the wife and husband through their hours of despondency and discouragement to the happy ending, where religion, harmony and peace have gained the ascendency and the good man and wife find their reward.—Pittsburgh Daily Telegraph.

IN THE COILS;

— OR —

The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

FLAGG, author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story, accurately true to life because mainly a narration of historical facts. 384 pages. NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"There is no important history extant but has connected with it numerous other histories of which it was the initial point, or the dominating influence. The abduction and murder of Morgan set ten thousand secret springs in motion, as the surrender of the charters of so many lodges at that time, and the severing of their connection with the order of some forty thousand of its members indicated. This story is one of these histories, and is a collection of facts woven into a story. It cannot fail to be read with interest."—Free Methodist, Chicago.

"The republication of the Reform Story which run through the columns of the Cynosure for nearly a year is at last completed, and the book so anxiously expected by thousands of our readers has come from the press of Ezra A. Cook. The book is finely bound and fairly introduces the reader to the treasures within. The publisher has made occasional selections from Masonic works to verify the statements of the text; these make a helpful addition for some who can afford no more complete an armory of this kind."—Christian Cynosure.

"In an incidental way the story tells much about the manner of conducting lodges and much about the spirit and methods of Masonry. The story covers the period of the abduction and murdering of William Morgan. The strategic position from which the author writes put a charm in the book, while it gives a good opportunity to show the workings of the order. We wish all the people would read it."—Telescope.

"It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."—Lutheran Standard, Columbus, O.

"The exciting scenes of the fall of 1826, at Batavia, N. Y., when Wm. Morgan was murdered by Masonry, are woven into the story so as to give the truth of History a setting of attractiveness. The forty chapters of the volume are soon compassed by the eager reader who begins the volume. This volume ought to be read and will be sought as its merits become known."—United Brethren in Christ.

"The story is intensely interesting and the author has succeeded in weaving into it a great deal of information in regard to this mysterious order, which is certainly startling if true, and he gives what seems to be undoubted evidence to prove his assertions. The book is one which should be read by both Masons and Antimasons."—Wayne Co. Herald.

"Our Anti-secret society friends are certainly entitled to great credit for their persistence in their efforts to expose and root out secretism. The object of the writer of this story is to present in its true light the crafty, unscrupulous and exceedingly hurtful influence of Masonry, the parent of all the orders."—Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

THE BEST FILTER.

The Japanese use porous sandstone hollowed in the shape of an egg, through which the water percolates into a receptacle underneath; the Egyptians resort to a similar device; the Spaniards use a porous eartheu pot. But these and other similar contrivances can not be thoroughly cleansed; after the most thorough rinsing, some impurities will remain in the pores of the stone. Spongy iron and earferal are open to the same objection; they will answer well for a short time, but soon become contaminated by pollution retained in their pores. Sponge cloth and felt, unless cleaned every day or two with hot water, will do more harm than good, and the average servant girl will not clean them or any other filter, unless under the eye of the mistress.

The various forms of filters that are screwed to the faucet have ouly to be hastily examined to be discarded, as there is not sufficient filtering material in them to be of much utility, and they very soon become foul and offensive. Buck says, "There is no material known which can be introduced into the small space of a trap filter, and accomplish any real purification of the water which passes through at the ordinary rate of flow."

The various complicated closed filters, filled with any material cannot be removed for cleansing, condemn themselves. No amount of pumping water through them at different angles, which is at all likely to be used, can cleanse them of the impurities that adhere to the mass, and in the pores of the filtering material used. Parkes, in his "Manual of Practical Hygiene," says: "Filters, where the material is cemented up, and cannot be removed, ought to be abaudoned altogether."

The various metal filters in which the water comes in contact with the metallic surfaces, either iron, lead, tinued iron or zinc, are objectionable from their appreciable influence upou the water retained in them for any considerable time. Pure block tin is the least objectionable of any of the metals.

The aim of most filters is to remove impurities from the water speedily—as rapidly as it escapes from the faucet. Experiment shows that effective filtration ean not be accomplished in this way, as the water does not remain long enough in contact with the filtering material used to become purified of much that might be removed by slow filtration or percolation through the same appliance. Of all the filtering materials mentioned it seems to me that sand and charcoal are the two that accomplish the best results, and of these, vegetable charcoal is the best.—Popular Science Monthly.

—If a man could eat as much in proportion as a bird, he would consume a whole round of beef for his dinner. The redbreast is a most voracious bird. It has been calculated that, to keep a redbreast up to its normal weight, an amount of animal food is required daily, equal to an earthworm fourteen feet in length. Taking a man of average weight, and measuring bulk for bulk with the redbreast, I tried to calculate how much food he would consume in twenty-four hours, if he ate as much in proportion as the bird. Assuming a sausage nine inches in circumference to be a fair equivalent of the earthworm, I find that the man would have to eat sixty-seven feet of such sausage in every tweuty-four hours. I meution this in order to illustrate the amount of work which is done by insect-eating birds.—Prof. J. G. Wood.

Charles Delmonico used to say: "Few people know how to cook water. The secret is in putting good fresh water into a neat kettle, already quite warm, and setting the water to boiling quickly, and then taking it right off for use in tea, coffee or other drinks, before it is spoiled. To let it steam and simmer and evaporate until the good water is all in the atmosphere, and the lime and iron and dregs left in the kettle—bah! that is what makes a great many people sick, and is worse than no water at all." Mr. Delmonico also claimed to be the first to recommend the "hot water cure" to guests who complained of having no appetite. "Take a cup of hot water and lemon and you will feel better," was the formula adopted, and the cup of hot water and lemon was simply a little hot water with a drop of lemon juice to take away the insipidity. For this anti-bilious remedy the caterers charged the price of a drink of their best liquors—twenty-five cents or more.

WASP STINGS.—There can be no doubt that under certain conditions the sting of a wasp may prove very injurious, or even dangerous to life. We are unable to endorse the opinion that there is no danger unless there be fear. It is quite possible that the sting of any insect capable of generating a poison may be fatal without the intervention of panic. The nervous system is in some of its states exceedingly susceptible of sudden impressions, which, as it were, "stagger" the nerve centers by shock. The bites of small snakes probably act in this way, and the sting of a wasp may prove fatal in the same fashion. As to remedies, ammonia is, of course, the obvious recourse; but almost anything "strong" in a popular sensc, will generally suffice to decompose and destroy an organic poison if instantly applied. This is why the juice of an onion answers the purpose. Anything equally pungent would do as well.—Lancet.

Why should vinegar for pickling with never be boiled? Because boiling takes all the strength from it. Whatever vegetables are to be pickled should first be made soft with boiling water made strong with salt, and then be well drained and vinegar poured over.

Why should salt and a bit of soda always be put in the water to boil greens with? Because the salt crisps the greens and flavors them, and the soda extracts the oil, which is greatly injurious to the digestion.—Selected.

Therefore, the public should guard against this deception, and always ask for Glenn's Sulphur Soap, by its full name, and take no other.

READ the following evidence from a highly respectable source:

C. N. CRITTENTON, ESQ.,

Dear Sir: I have travelled for three years for Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons, publishers, New York, and desire to inform you that I have used your incomparable Glenn's Sulphur Soap exclusively for about four years; also have recommended it to very many persons; my constant experience has been that it possesses all the medical advantages that you claim for it. All to whom I have recommended it say as well as myself, that it deserves its established reputation as the best and most efficacious Sulphur Soap that can be used for skin cleansing, as well as toilet purposes. Some unprincipled druggists have endeavored to substitute other kinds of Sulphur Soap for Glenn's—saying they were "just as good," but having myself tried other kinds, I find NONE so good or so beneficial as the Genuine Sulphur Soap stamped "GLENN'S," and this I have observed always bears the name of "C. N. Crittenton, Proprietor," on the packet.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

IN BRIEF.

The Mexican government has made a contract with Mr. Oscar A. Droege to plant 2,000,000 trees in the valley of Mexico within four years. The contractor pledges himself to 80,000 ash, 35,000 willows, 120,000 poplars, 60,000 eucalyptus trees, 60,000 trœnosjapones, 60,000 mountain cypress cedars, 60,000 acacias, and 120,000 of miscellaneous varieties. The trees must be in plantations of from 50,000 to 100,000 each.

In 1850 the State of New York had a native-born population of 2,436,771. Its native-born criminals then numbered 649, or one to every 3,754 native inhabitants. With all the efforts of that great State, in the way of educational and religious enterprise, during the succeeding thirty years, we find in 1880 the following result: There was a native-born population of 3,807,317; native criminals, 5,177, or one to every 741 inhabitants—a proportionate increase of criminals of over 500 per cent in thirty years.

The great fifty-ton hammer in Krupp's works at Essen gained its name, "Unser Fritz," and the inscription it bears, "Fritz, let fly," in the following manner: When in 1877 the Emperor William visited Essen, this steam hammer attracted his attention. Krupp presented him to the machinist Fritz, who, he said, handled the hammer with such nicety and precision as not to injure or touch an object placed in the center of the block. The emperor at once put his diamond-studded watch on the point indicated, and beckoned to the machinist to set the hammer in motion. Fritz hesitated, out of consideration for the precious object, but Krupp urged him on by saying, "Fritz, let fly!" Down came the hammer and the watch remained untouched. The emperor gave it to the machinist as a souvenir, and Krupp added 1,000 marks to the present.

In your issue of May 24 is an article on "Speed of Thought," showing the rapidity of thought as shown by an engineer dreaming a long dream while traveling 250 feet in four seconds. A case happened wherein the dreamer had an equally long dream in less than one second. A telegraph operator was one night during the Turco-Russian war receiving a press dispatch regarding the war, in which the name of Gortschakoff was being telegraphed. Gortschakoff's name appearing so often in such dispatches, the operator, as soon as he heard the first syllable of the great premier's name, went to sleep and dreamt he went to his mother's home in the Indian Territory; went hunting with some Indian friends; had a great deal of sport, and went through an experience which would take days to perform, and finally, after returning from the hunt, during the division of their game, he woke up in time to hear the final syllable of Gortschakoff's name, and succeeded in making a complete "copy" of the message. At the rate of forty words per minute, at which telegraphing is usually done, you will see that the time of the dream, which commenced when the middle syllable of Gortschakoff's name was being made, was one-third of one and one-third of a second, or forty-four one-hundredths of a second.—Scientific American.

About one hundred years ago a number of the professors of the Edinburgh University attempted to publish a work which should be a perfect specimen of typographical accuracy. Every precaution was taken to secure the desired result. Six experienced proof readers were employed, who devoted hours to the reading of each page; and, after it was thought perfect, it was posted up in the hall of the University with a notification that a reward of fifty pounds would be paid to any person who would discover an error. Each page was suffered to remain two weeks in the place where it had been posted before the work was printed, and the professors thought they had attained the object for which they had been striving. When the work was issued, it was discovered that several errors had been committed, one of which was on the first line of the first page.

The Boston Advertiser has an article to show that while the man with but one whole idea may be a social power, he who has only the half of several ideas may be a danger and is an actual nuisance. Upon this subject of semi-education the Advertiser says: "The typical New Englander of former days had few books and few convictions, but his books were well read, his convictions profound, and he was, in every true sense of the word, a better educated man than his more versatile successor, who lives in a chaos of books, magazines and newspapers. The general diffusion of superficial and fragmentary information has given rise to a multitude of half-educated writers, who, sometimes for money and sometimes out of mere vanity, are anxious to instruct the world in theology, philosophy and politics, or prepared to amuse it with attenuated fiction. How much better is honest ignorance, or wholesome, unpretentious dullness than the self-deluding conceits of the parlor metaphysician, or the painful introspections of the fashionable novelist.

One of the stone masons engaged on the Washington monument told a reporter that the summit of the monument is a terrible place to be during a thunderstorm. He had seen the lightning flashing about, above and below him, while the thunder peals almost knocked him from his feet. "I have seen," he said, "a great flash of lightning blaze and crackle among the iron work above my head, and then follow the girders through the inside to the ground, brilliantly illuminating the dark interior for an instant and filling the air with a strong sulphurous smell. The Washington monument will be the highest work of man to be found in the world. It has reached a height of over 434 feet and the enormous weight of 90,000 tons. The highest point reached by man so far is the spire of the cathedral at Cologne, which is 520 feet high, and was completed in 1882. The Washington monument will be 555 feet high when completed. The tallest of the great pyramids is only 480 feet in height. The monument will be capped with a pyramidal peak 55 feet high. Visitors will be allowed to look through large windows on each of the four sides 500 feet from the ground.

It has something for every member of the family, and is always pure, bright, helpful, entertaining, and Pre-eminently readable. Whenever a fair trial has been given to the GOLDEN RULE it has almost always secured a permanent subscriber. It is on this ground that a new departure is made in the history of newspaper enterprise.

Read the following offer:

To any reader of the CYNOSURE, not now a subscriber to the GOLDEN RULE, sending fifty cents in stamps or otherwise, the GOLDEN RULE will be sent from the time the subscription is received to January 1, 1885.

Although this sum does not nearly cover the actual expense of the paper thus sent, we know that it will be a good investment in the end, as experience has shown that when the paper has once gained a foothold in a family, it is almost sure to become a constant guest. What are the rights of an audience? Can they express disapproval as freely as they can applaud? Have not both audience and speaker rights which the other is "bound to respect." Obviously so. A stump harangue on the street is liable any moment to interruptions of every sort; but the preacher or lecturer is safe from objectors. Their only alternative is to stop their ears or get out of hearing. The invitation under which they are present gives no privilege to the hiss. That is the rule of decent society, which today only lodgemen and rowdies are apt to violate. So long as the speaker keeps to his call he is safe, if he is among respectable people. The annals of the rostrum furnish many examples of sharp and just repartee which a ready and cool-headed speaker has inflicted upon an audience that has lost its footing of self-respect by an unreasonable hiss. The speeches of Wendell Phillips before the abolition of slavery give us many instances. Lord Brougham was once interrupted by a note of anger in Parliament, and inflicted upon his unskillful opponents the following reproof: "Hiss-s-s!" said he. "Serpents, geese, and the steam engine are nothing to John Bull when once aroused. So now when you have done with your folly, I shall go on with my speech, until which time I stand here slowly growing fat on popular applause."

Mr. Blaine has been through about all the experiences of an ordinary political life except joining the lodge. But he has now before him a problem which no Presidential candidate ever met before. The New York Tribune has been for some time independent of the printers' secret union, and from its influential position is able to make that branch of lodgery much annoyance, as a check to its insolent and domineering habits. The Tribune is a pillar in Blaine's temple of aspiration, and so the union, representing its membership as Republicans, called to secure the influence of their chief against the excluding rule of the Tribune. There was a long talk and the Republican candidate was edified by the threat that thousands of Republican printers cared less for whatever principle is supposed to remain in that party than for their lodge, and would vote against him if the Tribune did not obey their mandate, discharge its force and employ lodgemen. Mr. Blaine must have been disgusted with such followers of his political fortunes, but it is said that he used some persuasion with the Tribune. It must have been a half-hearted effort. The great paper was not persuaded, and now the matter will be laid before the central union, the ring within the ring; and who knows but votes enough will be lost to lose New York city, or New York State, or the election itself—all at the nod of an oath-bound clique.

The resolution of the managers of the Bartholdi Statue in New York, by which the laying of the corner-stone of the sub-structure was given to the Freemasons on Tuesday, marks the financial and moral weakness of the concern. The French people began years ago at the statue, and yet our part of the work drags pitifully. The foundation and pedestal will cost $250,000. The corner-stone only is reached and but $20,000 in the treasury. A multitude of schemes are devised to get in the funds, but the funds are not attracted. The turning over of this important ceremony to the Freemasons proves the weakness and incompetency of the management. They can get nothing from the lodge by toadying to it; nor will any one in this country thank them for the implied recognition of infidel French Masonry. If these gentlemen see fit to begin the work by an appeal to infidel and deceiving Masonry let them put out the light in the apex and veil the face of their goddess for shame that "Liberty Enlightening the World" should borrow from dark, despotic and pagan forms for its inaugural rites.

Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Susan B. Anthony, President and Vice President of the National Woman Suffrage Association, have issued an address to the members of that society, urging that their influence and support be given to the Republican party. The document is read with more surprise from the fact that the leaders of the mis-called Independents, George William Curtis, James Freeman Clarke, T. W. Higginson and a few others, who are now supporting Cleveland, have for years been the strong allies of Mrs. Stanton's society. The ladies charge them with undertaking a political somersault "not to illustrate any vital principles, but merely to gratify personal pique." Nine-tenths of the Democratic party says the address, are bitter opponents of all liberal measures, while three-fourths of the Republicans, and Blaine among them, are claimed as friends of woman suffrage. Of the Prohibitionists and the Americans the address goes on to say: "To make woman suffrage the tail to their kite is to defy the laws of gravitation. Prohibition could not secure woman suffrage, but woman suffrage is the only power by which prohibition could be made a possibility. Those demanding recognition of God in the Constitution are reminded that the best recognition men in this Nation can make of God in the Constitution is to secure exact justice to their moihers." These sentiments indicate that the hand of time is resting heavily upon the authors of the address. Instead of gratitude toward the only political parties that uphold their peculiar principles, they taunt them because they do not fall down and worship at the shrine of female suffrage. It looks amazingly as if the age had passed beyond these ladies; that they belong to a past decade. The demand for moral issues in politics is an unselfish one and marks a great step of progress beyond the ends proposed by Mrs. Stanton's society. They have no high or holy mission for women to subserve by their votes, but would drop them all into the foul mud of ordinary politics where they would sink from sight as in a Slough of Despond. Female suffrage can seem only desirable when it goes beyond self-interest and is needed for the good of the race. In their opposition these ladies appear to have become rather way marks than leaders in their reform.

The reports of last week from the south of France brought the encouragement that the cholera epidemic was dying out in the cities where it began, though it is spreading slowly into Spain and Italy. The scourge has brought out many prejudices and superstitions of the lower classes, who were too poor to escape from the infected cities. At first it enraged them against their richer neighbors until a state of anarchy and blood was threatened. Now the same classes oppose the physicians, because they have caught the notion that the doctors are helping the cholera along so as to get rid of the surplus population, that is, the poor. One of the Marsailles physicians was going, last week to a patient in the poorer quarter of the city and was met by a crowd of the sick man's neighbors armed with knives. They defended their sick friend, and chased the doctor away from the vicinity. It is reported that a medical writer in Berlin has advocated the sentiment that the plague is useful to the public welfare by sweeping off beings unfitted for the struggle for existence. His heartless and heathen argument has been reproduced widely in France, and confirms the ignorant and superstitious in their idea that the government has adopted similar views and that they are to be sacrificed for the salvation of the wealthy and the strong. Only among a people long under the bondage of priests and despots could the poor have reason to suspect the rich of such crimes, or the rich give occasion for such suspicion.

WANT OF MORAL DIGNITY.

BY GEN. J. W. PHELPS.

The recent "Independent" Conference in New York failed to take the proper stand. They made a mere personal issue with the Republican nominees, when it is plain that the need of reform lies in the errors and vices of the Republican party itself. That party in its original formation was rendered innately vicious by appealing to secret associations and immoral arts. It sought to cast out devils by the aid of devils. Hence its degeneracy and corruption.

The pretended object of the conference was for reform; and to that end candor and moral principle required that the source of corruption, viz., the Masonic lodge, should have been pointed out and renounced. Mr. Blaine's personal character is not worse than that of the Republican Presidents since the days of Lincoln. If the objection against him is sincere, it is neither intelligent nor consistent.

It is a rather suspicious circumstance that the opposition lies against the first non-secretist that the Republicans have recently offered for the Presidency.

It is not sufficiently respectful of the intelligence of the American people, nor hopeful to the permanence of the Republic to resort to minor, indirect issues instead of placing before them squarely the true issue. The real question of reform that is awaiting the consideration of the people, and only requiring a formal presentment, such as the late "Independent" Conference might have given it, is whether American institutions or European institutions shall rule here in America. The SECRET LODGE is an European institution; its aid was invoked by the Republican party at its formation; it became the machine power of that party; it has become the political education and the source of moral instruction of the entire country, and it is as subversive of American institutions as it is spurious in its morality. The best men in the country stand in the face of the Masonic lodge as the Girondist stood in the face of the guillotine; and they need a party that will have the moral courage to vindicate them against this monstrous iniquity.

Are not the American people capable of appreciating a principle without having it illustrated by the character of some man? Must they see an honest bank-president or bank-director in order to know what honest bank management must be? Must they be told that an honest man at the head of a corrupt party is a moral monstrosity? Must they be informed that a party which plays Masonic tricks must inevitably lead to moral confusion, which good men only serve to aggravate?

The antecedents of both the ascendant parties prohibit the idea that the reform which the country needs can come from them. The reform needed lies beyond their possible scope of action. The shadow of slavery still lies dark upon one, and the tricks of the secret lodge still animate both. In the present condition of the country a change from one political party to another political party, so complicated with vicious arts and unrepented errors as are the Republican and Democratic parties, is as idly ineffectual for effecting a reform as would be the leap from one horse to another in the exciting sport of the circus ring. What the country needs is a moral change, not merely a superficial political one alone. And if that change is long delayed by such political conferences as that of the "Independents," it will be forced upon the country by blood and havoc. The dignity of human nature cannot be so trifled with as it is by the tricks of the secret lodge without resulting in the usual disastrous consequences of war. Recognized and rejected errors may escape disaster, but deliberate, concealed fraud can have but one redress.

The party that is so weak as to fall at its first step into the frowzy arms of the Democracy is not worthy of the name of Independent. Its independence ends in a choice between two evils, which is the choice of the slave, not of the free man; for what right has any man who is made free indeed by moral rectitude to choose any evil at all whether it is less than another evil or not?

The American party offers no alternative of a lesser evil. It offers no evil at all. It offers full scope for free men to work. It offers nothing for party slaves. It offers a free play for courage, hope, heroism, integrity, independence, and all the higher qualities of man. It bandages no eyes, nor does it hide the eyes under the dirt and dust of old, worn out, iniquitous party organizations. It has openly, manfully and nobly held up the American colors during almost the entire period of Republican misrule under the false, piratic colors of the lodge; and it now calls on the "Independents" to come to its aid. There is yet time to hold a national conference in Chicago that shall place not only an honest man in nomination for the Presidency, but a new and honest party in the field; one that holds up a sign worthy of drawing all men to it, and which alone offers salvation for the Republic.

Guilford, Vermont, July 24th, 1884.

THE NATIONAL EDUCATIONAL ASSOCIATION.

BY PROF. H. A. FISCHER.

Friday, July 18th, closed what was probably the largest gathering of teachers ever held in the world. Madison, Wisconsin, a city of some fourteen thousand inhabitants, suddenly found its numbers swelled to about twenty thousand, by teachers from every State and Territory of the Union. Ex-Governor Fairchild in his address of welcome remarked that the entertainment committee had been resolved into a committee of chambermaids to provide beds for the throng. Blankets were sent from neighboring places and car loads of cots from Chicago. Hotels, private residences, the University boarding hall, and tents on the capitol grounds were used for lodgings, and it would seem that the hospitality of the citizens of Madison was taxed to its utmost, but they declared that there was room for more. Notwithstanding the inevitable crush, everybody seemed happy, for the beautiful scenery surrounding Madison, the perfect weather, the inspiration of being in a crowd, together with the good will shown by Governor Rusk in opening his doors for a reception, and by the city in magnificent illuminations and displays of fireworks, made every discomfort easy to bear.

The work of the Association is so comprehensive, that it was found necessary to organize separate departments. Two of these were organized at the Madison meeting, making the total number nine. Their names will give some idea of the work done by them. I. The National Council of Education, consisting of 51 members elected from the Association; II. Superintendent's Department; III. Normal Department; IV. Elementary Department; V. Higher Instruction Department; VI. Industrial Department; VII. Art Department; VIII. Music Department; IX. Kindergarten Department. It will not be expected that a brief communication should give even an outline of the work done by the Association, but there were certain features which will doubtless be of interest to the readers of the Cynosure, and will give some idea of the spirit of the gathering. First in order let me mention the evidences of the knitting together of the North and South. Ex-slaveholders and ex-confederate soldiers spoke earnestly for the education of the illiterate whites and blacks of the South, deprecated the war, but rejoiced in its result, the overthrow of slavery and the establishment of the Union; freedmen followed them from the same platform and spoke in the same strain. The ex-slaveholder showed that, though he had not entirely overcome race prejudice, he was glad to have the colored man become respectable by becoming educated and independent; the ex-slave, though claiming all the rights that belong to him as a man, generously excused the white man for not overcoming in a day the prejudices begotten by years of mastership and bondage, and said that a proper education of the black man will do more to solve the race question than any laws that can be devised.

Next I recall with gratitude the religious tone of the meetings. The opening prayer and the closing benediction were not mere matters of form; the singing of the doxology was frequently called for when the emotions of the crowd were raised to camp meeting height. When Indian pupils from Hampton sung "Wash me and I shall be whiter than snow" in the General Assembly Hall in the State Capitol, over a thousand voices of teachers joined in the chorus. During all the exercises to which I listened infidelity did not once dare to lift its head; and, though I was sorry that on the last day considerable prominence was accorded to Mgr. Capel, yet his remarks were of a very liberal, generous character as reported in the papers.

Another very hopeful feature of the meetings was the spirit of reform manifested. Miss Frances E. Willard's eloquent appeal to the teachers in behalf of temperance instruction was applauded again and again; so also were the enthusiastic words from Iowa and Kansas respecting prohibition in these States. One evening was given to the Utah problem; and Dr. Curry, agent of the Peabody Education Fund, in his address on "Citizenship and Education," in a brief but weighty sentence, condemned "German factions, Irish factions and secret political societies" in our national politics.

Another very interesting feature was the National Education Exposition, consisting of nine departments. Here could be seen the results of intellectual work from the slate work of the infant to the written examinations of the graduate; art work from the straight lines of the beginner to the crayons and oil paintings of the most advanced pupils; manual work from the mud pie of the kindergarten to the steam engines and telescope made by graduates of industrial schools. All things considered it is doubtful whether any of the six thousand teachers present could have made a much better investment of time and money than by coming to this meeting. The next meeting will be held at White Sulphur Springs, West Virginia, in 1885.

The National Educational Association is evidently a permanent institution, and therefore calls for prayer and co-operation on the part of those who are interested in the Christian education of the young, that its influence may always be on the side of truth and the God of all truth.

BANKING "ON THE SQUARE."

The United Presbyterian: Notwithstanding all the protestations of the members of the order, it is very remarkable how general and strong is the belief, even among those who have not been indoctrinated in opposition to the lodge, that Freemasonry interferes with the just administration of law. One of the daily papers of this city, in commenting upon the legal steps taken to secure an adjustment of the Penn Bank s affairs and the punishment of those who so shamefully robbed it, speaks of a general impression prevailing that, owing to the fact that so many connected with the institution are influential Masons, there will not be a full exposure of the dishonesty practiced and a proper infliction of penalty. These apprehensions may not be well grounded in this particular case, but that they exist and are uttered as noted, makes it clear that one ground of opposition to the "secret empire" is well founded.

There is real ground of fear that, "owing to the fact that so many connected with the Penn Bank are influential Masons, there will not be a full exposure of the dishonesty practiced and a proper infliction of penalty."

There is no doubt, we presume, of the fact that the Penn Bank was entirely under the control of Masons. A prominent officer of one of our best city banks remarked to the writer at the time the Penn Bank suspended, that it was "a Masonic concern throughout, and only Masons could obtain any favors from it."

The National Trust Company, which failed in this city a few years ago, and in connection with which so much rottenness and dishonesty were developed, was another institution controlled by Masons.

It is believed that many of the heaviest depositors in the Penn Bank were Masons. Possibly we may have some interesting disclosures when these bank affairs get into court. There is some comfort in the fact that our county judges, with perhaps a single exception, have no connection with the lamb-skin apron fraternity.

It is somewhat significant that the suspension of the Penn Bank was followed by a run on the Masonic Bank.

We suggest to these secular papers which are so ready to ask the question, when the president of a bank proves dishonest or a cashier absconds, "Of what Sabbath school was he superintendent?" that they may inquire betimes, To what secret order did he belong?—Evangelical Repository.

PRAYER OF "REV. SEPTIMUS JONES."

Grand Architect, bow down thine ear
And listen to thy servant's prayer;
An humble saint and worshiper
Bent at thine altar seeks thee there.

Majestic name, now, evermore
Grant us thy favor and thy love;
We enter at the only door
That ope's to our Grand Lodge above.

While batt'ling for thy truth and right
With sinners and demoniac powers,
Equip us with thy Spirit's might,
And victory surely will be ours.

With all thy saints we pray increase
Our faith and confidence in thee;
Bless thou our souls with heavenly peace,
And joy, and fervent piety.

O Lord, by day we preach thy word,
And gladly burn the oil by night,
That vilest sinners may be stirred
With churchly pilgrims to unite.

'Gainst many fashions, worldly ways.
We may not speak in accents bold,
Lest some their protest quick would raise
And shun the people of thy fold.

Thou saidst, O Lord, "We cannot serve
The righteous God and Mammon too,"
But thorough Masons, Lord, deserve
The happy priv'lege thus to do.

O Lord, thou saidst, "Swear not at all;"
Thy counsel wise we must revere,
But Mason's oaths we righteous call,
For men are only held through fear.

Thou saidst that all shall be revealed
That sinners secretly may do,
Yet Lord, somethings, we keep concealed
From angels, Christ, and cowans too,

O Lord, thy great Apostle Paul
Exhorts us evil things to shun;
To temple, banquet, glittering hall
Thy oath-bound servants nightly run.

Thy saints elect are clean the while
In sanctity and holy lives;
They may not knowingly despoil
Their brethren's sisters, mothers, wives.

Grand Builder of the Universe,
Our Father, may it ever please
Thy choicest blessings to disburse
To those advancing in degrees.

According to thy will, O Lord,
Thy servants never will refuse
To fraternize in full accord
With those who promptly pay their dues.

May all our enemies, O Lord,
And perjured villains of our clans
Soon meet a terrible reward
Inflicted by our righteous hands.

QUAKER BOY.

BUSINESS GAMBLING.

It is the fascination of business gambling that, apparently, it offers greater scope to brains than do the ordinary games of chance. Operations on 'change require, for any degree of success beyond occasional luck, knowledge of corporate transactions, the accumulation and co-ordination of other trustworthy information, and a nicety of judgment beyond the reach of any but the keenest business intellects. And here again, as in the following of gambling systems at Monaco, confidence and knowledge may be dangerous things. Nothing but unfair advantage wins steadily in selling "long" or selling "short" or dealing in "futures." Of course, stock exchanges and produce exchanges are useful adjuncts of honest commerce, and bankers and brokers are necessary to the operations of exchange. But, one year taken with another, the true interests of exchanges and bankers and brokers, like the interests of society in general, will be found to lie in the way of real trading. Fictitious trading demoralizes commerce with fictitious prices, and is the cause of extravagance, recklessness, and low business morality. When the gambling transactions exceed the honest investments more than twenty-fold, as some have estimated, it is impossible to have a sound condition of business. And when stocks suffer, as recently, a depreciation of over two thousand millions of dollars mainly because of gambling influences, stocks which are real property dissipate only less rapidly than those which were merely "water," and therefore disappear like vapor.

Perhaps the most culpable, because the most responsible, of the men who have stimulated the gambling mania are the bankers who supply the capital without which these transactions could not be carried through the Exchange under the guise of transfers of stock. These bankers know very well that the business would be regarded by them as immoral and unsound if the profits were not so captivating. Said one of them to a new firm of brokers whose account he was taking: "Whatever you do, don't 'lay down' on your bank;"—in other words: "When the day of disaster overtakes you, protect your financial partner from loss by 'laying down' on somebody else." Of greater significance is the fact that "conservative" bankers and brokers, who are eager to help others into the mazes of Wall Street, prefer to have their customers think it is a rule of the firm never to gamble on its own account.—"Topics of the Time," in the August Century.

The evil must be dealt with at its source—namely, the greed for gain, the willingness to get gain by illegitimate methods. It is high time that much stress was laid upon the danger that lies in the way of haste to be rich, and upon a certain kind of dishonor that attaches to getting gain without some inward sense of just desert. The value of this sense of desert cannot be too much exalted as a test of the true character of any financial success. It certainly does not declare itself where one buys a pound of tea and carries home a china teaset as a prize, or where one buys a bar of soap and secures a gold ring.

Business men often grow weary of the slow returns of the regular business, especially when they see the success of men in other lines, and they are often led to make outside ventures where the profits of single transactions far exceed their regular earnings for many months. Such ventures have laid the foundation of many substantial fortunes. They may easily be of such a character as not for a moment to be confounded with gambling. Nevertheless, every man, who is so minded, ought to examine himself very carefully. He should ask himself such questions as these: Am I setting my heart on getting rich? Am I imperiling my peace of mind or steadiness and strength of character? In view of the fact that in business circles suspicion always attaches to men who are known to engage in "outside speculations," am I endangering my busiuess credit? Am I putting in pawn the interest of others? Am I engaging in an enterprise where my knowledge is less exact and my skill less accurate than in my regular business, and am I, therefore, exposing myself to be deceived or cheated? Is it a transaction in which my conscience is entirely at rest, and in which I can accept success or failure without temptation of blurring moral sensibilities.

These questions asked and answered would throw unlooked for light on many doubtful situations. But whether this be so or not, and whether or not the distinctions drawu in this paper are correct, it is very certain that some distinctions of the general tenor are needed which the community will accept, which shall be taught to the young mcn, and by which the old shall be held to strict account.—Rcv. H. A. Stinson in the Independent.

THE DIVORCE QUESTION.

[Judge Noah Davis of New York, in the North Ameriran Review.]

All precedent shows that human life, and especially woman's life, is happier as a rule in countries where divorce is not lawful and not permitted than in those where it is most common and free. For divorce is an evil that always grows by what it feeds upon. It feeds upon the baser vices of our nature, and they propagate and increase as the demaud enlarges to meet an inordinate and devraved appetite. A striking illustration of this fact has just been disclosed by the discovery of a manufactory of forged divorces in the city of Brooklyn, from which it is said two hundred decrees have lately issued with the apparent formalities of judicial procedure; the parties obtaining them looking and caring for nothing but expeditiou, cheapness, and secrecy. Such a state of things could not exist, but for the appalling moral laxity bred by the frequency of divorces. Both physically and morally, men accommodate themselves to the rule and necessity of conditions. So, if the condition of life and law be such that the marriage tie may be easily disrupted; men speedily come to think of its disruption as a process of relief, proper and defensible. This fact speedily operates to change the harmonies of wedded life into discords; and conjugal jars, which otherwise might only be considered as new starting-points for closer and tenderer affiliations, are nursed into irreconcilable and fatal quarrels. But when the rule and necessity are the opposite, both husband and wife are taught by that condition to adhere to the true nature of marriage by turning discord out-of-doors and studying the conciliations due to mutual happiness. * * *

I refer to these cases to strengthen my position that the laws of procedure in actions for divorce ought to be changed.

First. So that no judgment could be entered until it appeared clearly that the suit had been actually pending at least six months after service of the process. This not only to prevent frauds, but to give the parties a breathing spell for possible reconciliation, and to prevent immediate and shameful re-marriages.

Second. In all cases the defendant should have the right to insist that the alleged paramour be brought in and made a party to the action, so that an unjust accusation could be met and confuted by both of the accused who are interested in maintaining innocence.

Third, and above all, inasmuch as society is deeply interested in all such actions, the State should be made a party so that it shall be able to prevent the wrongs that are inflicted upon the public, and upon children and innocent persons; and no judgment should be allowed until it appears that some lawful representative of the State has been served with process and has had opportunity to appear and resist the divorce. This mode of conserving the rights of society ought to be carefully secured, and over the question of the cost of securing such protection the courts should have adequate power. Now it often occurs that by such actions helploss children are bastardized or made homeless and thrown upon the public for support by the destruction of family relations, with no one to speak a word in their behalf or for the public. * * *

All who think upon the subject will agree that uniformity of the grounds of divorce ought to exist throughout all the States. This alone will prevent the incessant hegira from State to State of persons seeking to escape the bonds of matrimony, and that vast procession of evils that follows such efforts. It is a monstrous truth that a person can quit the State of his residence, and, leaving his wife and children behind, in a brief time obtain in the courts of another State a decree of divorce entirely valid in that State, but absolutely void in the courts of other States. His re-marriage is lawful there. It is felony elsewhere; and his guilt or innocence depends upon which side of an imaginary State line he happens to stand. This would be less important if the status of his wife aud children, past, present, and future, were not to be seriously affected by the decree. Let me illustrate.

A is married in New York, where he has resided for years, and has a family aud is the owner of real and other estate. He desires divorce and goes to Indiana, where that thing is cheap and easy. Upon complying with some local rule, and with no actual notice to his wife, he gets a decree of divorce, and presently is married in that State to another wife who brings him other children. He again acquires new estates; but, tiring of his second wife, he deserts her and goes to California, where in a brief space he is again divorced, and then marries again, forming a new family and acquiring new real and personal estates. In a few years his fickle taste changes again, and he returns to New York, where he finds his first wife has obtained a valid divorce for his adulterous marriage in Indiana, which sets her free and forbids his marrying again during her lifetime. He then slips into an Eastern State, takes a residence, acquires real property there, aud after a period gets judicially freed from his California bonds. He returns to New York, takes some uew affinity, crosses the New Jersey line, and in an hour is back in New York, enjoying so much of his estate as the courts have not adjudged to his first wife, and gives new children to the world. At length his Master takes him. He dies intestate. Now, what is the legal status and the condition of the various citizens he has given to our common country? And what can the States of their birth or domicile do for them?

A few words will show how difficult and important these questions are. The first wife's children are doubtless legitimate and heirs to his estate everywhere. The Indiana wife's children are legitimate there, but probably illegitimate everywhere else. The California children are legitimate there and in New York (that marriage having taken place after his first wife had obtained her divorce), but illegitimate in Indiana and elsewhere, while the second crop of New Yorkers are legitimate in the Eastern States and New York, and illegitimate in Indiana and California. There is real and personal property in each of these States. There are four widows, each entitled to dower and distribution somewhere, and to some extent, and a large number of surely innocent children, whose legitimacy and property are at stake. All these legal embarrassments spring from want of uniformity of laws, on a subject which should admit of no more diversity than the question of citizenship itself.

The only direct and effective way is to authorize the establishment of uniformity by the only power that can have universality of jurisdiction. It needs but two words added to the fourth subdivision of section 8 of the Constitution of the United States, so that it shall read: "Congress shall have power to establish a uniform rule of naturalization, and uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies and divorce throughout the United States" But we are told that this would produce "centralization," whatever that may mean, and ought not to be done. But it is one of the very subjects on which centralization ought to exist; because, while it would leave the State courts free to act in their respective spheres, Congress could so define the grounds of divorce and the jurisdiction of the subject that judgments would be universally binding and uniform; and that was one of the things in contemplation in framing the Constitution. That would free us from the wickedness and crimes which now shame our administration of laws; and would elevate divorce from a system of strategic deceptions and frauds, disgraceful to savages, to one of law and order. No questions of illegitimacy could arise, and citizens of the several States having the same father or mother, if legitimate at home, would be legitimate everywhere.

AN ENGLISH CATHOLIC SECEDER.

A REMARKABLE LETTER.

From the Grimsby, England, Weekly Express, sent us by the kindness of Rev. John Boyes of that city, is taken the following letter, which will strike every reader with its clearness, force, and fervent spirit:

There appears to be a great fuss about Cardinal MacCabe's letter on Freemasonry. I never belonged to a Freemasonic or any other secret society, so I cannot speak of them from practical experience, but I remember reading some years ago in a newspaper—I think the Weekly Register—a letter from a gentleman, who had been a Freemason. It was so interesting that I copied the greater portion of it. He evidently knew what he was writing about, so I enclose the copy. R. B. H.

"For the sole purpose of showing that I speak with exact knowledge of what is here asserted, I beg to add that I have been duly initiated, passed, and raised to the Master's degree in the Masonic lodge, and have taken my seat in the East as Deputy-Grand Master of a Grand Lodge; that I have taken all the degrees of the Royal Arch Chapter, and of the Council, and have done duty as a regular Knight Templar in the Masonic encampment. Fond of antiquarian research, I mastered the whole of Masonic instruction, whether exoteric or esoteric. Having, by the mercy of Almighty God, been received into the Catholic church, I, of course, dissolved all further connection with the order. Highly do I respect and love many who remain therein, and hope they may be induced to view its instructions from the standpoint the church presents. * * * * * The benevolence inculcated by lodges, although nominally of a general character, is practically limited to the members of the lodge and their families, or, at any rate, to the order alone. It does not go into the highways and scenes of misery, hunting up the poor and sick, the weary, and those who are in trouble. Before its charity can be fraternally extended, the recipient must be found worthy only by means of cabalistic signs and words. The highest teachings of Masonry are not known to perhaps more than one in fifty thousand Masons. What is really good is no secret, for there is not one single truth in Masonry which Christianity has not brought to light before the whole world. And there is reason to suspect that what good remains is of modern origin. * * * Long as I have been a Mason, and great as has been my intercourse with the most learned, I can safely say it is not practically a teacher of any science whatever. The utmost ever taught is a simple exhortation to learn the liberal arts and sciences. Its political and infidel influences, and its perversion on the Continent to the worst of motives, the vilest conduct, and open opposition to truth, to charity, and religion are of modern date. All that I here pretend to do is to show that Masonry is of no utility generally; because if it be beneficial its lessons are restricted; because candidates must be actually competent before they are received, and their learning is nil; because its benevolence is restricted: because the various rites do not agree; because it fails in noble and great acts of benevolence; that Masonry in relying on human tradition is led into error; that its traditions are untrue; that it teaches no science; that its fusion with the enemies of truth on the Continent is the work of the Prince of the Power of the Air in carrying out in secrecy his great popular movements in the liberty of perdition known as the progress of the age. Admitting it in its very best aspect to be useless at the present day, then why apologize for it? Does not Christianity teach all its truths and extend its benevolence to every creature? Seeing that its traditions are vain, when the light of the gospel has illumined all except those who, having eyes and ears, will neither see nor hear, of what use is an apology? But when the evil one has changed it into an open and direct engine for the future purposes of Anti-Christ, what Catholic dare any further apologize therefor, or remain any longer in connection therewith? LODGE REVENGE.

THE CONSPIRACY AGAINST POMEROY UNRAVELLED.

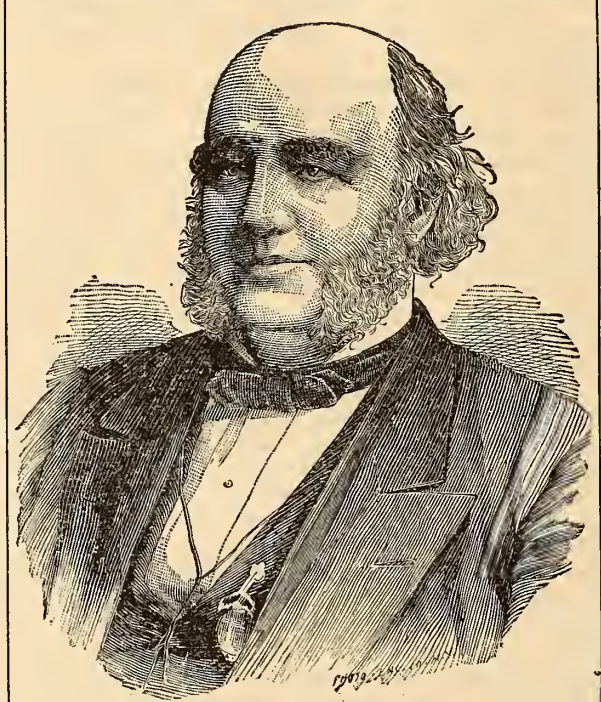
"For ever the truth comes uppermost
And ever is justice done."

In January, 1873, the Kansas legislature, met at Topeka, was engaged in the important business of electing a Senator for the term beginning March 4th of that year. Hon. Samuel C. Pomeroy, a pioneer of the State, to whom Kansas was indebted more than to any other man, had served for two terms, and was a candidate for re-election. In May, 1869, Mr. Pomeroy, being in Chicago on business, was asked to attend and speak at the National Anti-masonic Convention then being held in lower Farwell Hall. Although the daily press was teeming with abusive and insulting reports of that meeting, Mr. Pomeroy bravely accepted the invitation and spoke. The lodge marked him from that hour and let slip no opportunity for revenge. Within two weeks the Leavenworth Herald declared that in that speech Pomeroy had signed his political death-warrant; he was soon burnt in effigy, and all his life-long labors as an Abolitionist and his sacrifices for Kansas in her early struggles were forgotten.

A large majority was in favor of returning Mr. Pomeroy to the Senate, and for days before the election, as said the St. Louis Republican at the time, "it became evident that there was but one possible method of beating Pomeroy, and that was to set a trap for him." A number of Freemasons concocted a diabolical plot to accuse him of bribery just as the vote was to be taken, and amid the confusion to resist an adjournment of the legislature and force an immediate vote. The legislature met January 29th and was about to proceed to ballot when A. M. York, of Montgomery county, arose and was granted the floor on a question of privilege. He drew from his pocket an envelope full of bank notes, and asked the Speaker to count them. With pale face and glittering eye and demon heart, York then told his story, that he had received the $7,000 from Pomeroy in the latter's room at the Tefft House in payment for his vote, asking that the money be used to defray the prosecution of S. C. Pomeroy for bribery and corruption, and swearing by the "Almighty Ruler of the Universe" that "every word I have spoken is God's truth." The plot succeeded in the excitement of the hour, and Pomeroy was beaten in the forced vote.

The investigation of the legislature, reported March 6th, failed to prove anything against Mr. Pomeroy, who hastened to Washington and asked a committee of inquiry, to be largely composed of political opponents, that there might be the severest scrutiny. On the report of that committee he was acquitted. The investigations brought out these facts:

1. That the four principal conspirators: York; B. F. Simpson, State Attorney Goneral; J. C. Horton, agent of the Kansas Pacific railroad; and W. A. Johnson, were Freemasons, and that their whole work was done under cover of Masonic signs.



2. That Mr. Pomeroy had some time before promised to assist a friend, Mr. Page, in starting a bank in Independence, Kansas. The money was expected by express, but being delayed, Page could not wait at Topeka, but arranged with Mr. Pomeroy to send it by A. M. York, a member of the State Senate. York called and got the money, paid it over to Page after the conspirators had accomplished their hellish plot, and Page returned it in due time to Mr. Pomeroy.

These facts have been public for years, and most of them have appeared in the Cynosure. We find, too, that an interview between York and Mr. Pomeroy was obtained only after considerable effort, the lodge conspirators finally getting a man from Kansas City, in whom they believed Mr. Pomeroy had confidence, to open the way. But the full particulars of all this infamous and devilish villainy have not been brought to light until published in the American, June 12th. It was known that the $7,000 flourished by York in the faces of the Legislature had never been called for, and it is reported to be still in the hands of the State Treasurer. Who furnished York that money, so that he could give color to the lie, that he swore before God was truth, that Mr. Pomeroy had bribed him for that amount? The confusion of the Legislature must have approached demoralization to give credit to the lie that a $7,000 bribe was needed in such a case, since a majority was already assured. This important fact is brought out in the following letter:

ST. LOUIS, May 22d, 1884.

E. D. BAILEY, ESQ.:

DEAR SIR:—Yours of the 20th inst. received. In reply to your inquiries will say: In June or July of 1880, while engaged writing for Gen. John McDonald his "Secrets of the Great Whisky Ring," I met Belford of the firm of Belford, Clark & Co., book publishers of Chicago. Belford, whose first name I have forgotten, came to St. Louis for the purpose of contracting with McDonald for the publication of his book. At this time I became acquainted with Belford, who, learning that I had formerly been a resident of Kansas, informed me that he also had lived in Kansas, or at least had acted as financial agent for the Kansas Pacific R. R. Co. He asked me if I remembered the circumstances of the defeat of Pomeroy for the United States Senate, and I answering in the affirmative, he explained how he had contributed to bring about that result. He told me that the Kansas Pacific people were anxious to have him, Pomeroy, defeated, and that in pursuance of the R. R. Co's instructions, he took $7,000.00 which the Co. gave him for the purpose, and placed this money in York's hands under an arrangement that York should rise in the legislature at the proper time and declare that the $7,000.00 had been given him by Pomeroy as a corruption fund to secure certain votes, etc. I told Belford at the time that Senator Pomeroy was entitled to this information, and that if ever I met him, Pomeroy, I should certainly relate to him what he, Belford, had told me. I am not certain, but my impression is that Gen. McDonald was present at this conversation, and made some remarks about it. Indeed, I think the conversation took place in Gen. McDonald's room in the Lindell hotel. You might see McDonald, who is now in your city, and ascertain whether or not my impressions are correct. You are at liberty to show him this letter.

I wrote to Senator Pomeroy, addressing him at Atchison, the next day after the conversation above described took place, but for some reason the letter was returned to me through the dead letter office.

You may rely upon me to repeat the facts, as I have given them, at any time or under any circumstances, and please convey to Senator Pomeroy these assurances. Yours truly, J. W. BUEL.

The American received also a letter from Belford, who in 1873 claimed to be an agent of the Kansas Pacific railway:

CHICAGO, May 27th, 1884.

E. D. BAILEY ESQ.:

DEAR SIR:—* * * The Kansas Pacific R. R. never gave me any money to give Mr. York to defeat Mr. Pomeroy; and for that matter, the railroad company never gave me any money whatever for political purposes.

I should think from the investigation made at the time, that the Kansas Pacific Railroad Co., was very anxious to have Senator Pomeroy elected rather than defeated.

I had no connection whatever, in any sense, with Mr. York, Senator Pomeroy, or Senator Ingalls at the time, nor since then. Yours truly, A. BELFORD.

This denial led to further inquiry and correspondence which the American reports:

We learned that Mr. Belford's claim that the Kansas Pacific was friendly to Mr. Pomeroy was untrue, for they were anxious for his defeat. The fact was developed under oath that J. C. Horton, the agent of the Kansas Pacific, was one of the original conspirators.

If Mr. Belford would mislead us in one point he might in another. Accordingly we called upon Gen. McDonald, now in the city, to whom Mr. Buel refers in his letter. After reading the letters to him, we asked:

"Were you present at the time Mr. Buel mentions?"

"I was there and heard the conversation," said the General.

"Are the facts as Mr. Buel describes them?"

"They are, in all respects. We were talking over the general subject of Pomeroy's defeat, and Mr. Belford stated the facts which Mr. Buel gives."

"Were the facts new to you?"

"They were, wholly so."

"Was there anything in Mr. Belford's talk that led you to suspect he was not telling the truth?"

"Nothing whatever. He gave the facts in a manner that seemed reasonable, and I had no reason to suspect that they were not as he represented."

"Were you present at the time of Pomeroy's defeat?"

"I was. That was when I was at the head of administration affairs in the Southwest, and I was greatly interested. I supposed up to the time the legislature met that Pomeroy would be elected. When York sprung that trap, I rushed over to Pomeroy's hotel to get him to come over and denounce York, but he thought his friends would not allow a vote to be taken without investigating York's charge. The conspirators forced their plans through so quick that nothing could be done."

"Do you think any money was used to secure Pomeroy's election?"

"Not a cent. There was no need of using money. He had a clear, well assured majority. I was in a position to know if any money had been used, and I know there was none."

"Do you think Belford lied to Buel in St. Louis, or is he misrepresenting now?"

"I cannot say. I always supposed he told the truth then, for it seemed to tally with the known facts."

Not wishing so important testimony to rest wholly on an oral interview, we subsequently addressed a note to Gen. McDonald, and received the following reply:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 5th, 1884.

MR. E. D. BAILEY:

DEAR SIR:—I have just received your letter inquiring of me if I was present in St. Louis, and heard the conversation with Mr. Belford, as contained in the letter of J. W. Buel, etc.

I reply that I was present, and that the conversation as written by Buel is precisely as I understood it, in fact the conversation was held in my own room, and I remember distinctly every fact stated in Buel's letter. We still had more elaborate conversation on the subject, and I know most of the facts myself. I know that Horton of Lawrence, was agent of the Kansas Pacific Railroad, and was one of the conspirators with York, and all knew of the opposition of that Road, and it is too late now to pretend otherwise. I am, yours truly,

JOHN MCDONALD.

It seems that Senator Pomeroy had received a few weeks before this, as if by special providence, a letter from a prominent Kansas gentleman, a wholesale merchant whose word is above reproach, and who writes unsolicited as follows:

ST. JOSEPH, MO., March 17th, 1884.

HON. S. C. POMEROY:

MY DEAR SIR:—I notice in the Christian Statesman that the National convention of those opposed to secret societies have nominated you as their candidate for the Presidency. I am glad of this—perhaps you do not know how much you have suffered on account of your opposition to secret societies. When Ingalls was first elected U.S. Senator a banquet was given him at Leavenworth, and Hon. Newton Robinson, State Senator from Emporia, Kan., came along with other guests and came to see me at the store. As I was well acqnainted with him, and as I knew him to be a Freemason I thought I would pump him. I asked him if your speech in Chicago at the Anti-Secret-Society convention had any connection with your defeat. He answered, Of course it did. I then asked if your defeat had been determined on in the Masonic lodge. He replied, You do not expect me to tell you? I then asked him, Were the four persons who planned and effected your defeat all Masons? He instantly replied, Nobody else could have been trusted. I might state further that the board of trade of Leavenworth sent me to Topeka the day before the vote was taken to try to get our whole delegation to vote solid for you and thus secure your election first ballot, but I was unable to do so, and S. F. Burdette, a leading Odd-fellow, came to me and said: "Briggs, you may as well go home if that is your only errand for Pomeroy will be defeated. There is a trap laid for him that an angel from heaven could not pass without falling."

I mentioned this startling announcement to Dr. Cornelius A. Logan, Grand Master of Odd-fellows for the United States, and he said: "They tell me the same thing but I am entirely ignorant of what it is or how it is to be accomplished."

I had forgotten the matter until I saw the notice referred to above and I thought perhaps you did not know the above and if not, I thought you ought to know. With kind wishes and hope for the success of the right, I am, yours truly, J. C. BRIGGS.

An interview with Senator Pomeroy substantiates the evidence of the letters:

Wishing to know what Senator Pomeroy himself would say we interviewed him also. Showing him Buel's and Belford's letters we inquired what he thought of the facts Buel gives.

"It is all news to me," said he. "But it accounts for one fact which has always been a mystery to me. You see, I agreed to help a man by the name of Page in starting a bank. I promised to loan him $7,000.00. (Here the Senator explained the method of starting banks and said that he helped others in the same way.) Page came to Topeka for the money on the day appointed, but it had not arrived. He waited as long as he could and then told me to forward the money by York, when he came home Saturday. So when York came for it I let him have it. Now that $7,000.00 seemed to do duty in two places, for York turned it over to the State as money obtained for bribery and Page, the banker, gave me credit for it and subscquently returned it. It would now seem that the Kansas Pacific furnished the $7,000.00 which York flourished before the legislature."

"Was the Kansas Pacific opposed to you?" we inquired.

"O yes. They wanted a charter from Congress to run a line in a South-westerly direction. They were already chartered to run to Denver and I claimed that was enough, especially as the Atchison, Topeka, and Santa Fe road had obtained a charter in that direction. This among other things, made the road oppose me."

"Gen. McDonald says he came to see you at your ho tel, when York disclosed the conspiracy, is that so?" we inquired.

"Yes, he came on the run to my hotel, and said very excitedly, 'Pomeroy, those Freemason fellows are denouncing you, come over and denounce them,' or something of that kind, I can't repeat his words."

"Did he say the Freemasons were doing it?"

"Yes, he did. I did not think much about his words till afterwards, but he spoke of them as Freemasons."

"Were the conspirators Freemasons?"

"O yes. Everybody knew that."

"What do you think of Belford's denial?"

"Why, I don't see how he could help but evade it someway. A man that would do such a thing would have to cover his tracks."

"Did you know Belford?"

"No. But I knew J. C. Horton as the agent of the Kansas Pacific, and it was clearly proved by York's testimony that he was one of the conspirators."—American.

Additional evidence of these facts is found in the statement of Mrs. McDonald, who well remembers that her husband told her of Belford's story at the time; in the testimony of a member of the Kansas legislature in 1861 and 1867, who called on Senator Pomeroy on the evening before York's explosion in the Legislature; and in that of a Mason who lately told Pres. C. A. Blanchard that he knew of the conspiracy, knew it was hatched in the lodge and told Mr. Pomeroy not to permit an interview with York for "if he did he was ruined."

Such is the overwhelming evidence of this foul and desperate intrigue to destroy a great and good man whose honest and unquestioning love for the truth has made him an object of the rankling and savage hate of the lodge.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

SAMUEL C. POMEROY,

OF KANSAS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,

OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

FOR THE THIRD PLANK.

A corruption of morals usually follows a profanation of the Sabbath.—Blackstone.

There is no freedom without religion; no religion without worship, and no worship without the Sabbath.—Count Montalembert.

Give the world half of Sunday and you will find that religion has no strong hold on the other half.—Sir Walter Scott.

The Sabbath, as a political institution, is of inestimable value, independently of its claim to divine authority.—Adam Smith.

Sunday is a day of account, and a candid account every seventh day is the best preparation for the great day of account.—Lord Kames.

The more faithfully I apply myself to the duties of the Lord's day, the more happy and successful is my business during the week.—Sir Matthew Hale.

Where there is no Christian Sabbath there is no Christian morality; and without this, free institutions cannot long be sustained.—Justice McLean.

The longer I live the more highly do I esteem the Christian Sabbath, and the more grateful do I feel toward those who impress its importance on the community.—Daniel Webster.

If Sunday had not been observed as a day of rest during the last three centuries, I have not the smallest doubt that we should have been at this moment a poorer and less civilized people than we are.—Lord Macaulay.

The Congress of the United States has again done violence to the moral sense of the country by continuing its sessions through a considerable part of the Holy Sabbath. Both houses continued in session through Saturday night, the 5th inst., and until seven o'clock on the morning of Sabbath, the 6th. They took several recesses during the day, but practically they might as well have been in session continuously up till after midnight, when they adjourned until ten o'clock on Monday morning.

The members who had any thought about the matter probably justified their sitting on the Sabbath on the ground of necessity. During the proceedings in the Senate, Mr. Hoar, of Massachusetts, asked unanimous consent to take up a private bill. Senator Cockrell, of Missouri, objected, saying, "We are simply in session on the Holy Sabbath day to transact unavoidable business, and I shall object to the transaction of any other business." Mr. Hoar promptly admitted the force of Mr. Cockrell's remark, and withdrew his request. These Senators and others, however, could not justify their conduct on the ground here indicated. The business which was spoken of was "unavoidable," only because of a resolution which had been adopted to adjourn finally on Monday. That resolution need not have been adopted, or if adopted, it could have been rescinded. As a matter of fact, it was rescinded on Monday, and the session was on motion prolonged for two hours beyond the time that had previously been fixed.

The truth is, that this breach of God's holy law was utterly inexcusable. The Sabbath was wantonly trampled upon by the representatives of the people, and the nation is guilty before God.—Christian Instructor, July 17.

SEASIDE MEETINGS.

Ocean Grove, N. J., July 28th, 1884.

The National Temperance Society has just closed five days meeting, Mr. J. N. Stearns, the efficient manager, having charge. This Society commenced some eighteen years ago as a small publication house in New York, and during that time has issued over 1,200 publications of all sorts and sizes. Besides a weekly paper, they print and send out millions of tracts over the land every year. This Society has undertaken a work among the freedmen. Most interesting results are being developed in this field. Their effort promises great good to the cause of temperance, as well as to the freedmen.

Rev. Mr. Mead, who has been engaged in this work during the past year, and whose labors are bearing fruit, was present; also a representative of the colored people, Rev. Mr. Price, president of Zion Wesley Institute, Saulsbury, N. C. Mr. Price is a very black man, and demonstrated that black men are capable of superior mental culture. He made a profound impression on the thousands who listened attentively to his addresses. He has enjoyed the benefit of travel, having spent a year in Europe among the English, with whom he is very friendly. In all his addresses he emphasized the importance of the elevation of the colored ministry in the South. No one, he said, had more influence over them than the preachers. If we would elevate the negro we must build up the home. He spoke sadly of the negroes being in new homes; that hitherto they had no homes they could call their own, hence could not control their families. In twenty years they have nearly doubled in number. Intemperance, he said, was crippling the education of their children. Two millions of them belong to some church. He thinks it will take a long time for the negroes to get over the wounds to their souls, having been taught so long that vice was virtue, and virtue vice.

Rev. Mr. Mead, who labored among them, said the great question of the day in cities is, how to reach the masses. Here were eight millions of colored people whose curse was the dram-shop. Many of them would be paupers if we did not dry up the distilleries. During the year he had addressed 140,000 of them on temperance, and they heard him gladly. He circulated tracts and papers among them; and with five dollars he could send a tract to two thousand persons. He told an effecting anecdote about a letter he wrote after he came home. Knowing the pleasure it gave them to receive letters, he sat down and wrote to Perseverance Thomas, whose name he had gotten somewhere. He did not know whether Perseverance was a man or a woman. He described his own comfortable home and surroundings, and closed by saying he hoped they would enjoy the same blessings; addressed and sent it on its mission. A few weeks after an answer came, poorly written. It commenced: "Ise so glad to git dat lettah from you. Ise ben lookin' for it, and ben to de postoffice every day for seventeen years. Ise so thankful to git it befo I die. Why did yer not write sooner?" He was an old man ninety years of age. It is not surprising that some watched and waited long to hear from loved ones sold far away, and from whom they never heard by letter or otherwise.

Rev. Dr. Poulsen, of Maryland, a gifted speaker, exhorted ministers to preach on, and the W. C. T. U. to continue the crusade, and all workers to seek the overthrow of the rum power. He recognized the progress the cause was making; that good men were abstaining from drinks; honorable men were giving up the traffic; secular papers were ready to give news; politicians were obsequeous to workers, and the cry for high license was the flag of truce. He wanted no license; he demanded prohibition, and we will secure it as best we can. We want our principles concentrated on the men for whom we vote; this will give us temperance laws and officers. He said, Do not let men blind you by saying prohibition is unconstitutional. It was unconstitutional for Lincoln to sign the emancipation proclamation, but he did it and a nation rejoices.

Rev. Mr. Purdy, M.D., of Pennsylvania, gave a learned and able exposition of the law of heredity, showing with plates the effects of alcohol on the liver, brain and nerve centers. During eight years' practice he has not used liquors; and in three hundred cases of fever he did not use it or lose a case. He is making this a specialty, and it is to be hoped he will be a means of convincing physicians that the subject is worthy of their attention, and that alcoholics are unnecessary in practice.

Rev. Mr. Searles, chaplain of Auburn State Prison, New York, gave statistics and facts connected with prison life. He has no love for the liquor business. His father, a college-bred man, and a brother, fill drunkards' graves. He has been in his work twelve years, and is well fitted for it. He lays most of the crime to liquor, and says it is his experience that it is the cultured and wealthy, rather than the honest poor, who get into prison. He spoke of idleness, licentiousness and intemperance as the leading causes of vice, and that we must do more to dignify labor. He narrated experiences with prisoners, which made men and women weep.

The Citizenship of the Future, was the subject of Rev. Mr. Lawson's address. It was clear and logical, but want of space forbids more than a glance at those excellent addresses. He predicted the citizenship of to-morrow would give us clean men; that the power of the press was doing more to trim the people up than almost any other thing. He referred to a leading Democratic editor in New York who left the publication of his paper because he did not like Cleveland. He censured the party of moral ideas for being afraid to say one solitary word in regard to that evil that is cursing the home.

Mr. George Bain delivered his popular lecture, Boys and Girls, Naughty and Nice. The vast auditorium was crowded to its utmost to hear this favorite speaker. Fully six thousand upturned faces drank in his useful lessons, replete with wisdom's words. His lecture fairly sparkled with gems of wit and poetry. It had withal the ring of of one terribly in earnest in saving souls.

John B. Finch, lately made Grand Worthy Chief Templar, did not fulfill his engagement to speak at the appointed time, being at the Pittsburgh Convention, so did not speak until Saturday, causing confusion and annoyance to the manager. His lecture was one of the ablest delivered during the meetings. He is a lawyer, and has studied the legal side of this question, and is fully able to grapple with the great subject of prohibition. It will not raise him in the estimation of your readers or of your correspondent that he has such a big handle to his name. It it suggestive of secret rings and lodges, which should be utterly discountenanced in this grand movement for humanity. The Lord whom temperance workers profess to serve, said, "In secret have I said nothing;" so should his followers come out from those things which engender strife. The riots to which the speaker referred in his lecture as outgrowths of intemperance, it must be remembered were instigated and concocted in lodges. As a whole, the Convention was a grand success. The prohibition songs rendered by the Silver Lake Quartette enlivened all, and doubtless some were sung into the prohibition army. Of the services of the closing day I cannot speak, as I was not present.

MASONRY TRACED.

SCHUYLER'S LAKE, N. Y.

The interest of the averagc Mason and his sympathizer in the sale of Anti-masonic literature is evinced by his efforts to discredit it, but for the impartial observer there exists in every community abundant evidence to verify it, and falsify their denunciations. I am led to this remark by my own observation at this point, and will cite several instances which may serve to refute certain erroneous impressions among the people.

They say that Masonry has been materially changed since the days of Morgan, and divested of its murderous character; but the minds of a number of people in this vicinity were recently disabused of this illusion by the public threat of a member of the Schuyler's Lake Lodge to send a death warrant after any one who dare to divulge Masonry—a menace that was intended as a bridle on free speech, and as such is serving its purpose.

It is believed by many that Good Templarism is wholly distinct from Masonry, but is this consistent with the facts? There are meetings at the present time in the same hall in Cooperstown on alternate nights, Masons, Odd-fellows, Grand Army and Good Templars. Is not this suggestive of the closest affinity and a similarity of principles? Masonry, the parent society, is temporarily meeting with the others to permit repairs at its usual place of assemblage; but for the time being can this happy family of secretists be surpassed for number and variety of membership in any part of the country? Two are professedly associations for the promotion of benevolence, one of comradship, and one of reform. Here is a quadruple veil, but can there be a doubt that the same skeleton is concealed behind them all—a jack in the box with changing colors. "Birds of a feather flock together."

There is nothing that would more effectually expose their brutalizing tendencies, and excite popular interest with greater force, than a narrative by Rev. D. P. Rathbun of his experiences as an Anti-masonic lecturer, giving in detail the indignities to which he has been subjected, and the numerous attempts which have been made on his life. This would prove an invaluable aid in preparing people for political action in the approaching Presidential campaign. B. TUNNICLIFF.

PITH AND POINT.

ANOTHER SKELETON PRESERVED FROM CREMATION.

Some years ago in Jackson, Pa., a case much like the recent one in Ind., occurred. An upper story lodge room, used jointly by Masons and Odd-fellows, took fire and the stuff was tumbled out pell-mell. Down came the coffin and contents. Now it came to pass that one O. F., who limped to the tune of one, two, picked up the corpse, and putting it under his long frock, went tilting away on double quick in the light of the fire, to the infinite amusement of the spectators. It would have been horrid to have had that precious relic of the order cremated.

Lies will not cover up coffins and corpses even though uttered by O. Fs.—N. C.

INVEST A DOLLAR.

As I read that offer of the Cynosure for four copies until after election is over, the thought struck me quite forcibly that it was an excellent opportunity for every one that loves what is for the welfare of the church and government to invest at least $1. Consequently I suggested to the first reader of the Cynosure I met, that he do as I was minded to, i. e., send you $1 with four names and addresses, and see the good results. I see clearly that unless there is a very speedy awakening on this all-important subject we will find our government turned over into the hands of those that professed an unconditional surrender at the close of the late war;which has never seemed to me a surrender, because of the way it was brought about, i. e., on the line of that oath to protect each other at all hazards, murder and treason not excepted.—M. L. WORCESTER, Kingston, Ill.

MORE CALLS LIKE THIS WANTED.

Can you send a lecturer here? I think that the cause of anti-secrecy would prosper well in this community. I have been informed on this subject for some time, and have one of Edmond Ronayne's books called "Mah-hah-bone." I have talked with several here who are church members, and they were totally ignorant on the subject. I gave them some tracts and I am satisfied that they would strongly oppose it if they fully understood its character and principles. I can get a school-house here to lecture in. It is also used for a church and I don't think there are more than one or two members out of about fifty that are Masons. I am not a Christian, but I consider it my duty to oppose anything that interferes with free government and rejects Christ. Can you send a lecturer?—GEORGE HASKINS, Sechorn Station, Ill.

FIRST SEEK THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND HIS RIGHTEOUSNESS.

In order to have the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ it is necessary to obey this commandment the very first thing we do; if we never have done this we are not Christians. We may think we are Christians and yet be deluded, for Satan is to "appear to us as an angel of light." We may even "have a zeal of God but not according to knowledge," or according to that "wisdom which is from above, that is first pure." In order to glorify God in the salvation of our own souls and that of our neighbors, we must get started right.

"First, seek the kingdom of God." Give up all; repent of all sin; give God the whole heart; be converted and regenerated for Jesus' sake. All this is at the beginning of the way. All preachers that persuade sinners into any other are false prophets; may God deliver the sheep of his pasture from wolves in sheep's clothing, and from every false way. May we be zealously effected with that fire of love upon the altar of our hearts, for all the Lord's works, ways, and people, that is kindled from heaven's own altar. "There is a way that seemeth right to a man, but the end thereof is death." Let the ministers of Christ "quit themselves like men," and not have a man-fearing or man-pleasing spirit. Let them submit themselves unto the righteousness of God, then they will not shun to declare the whole council of God, and will do their duty in exposing all the dark ways of the devil, Freemasonry not excepted, for if this switch is not molested it will switch the whole church away from God. —CYRUS SMITH.

A NEW EMANCIPATION.

We often rejoice that slavery is done away, and we cannot rejoice too much or be too thankful for the blessing; but there is a large class of slaves now in our very midst at the North, who need to be emancipated. Not alone for their own sake, but for the sake of society at large. This slavery is described below, and let each one ask, "Is it I?"

"They are slaves who will not choose
Hatred, scorning, and abuse,
Rather than in silence shrink
From the truth they needs must think.

"They are slaves who fear to speak
For the fallen, and the weak;
They are slaves who dare not be
In the right with two or three."

LITERATURE.

ISRAEL AND THE CHURCH. By James H. Brookes. 199 pages. Price, cloth, 75cts. Charles B. Cox, St. Louis, Mo.

Dr. Brookes in this little volume endeavors to throw some light gathered especially from the Word of God upon the difficult problem of the future condition of the children of Israel, the tribes that have been scattered and lost to history, or yet remaining to be strangers, homeless, oppressed, despised among the nations of the earth. The opening chapters go to show the distinctions between the ancient Israel and the Christian church, from their distinctive calling, their use of warlike arms, their laws of social intercourse, their mode of worship, their tithing, etc. The author then shows from the evidences in the Old Testament and the New in detail that the testimony of the Holy Spirit is that the tribes will be gathered again in their own land, and that their only hope as well as for the Gentile believer is in the second coming of the Lord.

The North American Review for August contains an article by Justice James V. Campbell on "The Encroachments of Capital." Richard A. Proctor treats of "The Origin of Comets," and succeeds in presenting that difficult subject in a light so clear that persons who have little or no acquaintance with astronomy can follow his argument. "Are we a Nation of Rascals?" is the startling title of an article by John F. Hume, who shows that States, counties and municipalities in the United States have already formally repudiated, or defaulted in the payment of interest on, an amount of bonds and other obligations equal to the sum of the national debt. Judge Edward C. Loring finds a "Drift toward Centralization" in the recent judgment of the United States Supreme Court on the power of the Federal Government to issue paper money, and in the opinion of the minority of the same court rendered in the suit of the Arlington property. Julian Hawthorne writes of "The American Element in Fiction," and there is a symposium on "Prohibition and Persuasion," by Neal Dow and Dr. Dio Lewis. Mr. Dow's argument for prohibition is clear, straight-forward and manly, in happy contrast with the illogical reasoning of Dio Lewis who continues to harp on the distinction between vice and crime until he gives the impression that he cares more for a pet notion than for temperance reform.

Vick's Monthly for August flames like a midday sun with a chromo of Bignonia Radicans. The Adirondack region is pictured with pen and pencil. The practical reader will find interesting articles on peas and strawberries.

Messrs. R. Hoe & Co., the well-known manufacturers of printing presses and material, have presented to the papers of the country a fine lithograph, the work of Root & Tinker of New York, containing fine portraits of eleven representative London journalists, from John Walter of the Times to George Augustus Sala of the Telegraph. The work of the engravers is well done, and the whole forms an attractive gallery of journalists.

The Millennial Text Book. Part II. is a small pamphlet of 166 pages by S. H. Pierce of the National Soldier's Home near Milwaukee, Wis., which is an endeavor to explain prophecy by the movements of our day, among which the secret lodge has its share, and is severely condemned. The author's conclusions are not always clear, but some of his readers approve them, as Benjamin Borton of West Unity, O., writes us: "I have read six or more of his pamphlets with great interest and believe that he must have had Divine assistance—as he professes to have. He explains much of the mysterious prophecies of the Bible. He speaks of sectarianism plainly."

—Keep it before the people that it costs as much to kill one Indian in war as it does to educate two thousand Indian youths and make them self-supporting, peaceable citizens.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON VII.—August 17, 1884.—Absalom's Death.—2 Sam. 18: 24-33.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Whoso curseth father or mother, let him die the death.—Mark 7: 10.

"Cometh with good tidings." Knowing Ahimaaz to be a brave man, David concluded that he would not be the first to run in a defeat; hence he must be a bearer of news of victory.—Hanna. He loves me well, and therefore would not afflict me with evil tidings.—Pool. The king rightly judged that Joab would not choose a distinguished messenger like Ahimaaz to carry bad news (ver. 20).—Cambridge Bible. These words, spoken of him, give us a fine motto for the character and work of a minister of Christ: "A good man, and a bringer of good tidings." In fact, it gives us a good type of Christ himself, who was the man of perfect goodness, who was sent to preach good tidings to the meek (Isa. 61: 1).—Hanna. The good tidings of the Gospel should always be brought by good men; and how welcome should they be to us for their message sake.—Henry.

"Is the young man Absalom safe?" Literally, Is there peace to the young man Absalom? Comp. 2 Kings 4: 26. "Not only the question itself, but the very terms of it, breathe the tenderness of David's feelings. The king is lost in the father.—Cook. Fondly foolish old sire! He is not so much concerned about the issue of the war as about his wicked son. The excess of his fondness is seen in the word he uses, calling Absalom a youth, young man—boy. "How is it with my boy?" "Is there peace to my boy?" Verily, there was reason for Joab's indignant words: "I perceive that if Absalom had lived, and all we had died this day, then it had pleased the well" (see next chapter, vers. 5–7). But allowance must be made for David's anxiety about the spiritual condition of Absalom. If he lived he might yet repent.—Hanna.

"And he turned aside and stood still." After his long and toilsome race we might suppose he would need to sit or lie down to rest. But etiquette would not allow that in the king's presence. So Ahimaaz patiently stood. By so doing he was honoring the king just as truly as when he was straining his muscles in the herald-race. God commands us, "having fully done all, to stand" (Eph. 6: 13). Milton's well-known line expresses this: "They also serve who only stand and wait."—Hanna.

"The Lord hath avenged thee." Lit., judged thee out of the hand of thine enemies: pronounced a favorable verdict in thy cause and delivered thee. By a beautiful figure of speech the war between David and the rebels is viewed as a case at law, wherein God is the judge or arbiter. The victory of David's army is, then, the legal decision pronounced by Jehovah between the pleaders. David, in the Psalms, often uses the same figure. In Psalm 17, he prays: "Hear the right, O Lord; attend unto my cry. Let my sentence come forth from thy presence" (see also Ps. 26 34, 43).—Hanna.

"And as he went thus he said." There is not in the whole of the Old Testament a passage of deeper pathos than this. The simple beauty of the narrative is exquisite; we are irresistably reminded of Him who, while He beheld the rebellious city of Jerusalem, and thought of the destruction it was bringing upon itself, wept over it (Luke 19: 41).—Cook. To understand this passionate utterance of anguish, we must bear in mind not only the excessive tenderness, or rather weakness, of David's paternal affection towards his son, but also his anger that Joab and his generals should have paid so little regard to his command to deal gently with Absalom. With the king's excitable temperament, this entirely prevented him from taking a just and correct view of the crime of his rebel son, which merited death, and of the penal justice of God, which had been manifested in his destruction.—Keil.

"Would God," etc. What is this we hear? That he whose life Israel valued at ten thousand of theirs, should be exchanged with a traitor's! That a good king whose life was sought should wish to lay it down for the preservation of his murderer! But what shall we say to that love of thine, O Saviour, who hast said of us wretched traitors not "Would God I had died for you," but "I will die, I do die, I have died for you." Oh, love like Thyself, infinite and incomprehensible! whereat the angels of heaven stand yet amazed; whereat thy saints are ravished. —Bishop Hall.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

THE RELATION OF THE PRESS TO REFORM.

1. The duty of Christians to watch. Vs. 24–28. In this lesson we have a graphic description of the manner in which important news was transmitted in ancient times, by means of swift runners. We see the watchman on his tower, the aged, sorrow stricken king sitting beneath, and the messengers in the distance bearing the tidings that will pierce his heart with such anguish for his darling son slain in the act of unnatural rebellion. The type of a watchman is often used in the Bible to represent God's ministers (Ez. 3: 17). The duty to watch is laid upon them in a peculiar sense. Their eyes must be on every avenue by which sin can approach, and however popular and pleasing the guise it assumes, they must warn the people. A minister who never warns men of the danger and guilt of intemperance, Sabbath-breaking and secret societies, is like a sentinel who from his tower sees the plain beneath swarming with focs and sounds no alarm. But there is a broader sense in which every Christian should be a watchman (Neh. 13: 37). The telegraph and the press are the runners of modern civilization. They tell us how the battle goes between God and Satan, truth and falsehood, vice and purity. It is our duty to hear and heed their message, for unless we do we can have no just idea of the dangers threatening our nation. 75,000,000 gallons of spirit are annually consumed in this country. 10,000,000 barrels of beer were drank last year, chiefly by poor laborers, many of whose families were in want of food and clothing. For our 6,000,000 youth between the ages of ten and twelve there were manufactured last year 600,000,000 cigarettes. It is through the press that we know these facts. It tells us of the doings of Nihilists. Invincibles and other secret political orders with their reign of dynamite and dagger, as well as of secret combinations in our own land, that are undermining the very foundations of liberty, justice and religion. But it tells us good as well as evil tidings. In Kansas, 77 out of its 81 counties have no open saloon; in Georgia, 90 counties prohibit the sale of intoxicating drinks, and in Ohio there are 350,000 prohibition voters; and it also tells us of a steady gain to the anti-secret cause, which will by and by make the lodge as disreputable a place of resort as the saloon.

2. Liquor a source of filial disobedience and ingratitude. Vs. 32, 33. "Is the young man Absalom safe?" Many a father whose gray hairs have been brought to the grave by his son's misconduct, and many a heart-broken mother have echoed this affecting cry. More violations of the fifth commandment can be traced to rum than to any other cause. There is probably scarcely ever a fratricide committed that was not directly or indirectly the result of liquor. A drinking son shortens the lives of his parents, and like Absalom must expect the reward of his disobedience and ingratitude—perhaps in this life at the hands of violated law, but surely in the life to come.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What example did the prophets set ministers of to-day? Is. 21:8; Hab. 2:1. Will God sometime put an end to all evil? Ps. 7:9; Dan. 9:24; 2 Thess. 1:9. What is said of the foolish son? Prov. 17:25; 10:1.

REPLY TO A ROMISH PRIEST.

One of the Romish priests of Freeport, Ill., having written to the press respecting the lecture of pastor P. A. Seguin in that city, propounding several questions by way of challenge the latter replies:

Before leaving Freeport for Marengo, I manifested the desire, by means of the local press, to meet the two Catholic priests of Freeport who were present at my lecture in any place that would suit them better, provided they pay my expenses. As to the questions put in the journals of Freeport by Father Kalrelage, although they have been proved abundantly when I spoke at Freeport, I will say this: Let this priest go back to his seminary and study the works of St. Thomas Aquinas, volume 4 especially, the standard book of St. Liguori, volume 9, and other theologians, and he will see that on the first question, as well as on many others, if he is condemned, it is by his own guides and teachers and professors of divinity. The Council of Lateran in 1215 has said: "We ex-communicate and anathematize every heresy that exalts itself against the holy, orthodox, and Catholic faith, condemning all heritics, by whatever name they may be known; for, though their faces differ, they are all tied together by their tails."

Furthermore the Romish Church teaches in her catechism that "out of her bosom there cannot be salvation." What Father Kalrelage has got to say to that teaching and many others which it would be too good for him to know before writing to the papers what I would take the liberty of calling lies so common in his church, that it is well received among them that the means justify the end.

As to the second question, every American citizen knows the efforts of the Catholics, at different times, to appropriate to themselves the public monies to build up and sustain their schools. If I were permitted to write what I know about this question it would cover up many issues of The Inter Ocean. Against facts we cannot argue.

To the third question I would refer my friend Kalrelage to the Rule of the Index, a Romish institution, which has been established after the pattern of the Inquisition, to kill the intelligence.

This Romish congregation does not forbid the reading of the Bible to the laity only, but also to the monks, nuns, and regular clergy. "No Bible shall be held or read except by the priests," says Pius IX. The same pope had previously said: "Accursed be those very crafty and deceitful societies called Bible societies." How many other curses have been uttered by these monsters and extinguishers against the readers of the Bible, impossible to name them in this short correspondence,

As to the fourth question, I have proved already my statements by historical facts and by the teachings of Father Kalrelage's church. I spoke of Galileo, Le Sueur, Jacquier, Montalembert, Pascal, Fenelon, Bossuet, Dupanloup, and many other giants in science, many other eagles in art, whose wings were clipped with the scissors of the popes. I said that these mighty intelligences were bruised, fettered, and, as much as it was possible to the church of Rome, were degraded, silenced, killed. Louis Veuillot, the eminent editor of the Univers in France, said of Bossuet, that he lived and died a "disguised Protestant." Ignatius Loyola, the founder of the Jesuit order, said: "Let every one be moved and directed as if he were a corpse which allows itself to be moved and led in every direction." The same Jesuit said: "That we may in all things attain the truth, we ought ever to hold as a fixed principle that what I see white to be black if the church define it to be so." Pope Gregory XVI., in his encyclical letter of Aug. 15, 1832, says: "Let us sacrifice our own opinions, our knowledge, our intelligence." Cardinal Antonelli said to Mr. Hawkins, a distinguished American gentleman: "I think it better that children should grow up in ignorance than to be educated in such a system of schools as the Massachusetts State supports."

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 7, 1884.

BEFORE SEPTEMBER 1ST

There should be redoubled effort for new subscribers so that none may lose the opening chapter of the new reform story by the author of "Holden with Cords." The tempting offer of four papers for a dollar until after election is just the thing to get the names. The more diligence now, the more you get for your money.

PITTSBURGH CONVENTION STRAWS.

Senator Pomeroy in this number gives an inside view of the convention.

Dr. McDonald, who was all the talk when the convention opened, was defeated by his Masonry, which was more bitter than his Vinegar Bitters, and worse to take. At the close his boom had shrunk to the twenty-three California delegates, with a mere sprinkling outside.

The colored voters, if they can vote together, have the key of the White House for the next four years. No notice was taken of them by the Pittsburgh convention, no officers or delegates even with colored faces. Not so the Americans.

Dr. McDonald gave 600 guests at the Monongahela House the costliest banquet ever held in Pittsburgh. In the notice of it in the Philadelphia Press, while Mr. Sagendorph of Michigan is marked by eight capital letters, viz., R. W. G. S. I. O. G. T., John B. Finch, next on the list, has not an initial title, though he is the "Right Worthy Grand Good Templar of the world." A fox who had a long tail, and was proud of it, always hoisted it when presiding in his fox-lodge at night; but when hunters and hounds were out he hid his brush between his legs, and kept it out of sight.

An insolent card comes from Rev. Henry Coleman, Whitewater, Wis., who attempted with the handful of secretists in the Pittsburgh convention, to suppress Pres. C. A. Blanchard after the convention had voted to hear him as the exponent of the American party. Mr. Coleman defends his conduct on the plea that the audience (perhaps one in fifty of them) "had a right" to drown his voice by tumult because when a few hissed him, he said, "Rome was saved by the cackling of geese, but not by their hissing."

The convention had voted to hear from the American party delegation. The hissing was an attempt, by a few, to rob the delegation of the right to be heard given by the whole body. President Blanchard had a right to insist on his privilege by the pleasant historical allusion, and the uproar was ill-mannered outrage.

Libration of Politics.—The great Prohibition convention is illustration and proof that American politics are "turning back to the God of our Fathers." Here was a large hall crowded, galleries and all, with people from all parts of the United States. The brass band made up of ordinary city musicians, open with "Nearer my God to Thee," and the great crowd when deeply moved rise and sing, "Praise God from whom all Blessings Flow!" But, what was more wonderful, when a speaker was presenting the nomination of St. John in the way he thought most likely to win that great multitude, he told them how St. John, while waiting for a train, went into a prayer-meeting near to the depot and got up and told his religious experience! The Republican press, generally, are now holding up Grover Cleveland to the condemnation of American voters, because, they say, he is the father of an illegitimate child. It is not to be supposed that the Republican leaders have all become, at once, shocked at the vice of fornication; but that they know the American voters are persuaded that private vices are inconsistent with public virtues; that they do not believe

> "He is the nation's friend who is in truth
> The friend of no man there."

This would certainly seem to indicate that American politics have reached their winter solstice, and are on their return. Here is another token more striking still:

Pittsburgh, July 25.—J. S. Little, of Newark, N. J., received the following telegram this morning from ex-Governor St. John, dated Rochester, N. Y., and addressed to John Finch, George R. Scott or M. B. Bennett:

"I was at Lakeside yesterday and did not receive your telegram until this morning. While I did not seek or desire the nomination, I greatly appreciate the unanimity with which it was given, as well as the honor it conferred. I can only say now that I acquiesce in the action of the convention, and, looking to God for his guidance, shall try and do my duty.

HON. FREDERICK DOUGLASS.

This gentleman had a reception at the home of Mr. William D. Babbitt, 618 W. Monroe street, on Wednesday evening last week. A large number of citizens, ladies and gentlemen, called to pay their respects to Mr. and Mrs. Douglass.

It will be remembered that Mr. Douglass spoke at our Washington convention last winter on the civil rights plank of our platform. He is an honorable and true hearted man, and, knowing nothing by experience of the lodge, was ignorant of its malignant power. A rowdy saloon-keeper of Washington was chosen over him as delegate to the Blaine convention here June 3d last, though Douglass was one of the most popular men in attendance on that convention. "It's an ill wind that blows nobody good."

Mr. Douglass, from bitter experience, jealous of "personal liberty," naturally shrunk from prohibition, though a life-long temperance man. He declared himself a convert to prohibition in conversation with Anna Dickinson, who opposes it. We presume Mr. Douglass will go for Blaine, as he has a terrible dread of the Southern Democrats in power, with the U. S. Treasury in their hands to pay secret service money to living secessionists, and pay pensions for the rebel soldiers.

PARTY UNION.

The supporters of Pomeroy and Conant should not be scared lest the American party is to be sold out to the Prohibitionists. It is true that the Illinois Prohibition State ticket, headed by Mr. Hobbs for Governor, will be, probably, voted for by many Americans; and a long stride toward union of the two parties on the basis of excluding secretists from office, was taken at Pittsburgh. But no steps toward our adopting and voting the Prohibition ticket will be taken without—

1st. The concurrence and advice of Pomeroy and Conant.

2d. The concurrence of the National Central Committee, and

3d. The concurrence of the State nominating convention, to which Secretary Stoddard has determined to invite as many Americans as can attend, from without, as well as from within the State. The Cynosure will be guided by the united wisdom of the American party and its candidates, when fully ascertained.

In one thing we all are, and have been agreed, that it is the soundest wisdom for these two parties to be one, and present next November a united front.

The Chicago Advance, July 24th, thinks that, "The war between the two Prohibition tickets will be relentless and uncompromising." Our brother West is, this time, neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet. Though ordinarily shrewd, his Scotch wit has failed him for once. How can two prohibition parties, made up of honest men and women, alike devoted to the same great and holy cause of prohibition war, on each other? If the Advance editor had been at Pittsburgh, he would have found in that great body, but thirty or forty at most, involved in mist by their preference for the lodge, as the Advance is by party proclivities, so that it cannot see that Mr. Blaine's letter to the Republican press last winter makes the distillery and brewery the two permanent pillars of the Republic, by paying the State and county expenses by the tax derived from their liquor. We are familiar with machinery driven by water power, but Mr. Blaine is the first statesman who ever proposed to propel the machinery of republican government by liquor power.

"THE NATIONAL LABOR CONVENTION."

Such a convention was announced by the press throughout the country soon after the Democratic convention, July 8th, to meet in Chicago, July 30th; this was Wednesday of last week. It was to meet at Hershey Hall, 83 Madison street. On the morning of that day the Inter Ocean gave notice that this "National" convention was adjourned by two men named Keogh and Rooney of New York city till next September. The same paper said that, July 29th, "four distinct factions appeared on the ground and attempted to secure control of the convention next day; one of which was a Butler crowd."

One of these handfuls met in the Briggs House and

Resolved, That we accept the action and indorsement of our principles by the National conventions of the Democratic and Republican parties as progressive and beneficial to American industry.

Resolved, That we hereby adjourn this National labor convention to July, 1888, to meet in the city of Chicago on such day and at such place to be hereafter designated by the National Executive.

We are told that seven persons passed the above resolutions. The two names in New York city who assumed to adjourn a "National Labor Convention," advertised for Chicago seem to be Irish.

The secret labor unions in this country are thus seen to be in a deplorably distracted condition. The editors of the Cynosure called on some of their soft-handed leaders, who seem to be living at expensive hotels at somebody's expense. They told us that the convention was postponed to save it from being seized and run in the interest of Governor Cleveland. That may be true, and it may be that the convention was called by these un-laboring labor-leaders, to invite bribery from the old parties, and was postponed when the object was gained. So it has been in England from time immemorial. Gassy adventurers like Feargus O'Connor have arisen into importance by bravado; and, deceiving their ignorant, trusting followers, have sold out to the Tory party. It is said that the redoubtable Dennis Kearney is engaged to stump for one of the old parties, after the most savage denunciations at the sand lots of society in general and the United States in particular. Nothing will save the laboring classes but an open party, pledged to do them justice, give them a Sabbath, oppose liquor and tobacco; and acting, in short, in the fear of God and the love of men.

SCYLLA AND CHARYBDIS.

These were a rock and a whirlpool on the straits of Messina, which the active imagination of the Greeks converted into sea-monsters or gods. Homer sends the bark of the wandering Ulysses through this strait after the fall of Troy. By this journey of Ulysses, Homer, the poet of mankind, shadows the voyage of life; and the bowers of Calypso, the island of the Sirens which led to the sty in which men were turned into swine by the sorceress Circe, from which fate Ulysses saved his men by stopping their ears with wax,—these were mind-pictures of the lures of vice and error. But the most thrilling was the passage of the strait between Scylla and Charybdis.

Every party and every church runs the gauntlet of these straits of Messina. Scylla means sect and Charybdis, unbelief or liberalism.

Alfred run England through these straits safely. Cromwell's Commonwealth avoided Scylla but stuck in Charybdis. The great Knox movement in Scotland hit hard against Scylla, and knocked off several sects. Donald Cargyll, for instance, standing in the woods under the sleet of a Scotland winter with twenty or thirty shivering followers, expelled the crown prince and all the peers of the realm, and proclaimed his little party the "the only true kirk" on earth. Luther taught the truth. His followers fought for Lutheranism, and "since the middle of the sixteenth century the reformation has not advanced one step in Europe."

The Puritans began right. They acknowledged the English church as a "true church" while they fled, with cropped ears and gory backs from her pillories and prisons. They shunned Scylla. But whoever now stands on his Messinian promontory and looks over the whirlpool of unbelief will see a stately bark swinging gently in its outer gyrations, with the name of Andover in gilt capitals on its stern, with flags of new silk bearing such mottoes as: "Probation after death," (and of course, "Prayers for the dead" who are in probation still) "Christ or final retribution restated," and other such like; while the whole surface of the maelstroem of no principle inside is strewn with fragments of ships and sailors cast overboard, from vessels trying to escape—

> "Rari nantes in gurgete vasto."

The heads of some of these strong swimmers bear the names of "Swing," "Thomas," with a host of lesser heads slowly sinking in the dark waters; while a howling blasphemer, at the horrid vortex, pours out a volley of vulgar oaths as he sinks out of sight holding up "The Mistakes of Moses" with his strong arm in his last agony.

"Well, what of the reforms of the day?" They are no exceptions to the past, pushing through between Scylla and Charybdis. One runs up a flag with the motto, Sect no-sect, and runs square against the rock and stops. Others graze Scylla and whirling through Charybdis, drag their anchors and slowly make their way out into open sea and fair sailing.

Some men are men of principle run mad, who forget that circumstances are a part of God's truth revealed by his providence every hour. Others are men of weak principles, who give up their consciences at the bidding of circumstances. While multitudes have only John Randolph's seven principles, "five loaves and two fishes." Such are the Democrats and Republicans of the present time; while the brave swimmers of reform who have boarded the little secret, low-built galleys sent out by the sect-god Scylla, run into the dark cavern under the rock, where they are devoured by the monster and his crew.

But the most painful part is that few vessels ever pass these straits unscathed. Even "the crafty Ulysses" lost six of his seamen. The fabled monster had twelve feet and six heads, and while the brave bark weathering the cape

"Dire Scylla stooped from high to catch her prey, Stretched her wide jaws and swept six men away!"

The sect-god has already taken off more than that proportion from the crew of reform. Satan never sees a man who will lay down his life for Christ's sake, but he attempts to load that man with points of conscience which are not points of conscience. This enfeebles his good ointment by "dead flies." This forms a sect. In Christ, all are one. It is the other things that separate Christians. Then shrewd, aspiring minds will detect and expose these dead flies, the foreign ingredients injected by Satan himself into Christ's religion, and then he holds up these pimples before the minds of good men of worldly ambition, till they switch off from religion itself to get rid of the "stinking savor" of the dead flies.

Let Nast give us a cartoon of Scylla and Charybdis. Paint on the mists sent up by the surging waters: "The way is narrow." "Cursed be the man who trusteth in man; and whose heart departeth from the living God." "Only those who set Christ always before them can pass these straits in safety."

Dr. McDonald is a good man, but he has hidden in the lodge-cave under Scylla: and we would no more vote for him than for Abraham, with his two wives, or "Aaron the saint of the Lord," before he repented of stripping and fooling Israel at Mt. Sinai.

"But there are thousands of good Prohibitionists in the lodges." Yes, but if they are honest men they will follow Christ and give up their secrecy. If not honest men, they will betray the Prohibition cause, and stand by their Masonic brethren who are distillers, brewers and saloon-keepers.

—Secretary Stoddard is to deliver the opening address at the Iowa State Convention, to be held in Washington on the 26th inst., opening at 7 o'clock P. M. Also at Macatawa Park, Holland, Ottawa county, Mich., August 29th.

—The First Church of Holland, Mich., remembers the reform work again this year by a recent collection amounting to $15.63.

—The United Brethren in Christ mentions a call from Bro. H. H. Hinman of Washington, and with a high tribute to his character wishes him success in his labors.

—The editor of the Cynosure went to Galesburg, Illinois, on the Sabbath, having an appointment to preach in the old First Church, to which he ministered for a time while president of Knox College. He expects to visit Peoria and lecture as opportunity may offer.

—An open air convention will be held August 29th at Macatawa Park, near Holland, Mich., under the management of Bro. H. A. Day. We have not yet learned the programme of the meeting, but are assured that it will deal truly with reform questions.

—Rev. J. S. T. Milligan pleads that the next Kansas State Convention be held at Lawrence. This is the historical city of Kansas and the educational center of the State. The Blanchard Record claims that its university is the largest west of the Alleghany mountains. It is a big skip to get over Ann Arbor, Evanston and Oberlin.

—A National Reform Convention is to be held in Desmoines, Iowa, August 26th and 27th. Can there not be a union of the two Iowa conventions? Both meet at the same time and both need the presence of such men as M. A. Gault, T. P. Robb and C. D. Turnbull.

—The Wesleyan Methodist, Syracuse, N. Y., has a brief report of the "Shameful treatment which would put to blush a national convention of liquor dealers," of the fraternal committee of the American party at Pittsburgh. The reports which have appeared have not, perhaps, given the Convention itself proper credit. The chairman, speaking for the convention, insisted on Pres. C. A. Blanchard's right to be heard; and the vast majority applauded heartily what he said, many calling for him to go on when the lodge hissed. Not more than thirty attempted disturbance, one fiftieth of the audience, and of these the leaders seemed to be John B. Finch, a young man named White, from Illinois, and another named Coleman, from Wisconsin. Had the speaker begun an argument against the lodge there might have been reason for the disapproval. But, confining himself to a simple statement of fact, which was the courtesy extended to him, the disturbance was an outrage.

—In all the press comments on the Pittsburgh lodge row there is a commendable fairness throughout, few caring to defend the lodge, though sympathizing with it. The Union Signal errs in representing Pres. Blanchard's remarks as an argument against secret society office-holding. He made only such a statement of the principles of the American party as he was bound in fairness and Christian candor to do. The New York Witness omits all reference whatever to this part of the proceedings. Is the Witness afraid of thelodge?

—Since the Pittsburgh convention the papers of that city have printed a number of letters which show a deep indignation at the leaders of the uproar. Pittsburgh was not indeed a convenient place for such a display of lodgery, since the religious sentiment of the city has a wholesome leaven in the several testifying churches. The Times should have the credit for the extract made in these columes last week; the name was incorrectly printed Press. As a proof of the Pittsburgh sentiment, prominent ladies of the W. C. T. U. of the city called on President Blanchard and warmly expressed their sympathy and a hearty indignation at the manners of Coleman, Finch and Smith. The president of the organization insisted that he should address the next temperance convention held under their control in Pittsburgh.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

July 31, 1884.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The attempted suicide yesterday at the National Hotel by Hon. Wm. Wirt Culbertson, member of Congress from the Ashland (9th) district of Kentucky, is a powerful argument, not merely for prohibition but for a general reformation in morals and manners in this city and especially among Congressmen.

He was elected in 1882, had boarded at the Arlington during the session of Congress, and at its close sent his wife and son to Kentucky. Afterwards he went to Cape May and returned here a few days since reporting that he had been drinking heavily. Yesterday morning he complained of being greatly disturbed during the night, and was advised to go to bed and send for a physician. Some time after, five pistol shots were heard in his room, three of which had taken effect on his head, but were so directed that they did not break the skull. He is at the hospital, and it is hoped he may recover. He doubtless had delirium tremens.

This case suggests, that such an act does not result from a mere temporary departure from virtuous habits, but from long continuance in evil, whereby the moral sense is broken down, the nervous system deranged and the fear of God eradicated.

Mr. Culbertson was doubtless a young man of fine abilities and of much promise or he would never been chosen to represent Henry Clay's district. There was a first departure and there was the danger. Could he have foreseen where it would tend he would have shrank from it. It is utterly unsafe to dally with intoxicants.

We can see what "Congressional Cold Tea" means. There was a vast amount of whisky consumed in the Capital restaurants and sent up to the committee rooms, but out of respect to public opinion it was called "cold tea." But few besides the initiated knew but it was such, but there was murder in the cup.

There was a time when Henry Wilson was in Congress, when there was a Congressional temperance society, and what meant more, a Congressional prayer-meeting. But in these days of progress Puritanic notions are forgotten. I wonder if all our Christian statesmen have died?

We can see in this case that so long as the people elect to Congress men of drinking habits, they have no right to expect temperance legislation or any legislation that is not subservient to the whisky interest.

Men who find congenial society in the drinking places, are far gone in moral declension and utterly unfit for offices of profit and trust. Surely such men need not be selected. Kentucky has one noble champion of temperance in Congress, Hon. J. D. White. May her whole delegation be filled with men of like principles.

When Congress shall enact a prohibitory law for this District, and shall have made our grand National Capital and less pretentious White House clean places, it will have done more to preserve the national power and promote the public welfare than armies or navies are ever likely to accomplish. Surely questions of banks and tariffs, however important in themselves, sink into insignificance when compared with such a question as this. H. H. HINMAN.

AN OFFER FROM NEW YORK.

SCHUYLER'S LAKE, Otsego Co., N. Y.

It was suggested in a recent number that the Cynosure afforded a convenient means of communication between the friends of the American Prohibition party. If others will unite in the effort I will contribute twenty dollars for colporteur work and at least a partial canvass of the county in the interests of the party. Let all in the county express at once their willingness to contribute, and the plan can be carried into a speedy execution.

B. TUNNICLIFF.

NEBRASKA, GET READY.

INMAN, Holt Co., Neb., July 26, 1884.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—We very much prize your weekly visits as you come freighted with such rich food for those who want to know the truth. We rejoice at the evidence of progress the truth is making. But I want to say more particularly that I am glad that the wheel-horse of the lecture business is going to be a little more at leisure, so that he can spend more time in the lecture business. Now, friends in Nebraska, cannot we prepare some work for him? What do you say, Bro. Spooner, cannot he get a number of places along the Elkhorn valley? Gates College at Neligh should be visited when next term opens and the young people of that school enlightened on this subject of secrecy. Besides, I have no doubt there are many other places that would gladly hear the truth. Certainly there is need of work. The devil is busy organizing his forces. At every point where they can they are organizing Posts of the G. A. R., and the temperance workers are organizing Good Templar lodges. Friends, let us wake up. If we can get Bro. Stoddard to spend a month or six weeks in the State he will render valuable assistance in getting up a good working State organization. Now is the time to strike, friends. Let us get the ball in motion for Pomeroy and Conant.

Yours for work, J. MCCLEERY.

THE ILLINOIS STATE CONVENTION will undoubtedly be held at Monmouth August 27th and 28th. Secretary Stoddard writes from that city that arrangements are nearly completed for the meeting. The formal call from the Executive Committee may be expected next week. Meantime let the friends everywhere in the State be preparing to attend.

THE PITTSBURGH UPROAR.

While interested deeply in the entire proceedings at the Prohibition convention and especially in the result, the Cynosure realizes that its readers expect the fullest information respecting the lodge demonstration, which has been as widely noted as the convention itself. In addition to the reports already printed the following is from the letter of Rev. R. J. George, pastor of the college church at Beaver Falls, Pa., to the Christian Statesman:

"One incident that occurred made a less favorable impression. President Chas. A. Blanchard, president of Wheaton College, was introduced to the convention, to present the salutations of the American party, probably with a view to securing co-operation. He proceeded very pleasantly with his address, covering ground common to the two parties, and by his clean-cut, incisive utterances called out the repeated applause of the convention. He went on to say that it was a principle of their party that those who are bound together in secret lodges to secure their own personal and selfish interests, should not be intrusted with offices affecting the interests of the whole people. This sentiment was received with hisses by a number of the delegates. President Blanchard being accustomed to such treatment from this quarter, remarked with great coolness; 'It is indeed related that Rome was saved by geese, but the gentlemen should bear in mind that it was by cackling, not by hissing.' This brought a number of delegates to their feet claiming that their courtesy in according the platform of the convention to President Blanchard had been abused, and that he should not be allowed to continue. Mr. Blanchard said he was about to close his address, and the chairman sought to restore quiet, but there was a manifest disposition on the part of a few to drive him from the stage. Maintaining complete self-mastery, and awaiting a lull in the confusion, Mr. Blanchard found opportunity to express his thanks for the hearing accorded to him, coupling them with a vigorous thrust at the liquor traffic, which brought the applause of the convention, in the midst of which he took his seat. The retort which angered some of his hearers was probably too severe under the circumstances; but the refusal of certain delegates to listen to a candid statement of the principles of his party after having accorded to him the floor for this purpose, was another illustration of the methods of the lodge, and was not in keeping with the Christian spirit generally manifested in the convention. President Blanchard remained during the sessions, and was quite a favorite with many of the delegates."

The question arises, For what ends are Pan-Presbyterian Councils held? If there is nothing in the way of definite faith to be maintained or mode of co-operation in evangelistic work to be done, what are they for? The papers read before them would appear as well in our quarterlies, monthlies or weeklies, or any publication representing common interests of our religion. And so far as evangelistic work is concerned, what is to be expected from them better than what is proposed by the "Evangelical Alliance?" They have already become little else than great blowing machines, and such as blow neither cold nor hot.—United Presbyterian.

The Home.

PASS IT ON.

BY REV. W. T. SLEEPER, WORCESTER, MASS.

Matthew 10:8—"Freely ye have received, freely give."

From God's wealth, in land and sea
Stored for man so lavishly,
In the sun's prolific light,
In the alchemy of night,
Brother, hast thou freely drawn?
Pass it on, then, pass it on.
Thy poor neighbor gains it not,
Though he wrestles with his lot.
Earth and heaven to him are dumb;
At his calls no answers come.
Brother, hast thou freely drawn?
Pass it on; yes, pass it on.

From the mines of golden lore,
Deep and broad with shining ore,
Richer far than Ophir's mines,
Brighter than the diamond shines,
Brother, hast thou freely drawn?
Pass it on, then, pass it on.
Gifts so rich, to thee supplied,
Are to thousands still denied;
Though they pine for learning's light,
Yet they die without the sight.
Brother, hast thou freely drawn?
Pass it on; yes, pass it on.

From the bank of God's great love,
Through the Spirit from above;
From the vastness of His grace,
Shown by Jesus to the race;
Brother, hast thou freely drawn?
Pass it on, then, pass it on.
Multitudes have never heard
Of the gospel's joyful word;
In their ignorance they cry,
In their guiltiness they die.
Brother, hast thou freely drawn?
Pass it on; yes, pass it on.

Needs are great, the world is wide;
Pounds are lent thee not to hide;
In thy napkin's greedy fold
Thou shalt not the treasure hold
Which from thy good Lord was drawn.
Pass it on, then, pass it on,
Hiding good is robbery;
Hoarding it, idolatry;
Using it for others' weal
Seals thee with the Master's seal.
What from heaven was freely drawn,
Pass it on; yes, pass it on.

GAMBLING IN THE PARLOR.

An anxious mother wrote the following letter relating to this subject to Dr. Prime, editor of the New York Observer:

"While I am writing, the children, with two or three of their young friends, are at play in the parlor. The word play does not mean what it did when I was in my teens, as my children are now. Nor will I undertake to say that the plays of my younger days were more innocent and less dangerous than those now enjoyed by young people. I was brought up to regard the game of cards with decided aversion, as always associated more or less intimately with gambling. If every one playing cards was not actually gambling, it was supposed to lead to it, and if boys and girls became fond of the game, there was every reason to fear they would fall into that vice by and by. But now it is common to see card playing among the amusements of the evening in the best families. At summer hotels all sorts of people, which must include good people, play cards all day long, especially when the weather keeps them in the house. I observe that they play for small sums of money, so very small as not to make it unpleasant to lose, and not large enough to cause any great anxiety to win. The young people in the parlor at home, or in little circles in one another's houses, are in the habit of playing for 'favors,' trifling articles which they freely give and take in other social pastimes. Now they win or lose them in a game of cards. My children and their young friends are playing for 'favors' now while I am writing; I am very anxious about it; they have grown so much wiser than their parents, that they are sure there is no harm in it. They tell me that the children of ministers play in the same way; and what I say seems to be of no use. Do you think it is right? Will it be too much to ask you to give your opinion in one of your letters?"

In answer to this letter Dr. Prime published the following "opinion." It is well worthy of the prayerful attention of parents and young people in these times:

"It is wrong to play cards, or any other game, for any stake, prize, money, goods, or anything of value, however small. It is not the amount lost or won in play that makes the game right or wrong. Only a very small-minded person would think it right to play for sixpence, and wrong for a shilling. The difference is not in the stakes; the only question is the right or the wrong of playing for stakes at any time.

"A clergyman riding in the country saw a packet lying in the road, and upon dismounting picked up a pack of cards. He was putting them in his pocket to take them home to amuse his children, when he said to himself, if I were to be thrown off and killed, and this pack of cards were found in my pocket, it would not read well in the newspapers. He threw them over the fence and rode on.

"As I was brought up with the idea that playing cards is in itself wrong, I have never looked upon the game with any favor whatever. I have all along in life noticed that it is in the line that gambling takes from the first game where the player seeks to win a cent or a 'favor' or a shilling, up to the game, or down to the game, where a fortune is the stake to be lost or won. Up in the country the boys used to play cards in the barn, hiding away from the parents who would forbid and punish them if they were found out. And I know that such habits of secret gambling were the beginnings of evil courses that had sad endings. If we could trace a thousand instances of wrong-doing by clerks, bank-tellers and cashiers, treasurers, speculators, and others, we would find that in nine cases out of ten, perhaps nineteen out of twenty, the first step was a game of cards for a mere trifle. It may be a total misapprehension on my part, but I think cards have wrought more evil in the world than any other device of the evil one to tempt men to their ruin. All games of chance have the dangerous element of gambling in their nature, and should be avoided; while games of skill if played for the sake of winning anything are also wrong. It is hard to make young people see this distinction clearly, but it is real and important. To take from another his property against his will and without rendering an equivalent, violates the eighth and tenth commandments. The gambler's occupation is composed of covetousness and robbery. You see this: I wish your children would see it."

THE DRAWBACKS OF RICHES.

Men exclaim, "These are prosperous times," and seem to pity those who lived in a less luxurious and wealthy age. They forget that wealth is relative, and that to all but the destitute, and those without "food and raiment," enough "to be content," wealth is chiefly the field in which men compete and rival each other for social position, and when all are equally enriched, the result so far is the same. The weekly list of wills proved shows how much richer men die nowadays, but not how much happier they live. "A rich man," said Adam Smith, "is only a large distributor;" and he might have added, he cannot be free from the harrassing or the jealousies of this distribution. A costly establishment, with elegant furniture and dashing equipages, cannot but be an addition to our cares and anxieties if we take any interest in them, and of only nominal value to us if we take none. Many a rich man is a slave to his own servants when they outnumber his family out of all proportion. One of a dozen servants once was heard to say, "This is our establishment, and master and mistress are our housekeepers." The larger the fortune spent, the greater the load of life—very low life too—with which you must encumber yourself. Charles V. was one of very few who ever abdicated a throne; but thousands have retired from high positions, and ended their days in retirement, feeling, "miserable comforters are you all." And since all that adds to the elegance and splendor of our houses, widens the gulf between the dainty habits of the mansion and the dirt of the cottages, in which alone our servants can be reared, no wonder that the cry about inefficient servants is daily louder and louder; when everybody is richer, everybody keeps more servants, till the stock of good servants is exhausted. When the cream is gone, you come to skim-milk. The master finds he has daily less control; the supply dictates to the demand. Servants engage masters and mistresses quite as truly as the latter engage them, and the result of the boasted riches of the day is simply this—that you keep open house for the lower orders, of a class daily more and more independent and useless.

For luxury and superfluities of all kinds we do penance. "Pleasure," says Shakespeare, "with repetition souring, turns to pain." All pleasure is no pleasure, and all holidays no holiday. This is too trite and obvious; but what seems not so obvious is that man cannot live by proxy. Nature cries, "work," and inexorably does she avenge her broken law. We must either rub out or rust out. What we spare in aching limbs we suffer in sinking heart. "My daughters want tonics," said a lady to Sir C. Clarke. "Yes, ma'am. Nature's tonic—work." Idleness, an aimless life, and ennui, nature avenges on the nervous system. Our many servants, if called blessings, are a curse. Ladies wanted little of doctors' tonics in old-fashioned times when they worked like the servants under them. "But it is not the fashion." "No, not the fashion to be healthy—no fault of mine," replied the doctor.—Harper's Bazar.

SIGNING AWAY HIS INTEREST.

It was in a country store one evening. A number of young men were sitting together about the stove, telling what they didn't believe and what they were not afraid to do. Finally the leader of the group remarked that, so far as he was concerned, he would be willing any time to sign away his interest in Christ for a five dollar bill.

"What did I understand you to say?" asked an old farmer who happened to be in the store, and who had overheard the remark.

"I said that for five dollars I would sign away all my interest in Christ, and so I will."

The old farmer, who had learned to know the human heart pretty well, drew out his leathern wallet, took therefrom a ten dollar bill and put it in the storekeeper's hand. Then calling for ink and paper, he said: "My young friend, if you will just step to the desk now and write as I direct, the money is yours."

The young man took the pen and began: "In the presence of these witnesses, I, A——— B———, for the sum of five dollars received, do now, once for all and forever, sign away all my interest"—then he dropped the pen and with a forced smile said: "I take it back, I was only fooling."

That young man did not dare to sign that paper. Why? He had an accusing conscience. He knew that there was a God. He believed in religion. He meant to be a Christian some time.

And so do you, reader. Notwithstanding your apparent indifference, your trifling conduct, your boasting speech, you would not to-day for ten thousand dollars sign away, if such a thing were possible, your interest in Jesus Christ. You do not desire or expect to lose heaven.—Congregationalist.

THE KEEPER OF THE DOOR.

"Oh, dear! I am completely discouraged." Jenny pushed away her book and looked up at her mother with an expression that was very much like despair, and yet not altogether that, for somehow her mother had a way of brightening up dark places that was helpful as well as comforting.

Her mother was rocking the baby, and she scarcely dared speak lest the little tyrant should open his eyes for a new frolic, but she sent Jenny a smile that said just as plainly as words, "What is the trouble? Let us talk it over."

"It's about my besetting sins, mamma. You see we were talking last Sabbath about striving against sin, and Miss Marston told us the only way to overcome it was to fight as the sharpshooters did in the war, by taking aim at a particular one. She advised us to sit down and make an honest list, just for our own eyes, of our own special sins, the ones that made us most trouble, and then try by God's help to overcome them. I made up my mind to try it, and I had to write down ever so many things, but I truly thought that my tongue made me the most trouble."

"Your tongue! Oh, yes! I understand," said mamma.

"Saying things, you know, mamma; things I ought not to say; and I am so sorry about it afterwards, but that doesn't seem to make it any better, because I go and do it again."

"Well?" said mamma, as Jenny paused.

"Well, I thought I'd just take aim at that one thing, and I did. I thought it would be a good plan to write down whenever I forgot, and so every night I put down in my little book the bad things I had said, and—and—mamma, it is just horrid! The days don't grow a bit better, and to day is worst of all."

Jenny drew a deep sigh, and scowled at her little book. Then she said desperately, "I wish there was some way to just tie my tongue up, and keep it out of mischief."

"You need a gate-keeper," said her mother, laying down the baby and taking up her sewing. "When a city is in danger from enemies, they must do something more than put sharpshooters on the walls; they guard the gates, and keep sentinels at their posts day and night to give warning of the approach of danger."

"I try to watch," said Jenny; "I thought of it all the morning while I was dressing, and then when I came down and heard Rob fretting at Matty for taking his slate, and at Norah because their was no toast, and even at the baby for pulling his hair, I went to singing,

"Brotber, thou wast mild and lovely, Gentle as a summer breeze," though I knew perfectly well that always makes Rob madder than anything else. Then he threw his book at me, and papa sent him out of the room, and I just wanted to pound myself on the head for being so mean."

"You must have a gate-keeper," said her mother more seriously than ever, "and I would ask for one before I was an hour older. Your Father will give you one."

"Papa!" exclaimed Jenny. "How can he?"

But her mother opened her Bible, and turning over the leaves gave it to Jenny with her finger on a verse in Psalms. "Read that," she said; and Jenny read aloud: "Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth: keep the door of my lips."

There were tears in her eyes as she repeated the words, "Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth." "I never thought of that, mamma; somehow I expected to take care of the sin myself, but I should like a keeper. Just think, mamma, of an angel standing on guard to keep the door of my lips. Will he have a sword, I wonder?"

"I think so; the sword of 'Truth.'"

"And what will be the watchword?"

"'Peace,' I think, or 'Love;' the love that 'worketh no ill to its neighbor;' at least I would try that watchword to-day, and ask the keeper to challenge every word, and let nothing pass without the watchword."

When Jenny went to her room that night, she found a little card pinned up over the dressing-table with David's prayer written upon it, and she added it very earnestly to her own petitions. In the morning it was again before her eyes, and she went down to breakfast repeating it to herself. The first thing she saw was Johnny tormenting her beloved white kitten by trying to drive it in harness.

"You mean, cruel boy!" was upon her very lips, but the keeper drew his sword and stopped the words.

"That is not true; you know Johnny does not mean to be cruel; nothing must pass here without the watchword."

"Johnny," said Jenny, pleasantly, "do you know how the emperor came to be a donkey?"

Johnny was glad to listen to a story, and Jenny quietly released the kitten while she told him about the belief, in China, that people who abused dumb animals would come back again, after they died, and be born with the bodies of animals themselves, that they might understand just how the poor creatures suffered.

"It isn't true," said Johnny, stroking the kitten in Jenny's arms.

"No," but it shows that even the heathen believe that God will punish us if we are not kind to the helpless creatures he puts in our care."

"I guess I won't have kitty for a circus-horse," said Johnny; "cats don't know much anyhow."

Rob had not recovered from the dumps, and was in a particularly exasperating mood, and once an angry retort slipped from Jenny's lips in spite of the keeper, but she apologized for it the next minute, to Rob's utter amazement; in fact, he was too much astonished to say another saucy thing that morning.

At school, Jenny's temptations came thick and fast; first a temptation to evil speaking, then to unkind criticism, then to uncharitable judgment, then to tell a ludicrous story of a simple-minded old Christian, then to punish the self-conceit of Mamie Morris by repeating what a lady had said of her, and then to make a cutting reply to a most ungenerous taunt. It seemed to Jenny, as she reviewed the day, it had been a specially hard one; and yet she was conscious that through it all the keeper had been standing at the door, and she could look back with gratitude, and not with shame.

"How about the watchman, Jenny?" asked her mother when she came home.

"He stood at his post, mamma; twice I think something slipped by without the watchword, but he killed it with his sword before it got far enough to do much mischief."

Cousin Sue heard the story, and on Jenny's next birthday sent her a lovely motto for her room: a wreath of daisies and wild roses, delicately painted as a border for the text: "Keep the door of my lips."

"I think Cousin Sue might have sent that to me," said Rob, honestly; "I'm sure I need a doorkeeper more than Jenny does."

And Mamie Morris confessed to her dearest friend that she really did believe Jenny Wilder was a Christian, because she never said things to make folks uncomfortable.

"She's so funny, and so smart to think of things, that I never used to open my mouth before her without expecting to be set down, but now I like her best of any girl in school."

Mamie's friend had a pang of jealousy.

"Well, Mamie Morris, to tell the truth, I think you just need setting down once in a while. You're such an awful little puff-ball that if somebody didn't step on you, or squeeze you, you'd—you'd just burst!"

Which shows that Mamie's friend needed a keeper of the door also.—S. S. Times.

TEMPERANCE.

PROHIBITION.

"We have suffered more in our time from intemperance than from war, pestilence, and famine combined,—those three great scourges of mankind."

So spoke Mr. Gladstone, in the House of Commons, in a debate upon a bill the purpose of which was to remit to the people of the cities, towns, and parishes of the kingdom the right to prohibit the liquor traffic in their several localities. For more than four hundred years—since the time of Edward VI.—the British government has been endeavoring, through the policy of licensing the liquor traffic, to diminish the evils coming from it to the nation and the people. To this end more than four hundred and fifty separate acts of Parliament have been adopted, but with no appreciable benefit in any way; on the contrary, the condition of the country has been growing constantly worse, so far as intemperance is concerned, and the poverty, crime, and insanity coming from it have steadily increased.

The governments of all civilized countries agree that the liquor traffic must not be left free, because it is dangerous to the public welfare. The only question concerning the legal control of it has been, to what extent it should be restrained, and in popular governments this has been determined by the public opinion of the time. In Liverpool, some years ago, the city authorities adopted a new policy in relation to it, that of granting license for the sale of liquors to all persons who asked for it. The purpose was to test the theory of some prominent members of the council, that to multiply temptations to intemperance would not extend that habit among the people. This policy was persisted in until its results became so marked for evil that Liverpool was known throughout the kingdom as "The dark spot upon the Mersey," and England was acknowledged to be the most drunken country in the world, with more poverty, pauperism, suffering, and crime coming from intemperance than any other. All this, notwithstanding the honest, earnest, and persistent endeavors of the government to diminish the evil, by the only remedy known at that time, to wit, stringent license laws.

Royal commissions were appointed to inquire into British intemperance, its cause and its cure. Elaborate reports were made of the results of their inquiries, but not one of them recommended the adoption of the only remedy of the tremendous evils of intemperance, viz.: the prohibition and suppression of the liquor traffic. Many earnest men in England turned their attention to this subject, as being more important than any other to the prosperity of the nation and the welfare of the people. Intemperance, with all its evils, was increasing in the country much more rapidly than the population. Pauperism, crime, insanity, and the expenses to the country growing out of them, were shown by the government Blue-books to be increasing with frightful rapidity.

English temperance men were startled by an announcement in the London Times, that the Legislature of Maine had reversed the policy of license to the liquor traffic, and had substituted for it the policy of prohibition; and the Times added, that if the State of Maine persisted in that policy, it would show better than any other thing could do that its people were qualified for self-government. A minister of the Society of Friends, from Maine, was in England at the time on a religious mission. When crossing George's Channel, on his way to Ireland, a Friend from Manchester inquired of the particulars of this extraordinary movement in Maine. As the result of that conversation, a meeting of seven persons, specially invited, was held in an upper room in Merchant's Exchange, Manchester, and a society was formed with the title, "The United Kingdom Alliance, for the Immediate Legal Prohibition of the Liquor Traffic." From that insignificant beginning, this society has become great, rich, and influential, having, through its parliamentary champion, Sir Wilfred Lawson, its President, obtained from the House of Commons, at three succeeding sessions, a declaration in favor of its proposition to remit to the people the right of prohibiting the liquor traffic in their several localities. Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Bright, and a majority of the Cabinet voted for it, and Mr. Gladstone, on the part of the government, promised to bring in a bill to give effect to the vote of the House.

It was only after a contest of more than twenty years that Sir Wilfred obtained this victory. At the first division he had only thirty votes, and at the last session of the late Parliament he was beaten by a majority of one hundred and twenty-seven. A general election followed, the question of prohibition being a leading issue, and at the first session of the new Parliament the adverse majority was changed to a victory by a majority of twenty-six votes. Mr. Low, an eminent member of Parliament, objected to prohibition on the ground that it was an interference with personal liberty. Many other leading members of the House followed his lead in opposition to the measure. Mr. Low attempted to make a distinction between vice and crime, and he maintained that as the liquor traffic was not a crime, it could not rightfully be prohibited by law.

About that time I was the guest of a gentleman in the suburbs of London, a warm friend of prohibition and a special friend of John Stuart Mill, who objected to it. My host wished me to meet Mr. Mill, and he was invited to the house. In the course of the conversation Mr. Mill said:

"Do you deny that people have a right to drink whatever they like and as much as they like, provided they do not interfere with the rights of others?"

"No, we do not deny that."

"Very well, then it follows that those who drink have a right to the establishment of places, or at least to the toleration of places, where they can obtain what they wish."

"I beg pardon, Mr. Mill, I do not think that follows. The liquor traffic does interfere with the rights of others in many ways, and to a greater extent than any other evil. If the persons who wish to drink can devise some way to obtain what they desire that is not inconsistent with the general good, we cannot object. The liquor traffic is a great public nuisance, a greater nuisance than any other; it inflicts a thousand mischiefs upon the community; and our contention is, that those who drink have no just claim to the toleration of places for their benefit, which, in fact, are a greater mischief to the community and a greater danger to the State than all other evils combined."

"But I do not see that the State has a right to interfere with the personal habits of the people so far as to prescribe what they may or may not eat or drink. Personal liberty should not be trenched upon under pretense of providing for the public good."

"Prohibition does not prescribe what persons may or may not eat or drink, though indirectly it seeks to put out of the way what persons may desire to drink. Prohibition deals with trade like a hundred other laws which prescribe what may or may not be sold, and the way in which things may or may not be kept for sale. The sale but not the use of unwholesome food is forbidden, and the keeping for sale of such food is prohibited under severe penalties. In 1832, when the cholera was in my country, all our city governments forbade the sale of certain articles of food which were always found in our markets in ordinary conditions of public health. These municipal regulations said not a word about the personal habits of the people as to food, but they forbade the sale of such articles as were deemed inconsistent with public health. In connection with this question of prohibiting the liquor traffic, a great deal is said in this country about personal liberty, and it is urged by able men, and even by lawyers, that the suppression of the traffic would be an arbitary exercise of despotic power; and it is insisted that it would be a violent interference with a great trade, involving a vast capital and employing a great many men, and affording means of subsistence to a great many people. The prohibition of the liquor traffic involves no principle of law and no exercise of power that are not found in many, if not in all our statutes. It is the duty, as it is the undoubted right, of government to require to be done whatever is necessary to the common good, and to forbid whatever is believed to be inconsistent with it. This objection to prohibition on the ground that it is inconsistent with personal liberty is never heard in my country among intelligent men. While we value personal, civil, and religious liberty as highly as any other people, we understand that there is really no such thing as a personal liberty that is inconsistent with the general good. 'The welfare, the safety of the people, is the supreme law.' That is a principle of law as thoroughly established in this country as it is in mine, and no person can claim any liberty whatever that is inconsistent with it. No one can do anything, or have anything, or be anything that is inconsistent with the general good. That is the 'supreme law.' There is no principle of law more firmly established than that. In every-day life, there are many illustrations of that principle carried out to the extremest limit. Taxes are inexorably required of us; our property is confiscated in that way to any extent that the authorities may choose to require. A man is brought up before the court, the case is heard, the verdict rendered; a forced contribution (fine) is levied upon him, which he must pay. Another is before the court, and after the hearing he is sent to jail for months, or for years, or for life, as the case may be. There is no plea put in for him that his personal rights are trenched upon. He is sent to jail because his personal liberty is inconsistent with the general good, and only for that reason. Another is before the court; the verdict is rendered; the judge says to the sheriff, hang this man, his life is inconsistent with the general good. Salus populi suprema lex."

Prohibition of any trade is an extreme measure, and cannot be justly resorted to except the public good requires it. Some trades are useful, but dangerous; others are useful but liable to abuse. These are regulated and restrained by license, by which it is sharply prescribed how they shall be conducted. The manufacture and sale and keeping for sale of gunpowder is one of the former; the keeping and driving carriages and carts for hire is one of the latter, and slaughter-houses are another. The manufacture and sale of obscene books and prints is inconsistent with the general good. It is not regulated and restrained by license, it is forbidden. Lotteries are forbidden. Gambling houses and houses of ill fame are forbidden. Many other things, not harmful in themselves, are forbidden under certain circumstances. A man may not drive his strong, fast horse rapidly through the streets of a city. Nor may any one set fire to his chimney and burn it out in any city; in the country he may do it. In order to determine, then, whether prohibition of the liquor traffic may be resorted to justly, it is only necessary to ascertain whether it is or is not consistent with the general good.

John Wesley said: "Liquor-sellers are poisoners general; they drive the people to hell like sheep; their gain is the blood of the people." Earl Chesterfield, in 1727, said, in the House of Lords, in a speech on the gin bill: "Vice, my lords, is not to be licensed, but forbidden. Instead of encouraging the sale of these liquors, which degrade and brutify the people, we ought to burst the phials that contain them, and repress the dealers in them,—those artists in human slaughter." Mr. Senator Lot M. Morrill said, on the floor of the United States Senate: "The liquor traffic is the gigantic crime of crimes" It inflicts upon society more evils than come from any other crime; more evils than come from all other crimes. No one, so far as I know, has ever denied that all this is true. Is there any compensating good coming from it to the state or people that should restrain us from resorting to prohibition?—Hon. Neal Dow, in North American Review.

A SALOON MOB.

MARSHALLTOWN, IOWA, July 15.—The result of an attempt to enforce the new prohibitory liquor law in this city nearly resulted in a riot this afternoon. Mrs. May Blank, who was keeping a beer saloon when the law went into effect on July 3, closed up business in common with the other twenty-seven saloon-keepers in the town. On Saturday she again commenced the open sale of beer. In the evening the crowd was so large that a perpetual struggle was kept up to get near the bar, and twenty-two kegs of beer were sold before the place was closed. A warrant against her was sworn out in a few days and the sheriff sought to serve it. As he entered the crowded saloon to make the arrest Mme. Blank drew a pair of navy revolvers and refused to be arrested. The sheriff retired, procured assistance, and made the arrest in defiance of a terrible resistance on the part of Mrs. Blank and the mob that had gathered. Revolvers were drawn, stones thrown, and a riot seemed for a time imminent, but the sheriff, protected by his deputies, placed his prisoner in jail. The mob gathered around the jail and threatened to tear it down unless the prisoner was released. She was held, however, till the necessary bonds had been given, when she was allowed to go. She was carried several times around the public square by the howling crowd, when it finally dispersed. It is said that there are many threats made against the lives and property of the informers. Marshall county gave 740 majority for the amendment.

THE CHURCHES.

—Rev. C. F. Hawley, the evangelist, is laboring in New York State with a gospel tent. He will visit Morley, in St. Lawrence county, during the latter part of the month.

—Bro. J. A. Richards, evangelist in Kansas, reports in the Wesleyan, a new church enclosed and ready for completion within at Topeka. Bro. Richards has lately suffered severely from rheumatism resulting from overwork and exposure.

—The Prince of Monaco, the only territory in Europe where gambling is legalized, arbitrarily forbids the circulation of the Bible and religious tracts.

—The Jewish Committee of the Free church of Scotland will begin a mission on the Sea of Galilee. Tiberias is the point selected.

—The Gospels have been translated into the Corean language through the efforts of Rev. M. Ross, a Presbyterian missionary.

—Rev. James S. Bradbrook, we learn, has retired from the editorship of Jerry McAuley's Paper of New York. He feels called to the direct ministerial work with the Free Methodist churches.

—The Moody and Sankey Mission in London has cost $75,000, and it is estimated that a million and a half of persons have heard the Gospel of Christ in its simplest form.

—The Rev. Dr. S. R. Wilson, of Louisville, Ky., has been called to supply the pulpit of the Washington Avenue Presbyterian church, St. Louis, during the absence of the pastor (the Rev. Dr. Brookes), whose impaired health renders it necessary for him to take a rest.

—The new Reformed Episcopal Theological Seminary which will be opened next December in Chicago will be the fifth theological school in this city. The library of the late Bishop Cummins, which is said to be extensive and valuable, has been offered for the use of the institution by Mrs. Cummins.

—The Baptist churches of Rochester, N. Y., in a union meeting, gave emphatic approval to the newly-organized Rochester Baptist Missionary Union, by raising $4,000 for mission work in the destitute parts of the city. A Baptist paper says: "It is proposed to erect five new chapels before the year closes, and this meeting was the beginning."

—An earnest effort to reach the masses with evangelical truth has been started in Germany. Dr. Theodore Christlieb, of the University of Bonn, and Court-preacher Stoecker, of Berlin, are taking great interest in it, and the work will be systematically prosecuted. Bible readers have been appointed to labor among the lower classes, and there will be preaching in concert-rooms and theatres.

—One of the interesting events in the evangelistic work of the present day is the effort, which has been largely successful, to reintroduce the Gospel into Noyon, France, the birthplace of John Calvin. The last trace of Protestantism has been banished from the place, and the great reformer's name cast out as evil; but a zealous Reformed pastor has begun an evangelistic work, and is not daunted by the opposition of the priests.

—The Rev. John B. Thompson, pastor of the Reformed (Dutch) church at Catskill, N. Y., has resigned to go to Berkeley, where the congregation is poor and the seating accommodations less than 150. In his letter of resignation Mr. Thompson says the Catskill church is prosperous spiritually and financially, while the Berkeley church appeals to him to deny the "enjoyments of luxuries" which the pastorate of the Catskill church confers. The Catskill people have just completed refurnishing the parsonage, and have offered Mr. Thompson $200 more a year to remain.

—Wah Sin Lee, a Chinaman, who has saved over $15,000 in the laundry business, has applied for admission to Cornell University. He says that he has been converted to Christianity, and that he intends to go out as a missionary to China.

—The inhabitants of Terra del Fuego, who had an unenviable repute at one time of being lower in the scale of civilization than any other people on the face of the earth, have now been so far brought under the influence of Christianity that there is in that region a church and regularly organized district, with schools, orphanage, Bible and mothers' meetings, and, indeed, the whole machinery of a parish.

—Large numbers of Esquimaux, it is said, are leaving their native land and settling in Alaska. The Moravians, who have so long and so nobly cared for the spiritual interests of Greenland, are taking steps to follow these emigrants to their new sphere, and to provide them with Gospel privileges.

—Mr. A. H. Kirkland, of the Adelphi gospel theater, has working with him Ferdinand Schiverea, a young Spaniard, who is doing effective work. He is one of Mr. Moody's earliest converts in Brooklyn. Before his conversion he led the life of a tramp, and had been a song-and-dance artist in a variety theater. He began street preaching on his own account, and was so successful that he attracted the attention of the Rev. Dr. Pentecost, who encouraged him and introduced him to a wider field.

—A new United Brethren church is being built on Thorn Apple Mission in Michigan, on a radical Gospel foundation. Subscriptions and donations are solicited with these conditions: "There shall be no instrumental music, no festivals of any kind, no donations or Christmas trees. Lectures on moral reform and singing-schools are to be allowed when conducted by religious persons in a religious manner, but no one who is a member of a secret society will be allowed to occupy the pulpit.

—The permanent Committee on Temperance, appointed by the Presbyterian General Assembly, make an appeal to the sessions of the several churches to give them a permanent place in their schedules of annual collections and offerings. The committee feel that they can appropriately use from five to six thousand dollars in the publication of facts and statistics on temperance work and their distribution among the churches. The secretary, Mr. D. M. Steiger, 58 Barclay street, New York, will be very glad to communicate with all who wish information on the subject.

—Twenty years ago the number of Protestants of all denominations in Paris was 15,000; the total is at present 44,000.

—Funds amounting to $85,000 have been contributed toward the erection of a German Evangelical church in Jerusalem.

—The Elkhorn Conference, Nebraska, of the United Brethren church adopted the following at its late meeting:

"Whereas, Secret societies have become very numerous, and with many very popular; and, Whereas, The Scriptures teach us to prove all things, and hold fast that which is good: and, Whereas, They decline all investigation, and do their work under oaths and solemn pledges, and inside guarded or bolted doors and darkened windows; and, Whereas, Masonry and Odd-fellowship claim to be religious institutions; therefore,

"Resolved, 1. That if so, their religion is only an anti-Christian religion.

"2. That every oath or obligation equivalent to an oath in entering these combinations of men is in violation of that Scripture which forbids us to forswear ourselves or to be unequally yoked together with unbelievers.

"3. That no Christian can innocently connect himself with such secret associations."

—During last year 2,104 persons, mostly Roman Catholics, joined the Evangelical church in Germany, being 200 more than in the previous year.

—Mr. Spurgeon was recently asked if he thought the world had grown better or worse since he came into it fifty years ago. He replied that he thought in some respects it was worse. "The struggle for life," he said, "is harder now, it is more difficult to make a living, and the destitution is more appalling, I think, than it has ever been." On the other hand there had been many improvements, especially in the direction of temperance. A class of men who were very numerous when he first came to London have now become extinct—those good and respectable gentlemen who never got drunk, but who were in the habit of getting tolerably mellow. He thinks there is also an improvement in the attitude of respectable people toward licentious literature. "Our grandmothers," he said, "read books which our daughters would be ashamed to open."

FROM THE INDIA WATCHMAN.

Some months since a converted Muhammedan, Joseph Mahomet, left Hyderabad for Madras. He entered upon vigorous Christian work there among the Muhammedans. His work was felt. He was educated and able in his defence and declaration of the claims of Jesus Christ. We regret to hear that he has been poisoned. Thus the enemies of Jesus Christ re-crucify their Lord in killing his disciple.

Major Tucker reports a very remarkable work among native Christians at Ahmedabad, Borsad and other places near. The figures seem almost extravagant. But making all possible allowances, there must have been a truly great work of God up there. May it continue to roll on till the ranks of the heathen are reached. Somewhere from 300 to 500 persons are said by Major T. to have given themselves to God in the few days concerning which report is made. The work began among Irish Presbyterian Mission people, and about 150 heathen had professed salvation in the first days of May.

We have more than once referred to the deceptive figures often quoted that 500,000 heathen in India have been converted. J. P. Meik of the Bengallee Methodist church, Calcutta, lately with a Christian band labored with much success for a few weeks among so-called Christians. He reports 140 soundly converted to God. Major Tucker reports some large figures from Ahmedabad, and they fall mostly in lines of former statistical reports. The editor of the Indian Witness, Calcutta, says he supposes the truth is that most of the native Christians of India need Christianizing. No doubt this is exactly the truth. But is it not time to stop reporting men and women converted to God till they are converted to God? Where is the profit of a heathen man's conversion to Christianity if it does not save his soul but still leaves him the child of the devil, an heir of hell? From the best evidences at hand there are not more than 100,000 converted natives in India, though missionaries report about 500,000 baptized Christians. They indicate the real truth when they register less than 100,000 communicants. There is too much wind and water in the current gospel in India, and far too little heavenly fire. Men, who at home would be scrupulous in regarding genuine conversion a necessary to baptism, in India baptize by the hundred on the merest intellectual credence. There is sad need of a return to New Testament religion and methods on the part of India missionaries.

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

PLAYING WITH SHAM TITLES.

A new organization is opened in New York with a ritual, regalia, passwords, and grand display of titles, in short the whole machinery of a secret lodge without the secrecy. On reading the following account from the American Review, the conclusion will be compelled that the folly of a secret obligation is becoming evident to some people, and that another step should be taken and drop the lodge machinery. It looks as if this society was planned for a trap to catch the Scandinavians who are generally opposed to secret societies:

NEW YORK, July 6, 1884.

EDITORS REFORMER: The Grand Temple of America of the Order of Templars is a new temperance organization, with total abstinence, prohibition and benevolent association as its features. It was incorporated Aug. 24, 1883, under the laws of the State of New York, and now has 24 subordinate and two District Temples, with a total membership of over 800, of whom 450 are subscribers to the life assurance fund. In this city and Brooklyn there are five Temples—Monitor, Kallan, Daniel, Charles XII. and Menneskevennes—with 275 members. There are also two strong subordinate Temples in Gothenburg, Sweden, and one in Copenhagen, Denmark. There are life insurance and sick benefit features, the first limited to $2,000, the last to be fixed by the District Temples.

This order differs from other temperance orders in the following respects:

1. No obligation of secrecy is required from members in any degree, believing that the temperance cause can be promoted as well, and each member be the proper judge of what to keep private, without such pledge.

2. Each Temple has the privilege of holding open business meetings, to which friends are invited, when so decided by a majority vote of the Temple.

3. The machinery of the order is simple, and there are no unnecessary titles.

4. Short ceremonies are used, and these may be omitted in certain cases, with the exception of the pledge.

5. The use of regalia or password is optional with each Temple, members having the right to use membership card instead, when preferred.

6. Card members admitted from other total abstinence organizations.

7. Dual Grand Temple charters granted foreign-born residents and citizens of this country, who, from a better knowledge of their language and customs, can prove they may become more successful by having their own Grand body, with jurisdiction only over those speaking such language, similar to the system now existing among the principal religious denominations and synods of this country.

8. Representation from subordinate to District Temples and from District to Grand Temple.

9. Subordinate Temples occupied entirely with temperance matters, as the sick fund is under entire charge of the District Temple, and the life insurance fund under the charge of the Grand Temple.

It has been given the name of an order because, like other orders, it issues charters and uses the same constitution, ritual and supplies for its subordinate bodies. It has adopted the best features of other organizations, such as the per capita tax, equal right of membership to male or female, the social and systematic feature of weekly meetings for encouragement and entertainment, etc. The members also believe in assisting each other in cases of sickness or distress, accident or death, or in obtaining employment; so that, while expending their time and money for temperance, they or their heirs are benefited thereby. The initiation fee, including admission to sick and life insurance fund, first assessment and certificate, averages from $2.50 to $3, assessments remaining with each Temple until called in by accident or death.

The Order of Templars was founded by and consists now entirely of Scandinavians and Finns, with all supplies printed in their own language; but the intention is, the order being now firmly established, to extend it among all people who favor the principles and features above stated.

The Executive Committee for the present year is: A. Peterson, G. Templar, 25 E. 7th st., N. Y. city; N. Olsson, G. Counsellor, 61 S. Washington sq., N. Y. city; E. Leuvgren, G. Vice-Templar, 3d ave. and 100th st., Chicago, Ill.; G. Sefbom, G. Secretary, 782 Fulton st., Brooklyn, N. Y.; Thor Halvorsen, G. Treasurer, 13 Market st., N. Y. city; L. Malm, G. Chaplain, Marblehead, Mass.; L. R. Edwards Hjortsberg, Past G. Templar, 354 2d ave., N. Y. city.

THE LODGE BLUNDERS AGAIN.

Rev. C. A. Blanchard, Pres. of Wheaton College, Ill., representative from the American party, was promised a hearing for fifteen minutes at the National Prohibition convention on Wednesday afternoon of last week. Shortly after he had commenced speaking, though he had said nothing offensive to anyone, as we heard it all, some rowdy delegates on the floor of the convention commenced hissing and making a disturbance and kept it up till Mr. Blanchard could not be heard, and was compelled to sit down, without finishing his address, that, so far as heard, was courteous, dignified, and gentlemanly. The devil of the lodge showed his claws and cloven foot and by his hisses revealed his serpent tongue and spirit most unmistakably. The boorish and ungentlemanly behaviour which representatives of that twin sister of American slavery, Freemasonry, displayed to Mr. Blanchard, and through him to tens of thousands of Christian men and women whom he represented, on that platform, was most insulting and entirely inexcusable. The blinded devotees of the secret empire demand and exercise free speech in saying all that is true, and much that is false, in favor of the Baal worship of the lodge and the secret craft which tries to hide its objectionable doings behind barred doors and in the midnight darkness; but at every opportunity they try to gag the freedom of speech that would even be suspected of saying anything adverse to the infallibility of the despotism which makes them its obedient tools and slaves. Be assured their conduct on this occasion, in keeping with that of others when they showed their mobocratic spirit, will neither give credit or profit to the craft. It was most emphatically condemned by many of those present. How much it helped to defeat the nomination of McDonald, the Mason, for President we do not know. The devil overdoes his business sometimes, and this seemed one of them. Masonic stock rapidly declined from this incident on to the end of the convention. It is well it did. A few more such displays of the lodge despotism may be necessary to open some people's eyes to the sad fact that no man affiliated with "the unfruitful works of darkness" in the secret lodge, with its ensnaring and cut-throat oaths, should receive the suffrages of any free people. He belongs to a foreign government. It sets up its laws as superior to those of our government. He cannot be truly loyal to both the United States government and that of the "Secret Empire" at the same time. Had these sir knights wanted to "get Blanchard out of the way" (Prohibition Banner) they could have done it decently, by listening to his address, and then letting the chairman make to it such reply as it and the occasion seemed to demand. But no, they were afraid of something being said questioning the infallibility of their most vulnerable secret associations and they wished to insult a Christian gentleman and a scholar, who had exercised a free man's right in this country in giving, on other occasions to his hearers, his own honest convictions of a great national evil. Their blackguardism will prove a boomerang to return and strike down those that hurled it. They did what they could to break the promise of the convention to give a representative of a young reform party a courteous hearing; and the servile city press which connived at the outrage, by not rebuking this dastardly conduct through their reports of the proceedings, deserve the censure of every lover of fair play and free speech in the country.—Sandy Lake News, Pa.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.
In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."
The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

HOLDEN WITH CORDS,

OR THE POWER OF THE SECRET EMPIRE. A faithful representation in story of the evil influence of Freemasonry, by E. E. FLAGG, author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story, accurately true to life because mainly a narration of historical facts. 384 pages. In cloth, $1; per doz., $9. Paper, 50c; per doz., $4.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"There is no important history extant but has connected with it numerous other histories of which it was the initial point, or the dominating influence. The abduction and murder of Morgan set ten thousand secret springs in motion, as the surrender of the charters of so many lodges at that time, and the severing of their connection with the order of some forty thousand of its members indicated. This story is one of these histories, and is a collection of facts woven into a story. It cannot fail to be read with interest."—Free Methodist, Chicago.

"The republication of the Reform Story which run through the columns of the Cynosure for nearly a year is at last completed, and the book so anxiously expected by thousands of our readers has come from the press of Ezra A. Cook. The book is finely bound and fairly introduces the reader to the treasures within. The publisher has made occasional selections from Masonic works to verify the statements of the text; these make a helpful addition for some who can afford no more complete an armory of this kind."—Christian Cynosure.

"Our Anti-secret society friends are certainly entitled to great credit for their persistence in their efforts to expose and root out secretism. The object of the writer of this story is to present in its true light the crafty, unscrupulous and exceedingly hurtful influence of Masonry, the parent of all the orders."—Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter.

"In an incidental way the story tells much about the manner of conducting lodges and much about the spirit and methods of Masonry. The story covers the period of the abduction and murdering of William Morgan. The strategic position from which the author writes put a charm in the book, while it gives a good opportunity to show the workings of the order. We wish all the people would read it."—Telescope.

"It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."—Lutheran Standard, Columbus, O.

"The exciting scenes of the fall of 1826, at Batavia, N. Y., when Wm. Morgan was murdered by Masonry, are woven into the story so as to give the truth of History a setting of attractiveness. The forty chapters of the volume are soon compassed by the eager reader who begins the volume. This volume ought to be read and will be sought as its merits become known."—United Brethren in Christ.

THIS is a pleasant surprise in many ways. The author is Rev. W. T. Meloy, of the United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and the book is published by the Board of Publication of his denomination. It is a love story, not "fascinating," but with so much of genial interest that the reader is in no danger of laying it down unfinished. * * * The moral purpose of the book is to describe and vindicate Christian character, in its more heroic aspects, and it is a success. We congratulate the author and the United Presbyterian Board of Publication on this literary lily of the valley.—The Interior.

"LUCILLE VERNON" is evidently not an ideal sketch, but the fictitious names used represent to a great extent real men and women of flesh and blood. The characters of many of them are by no means attractive, but are perfect counterparts of querulous, obstinate and parsimonious professors who are thorns in the flesh of many a pastor in all the churches. But as in all the churches, there were also good and true men and women at Lansington, who upheld and encouraged the pastor. * * * In its author will be recognized the worthy pastor of the First United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and a welcome contributor to these columns.—United Presbyterian.

IT belongs to the class known as the religious novel. It is a love story written in the Pansy style, and so constructed as to teach sound moral and religious principles, in connection with quite an interesting narrative. Indeed, when the writer sat down to examine it, he commenced as a critic on the sharp lookout for blunders, but soon he became absorbed in the story, and forgot altogether his critical duties. He also noticed that when the members of his family commenced to read it, they had but little time for anything else until it was completed. Tried as a work of art by the practical test, it must be regarded as a success. Its influence will doubtless be good in correcting false views, and in helping the reader to sounder principles and to a better spirit. * * * Some may think some of the scenes depicted are not true to nature, but the critic would be likely to find, on inquiry, that the very incidents which he would select as unnatural are actual facts. "We often find that truth is stranger than fiction."—D. A. W. in the Christian Instructor.

The heroine, who becomes the bride of the pastor of the church at Lansington, is a wonderful exemplification of how a woman who is a true wife and help-meet may throw her life and energies into the great work of saving souls; aiding, by gentle words and sympathy, wise counsel and brave endurance, the husband having charge of a congregation where the Demon of Misrule held full sway. We follow with interest the history of the wife and husband through their hours of despondency and discouragement to the happy ending, where religion, harmony and peace have gained the ascendency and the good man and wife find their reward.—Pittsburgh Daily Telegraph.

HOME HINTS.

CHANGING THE COLOR OF FLOWERS.

It has for a long time been known that the color of growing flowers can be altered by simply mixing a little dyestuff with the mold in the flowerpot. No one, however, has hitherto thought of changing the color of flowers when out. A distinguished botanist has found that by simply soaking the stems of cut flowers in a weak dye solution their color can be altered at will without the perfume or richness being destroyed. Most beautiful effects are produced by preparing lakes. Singular to say, flowers refusc to absorb certain colors, while they dispose of others in different manners. If placed in a mixed solution they make a complete analysis, and some lilies which have been treated with purple showed distinct red and blue veins, the colors having been divided in the process of absorption.

CANNING FRUIT.

We find the following in an exchange: We would not advise any one to trust any great amount of fruit in the way described, but some may be interested to try it as an experiment. The scientific experimenters with germs, and their entrance to various solutions have used cotton successfully as a germ trap, but if you try it with fruit and fail do not blame us. The following is the exultant note of our exchange:

"No more breaking of glass jars by putting hot sauce into them; no more wrestling with covers that won't screw down tightly, or that being screwed down won't unscrew: no more disappointment in finding when you open a jar that the cover did not fit tight and the contents are spoilt. Use stone jars, bowls, mugs, or any earthen or stone dish you may happen to have, fill them with the berries or fruit while it is boiling hot, and prepared the same as for putting in the patent preserve jars, cover immediately with one thickness of cotton batting, fastening it on with a string or good rubber band and the work is done, and your preserves will keep as long and as well, and even better than if put up in the best glass fruit jars. Use cotton batting such as comes in blue papers. A roll costing only a few cents will cover one hundred or more jars. It is only necessary to remember that all putrefaction is caused by the invisible animal life floating in the air. Heat destroys all that are in the fruit and they can't pass through the fuzzy cotton. One of our exchanges has berrics that have been kept two years in this way.

THE DEADLY KISS.

"Remcmber," said a Detroit physician to his wife as he was leaving homc for a few days, "and do not let the children kiss any one."

"Is it possible," asked a surprised third party who was present, "that you consider it necessary to give such instructions as that? Where is the danger?"

Said the doctor: "In my case all kinds of peoplc come to my house and office to consult me and they often wait hours. If one of my children happens to come in they are almost certain to talk to it, and you know almost the first impulse with people who notice children is to kiss them. Bah! it makes me shudder—tainted and diseased breaths, lips blue with cancer, foul and decayed teeth. You would kill a stranger who would waylay your young lady daughter and kiss her by force, but thc helpless, innocent, six-year-old child, susceptible as a flower to every breath that blows, can be saluted by every one who chances to think of it. I tell you it wasn't Judas alone who betrayed with a kiss. Hundreds of lovely blooming children are kissed into their graves every year."

"But, doctor, how can a mother be so ungracious as to refuse to allow people to notice her children?"

There need be no ungraciousness about it. Let a mother teach her child that it is not a kitten or a lap-dog to be picked up and fondled by every stranger, and instruct it to resist any attempt to kiss it. Why, there are agents, peddlars of household wares, who make it a custom to catch up a prattling child, kiss and pet it, and so interest the mother that she will buy something she docs not want. I tell you there is death in the kiss. Thc belovcd and lamented Princess Alice, of Hesse, took diphtheria from the kiss of her child, and followcd it to her grave. Diphtheria, malaria, scarlet fever, blood poison, and death lurk in these kisses!" And waving his hand the doctor drove away.—Detroit Free Press.

BY H. M. HUGUNIN.

This new and attractive volume is now ready. It is composed of thirty nine chapters on nearly as many topics. Neatly bound in cloth with gilt stamp. Price 60 cents.

The Chicago Evening Journal of May 3, says:

The author of this little volume, for many years a working editor of the EVENING JOURNAL, has here presented us with a variety of topics of a religious character. Among the number we note "The Evils of the Sunday Newspaper," "The Divine Sanction of Church Organizations," "The Good Work and Government of Sunday-Schools," "The Bible in our Public Schools," "Fallacies of the 'Evolution Theory,'" "Chronology—The Age of the World," and "Labor and Laborers." Mr. Hugunin writes as an independent thinker, untrammeled by denominational alignments. His style, however, is marked by the vigor of earnestness and sincerity, and with these characteristics, and with a close adherence to Bible Christianity, his book becomes a suggestive aid to evangelical workers. In discussing the topics above named, as in others, he deals consistently with questions of public interest and great importance in the reform of individual and social evils.

IN BRIEF.

General Rosecrans has made a record for himself in the late Congress by introducing more bills than any other member of the House, heading the list with 160, writes a Washington gossiper. Vance, of North Carolina, comes second, being the author of 120 bills. Although over 8,000 bills and joint resolutions have been introduced this session, there are thirty members who have not presented so much as a petition. About two per cent of the bills introduced become laws, but it costs nearly half a million dollars every year to print those which lie forever in the pigeon holes. There has been so much scandal over printing speeches that were never delivered that an attempt is being made to have the practice prohibited. There ought to be another reform in the shape of a rule prohibiting the presenting of the same bill twice, as about half of those introduced have been before previous Congresses, and some have been printed many times.

Evidently there is yet much to be learned about ocean steamers. The fastest first trip yet across the Atlantic has been made by the new steamer America. She is constructed after the fashion of the old-time American clipper ships, with no part of her hull in a straight line. The steamer Oregon, having the fastest record, made its trip only five hours shorter than the America, but at a cost of 337 tons of coal daily, while the America consumed only 190 tons, a daily difference of 147 tons, while the workmen employed was 28 less on the America. The difference of expense was $450 a day, or $75,000 a year, in favor of the America. The engines of the Oregon are 16,000 horse-power, those of the America less than 9,000, showing the vast superiority of her model.

In countries where earthquakes are common, it is said that animals give warning of the coming danger. Some minutes before the shock is felt oxen and cows begin to bellow, sheep and goats bleat loudly, and dogs howl. Horses in the stall leap up and down, trying to break their halters, while those on the road stop suddenly and snort in a strange way. Rabbits and moles have been seen to leave their holes, and fishes approach the shore. When the great earthquake occurred in the Island of Ischia, about a year ago, some people who were asleep were enabled to save their lives by being pulled by their faithful dogs, who barked wildly just before the shock took place.

One of the best things Arthur has done since he became President was his vetoing the bill by which Gen. Fitz John Porter would have been restored to his standing in the army. There is no doubt in our mind that Porter richly deserved to be cashiered and disgraced for his culpable conduct at the Second Bull Run battle. If he was not on that occasion a traitor, his conduct proved him either a coward or an insubordinate officer, or both. There is in our town a man who served in the Potomac army as a bearer of dispatches, who tells us he knew of Porter refusing to move his army at the command of his superior officer on another important occasion. On a certain dark and stormy night, our townsman, Mr. I J. Harrison, was sent to Porter's headquarters near Yorktown, Va., with orders, the purport of which was to move his men that night, but which Mr. H. says Porter with a terrible oath utterly refused to do. The copperhead press of the country may raise their howl about the injustice done Porter in vetoing this bill, but the patriotic people who lost friends in that defeat of Pope, through the dastardly act of Porter in refusing to come to his help when ordered to do so, will conclude that the court martial which tried the case and Abraham Lincoln who approved its verdict twenty years ago, knew the facts and were about as capable of deciding on the merits of the man as the partizan press or Congress now, that would put black for white by restoring to his rank an officer who, had he been dealt with according to the laws of war in most other countries, would have been shot.—Sandy Lake News.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

POLITICAL.

—The Rev. William M. Thayer of Franklin, Mass., a prominent Eastern Prohibitionist, has written an open letter to ex-Governor St. John, in which he protests against the latter's action as a bolter from the ranks of the Republican party on the ground that by so doing he sacrifices every Republican principle for which he has fought for a score of years, simply because he has lost one of those principles, namely, the refusal of the Republican convention to advocate constitutional prohibition.

—The Republican Congressional Convention of the Ninth Indiana District, held at Frankfort, Thursday, unanimously passed a resolution presented by Mrs. Helen M. Gougar, that an amendment to the National Constitution, enfranchising women, be submitted to the several States of the Union.

—A conference of Democrats, Labor Reformers, Greenbackers, Anti-Monopolists, Socialists and others opposed to the nomination of Governor Cleveland, was held in this city Friday night. A committee was appointed to confer with the various dissenting elements with a view to a grand demonstration at an early day.

COUNTRY.

—By the school census, which is reasonably reliable, Chicago now has a population of 629,985; in round numbers, 630,000. The growth in two years has been something like 69,000.

—United States Representative William W. Culbertson of Kentucky, shot himself at his room at the National Hotel, Washington, last Wednesday, and is lying in a critical condition.

—Four daughters of Nathan Miller, residing near Marysville, Kan., were killed by lightning while sleeping early Wednesday morning.

—Yellow fever is spreading in Sonora, Mexico, and extra vigilance is urged at Arizona points to prevent its entrance into the United States.

—A sensation has been caused at Omaha by the Chief of Police issuing an order that any woman appearing in the streets wearing a Mother Hubbard dress be arrested and lodged in jail.

—By the burning of a building at New York Friday morning a child perished in the flames, and four persons were fatally burned. The financial loss is $55,000.

—At her residence in Cincinnati, Wednesday morning, Mrs. Upmeier assisted her boy in breaking open a six-pound rocket by striking it with a hatchet. The explosion which followed mortally wounded the woman and her little daughter, injured two children and wrecked the premises.

—A panic prevails among the workmen on the railway bridge at Needles, Cal., a strange sickness having made its appearance among them. Taken suddenly with dizziness, they fall unconscious. Two died in great agony and fourteen others are in the hospital.

—The narrow-guage bridge over the White River, near Worthington, Ind., collapsed under a passenger train, the cars falling into the stream. Two persons were instantly killed and a number more or less injured.

—The wife of Colonel Phelps, Town Clerk of Fairfield, Mich., got intoxicated in public, which so humiliated the Colonel that he committed suicide early Monday morning.

—In attempting to perform a "circus act," Henry A. Shaffer, a little boy, hanged himself in his father's barn near Delphi, Ind.

—A boy named Bentley, 12 years old, fell from a flag-staff seventy-five feet to the ground at Flint, Mich., Thursday, but was not fatally injured.

—The Grand Central Depot at Cincinnati, which cost $800,000, was opened Thursday night by a reception to President Ingalls by the Order of Cincinnatus.

—The explosion of a lamp resulted in a fire which destroyed nearly the whole business portion of Hot Springs, Ark., early Thursday morning. The loss is $65,000.

—The lessees of the State Penitentiary of Arkansas received notice from the citizens of Pope County to take the convicts out of the coal mines there within ten days. The people are determined not to let the convicts work in the county. Six convicts have barricaded themselves in one mine and refused to come out. The guards are afraid to go in after them.

—The fish in one of the lakes at Madison, Wis., principally perch, are dying at the rate of scores of tons daily. Great quantities are being washed to the shore, and the city authorities have employed a large gang of laborers and are carting the fish outside the city limits and burying them in the sand banks. Although tons are thus removed daily the quantity does not seem to be lessened.

—The back part of the United States Hotel Building, situated on Pennsylvania avenue a short distance west of the National Capitol, fell in without warning Sunday evening and buried in the ruins a number of people. Up to 2 o'clock Monday morning two of the inmates had been taken from the ruins slightly injured, and five more (all servants) are still missing.

FOREIGN.

—A mild case of cholera was reported in one of the Paris hospitals. The epidemic is on the decline at Marseilles and Toulon, and declared scarce at Arles and Aix.

—Henry M. Stanley, the African explorer, arrived at Plymouth, England, last week. When he left the Congo country he was suffering badly from bronchitis, but was much benefited by the sea voyage.

—The crew of the Julia Baker, owned by Warner & Barrett, of Philadelphia, are reported to have mutinied in West Indian waters, killed the captain, and disposed of portions of the cargo. Under instructions the alleged captain of the craft and four of his men have been arrested at Key West.

—Under the law soldiers of Mexico are permitted to kill persons who resist arrest, or, after being captured attempt to escape. The revolutionary forces in Guerrero were recently attacked, and General Pinzon, with six soldiers, who were taken prisoners, were killed while attempting to escape. Two general officers were also killed in Yucatan, and one in the town of Merelia.

—The Mundir of Dongola in the Soudan telegraphs that a report has reached that city that General Gordon has captured Berber. The Mundir, on receipt of the news, sent an official to Debbah to ascertain the truth of the report.

—The London Times has received from Alexandria the following translation of an Arabic telegram, dated Dongola, July 25: "The Mudir, with two battalions of Bashi Bazouks, a detachment of mounted infantry, some guns, and 4,000 armed volunteers, attacked and defeated a rebel Sheikh named Ahmet el Hoda, who was entrenched in the Ambukol District among the ruins in the mountains. The rebels were driven completely out of the Province, and Dongola is now safe and tranquil. A messenger from Gordon has arrived with a letter for the Mudir, and is awaiting a reply.

—St. Petersburg dispatches say that a priest at Witepsk led a mob to an attack on the houses of the Jews at that place. The military dispersed the mob and made several arrests. The priest escaped. Thirty deaths at Pleskoff from the Siberian plague. The villages of Rybatzkoge and Smolenskoge, near St. Petersburg, have been destroyed by fire.

—It is reported that France and China have made a treaty of peace, China to pay France an indemnity of 5,200,000 taels (about $7,280,000). Later dispatches from Foo Chow assert that the general impression is in that city that war between China and France is inevitable. China has refused to pay the indemnity demanded by France. The time granted China by France to decide upon the matter has been prolonged beyond August 1. A secret edict has been issued ordering the Chinese not to molest the foreigners. The French civilians and the Mandarins, however, aver that the lives of the foreigners are not safe. An English flagship is landing sailors to act in defense of the foreigners. The excitement in the city is intense. Everything points to the immediate beginning of hostilities.

The interest of friends in the political contest is evident from the clubs received for the campaign Cynosure.

Our old and tried friend, James Kennedy, sends in a club, and writes that the crying need of the day is light on the great moral, religious, and political reforms of the day.

"And I know of no paper so well qualfied for this good work as the Christian Cynosure.

"I esteem it above all other papers of the kind."

Remember that $1.00 will supply four of your neighbors until after election.

A Wonderful Woman, A Wonderful Life, AND A Wonderful Book.

Laura S. Haviland is a quiet, gentle, unassuming Quaker woman, 76 years of age, yet vigorous, who has had a remarkable career of usefulness, and has now given to the world a remarkable history of her "Life Work" as a teacher, at an early day, of the colored refugees in Canada and in Michigan, and in other States, as a traveler down South in the guise of a "berry picker," helping out into freedom many slaves; as a nurse and preacher to the sufferers in hospitals during the war; and with Gov. St. John and Elizabeth Comstock, relieving the destitute and suffering refugees in Kansas, etc.

Her book is neither fiction nor founded on fiction, but is an interesting narration of facts of a most thrilling character, as every one will find and testify who will get and read her book, now on sale at the Cynosure office, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill. Price, cloth, $1,75; half Russia, $2.25.

BEFORE SEPTEMBER 1ST

There should be redoubled effort for new subscribers so that none may lose the opening chapter of the new reform story by the author of "Holden with Cords." The tempting offer of four papers for a dollar until after election is just the thing to get the names. The more diligence now, the more you get for your money.

The Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America held its annual convention in Chicago last week. Great crowds were out at night, while during the day the papers report but a hundred or two. The Union represents 612 societies with 39,440 members. It is carefully watched over by the prelates of the church, as two archbishops, several bishops, and a number of priests attended the convention, and the applause that greeted them reached a degree bordering on servility. Bishop Ireland of Minnesota, made an able speech, in which he vindicated legal measures, honored the total abstinence pledge, and Jesus Christ the Saviour and helper of men in their troubles; but in another speech by the Bishop in a pamphlet left in each seat, he advocates high license, and the convention next day after a long wrangle voted down a prohibition resolution. While the convention was a heavy blow at Carter Harrison's ambition, there was manifestly a careful avoiding of snags. Bishop Ireland said the Catholic clergy had much to do with the evils of drink. Too many Catholics were in the liquor business and found it an easy way of making a living. It would not be so if they could not buy the license of the priest as well as of the town.

Stanley, the African explorer, has returned to England with the satisfaction of having completed the work of establishing trading stations along the Congo river. Thus another great work of the African International Association is finished. These trading stations will each form a depot of supplies for travelers and a base for missionary operations, which are welcomed by the Association as a legitimate part of its work for the civilization of Africa. The messengers of the Cross are recognized and will not be elbowed aside for the sake of traffic. William Taylor, African bishop by call of God, rather than by vote of the Methodist General Conference, is rejoicing in the conquests of faith which are certain to follow. But we doubt if he finds the fifty million people in the interior of Africa already living in a state of civilization of whom he speaks in such sanguine terms. Had the entrance of civilization into India and China been begun with such a recognition of the claims of Christianity, the converts to the true faith in those densely peopled regions might have been millions where now they are thousands. War and the opium trade are missionaries of the devil. In India to this day the missionaries are impeded and even prohibited by agents of the British government.

Stanley says, moreover, that General Gordon has yet several ways of escape from Khartoum either by way of Zanzibar on the east coast, or of the Congo to the west. The routes traversed by Schweinfurth, Samuel and Lady Baker, and the Italian and Austrian missionaries would be perfectly feasible for Gordon, a soldier, traveler and explorer. But the sending of a large English force to the rescue of Gordon, Stanley believes an unwise and perilous undertaking, attended by great loss and expense. Gladstone's request for £300,000 for such an expedition Parliament granted with little opposition the other day. Any movement of the kind is popular in England, although few understand the real difficulties surrounding the whole Soudan question.

The secret labor unions have at length a mission of some importance. They have undertaken to defeat the Republican party. Their conference with Mr. Blaine did no good because Whitelaw Reid of the New York Tribune refused to give the control of his paper to these lodges. They visited also the Republican National Committee who promised to give no patronage to the Tribune if the union printers would vote the Republican ticket. But their promise not being in the nature of a bond, the lodgemen threaten to carry the war into the tall tower of the paper founded by Horace Greeley, and use all their political influence to reduce Mr. Blaine's majority. If the labor lodges hang together, the printers may drag them all away from the Republican ranks, especially if Butler begins an active campaign. It is worth noting that the two leading Republican papers of the East, the New York Tribune and the Philadelphia Press, are both non-union offices, and a merciless war is being waged upon them, especially the former. The New York printers publish a little paper called the Boycotter, which does little else than fly at the Tribune, like the gnat at the lion. The stings are said to worrying the great paper, just at the time when Blaine needs its best endeavors.

Upon the report that the Republican committee had yielded to the demand of the union printers, the Inter Ocean of this city had a brief editorial that is worth preserving as showing the just and reasonable indignation of candid men at the insolence of the lodge—and the Inter Ocean itself employs the union printers: "The truth is that the stand Whitelaw Reid has taken in this matter is to be commended, and the bullying disposition manifested by the trades union has not added to their character nor increased their influence. The rights of labor should be respected, and fought for if necessary, but this thing of trying to terrorize men just because they do not do what some little star-chamber council decrees they shall do is not protecting the rights of labor at all. The Tribune is not the only non-union printing office in the country. Why doesn't the trades union take up the case of the Chicago Times? Mr. Storey kicked the union out of that office five years ago, and the paper has had nothing to do with it since. The union tried to prevent the County Treasurer from giving the Times the fat job of printing the tax-list a year ago, but the County Treasurer, who was a Democrat, refused to comply with their request. He knew that nearly all the loud-mouthed fellows in the crowd were Democrats, and would vote the Democratic ticket anyhow. We presume the New York Tribune wants no patronage from the committee, but the committee have added nothing to their dignity by promising not to give it, nor have they in all probability increased the Republican vote. They have done a cowardly thing, which, if it could have any influence in any way, would be to diminish Mr. Blaine's vote. Everybody knows that Mr. Reid is one of Mr. Blaine's most intimate friends, and should he be elected and have patronage for a newspaper Mr. Reid will get it."

THE GENERAL OF THE JESUITS says "Secret societies bring ruin to Christian states." This is true; and it is also true that the Jesuits are the head secret society of the world. "The Holy Catholic church" existed 450 years before there was a pope; and fifteen centuries before Ignatius Loyola formed the Society of Jesuits which now runs the church of Rome. If the illiteracy of the United States can be taught to read, and the average Catholic be brought to see that "The Holy Catholic church" is one thing and Jesuitism another, our country may be saved and our race redeemed. This is precisely the mission of the National Christian Association and of the American party.

THE SECRET LABOR UNIONS are at war among themselves, wrangling for the money paid by deluded laborers to the secret insurance companies and the myried secret swindling societies, which live on the idolatry and credulity of the masses. It was their quarrels among themselves, and perhaps the bribery of their leaders by the two old parties, which broke up the secret Labor Unions' Convention in Chicago, July 30th. Four factions were on the ground to get possession of that convention, which fell through. The greatest victories gained by Israel over the idolaters were gained by dissentions among the heathen worshipers themselves; their swords being turned against each other.

"CONTRACT LABOR," like all monopoly-corporate schemes, is then only wrong when it oppresses free laborers by unfair competition. The state has no right to support prison convicts by taxing mechanies who are honest men; and sell the wages made by those convicts for $50 each, to the ruin of wagon-makers outside, at whose expense the conviets are, in part, boarded, and who cannot afford to sell wagons short of $85 each. So of other sorts of mechanism; and so of contract Chinese labor. The company imports the laborers who are glad to work, say, at a shilling a day. This depresses the American laborers in the vicinity, and such companies should be abated. But to prohibit immigration, Chinese or other, to this country, is to reverse American principles, and legislate against humanity.

LODGERY AND INFIDELITY.

A PERSONAL EXPERIENCE.

BY REV. J. D. GEHRING.

The Cynosure is getting to be, more and more, a power in the land. Its pages are always filled with useful and instructive reading, and nearly all the correspondents know how to "stick to the text." One of the best things placed before its readers lately is Rev. J. T. Michael's "Reply to E. F. Crane's Defence of Freemasonry." I do like to see these "Reverend" Hiramites made to dance to their own tune. After a while they may be able to see that their ignorance, as well as their blatant misrepresentations, are no longer at par in this country.

I well remember the night when I was initiated into the "E. A. Degree" in Constantine, Mich., and the "shock" I received—not at the "enlightenment," but at the close of the ceremony. I had been told that only a good man could be a Mason, and, though I did not believe it, I was surprised to find among the waiting Master Masons in the ante-chamber several of the most outspoken infidels to be found in that town, and among them all not one whom I could have greeted as a brother in Christ; yet they greeted me as a "brother!"

Well, I thought about that and some other things when I arrived at home. My wife and little ones had already retired. I was glad of that, and I was surprised at myself for being glad, and therein had another thing to think about. "Why did I feel that way? Could it be that I was ashamed to look my wife in the face? Had I done anything wrong or unmanly?"

Gradually it began to dawn upon me that at least some of the performances I had taken an active part in were rather hard on ministerial dignity—especially in the presence of a crowd of mocking infidels. This feeling of distrust and dawning disgust went with me to the "eloset of prayer." There I began to realize, fully and bitterly, that my evening's experience was utterly out of harmony with the spiritual life of a Christian. I conld not pray as usual. Something seemed to hide the "Throne of Grace" from me. I began to feel as though I had a very serious "unpleasantness" to settle before I could approach God with confidence and freedom. I tried to ask God to bless the step I had taken in Masonry, but my conscience would not allow me to utter the words—indeed I went to bed that night a very confused and unhappy preacher. But I had concluded never again to visit the lodge; and that resolution restored my peace and healed my wounded conscience.

It is a custom almost universally followed by Masonic lodges (in this country at least) to admit clergymen without the payment of the usual degree fees. Several snch were members of the lodge in C. when I joined, and I was informed that none of them had paid a money fee. I sent in my fee ($7.00) with my application, and it was not returned to me. I wondered why this was, and one day asked the Master of the lodge for an explanation. I wanted to know why I was made an exception to the rule. It didn't look like an act of charity, nor even of justice, for I was a poor man and a crippled soldier, and some of the other clergymen were abundantly able to pay their fees.

The "Master" tried to evade the point by saying that it was "now the rule to admit clergymen just like other men." I wanted to know why they made me the first subject of the rule. Thus closely pressed, and losing his temper and his "jewel," he informed me that the fact was they didn't care whether preachers joined or not—a little rather they would stay out—for they had caused the fraternity about all the trouble they ever had on account of their tendency—or propensity—to turn traitors.

Previous to this conversation the same man had given me another "eye-opener:" I called upon him one day in his shop. He was working at a wooden cross. As I was examining it he informed me that it was a "Knight Templar cross."

"That's where you ought to be,' he added.

"Why?" I asked.

"Because you believe in the cross and in Christ, and that degree doesn't interfere with that belief."

He himself was a K. T., but an infidel. Two, at least, of the ministerial members of that lodge were also Knights Templar, and had, therefore, partaken of the devil's wine cup with confirmed infidels, covenanting with them to do and to perform that which was far from their hearts and from their intentions: viz., to espouse the cause, and to defend the cross of Christ.

Another K. T. and thirty-two degree Mason, who lived in the same place, was notoriously outspoken in his bitter opposition to the cause of Christ. He was at one time Grand Master of Masons for the State of Michigan. This man is a living, standing proof against the assertions of the Baptist preacher E. F. Crane; for, to snch an extreme does his hatred of the Gospel carry him that he would never allow one of his children to hear a sermon or to attend a religious service.

It may be, or is probably true, that many Masons, as individuals, are "warm friends of the Gospel," but that the great majority—even in this land of Gospel Light and Liberty—are open and active enemies of Christ and his Gospel, is most emphatically true also; and that the Masonic institution, as a system, is utterly at variance with, and unrelentlessly opposed to, the religion of Christ and the glory of his cross, no one knows so well as those who have passed the higher degrees in Masonry. They cannot pass those degrees without studying the system, with its symbolism and tradition and philosophy. They are, almost without exception, men of more than ordinary intelligence and mental culture. Hence if they pass on and up in Masonry they must either let go of the Gospel, regarding it as a false and foolish philosophy, fit only for women and children and idiots, or they must act the part of the most consummate hypocrites. I can find no alternative.

Park College, Mo.

A Total Abstinence Lodge.—We see in a home paper that the Prince of Wales has consented to issue a warrant for the creation of a Total Abstinence Masonic Lodge in London. We fully believe Masonic lodges anywhere on the face of the earth are worse than a fifth wheel to a carriage. But where they do exist it would be a matter of joy to thousands of wives and children that they were total abstinence. We have had the fortune to be at one time or another in close proximity to about a dozen Masonic lodges, and in every case the drinking propensities gratified on lodge night have made it a downright shame to any Christian to be on hand. We would recommend His Royal Highness to do some warranting for India soon.—The India Watchman.

THE MISSIONS OF WESTERN ASIA.

Ada Bazar, 4th Jnly, 1884.

A special conference was held at Constantinople, May 21st. The members about twenty-two in number, of whom one half were missionaries of the American Board and one half American pastors from various parts of Western Turkey. There were also a goodly nnmber of corresponding members. The chief subject of consideration was the Marsovan Theological Seminary. The majority of the members have expressed their opinion in favor of its removal to Constantinople. A committee of seven was appointed both from the missionaries and Armenians, including one Greek evangelist, in order to correspond with the Prudential Committee in Boston and gain their approval.

The Bithynia Union held its annual meeting at Constantinople, May 28th to June 13th. This Union inclndes the evangelical churches of Bithynia and Constantinople and vicinity. The sessions were interesting and profitable. Among the most important questions considered was the question of co-operation. A plan was proposed by the missionaries showing how and in what work can the missionaries and the natives co-operate. Most of our leading men do not believe that any satisfactory plan can be produced while the Board continues or remains to be a close corporation. They agree in the principle of co-operation, but they find difficulties in its application. But the Union has adopted it with certain amendments and resolved to give it a trial, at least for one year; and I believe that sincere love on both sides will hide all the defects of the plan. For my part the exigencies of these new-born churches are so great, and having no other source of help in their great poverty, I am content with any reasonable plan that the missionaries prefer.

The present situation of Turkey is more hindering than helping the cause of the Gospel. Of all other communities the Protestants are the greatest sufferers. In addition to their snfferings in general, they suffer persecution. One of our Greek brethren, a member of the church, has been turned out of his own house; being also separated from his wife for nearly three years on account of his religious principles. He bears the trial in a becoming spirit. The relatives of his wife, and their nation have labored in every way to protract the separation and thus force her husband back to their church. The husband appealed in vain to the Turkish law. His enemies being influential men prevented the execution of justice in the case. This is very trying, but we can only cry out with the Psalmist, "O let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end. Arise, O Lord, plead thine own cause."

Our church received an addition to its numbers four new members, all of whom for the first time confessed their faith in the Savionr. A quiet work of grace is in progress in the Armenians of this town.

A PROBLEM OF TO-DAY.

BY ELDER NATHAN CALLENDER.

Is the prohibition question the paramount one?

A large proportion of the reformers of the day so understand it, but this does not establish it as a fact. That the prohibition question has come most fully to the surface and is the most conspicuous of the moral problems that deeply concern us as a people, is not questioned. A sin that has become national, and hurls a hundred thousand victims, annually, to a drunkard's grave—a drunkard's doom in hell, while it entails untold evils npon 50,000,000 of people, demands the uprising of this whole people to crush the monster evil. No one can deny this.

But is there not a possibility that there are other moral issnes, equally important, which may demand action equally as united and prompt. Issues which ought to be as conspicuous to-day as is the question of prohibition? Let us suppose that there is in our land, a secret, sworn conspiracy, calculated to undermine our government and ultimately to destroy it, and to snbstitute in its stead an absolute despotism; that this same conspiracy seriously and obviously interferes with the family, with our courts, our halls of legislation, and most of all with our holy Christianity; that this foul conspiracy takes on the forms of a religion and palms itself off as quite sufficient to save our race, provided they become members with it. Then suppose again, that this great clan has a constitution, and laws, with murder in them—self-murder, and the murder of any who may prove unfaithful to this craft, and that it has kidnapped and murdered peaceful citizens in open defiance of the laws of the land, thus showing that murder in the constitution "will out." And next, suppose that more than one million of the citizens of the land are united in some form with this great conspiracy, and that hundreds of thousands of these adopt the principles of the clan as a religion entirely sufficient to save them, and go before "the Judge of the earth" relying upon this false religion and false hope, and thus are, as much as the drunkard, victims of perdition.

Now let us suppose, also, that this clan interferes with the evangelical work of the church and ministry, "shutting the kingdom of heaven against men" by hundreds of thousands annually, thus causing their eternal doom with drunkards. Lastly, suppose that this same clan is so intermingled with the whisky power as to render it impracticable and nearly impossible to pass and to execute the prohibition law against the liquor interest, till that clan "be taken out of the way."

Were all this and much more that is evil, and "only evil continually," true of this foul conspiracy, would not the removal of this fell enemy be the paramount question? Our supposition is a picture of facts which hardly reaches the reality. We believe that eternity will reveal the trnth, that Freemasonry with its infernal progeny is, to-day, doing more evil to our body politic, to the American churches, to more precious souls, than "Prince Alcohol." Hail, American platform! Thy principles strike at the root of the evils which are cursing us, blighting us, damning us as a people. The viper of the still and that of the lodge are twins, and so closely united that they live together and will have to die together. They are not the Siamese, but the Satanic twins. John P. St. John, good as he may be, seems committed to lodgery. We did entertain hopes that the American party might merge with all true temperance people, but the lodge interposes obstacles to the union of real reformers.

Freemasonry shall never "plough with my heifer" at the ballot-box or anywhere else if I can hinder it. The American platform is as squarely prohibition as it is anti-sin in all parts. National, like personal sins, subsist in groups and we cannot select one of these, and successfully combat it, while the rest are cherished and nursed in our bosom. In this way we fought slavery and nursed the lodge; cast out "leviathan" and nurtured the "great red dragon" in our midst. The consequence is, that now we have slavery intensified, the voluntary, sworn bondage of millions of our fellows, and so diffused, North and South, East and West, through every vein and channel of society, in family, state and church, that when this dragon is attacked, his tail will draw "the third part of the stars of heaven," before he "goeth into perdition," his divinely appointed home. Reformers must oppose all evil, to be consistent with themselves and loyal to right, and to God, and thus "overcome by the blood of the Lamb." Our platform should be, as it is, substantially an epitome of the Decalogue, written not on "tables of stone but on the fleshy tables of our hearts," to be lived up to and out at the polls and everywhere.

Show us a person or a party in church or state who will consent to compromise nine moral principles that he may succeed in the tenth, or one that he may gain nine, and you point ont one who, instead of relying on God and right, compromises principle for a partial and transient victory. Such a course is kin to liquor revenue education and the high license policy. A man who will sacrifice any principle of equity to partial and transient success, will never "be a Daniel and dare to stand alone," and the success so obtained will, by the prince of darkness, be turned to account to raise up out of the sea of iniquity another beast like Masonry. See Rev. 13: 1–9.

"Be thou like the old Apostle,
Be thou like heroic Paul;
If a free thought seeks expression,
Speak it boldly, speak it all.
Scorn thine enemies, accusers;
Face the prison, rack, or rod;
And if thou hast truth to utter,
Speak and leave the rest to God."

And still, to the end of time, the clear waters of the unfailing springs and the pasture lilies in their clothed multitude, and the abiding of the burning peaks in their nearness to the opened heavens shall be the types and the blessings of those who have chosen the light, and of whom it is written, "The mountains shall bring peace to the people, and the little hills righteousness."—Ruskin.

Multitudes of parents never think to ask their children what they are reading. No attempt is made to supply suitable and healthful papers and books, while on every hand vile and useless ones are being thrnst before the eyes and into the hands of the young. Such neglect or indifference is inexcusable, and will certainly entail punishment.

GORDON THE SOUDAN.

The Soudan, or the Black country, is a vast and undefined region stretching south of Egypt to the equator. The greater part of it is desert, and although its area exceeds that of India, its population is not three times that of the State of New York. Along the river, however, there is a strip of verdure, and in the southern and south-eastern provinces, especially in country between the two Niles and that near the lakes and the source of the White Nile, the soil is very rich. Khartoum, the capital of the whole region, and situated at the junction of the two Niles, is an important commercial center. Egyptian government in the Soudan was a mere matter of periodical pillage, accompanied by the torture of men and the ravishing of women. Its only redeeming feature was that it prevented internecine wars; and when occasionally a good governor-general was appointed, the Bashi-Bazoukery was reduced to a minimum, and the force of the Egyptian Government was exerted for the repression of the slave-trade, which is the staple industry of the Soudan. But the system of government was essentially Turkish. When General Gordon was appointed Governor-General, he informed Ismail, the late Khedive, thrice over that his appointment would be fatal to the continuance of the old system. "Nevermore," said he, "will Egypt be able to govern the Soudan in the old Turkish or Circassian fashion after I have resided there long enough to teach the people that they have rights. If you send me, you must continue my system or lose the Soudan."

Ismail was deaf to the warning. He sent Gordon. His successor did not continue Gordon's system, and the result is before us. Egypt has lost the Soudan exactly as he predicted. To attempt to restore the Circassian system, with its corruption, its bastinado, its pillage, and its Bashi-Bazoukery, among people who for three years had been governed on English principles by an Englishman so upright and inflexible as General Gordon, led to a widespread revolt. "I laid the eggs" said General Gordon to me at Southampton, "which the Mahdi has hatched. I taught the people that they had rights. Everything has sprung from that."

To a population familiarized for the first time with justice and right, the return of the old regime, with its Pashas and Bashi-Bazouks, must have been insupportable. Popular discontent was not long in raising its voice, and, after a while, in finding a head. That head was the Mahdi. For three years he has been struggling with more or less success against the attempt of the Egyptians to reassert their supremacy in these regions. Several battles, more or less bloody, and fought with varying success, led up to the complete annihilation of Hicks's army, which had been dispatched, in spite of the plaintive entreaties of its commander, into the revolted province of Kordofan. Prior to that disaster the English Government had refused to interfere with the policy of Egypt in the Soudan, but now it abandoned its attitude of indifference, and dictated to the Egyptian Government the entire evacuation of that country. The English Government at first does not seem to have troubled itself much as to how the policy of evacuation was to be carried out. Public opinion was tranquil because uninformed, when suddenly, as a voice out of the sky, General Gordon was heard asking what was to become of the garrisons. "There are some twenty-five thousand soldiers in the Soudan whose only offense is loyalty to their sovereign. Are you, in return for their fidelity, going to abandon them to massacre?"

That was the question put by General Gordon in the ears of the whole nation. Ministers hesitated. There was a delightful simplicity, to say nothing of economy, in the formula, "Let the garrisons be spared," which commended itself to some at least of the ministers. But the nation did not hesitate. It revolted against the cynical cry in favor of evacuation by massacre, and the Ministry, bowing to the storm, sent for General Gordon, and asked him to undertake the evacuation of the country with the least possible risk to life and property, and to arrange for the safe removal of the Egyptian employees and troops. His own opinion was distinctly adverse to the abandonment of Khartoum. "Defend Khartoum at all hazards," was the watchword of his policy. "Whatever you may decide about evacuation, you cannot evacuate, because your army cannot be moved." But when the Government informed him that it was their irrevocable decision to "cut the dog's tail off," coute que coute, as he phrased it, he bowed to the inevitable; but he added sotto voce, "I may cut it off, but I cannot hinder its growing again." The Soudanese, in his opinion, were better than the Egyptians; he exulted in the prospect of liberating them from the Bashi-Bazouks, and although this entailed as a natural corollary the recognition of the slave-trade,—because the Soudan for the Soudanese is only another formula for the Soudan for the slave-dealers,—it was better, in his opinion, to have the slave-trade minus the Egyptian Government than the Egyptian Government and the slave-trade as well. It was in that spirit that he undertook his mission—a mission of liberation—purposing as soon as it was accomplished to leave for the Congo, there to found, in the Niam-Niam country, a native empire under his own sovereignty, with a standing army of liberated slaves, by whose aid he would cut the slave-trade of Central Africa up by its roots.

General Gordon was asked to go to the Soudan at three o'clock in the afternoon on Friday, the 8th day of January. He left at eight o'clock that night, and reached Khartoum in exactly one month. Mounting a fleet dromedary, he rode forth from Korosko to Abou Hamad, and, like Cæsar, the fortunes of the English Government rode with him through the desert. If he had fallen, the Cabinet would not have long survived. Fortunately he got through alive, and the first success of his mission enabled them to defeat the attack of the opposition. The popular manifestations of enthusiasm which had accompanied his course culminated in his triumphal entry into Khartoum. He had dispatched a telegram on his way to the terrified garrison: "You are men, not women. Be not afraid. I am coming." And when he arrived he told the thousands who came to kiss his feet and hail him as the savior of the Soudan: "I come without soldiers, but with God on my side, to redress the evils of the Soudan. I will not fight with any weapons but justice. There shall be no more Bashi-Bazouks." The scene that followed his arrival was dramatic. The books recording the debts of the overtaxed people were burnt publicly in front of the palace. The kourbashes, whips, and other implements of torture, were all placed on the burning pile. The jail was demolished and the prisoners were set at liberty. At night the town was in a blaze of illumination, and the negroes indulged in a display of fireworks to mark their appreciation of their deliverer. The next day General Gordon began the work of evacuation. Natives of the Soudan were appointed to the command of all the most important posts. Colonel de Coetlogon, who had commanded the garrison, was sent home. "I consider Khartoum as safe as Kensington Park," wrote General Gordon. The fellah troops were ordered to Egypt; two thousand women and children were sent down the river to Berber. General Gordon recognized the Mahdi as Sultan of Cordofan, and issued a proclamation announcing that, as henceforth the Soudan and its government had become independent, it would look after its own affairs without interference by the Egyptian Government in anything whatever. They would do as they pleased about slaves and the slave-trade. The petition-boxes were re-established, and all men were allowed free access to the palace. Over the throne of the Governor-General they read: "The hearts of men are in the hands of God." The first part of his mission had been brilliantly accomplished.—The Century for August.

A BRIEF SERMON ON CRANKS.

The Burlington Hawkeye publishes a great deal of nonsense, but sometimes in its amusing way it states indisputable facts. The following is from a recent issue:

What would we do were it not for the cranks? How slowly the tired old world would move, did not the cranks keep it rushing along! Columbus was a crank on the subject of American discovery and circumnavigation, and at last he met the fate of most cranks, was thrown into prison, and died in poverty and disgrace. Venerated now! Oh, yes, Telemachus, we usually esteem a crank most profoundly after we starve him to death. Harvey was a crank on the circulation of the blood; Galileo was an astronomical crank; Fulton was a crank on the subject of steam navigation; Morse was a telegraph crank. All the old abolitionists were cranks. The Pilgrim Fathers were cranks; John Bunyan was a crank; any man who doesn't think as you do, my son, is a crank. And by and by the crank you despise will have his name in every man's mouth, and a half completed monument to his memory crumbling away in a dozen cities, while nobody outside of your native village will know that you ever lived. Deal gently with the crank, my boy. Of course some cranks are crankier than others, but do you be very slow to sneer at a man because he knows only one thing and you can't understand him. A crank, Telemachus, is a thing that turns something; it makes the wheels go round, it insures progress. True, it turns the same wheel all the time, and it can't do anything else, but that's what keeps the ship going ahead. The thing that goes in for variety, versatility, that changes its position a hundred times a day, that is no crank; that is the weather vane, my son. What? You nevertheless thank heaven you are not a crank? Don't do that, my son. May be you couldn't be a crank if you would. Heaven is not very particular when it wants a weather vane; almost any man will do for that. But when it wants a crank, my boy, it looks about very carefully for the best man in the community. Before you thank heaven that you are not a crank, examine yourself carefully and see what is the great deficiency that debars you from such an election.

SECRET POLITICAL SOCIETIES.

A secret political party is an offense against the spirit and genius of popular government. There can be no more dangerous political organization than one which conducts its business in secret, and is bound by oaths. Popular government is doomed whenever secret political societies control our political system. It does not matter what objects such societies have in view, nor what principles they advocate—they are wholly and irredeemably obnoxious to the genius of American institutions and dangerous to a government of the people by the people.

It is said there is a secret political society in this State known as the "Sons of Liberty." The name is as bad as the society. By that name the infamous organization of Copperheads, organized in Indiana and Illinois during the war was known. That organization prolonged the war for a year, cost the people of this country millions of dollars, and was the direct cause of the sacrifice of thousands of precious lives.

Honest, self-respecting, intelligent American citizens, who love the institutions of their country and desire the perpetuity of popular government throughout the land, should avoid secret political societies as they would contagion. No good cause, no true principle, no just system, no honest purpose, needs secret machinery and oath-bound midnight organizations to maintain it. Righteous causes and correct principles grow best and prosper most in the full glare of the sunlight of publicity. The American citizen who does not know this to be true, has a very weak and improper idea of the American systems and institutions. The fact that any cause seeks darkness and secrecy for organization is the best possible evidence that it is a bad cause.—Atchison, (Kans.) Champion.

OTHER WITNESSES.

Of the new editor of the Southwestern Christian Advocate we know but little. His being the founder of a new secret society, specially for colored men, is mentioned, and with apparent approval, by the Central. This ought to have been sufficient to prevent his election, and it will make his added influence among colored people all the more of questionable benefit. If advantage is to be taken of the ignorance of the freedmen, and they are to be led by ministers of the gospel into orders and lodges, founded in selfishness, and some of them anti-Christian, our pretences of Christian devotion to the spiritual welfare of God's trustful colored children may well be disputed by wise and holy people.—Banner of Holiness.

"Private" Grand Army of the Republic dances is one of the latest phases of this secret society practice, as noted by a local exchange. As an old soldier I warn all soldiers against such secret deceptions. A soldier who did his duty well has no secrets to hire his companions to keep. This whole secret society business is a snare and a swindle.—Wesleyan Methodist.

The "Sons of Liberty" are a new branch of the National Liquor League recently organized in Kansas. Its creed is the re-submission of the prohibitory amendment, boycotting all pronounced prohibitionists, and secret workings in political parties. Look out for these "Sons of the Devil."—Our Herald, Lafayette, Ind.

When God had smitten down 50,070 men of Bethshemeth for looking into the ark, which they no doubt thought was a small matter, they in their amazement and fear exclaimed, "Who is able to stand before this holy Lord God?" How many there are who in these days of brilliant gospel light are interfering with holy things which do not at all belong to them, and yet they do not stop to ask the above important question. What some day must they expect God will do with them for their meddling with his sacred things? We refer more particularly to secret societies, who are making a mock of God's worship through their abominable ceremonies. Unto the wicked he says. "What hast thou to do to declare my statutes, or that thou shouldst take my covenant in thy mouth."—(Psa. 50 : 16.)—United Brethren in Christ.

MORMON MISSIONARIES.—Professor Marsden, of Colorado, makes the remarkable declaration that the Mormon church has as many missionaries abroad as the American Board. He states that they have them in England, Scotland, Wales, France, Germany, Sweden, Italy, Denmark, Norway, Switzerland, Malta, Gibraltar, Hindustan, Australia, Siam, Chili, Ceylon, China, Guiana, West Indies, Sandwich Islands, New Zealand, Iceland, on the banks of the Nile, and even in the Holy Land. Also, that more converts are sent to Utah in the past two seasons, since the passage of the Edmunds' bill, than in any four years previous. It is quite evident that other methods than those yet tried must be employed to check or suppress the Mormon abomination.

WARNING EXAMPLE.—Quite recently the police of Los Angeles, Cal., arrested a gang of young robbers who had been committing depredations in that city for some time. The oldest of the gang was but fifteen, and the youngest but eight. They were organized after the most approved dime novel style, calling themselves the "Red-handed Robbers." They had their "cave" in which were found cigarettes, wine and various other articles of stolen property. Their last act was to plunder the missionary box in the Methodist church. Each member of the gang slept with a string attached to his person, one end of which hung outside of the window. When the leader wished to engage in a midnight raid, he would pull the string and awaken the sleeping bandit. These boys were all the children of respectable parents, who, no doubt, like hundreds of others, were too busy to bother themselves about what their boys were reading.—Statesman.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Aug 6th, 1884.

There are two items of interest that pertain to the immediate vicinity of the headquarters of the N. C. A. in this city. A few doors down the Pennsylvania Avenue a large and beautiful flag presents the portraits of Blaine and Logan, and suspends from a line across the Avenue from Perry Carson's saloon to the building opposite. It informs the world that said saloon is the headquarters of the Blaine and Logan clubs of this District and seems to advertise Mr. Carson's whisky.

Mr. Carson, it will be remembered, was the colored delegate to the Chicago Republican convention, being chosen over Hon. Fred. Douglass by a combination of the worst elements of society. Clubs, knives and other weapons seem to have been the arguments that prevailed; and, though the election was contested, Mr. C., by an array of similar influences, remained master of the situation. It is said that on the day the flag was put up it took three men to wait on customers at the bar. Surely there is no other saloon in the city so grandly advertised and probably none so largely patronized. Probably Messrs. Blaine and Logan do not desire to lend their influence in aid of anything so corrupt and corrupting, and it is quite certain that many Republicans of this city blush with shame for the evil influences that control the party. But they are powerless. The saloon interest has come to the front. Like a vicious horse that takes the bits in his teeth, it has run away with the party, and those who do not admire the surroundings and tendencies, had better get out, for just as surely as the old Whig party, after all its pretensions of loyalty to principle, sold itself to the slave power, and could not be redeemed, so just as truly has the Republican party given itself into the hands of the whisky interests, and will find redemption only in defeat.

A SUDDEN CALAMITY.

"When men say peace and safety then sudden destruction cometh upon them." About 7:30 of last Sabbath evening (3d) the old United States Hotel, a few doors down the Avenue, suddenly collapsed and fell; burying under its ruins nine persons, two of whom were killed, and the others seriously injured. There was great excitement. The fire alarm sounded and engines quickly appeared, but there was no fire. The cries of those beneath the fallen building could be distinctly heard, and every effort was put forth for their rescue. Policemen, firemen, officers and laborers worked with most untiring and praiseworthy diligence, and two large electric lights were speedily extemporized to aid in the search. The work went on without intermission, but it was not until the afternoon of the next day that the last of the bodies was removed. The building was erected in 1845 and was five stories high. The front part, supported by adjacent buildings, remained intact. The back part, containing kitchen, dining and sleeping rooms, was so completely broken down that not one brick adhered to another. It had long been unsafe and ought to have been abandoned. Other buildings of similar character throughout the city are undergoing reconstruction. It was criminal carelessness to let this remain and we learn that the owners are to be prosecuted.

But how many lives and characters are there that in like manner need reconstruction? How near is our social and civil fabric from being undermined and honeycombed, until, like these old walls, it shall find sudden destruction and none shall escape. Let us beware lest a similar calamity come upon us.

EX-DETECTIVES AGAIN.

The ex-detectives who, under the pretense of being legal protectors, planned, invited and shared in the profits of crimes against property in this city, have finally all been acquitted by the courts. Not so the popular verdict as will be seen by the allusion in this morning's Republican to similar cases in the city of New York:

> The New York detectives who are accused of having given aid and comfort to the thieves and their commercial friends, the "fence" proprietors, can simplify matters by getting a change of venue to the courts of this district. They could in this way be assured of a speedy vindication. The witnesses would be in danger of imprisonment, however, and Washington editors and reporters would run the risk of criminal indictment for libeling the pure detectives in publishing court proceedings.

Washington editors and reporters have perhaps no purity to boast of, but it is a sad case for the courts when objections to officiate criminalities are regarded as libelous, and their being published brings threats of prosecution. The ex-detective and Star Route trials have left a stain on the reputation of Washington juries, bar and courts that will not speedily be effaced.

I notice the Republican has a long editorial on the Ku-Klux, and in vindication of the Union Leagues of the South from the charge of violence. It may be safely assumed that the former was far worse than the latter, but both were needless, each provoked the other to acts of violence.

And yet in the troublous times that followed the close of the war it was not strange that men sought refuge in secret combinations. How much less occasion for them is there now; and how absurd for those who endorse and maintain the great net-work of secret orders that prevades and dominates over every department of society to belabor a dead order, which if it did commit great crimes was in its avowed purposes as pure and in conduct scarcely more criminal than some of this day? AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

SAMUEL C. POMEROY,

of Kansas.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,

of Connecticut.

PLATFORM.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

The perturbation felt by the leading Democrats and Democratic papers over the probable course of Butler, St. John, Pomeroy and a number of others whose actions are supposed to have some influence in determining the course of affairs, is too evident not to attract attention, and too outspoken not to come from the heart. It escapes inadvertently in a thousand ways, but is chiefly manifested by hysterical attempts to prove that no matter what the uncertain elements in the canvass may attempt, they will succeed in doing nothing but good to the Democracy and evil to the Republicans.—Globe Democrat.

The Missouri State Central Committee of the American party suggests the following times and places for holding county conventions to select delegates to the State nominating convention to convene at Avalon, September 11th, and transact such other business as may come before them;

Harrison county, Bethany, August 9th.
Worth county, Grant City, August 23d.
Gentry county, Albany, August 30th.
Livingston county, Avalon, September 11th, 1884.

IOWA STATE POLITICAL CONVENTION.

The Iowa State convention of the American party will be held in Washington, Aug. 27th, to nominate State officers and electors, and transact such other business as any may be brought forward. This convention will be held in connection with the "Annual meeting of the State Christian Association." Let there be a general rally to this convention from all parts of the State, for every person in Iowa who is interested in the success of the American party should try to be present at these meetings and show their faith by their works. Let us hesitate no longer about committing ourselves to this work.

S. E. Starry, Chairman, Central Committee.

WISCONSIN FRIENDS.

A few questions to you all. Shall we organize politically and have State officers nominated in Wisconsin for the American party? If so when and where shall we hold our nominating convention? It ought to be attended to immediately. Now let every friend of the cause sit right down as soon as you read this and write to me or Bro. Britten of Vienna, your mind on the subject. Please do not delay. If the Prohibitionists will put up a ticket with men opposed to secret societies, I am willing to vote with them, but not otherwise. Friends, let us hear from you all immediately, and oblige, I. Bancroft.

APPEAL TO REFORMERS OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Brothers of the Key-stone State:—Where and how are we to form our American ticket for Pa. As corresponding secretary of N. E. Penn. Christian Association, opposed to lodgery, address me at Thompson, Susquehanna Co., Pa., and let me hear from all parts of our State by representative men, men who are interested in the cause and willing to help organize for work. Don't delay. Speak at once.

Yours for the "God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ" and for the "Son of the Father," against all sin in the church and state. Nathan Callender.

ILLINOIS AMERICAN PROHIBITION CONVENTION.

Arrangements are well advanced for holding a State meeting at Monmouth, Ill., on the 11th and 12th of September. The friends at Monmouth are many and hearty in their co-operation. They will do liberally in the way of entertainment and help on the cause every way possible. The opera house has been secured. Speakers are engaged. Reduced rates obtained on the C. B. & Q. R. R., between Chicago and Burlington, also between Rock Island and Beardstown. Everything will be done on the part of the committee to make the gathering a success. Secure delegates and begin to move towards Monmouth for a decisive victory. J. P. Stoddard.

MICHIGAN TAKE NOTICE.

There is to be held at Macatawa Park, on the shore of Lake Michigan, Aug. 28., a Convention by the Michigan Christian Association, in the interest of thorough reform. It has been suggested that this be also a nomiuating convention to put a State ticket before the people, and the suggestion is hereby acted upon and announced accordingly. Let every loyal man aim to be present. We will give farther particulars soon. Remember the date Aug. 28th, instead of 29th as first announced.

BLAINE AND PROHIBITION.

Oelwein, Iowa.

Editor Cynosure:—I notice by the Cynosure of July 17th that you do not quite agree with the St. Louis American that it might be better for the cause of prohibition to defeat the Democratic than the Republican party.

You give as your first objection to Blaine, "He is not even a temperance man, let alone prohibition." Now Mr. Editor, do you know that to be so? I have good reasons for believing that he is both a temperance man and a prohibitionist:

1st. He has frequently spoken in favor of prohibition and never against it.

2nd. If he were not a temperance man, such men as Vice President Hamlin, Senator Hale, and Neal Dow, who have known him from boyhood, would not support him.

I remember that for the last three years the correspondent of the Cynosure from Iowa insisted that the Republican party was not sincere and would never give the people prohibition, that the leaders of the party were trying to deceive the people and that Gov. Sherman was responsible for the defeat of the Constitutional Amendment.

Then as if that were not enough the Cynosure published a long tirade of misrepresentation by John B. Finch of Neb. on Gov. Sherman and the Republicans of Iowa. Now it seems to me that a journal that has as good a mission as the Cynosure ought to be a little more just toward those who do not think just as they do.

Your second objection to Mr. Blaine is, "He is in favor of supporting the States and counties by the liquor-tax, which makes the distillery, and brewery, and saloon, the pillars of the Republic." Now Mr. Editor, is that a fair construction to put on his language?

Here in Iowa all fines go to the school fund, so according to your reasoning the people of Iowa are in favor of criminals, because they use the penalties for education.

Again, you charge the government at Washington of conducting the distillery and liquor business, because they are obliged to use such extraordinary means to collect the taxes on the business. Now how long do you suppose we would have had to wait for prohibition here in Iowa if we had split up into little factions and surrendered the government of the State into the hands of the Democratic party, the party that has opposed every step toward prohibition by every dishonest method known to the party? Since it has become a law in spite of the open opposers, aided by the Sanballats and Tobiahs, wherever the party has a majority, they are in rebellion against the law. I have not taken up a Democratic State paper that does not encourage resistance to the law.

I am very sorry to be obliged to differ from the Cynosure on any subject as there are so many points of agreement. Yours truly, J. B. KINGSBURY.

REPLY. Mr. Blaine's position on the prohibition question is explained by his own letter on this page. Others have spoken for him, and favorably. Neal Dow's commendation, given us a fortnight since by Rev. H. T. Cheever was a strong one. Dr. Collins writes to the Christian Statesman that a friend with whom he has corresponded, who knows Blaine, says the latter is a total abstainer. On the other hand the editor of the Philadelphia Item says he has known Blaine for twenty-five years and has dined at his table and he likes his glass of wine. He is not a prohibitionist or a "bigoted temperance man."

The proposition of Mr. Blaine to pay State and county taxes by the liquor revenue is, like that of Logan before it, one that every distiller and whisky seller in the land would accept with acclamation. It would give their infamous business recognition and dignity, and would tend to perpetuate it more even than the removal of all restraints of taxation. Mr. Blaine may have assisted the prohibitory movement in Maine, but it was the measure of his party; but no reasonable person can dispute that his letter suggests one of the most plausible and effective means for the establishment of the liquor business.

If the "distillery, brewery and saloon" should pay $80,000,000 to carry on local government our friend would soon find them very like pillars if he undertook to overthrow them. His argument from criminal fines is not logical. If the liquor business paid its $80,000,000 as a fine and not a tax it would soon be broken up.

THE LEAVEN OF TRUTH.

Yes, the leaven of truth is working grandly, at least in some places. The American party with its grand platform is attracting more attention than its most sanguine friends ever dared to hope. A number of influential papers have given favorable notice of the party and its splendid platform. Men talk of the party as though it had a right to live and grow in this country. Some sober politicians are free to admit that the American platform is just what our republican institutions need for permanent safety, but fear that the lofty principles set forth are so far in advance of public sentiment that they are for the present impracticable, but not a few declare their intention to vote the pure American ticket. Could every American home be reached in the next few months with the needed light, the world would soon be astonished at the progress of the much needed reformation. The enemies of good government may sneer, but we give notice to all such to stand from under, for God is in this reform movement.

"Right is right, since God is God,
And right at last must win;
To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter would be sin."

Pilate's question of "What is truth?" does not so much interest us in the present crisis, as how we can best reach the people with what truth we have. The way some noble souls are embracing the truth that is able to make them free is most cheering. But we find

"Many cowards lacking merit,
Ever drifting with the tide,
Doubting in both soul and spirit,
Filled with love of ease, and pride."

Let the reflector of truth be turned upon the hearts of the people of our country and many of our old veterans will live to rejoice in a glorious reform, now thought by many to be among the good days of some future century.

There are times when God's leaven works rapidly. As when Elijah's was used to reform the kingdom in the worst days of Ahab's reign; Jonah's reformation of Nineveh; Luther in the dark ages of Catholicism. Or we might stop and think of the great reform that God has wrought in our own day. A quarter of a century ago it would have required the ken of a prophet to have foretold the speedy death of slavery, but when God turned his guns of fury upon the great monster, how soon it went down a black, bleeding mass, never to be resurrected.

Elder J. Montgomery of Ohio, one of God's true reformers, prepared and voted the only Abolition ticket of his precinct for the space of eight years, while some pitied and more laughed at his folly in throwing away his vote, but our hero lived to read President Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation, and though he was old and could not jump very high, he jumped as high as he could, and shouted "Glory," declaring that it was one of the happiest days of his life.

The American party has in it some of God's reformatory leaven, as may be seen by the zeal and prayers of the earnest Christians who are working for its promotion. As I think of the God-like principles couched in the reform movement, of the great need of the reform, of its recent wonderful progress all along the line, of the earnest prayers and efforts in various ways for the promotion of that righteousness which exalteth a nation, I feel sure that God is on the throne and is managing the reform.

It is a source of grief to every true reformer to know that the Prohibition party, with St. John for its standard bearer, is so permeated and controlled by secrecy that thousands of the best Christians of the land can have no faith in the ultimate triumph of the cause emblazoned on their banner. I offer no apology for stating my convictions that no worthy reform can ever grow to maturity while rooted in the hot-bed of secrecy. All true history proves that oath-bound secrecy is evil and corrupting in its nature and tendency; hence antagonistic to all true reform. I have but little hope that our suffering country will be relieved from the saloon curse while professed prohibition and whisky men are yoked together in secret cliques by cut-throat oaths that are held to be more sacred than all other obligations. However paradoxical such yoking may seem, it can be demonstrated to be a prevalent fact the world over. It is equally true that by compromising with evil we forfeit the divine help without which we can do nothing.

If St. Paul's counsel and prayers saved the ship's crew, and if ten righteous persons would have saved the cities of the plains, may we not be filled with courage and gratitude as we think of the vast number of noble souls who are working and earnestly pleading with a prayer-hearing God for the success of the American party? God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore will not we fear though the earth be removed and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea; though the waters thereof roar and be troubled; though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof. The Lord of hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our refuge.

Truth omnipotent, full of might,
Must and will sweep on and on,
Conquering nations, scattering light,
Hastening on the glorious morn.

BLAINE'S PLAN.

FOR THE DISTRIBUTION AND PERPETUATION OF THE LIQUOR REVENUE.

AUGUSTA, Me., Nov. 22.—Charles Emory Smith, Esq., Editor Press, Philadephia,—MY DEAR SIR: I have your note inquiring if I would be willing to give, in the more authentic form of a letter over my own signature, certain views which I expressed in conversation a few weeks since touching an important financial question. I understand you refer to some observations I made to one of your assistant editors in regard to the proposition of the Republican State convention of Pennsylvania for "the distribution of the surplus revenue of the National Treasury among the States." I understand you to refer still more particularly to a suggestion of my own as a substitute for the Pennsylvania proposition, to which I thought I saw fatal objections. I have no reason for withholding my views, and I admit the wisdom of your suggestion, that I would better state them myself than to have them possibly misstated by others.

THE FIRST OBJECTION—UNCERTAINTY OF AMOUNT.

The proposition of the Pennsylvania Republican convention is to distribute "Among the States any surplus in the National Treasury that may arise from redundant revenue." The first objection which I see to this proposition is the utter uncertainty of the amount of "redundant revenue." It may be $1,000,000 or it may be $100,000,000. The amount, depending as it does on so many contingencies, cannot be determined in advance with even approximate exactness, and the States could not, therefore, depend upon a steady resource. Unless steady it would not bring relief, because it would not enable the States to dispense with any part of their own systems of taxation. An occasional gift from the National Treasury would not be valuable. That was proved by the distribution of the revenue under the act of 1836, in the Presidency of Gen. Jackson. It did no good. It was frittered away in all the States. Here, in Maine, they made an absolute per capita distribution of it among the entire population—a trifling sum to each. That, of course, threw contempt upon the whole measure.

THE SECOND OBJECTION—IMPOSING DIVIDED INTERESTS ON LEGISLATORS.

There is a second objection to the Pennsylvania proposition which, in my judgment, is still more serious. If you simply resolve to distribute the "redundant National revenue" among the States you impose on Senators and Representatives a divided interest, which would be embarrassing and hurtful. For the benefit of their State—especially of those States that might be in pressing need of money—Senators and Representatives would desire the "redundant revenue" to be as large as possible. This would present a constant temptation to withhold appropriations from objects of a really National character. It would be unfair to Senators and Representatives to lay upon them and before them obligations and motives which would constantly tend to turn them from the right path of duty to the National government. You cannot have the National government and the State government joint owners in the same treasury without mischievous conflict. Such a partnership is at war with the well-being of both State and Nation.

THE THIRD OBJECTION—A CONTINUED REDUNDANCY OF REVENUE OPPOSED TO SOUND ADMINISTRATIVE VIEWS.

A third objection to the Pennsylvania proposition is that it proceeds upon the assumption of a continuing redundancy of National revenue. This is opposed to all sound views of administration. The government wants just enough revenue. A redundancy always leads to extravagance, to many forms of corruption, and to all manner of schemes for getting rid of money. A Congress assembling with tens of millions of surplus at its disposal is very sure to hold sessions which would prove profitless to the people and perilous to its own members. Since the war closed we have had no embarrassing redundancy in the Treasury, because the payment of the National debt has afforded at once the readiest and wisest mode of appropriating every dollar not needed for the current expenses of the government. The time is rapidly approaching, however, when by reason of the terms in which the National debt is funded, the payment of the remainder must of necessity be postponed for years; the larger part of it, indeed, to the next century. This brings with it the necessity of reducing the National revenue. The present system of taxation is yielding more than $100,000,000 beyond the amount required for the ordinary expenses of the government. Its reduction will soon become an imperative duty. Indeed, a strong movement is already on foot for the repeal of the entire system of internal revenue on the assumption, which is justified by facts, that receipts from customs will afford abundant revenue for the needs of the government. The protectionists desire this—but not they alone. Judge Kelley is not more earnestly in favor of it than is Mr. Cox, of New York, who is a most intelligent representative of the free-trade interest. Many of the leading free-traders in Congress are opposed to the continuation of the tax on spirits. It is, therefore, quite evident— it is, at least, highly probable—that a coalition of men holding antagonistic views on the question of protection will, at the first opportunity, effect the abolition of the system of internal revenue. The conjunction of circumstances gives, in my judgment, a rare opportunity to relieve taxation in the States. It is under the State governments that taxation is felt most heavily. The National government has the benefit of easy, because indirect, forms of taxation. It is the direct tax that is felt to be oppressive.

DIRECT VS. INDIRECT TAXATION—GIVE THE STATES THE TAX ON SPIRITS.

At the beginning of the War the National government levied a direct tax of $20,000,000 upon the States—about 66 cents per capita upon the whole population. It frightened the people, and the effect was so depressing that all kinds of composition and adjustment were invented to avoid payment. But concurrently with the fright occasioned by the direct tax, hundreds of millions were raised in a single year by customs and by excise without a word of protest or a sense of hardship. Our State and municipal tax is direct. It comes upon the property with crushing force. There are few communities in the United States that pay so little as 1 per cent. per annum on the actual value of their real property. There are many communities that pay more than 2 per cent. on the actual value. The houses, the farms, the factories, the stores, the shops, all feel it as a heavy burden—a burden unrelieved by any form of indirect taxation. Why, therefore, should not the States be permitted to have the tax on spirits for their own benefit, if the National government does not need it? The National and State governments, as I think I have shown, cannot safely share the same revenue; but if the National government has no longer need of the tax on spirits, why should not the entire sum which it yields annually be paid over to the States? Could it be regarded as wise statesmanship to continue the heavy, oppressive, direct tax on all property under the State governments and at the same time command a hurtful luxury like spirits, to go free? That would be a folly which no other government on the globe could by any possibility commit. The tax on spirits oppresses no one. It is paid only by the consumer, and the most extreme advocate of temperance cannot maintain that taxing the article increases its consumption. The National government has an absolute monopoly of the revenue from customs, because the States are forbidden by the Constitution to levy a tax on imports. The excise tax was left open to both the National and State governments. But as a matter of fact it is only the National government

CORRESPONDENCE.

LODGERY IN AUSTRALIA.

A REMARKABLE LETTER.

NATIONAL CITY, Cal., July 26, 1884.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In a rejected copy of the Cynosure I bought at our postoffice the other day I was glad to see strong comments on spurious Freemasonry, which is causing much trouble and confusion in Australia just now, by its complicated net-work of unprincipledness. I have been connected for years with very respectable Masons who have been nearly ruined in Australia for striving to expose the deviltry that exists behind the scenes there: and even at this moment a Mr. H. Roberts, author, of Gore St., Fitzroy, Victoria, a personal friend of mine, for many years a good Mason, receded and published an exposure, for which he was arrested in the streets on the certificate of two unprincipled M. Ds., who were paid five guineas each. He was put in the asylum as insane; kept there some time; and only got out by expensive lawsuits which nearly ruined him.

He has since published a work on the "Iniquities of Lunacy-craft," which no one would print, and he had to buy cases of type and get journeymen printers to assist in setting up the work, which has been reviewed by the Age, the leading daily with a circulation of 51,000. I have not a copy or would send it, but have given his name and address with his permission, as I can wherever I go. He will send copy of work to any address of press free. You would do well to send for a copy, as it will give you some idea of the seething corruption which prevails in regard to the administration of law in Australia, a lovely, sunny land, possessed by devils; bribery and jobbery reign supreme, premiums are directly offered for dishonesty and open immorality is encouraged, while hundreds of sane persons are still confined in luatic asylums for their political and other opinions.

I had a very narrow escape myself, but for my popularity with the people in South Australia, where banquets are given and attended by Masons to congratulate a member of Parliament on having seduced 100 young women from the path of virtue; as you can learn by sending to C. H. Derrington, journalist, Port Adelaide, New South Australia, a good Mason receded, a Christian, who believes in the words of our Lord, "He that is of the light cometh to the light, that his deeds may be seen of men." You can see that gross darkness prevails in Australia, where I resided for seventeen years and took an active part in politics, and also in ministering the Gospel of Christ; but was compelled to leave for this city to recruit my health under the treatment of Mrs. A. M. L. Potts, M. D., at her Sanitarium, where I expect to be for some time.

We have a little Congregational church here without a minister, and the members have been praying for one some months, and now I have offered to officiate till they get one rather than see the church shut on Sunday evenings. Mr. Cushman, the responsible head, and others, think I am too outspoken. The church is much in want of some ability to get it out of its confused state.

Should you publish this or any part of it, I will take one dozen copies for transmission to Australia and send stamps in return. I cannot well become a subscriber yet, as I have devoted nearly all my wealth to works of philanthrophy in Australia, but will gladly supply you with information or names of persons in Australia with whom you can exchange. I am, sir, etc.,

BENJAMIN JUDKINS.

CHILDREN OF THE SAME FAMILY.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

The uproar at Pittsburgh, made by a few Good Templars, reminds one strongly of the outcry of Demetrius and his silversmiths.

The cause was the same. Their craft was in danger. Not only do the leaders of the Good Templar movement get honors and profit out of it just as truly as Demetrius and his followers got their living making the silver shrines for Diana, but they know just as truly as did the Ephesians that a large share of the best moral sentiment is arrayed against them.

Men knew intuitively that idolatry was wrong. They were not idol worshipers because of, but in spite of their sense of duty to God; and men do not go into secret societies from a sense of duty. They endeavor to convince themselves, and sometimes succeed, that it is consistent with duty, and will bring many incidental advantages, but by their sensitiveness they betray a latent conviction that their whole system is indefensible, and will not bear the light of free discussion. Then, too, as it is well known, some secret societies have rendered themselves very offensive to the great majority of the people, and all people recognize a family likeness in them. There are doubtless many who would gladly disown the family relation and who hold their positions under protest, but so far as the organizations are concerned it is quite well understood that they are all in the likeness, near or more remote, of their mother, Freemasonry. Whatever is said against the Masonic order is always held to be a reflection on the Good Templars, and while I have generally found that the Masons had the wisdom to keep still, they always counted on being defended by the Good Templars, and they always betrayed their sympathies by the flutter they made.

It is not probable that the temporary abuse they desired to heap on Pres. C. A. Blanchard will redound to their glory. It was quite an extensive advertisement but it will prove an expensive one, and if they are wise, will scarcely be repeated. H. H. H.

THE GREAT WEED.

BLOOMINGTON, Ill., Aug. 2, 1884.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—We lately heard from the pulpit an illustration taken from the art of cultivating the soil. It was used to show the proper manner of raising virtue and religion in the natural soil of the human heart.

The speaker said: "You may dig up the weeds continually and it will all be useless; they will spring up again; they are natural to the soil. But plant flowers and when they are well grown, they will shade the ground and keep out the weeds themselves."

We instantly saw the great Masonic weed overtopping our moral garden, sending its numerous roots all through the soil, appropriating the nourishment (money) rightfully belonging to the plants, spreading its broad leaves so as to appropriate the room, and yielding its noxious fruits which stupify the moral sense and derange the vision so as to render it unable to distinguish right from wrong.

Under the edge of this great, broad, and boastful weed we saw a few poor, weak, sickly churches. These had been planted by good, tame, and fearful souls who did nothing to disturb the great weed. They said, give men religion and they will leave the lodge. So they planted their poor church to dwindle in the shade of the great lodge weed, and there it dwindles to-day.

In the moral obliquity caused by the use of the weed men have become unable to distinguish the virtues of the plants, and boldly claim the weed to be equal or superior. In their maladies and stupefaction they trust to the weed and are lost.

See, say they, how the weed grows, is not that proof positive of the favor of heaven? Is not heaven indeed but a transplanted weed ("celestial lodge above") where we all are going through the virtues (morality) of the weed.

Meanwhile the poor churches continue to dwindle, and the weak odor of her flowers and the flavor of her fruits can scarcely be distinguished amid the rank, stifling smells and the narcotic fruits of the lodge. How say they, can the poor, puny church raise herself (in testimony) against the all-powerful lodge?

Is it so that the fearful shall at last with other abominable characters be cast into the lake of fire and brimstone? or are we to expect that the poor, timid, fearful church will become the bride, the Lamb's wife?

Oh, that he would send some Elijah to dig up the great Masonic weed that the poor cowed churches may have room to testify against it.

The ground is preoccupied by human, moral societies, and until they are rooted up Christ and his church can make no substantial progress. H. D. WHITCOMB.

JEWISH AND CHRISTIAN.

The Christian dispensation is the successor of the Jewish. Every intelligent person knows that. But let us ask when the one ended and the other began, and men give different answers. There is room for opinions about it, and yet when the fact is stated it cannot be doubted any more than that the sun shines daily.

First, then, the Jewish dispensation did not end with the birth of Christ, for his life on earth was necessary to fulfil all the duties imposed on man towards God and toward man. And then the death of Christ was necessary also for the sins of men, and his victory over death by the resurrection brought life and immortality to light to bless mankind and win them from merely worldly indulgences.

The Christian dispensation began after all this was completed. The risen Lord with all power in heaven and earth was not fully revealed until he said, "All power is given unto me in heaven and on earth, go ye therefore and preach the Gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; he that believeth not shall be condemned." "But stay in Jerusalem until ye shall be endowed with power from on high." The Holy Spirit filled the one hundred and twenty disciples in the upper room. All spake with tongues the Gospel truths, and three thousand converts were baptized after Peter's simple but wonderful sermon. That sermon was the key which opened the kingdom of Christ to the Jews. He soon after opened it to the Gentiles also when he preached to Cornelius and his household. Thus was the Gospel first preached for "all the world." The typical Jew was thereafter a historical personage, and the spiritual Christian, the believers in the crucified and risen Saviour, were thenceforth the "peculiar people" of the Lord, dead with Christ, risen with Christ, and separated to his service by the ordinances of his own authoritative appointment. But as the Jews often went astray, so do Christians now. And as even Aaron made the golden calf idol, so do the modern priests of Christianity too often strangely yield to the idolatrous practices of the world, and conform to the rites and worships, open or secret, devised by men, instead of abiding loyally and faithfully by the Gospel ordinances and laws of him who has gone to heaven to return again in due time; so Moses went to the mountain and was forgotten, but returned with the law which condemned so utterly the will worship and delusion and joy and zeal which had prompted their devotion to their sinful worship. Do we indeed regard all Scripture as profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for instruction and for correction in righteousness? Then let us test modern teachers by the Scriptures, for we are warned therein that many false Christs and false teachers shall arise. T. HODGE.

—It is estimated that 34,000 persons have been brought to Christ through the labors of Mr. Moody in England since last fall.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON VIII.—August 24, 1884.—The Plague Stayed.—2 Sam. 24: 15-25.

GOLDEN TEXT.—So the Lord was entreated for the land, and the plague was stayed from Israel.—2 Sam. 24: 25.

I. THE NUMBERING OF THE PEOPLE. This was not an ordinary census, for that was perfectly legitimate, and was expressly provided for by the Mosaic law; and upon three occasions at least a census was taken by Moses without offence. It was not then the census itself which was displeasing to God, but the motive which inspired David to take it.—Cambridge Bible. The probability is that this census was a step towards the formal enrollment of the whole male population for stricter military service than they had hitherto rendered. They had formed a vast reserve of militia, but it had been under the orders of their local or tribal chiefs, and had been liable in ordinary cases only to a month's service a year. The new census may have been intended to furnish the king with a muster roll of the whole population, which he might use to prejudice the national liberties and to aggrandize the power of the throne.—Geikie.

II. THE SIN OF NUMBERING THE PEOPLE. (1) It seems clear that what constituted the sin of the act was the vainglorious spirit which prompted it. In a moment of pride and ambition—pride at the prosperity of the kingdom, ambition to be like the kings of the nations round about—he desired to know to the full over how vast and populous a kingdom he ruled, forgetting that the strength of Israel consisted not in the number of its people, but in the protecting care of God. This view is strongly corroborated by Joab's expostulation. —Cambridge Bible. (2) The sin was not confined to David; it had infected the nation. It is expressly said that "the anger of Jehovah was kindled against Israel," but the anger of the Lord could only be awakened by some form of evil doing. It may be that now, on the very threshold of their national existence, they were tempted by visions of worldly glory to forget that Israel was not to realize its vocation to the world in the guise of a conquering secular state, but as Jehovah's witness among the nations. If so, if pride was alienating the heart of king and people from their allegiance to Jehovah, a prompt chastisement was the truest mercy."—Cambridge Bible.

"A pestilence upon Israel." A plague, a black death, a cholera, or other form of dreadful epidemic.—Taylor. Aggravated by the very greatness of the population which had occasioned the census, spreading with the rapidity of an oriental disorder in crowded habitations, it flew from end to end of the country in three days, and at last approached Jerusalem. The new capital, the very heart of the nation, the peculiar glory of David's reign, seemed to be doomed to destruction.—Stanley. If we admit that there is a personal God, and that he is in any real sense the moral governor of mankind, the conclusion is irresistible, that he regulates the occurrences of the physical universe with a view to the moral training of his human creatures. As Isaac Taylor has remarked, "This is, in fact, the great miracle of providence, that no miracles are needed to accomplish its purposes." Just as the parent seeks to benefit his child morally, by inflicting on him some physical suffering, so God in his government of the world checks the sins of men by sending upon communities the physical calamities of pestilence, famine, and the like. I do not deny, of course, that these calamities come through the ordinary operation of law; what I affirm is, that these laws have been so adjusted by the Divine Governor of the world, that through them, and without any miraculous interference with them, he visits moral evil with physical chastisement; and so it is not superstition, but rather the truest piety and the highest philosophy, which leads a people, under such a visitation as that of famine, to turn to Jehovah, saying, "Show us wherefore thou contendest with us."—Taylor.

"And when the angel." The destroying angel. Angels are God's ministers in temporal judgment now, as well as in the final judgment hereafter (comp. Ex. 12: 23; Ps. 78: 49; 2 Kings 19: 35; Acts 12: 23; Matt. 13: 41). Cambridge Bible.

"Lo, I have sinned, and I have done wickedly." David knew his own sins, and therefore could confess them. He did not know how much or how little the people had sinned, but he felt that his own sin was so great that he himself deserved the punishment, and he wished to bear it instead of them. It belongs to the very nature of truly penitential prayer that the person praying takes all the blame upon himself.—Keil. Most people, when God's judgments are abroad, charge others with being the cause of them, so they can escape.—Henry.

"Go up, rear an altar," etc. This is all that is communicated here of the word of Jehovah which Gad was to convey to the king; the rest is given afterwards; in the course of the subsequent account of the fulfilment of the divine command (ver. 21) David was to build the altar, and offer burnt-offerings and supplicatory offerings upon it. The plague would then be averted from Israel. —Keil. Besides his prayer, David has now to make public affirmation of his guilt, and of his willingness henceforth with the people to devote himself as an offering to the Lord, by building an altar.—Lange.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

NATIONS MUST SUFFER FOR THEIR RULERS' MISTAKES AND SINS.

1. God punishes nations for the sins of their rulers. Vs. 15-18. David was punished for his sin in numbering the people by losing in one day 70,000 of his subjects. We do not know exactly what made his act so sinful. It could not have been wrong in itself. God himself commanded a census of the population to be taken by Moses (Num. 1: 2). Yet as even Joab, a man of little or no religious principle, tried earnestly to dissuade the king from his purpose. there must have been peculiar circumstances which made the act a flagrant and open violation of God's revealed will. He had now given David peace from his enemies (22: 1). His anxiety therefore to know how many fighting men he could call into the field did not rise from any fear of foreign invasion, but was doubtless the prompting of presumptions pride, or ambitious desires of foreign conquest. There were two reasons why David was forbidden to play the role of a conqueror like the heathen kings of other nations, the first reason being inherent in the very genius of the Hebrew constitution. To extend his dominions by subjugating other countries would have divided the people into two parts—the conqueror and the conquered—and thus introduced a dual element in which their divine unity and separateness would have been lost. Furthermore God had already testified his hatred of war and bloodshed by not allowing David to build the temple. Thus we can see that his sin was great. That nations suffer for the sins of their rulers is borne out of every page of history. Ambitious, selfish monarchs plunge their respective kingdoms into a fruitless, unjustifiable war, which brings on their subjects only poverty, misery and ruin. When Catherine de Medici murdered the Protestants on St. Bartholomew's day, and Lonis XIV revoked the Edict of Nantes, France suffered by the sins of her wicked rulers a loss to her industries, morals and wealth that has never been made up; for if the Huguenots had stayed she would probably to-day have been a Protestant nation, and been spared many of the scenes of lawlessness and atrocity that mark her after history.

2. God punishes nations for the mistakes of their rulers. All sins are mistakes and mistakes are all more or less sins. Slavery kept our country in agitation for twenty years and involved her in a four years' civil strife because the founders of our government, great and good men though they were, made a mistake. They believed slavery was wrong, but though they could then have easily put it down, they let it alone thinking it would die out of itself. So many think about Masonry, but it is a fact that no great evil ever died by being let alone. The tiny sapling that a child could pull up becomes the giant oak that defies the whirlwind. Though David confesses the sin to be his only, yet the people were not guiltless. V. 1. They had sinned too and roused God's anger. We whose boast it is that we govern ourselves, suffer jnstly for the monstrous crime and blunder of our rulers in licensing the liquor traffic. We have the power to make prohibitory laws and of choosing good men to enforce them. If we do neither we must expect God's judgments.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

Who is said to be better than an old and foolish king? Eccl. 4: 13. Who should be our king? 1 Tim. 1: 17. If we are loyal to Him will it save us from choosing weak and corrupt rulers and suffering through their sins? Is. 33: 22.

LESSONS.

1. Sins expose us to temptation, and temptation leads us to other sins (Introduction).

2. The heart may be in a very sinful state, very provoking to the Lord, when neither its owner nor another can see it. (Introduction.)

3. The breaking out of a sinful state into sinful acts may be part of God's merciful plan for producing conviction and repentance. (Introduction.)

4. Any affliction that brings men to penitence is merciful (v. 15).

5. God will not permit afflictions to become heavier than his people need (v. 16).

6. We should study and believe in the ministration of angels (v. 16).

7. Seeing God's hand in everything will incline us to apply to him for relief in everything (v. 17).

8. We need a Saviour in all the offices of prophet, priest, and king (v. 18).

9. Grace is not always in proportion to religious privileges (vs. 22, 23).

10. Instead of being reluctant, we should be eager to make sacrifices for Christ (v. 24).

11. Ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb, without blemish and without spot (v. 25; 1 Pet. 1: 18, 19).—U. P. Bible Teacher.

THE WHEATON W. C. T. U. TO MRS. H. H. HINMAN.

Wheaton, Ill., June 30, 1884.

In view of the removal from our midst of Mrs. H. H. Hinman, we, the members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Wheaton, Illinois, feel so much our loss at this separation, we wish to express our regrets at parting with one whom we know to be tried and true, and would commend her to the temperance workers in Washington or elsewhere.

Mrs. Hinman was one of our charter members, and has held the office of Rec. See. since our organization (several years ago) with the exeeption of a few months. Her counsel was readily sought and as readily given.

We still wish to keep hold of one hand of our sister, knowing that after a few months of rest, the work she so much loved will be resumed "For God and Home and Native Land."

Mrs. M. L. Stratton, Com.

OBITUARY.

Jason C. Bartholemew, died at his home in Kenwood, Iowa, between Cedar Rapids and Marion, on Saturday, August 2nd, aged 78 years. He had long been in feeble health, but was taken snddenly ill with an apoplectic attack on Friday morning and twenty-four hours later he peacefnlly expired.

Since the first public movement for the purification of the churches from the secret lodge curse, Bor. Bartholemew has been one of the warmest supporters of the reform, attending conventions and laboring privately. His zeal and the snccess of his efforts rendered him well known in the vicinity of Cedar Rapids. Men learned to respect him for his sincerity though they hated his principles.

The Cedar Rapids Daily Republican says of him: "Mr. Bartholomew was a vigorous and fearless abolitionist in the early day, and when the slaves were freed he transferred all his antipathy to slavery over to secret societies and nntil the day of his death he was outspoken and terribly in earnest in his opposition to all secret organizations.

"The deceased was an earnest member of the Free Methodist church. He was an honest, true, brave man, and on his death all men speak well of him."

OBITUARY.

Died, at her home in Lostant, Ill., July 10th, at 6 o'clock P. M., of consnmption, Mrs. Dr. Atwood.

Deceased was born at Waynesburgh, Pa., Sept. 22, 1841. She united with the Baptist church at Lostant about sixteen years ago, of which church she was a worthy member till death. She was married Nov. 18, 1862, to Dr. E. R. Atwood. In her home there was always a warm welcome for ministers of the gospel. She was especially interested in the temperance work and that of opposing oath-bonnd secret societies which she thought to be detrimental to the church. Her funeral services were held in the Baptist church Saturday, July 12, at half past 10, A. M., condncted by the pastor, J. L. Matthews, who preached from the text as recorded in 14th chapter of John, 1st, 2nd and 3rd verses. Although at a very busy time, the attendance at the funeral was very large. Everything in the way of arrangements and in attendance attested to the fact that Mrs. Atwood was held in the very highest regard as a noble hearted Christian woman. In my pastoral visits during her prolouged sickness I never saw her downcast or in complaining mood, but in it all I never saw her in better spirits than she was just a few evenings before her death; although fully aware of the near approach of death, she was not in the least troubled, but was rejoicing in the hope of a better life. She leaves a husband and five children to mourn her departure; but their loss, though very great, is surely her eternal gain. Her youngest child is ten years of age. Although God in his all-wise providence has taken from this family a kind, loving wife and mother, they have the prayers of many Christian hearts.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD, HENRY L. KELLOGG, } EDITORS.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 14, 1884.

THE CYNOSURE LIST can and ought to be doubled before November next. Campaign subscribers taken at the rate of four for a dollar till after election will become permanent subscribers in large proportion. But this work, like all labor against the spurious worships of this country, can only be achieved by prayer and self-denying labor.

The Galesburg Republican Register, Aug. 4th, says the Knights of Labor have nearly 400 members in that city, and another lodge forming, making three in all. And yet the knights pretend not to be "political," though thousands on thousands have joined such secret sworn orders since the campaign commenced.

There are 106 secret labor orders in Washington, D. C., paying out on an average, about one dollar where three are paid in. These funds sustain a multitude of swindling, soft-handed "laborers" who do no labor, with the wretched girls whom that money decoys with fine clothes, theatres, etc., etc.

We saw more young men in Pittsburgh drunk on the Sabbath than we have seen in any other town or city in the Union. The most disgusting and distressing sight was two well dressed young mechanics sitting on the steps by the old court house site, on the Sabbath, with each a long nine cigar in his mouth, bowing, drooling and ducking to each other, trying to talk polite. It was horrible! Pittsburgh is the paradise of secret labor unions.

MRS. RICHARD HANEY of Monmouth chanced to see a brewer give a jug of beer to some boys. She was subpœnaed to testify against him. The brewer kept watch and when he saw her carriage up and ready to go to the court house, he ran ahead and gave judgment against himself.

THE NEW YORK INDEPENDENT says of the Prohibitionists, "Their platform is the only decent one before the public." Whereas, the American platform, from which the leading features of the Prohibition platform were taken, has been put "before the public" by the Associated Press, and in the "patent insides" of hundreds of newspapers, beside the large list of papers which print against the lodge. Does the Independent consider the American platform an in-"decent" one? Or is its method in politics as in religion, a large business on a small capital of truth? The same paper says, "We are not clear that the time has come for a national [Prohibition] party." Very likely. The Independent is not clear as to "a heap of things."

WOMEN'S RIGHTS.

Two veteran women, advocates of "woman's rights," noticed in last Cynosure, are going for Mr. Blaine. They accuse the Prohibitionists of wishing to make "woman suffrage" a tail to the Prohibition kite, and so are angry with them. These two ladies once, with Mr. Garrison, opposed all voting by men or women. Mrs. Stanton was one of those who believed the way to secure to woman her rights was to make her as much like a man as possible in dress and manners. She invented the bloomer costume, or endorsed it, which soon fell into popular disgust.

These women are both of them superior women, and irreproachable in morals. Their error was to build without Christ or the Bible. The teachings of Paul were ridiculed by them. Mrs. Stanton had not influence enough with her husband to keep him from backsliding from the front rank of Abolitionists into the pro-slavery, Hunker wing of the New York State legislature; and Miss Anthony was wise or fortunate enough not to marry. Phœbe Cousins is handsomer than either of these two, and younger; and, if she had been brought up on the Westminster Catechism or New England Primer, she would be, in the English sense of pretty, a "pretty woman!"

But the cause of woman suffrage will be strengthened when these three leaders desert to the Republicans and Democrats. Mrs. Mary B. Willard's familiar saying is worth more than all the rhetoric of the able women above named. She says, "The women who are now asking the ballot are women who would neither have desired or dared to ask it for themselves. They ask it to rescue the perishing and to repress crime and cruelty."

There is nothing mannish or against man's headship in a lady dropping a snow-flake ballot into that "box," which in liquor hands has been to the United States the box of Pandora, without even hope at the bottom.

TERMS OF FUSION.

We have an urgent letter from Bro. Van Halteren of Clyde, Kansas, earnestly urging us to go for St. John. We see also Prof. Bailey's Washington American is pushing us toward Gov. St. John.

Some three years ago, when a national American convention in Galesburg nominated the senior editor of the Cynosure for the Presidency of the United States, he prophesied that we should elect St. John President in 1888. It looks now as though that prophecy, if it was one, might be fulfilled.

But if any fusion is attempted, the Cynosure will resist it once and forever, except on the following terms:

1. If the Americans are to vote for Prohibition candidates, those candidates must be clean of the lodge, and declared to be so publicly.

2. The American party must not drop its NAME, its ORGANIZATION, or its PRINCIPLES.

The National Prohibition Home-Protection party has already dropped half its name and it would be wise to drop the other half and take the name American, or at least, American Prohibition.

Two years ago we prophesied that the long name, then just adopted, could never be carried into the White House at Washington, and though the name Prohibition party is better, it does not do the cause justice. Already the national platform (Pittsburgh) recognizes God, which is much more fundamental than mere "Prohibition" or opposition to liquor. That magnificent party deserves, and before it gets control of the government, will have a national name like Democrat, Republican, or American, which some weak wretches write native American, to falsify and spite us. The men who made (under God) the United States, or their fathers, at least, were not native Americans. They were born in Europe. We shall not give up the name American, because the name expresses the thing. We ARE Americans, but Freemasons are aliens in law and in fact, if justice is done. They owe allegiance to another government, obey other officers and courts, and swear other oaths than those of the United States of America.

But wherever and whenever the Prohibition party will give us candidates, clear of the lodge and faithful to prohibition, we are Prohibitionists, and so are in favor of voting for those candidates.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

AMERICAN PROHIBITION.

MONMOUTH, Aug. 8th, 1884.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Secretary Stoddard, Mr. Nash and myself have just come from an interview with President McMichael, who yesterday arrrived from the Pan-Presbyterian Council at Belfast, Ireland. He and Dr. Hanna were at Queenstown, South Ireland, a dense Catholic region, and heard, on Sabbath, "a good United Presbyterian sermon from a Catholic priest!" Dr. Hanna said, "It was the best sermon on secret societies I ever heard." The priest showed that, by excluding Christ, the lodge is essentially heathen, and set against every principle of Christian civilization,—all that makes the difference between heathen nations and Christian.

Yet on my way here I called on a Congregational pastor who lately wore a Masonic apron at a funeral. He said, "I said to the Masons, If you trust anything but Christ to save you, you will fail of salvation." This minister thought this brave speech was a vindication of Christ while he stood there an avowed Mason, with the regalia on, and officiating as their chaplain! This is as if a rebel, in gray, should complain of being denounced by loyal men, because he, like Alexander Stephens, had said fine things about the Union. Robert E. Lee, at his Arlington mansion the night before he took command of the rebel forces, made as fine speeches for the Union as this Congregationalist Mason-minister with his Mason apron on, made for Christ.

"O what authority and show of truth
Can cunning sin cover itself withal."

We have just called to see Dr. Richard Haney of the Methodist Episcopal church. He is absent, but learned from his estimable lady that her husband is a strong Prohibitionist, and will doubtless make a prohibition speech at our forthcoming Monmouth convention. It will be remembered that Rev. J. W. Haney, son of this Elder Richard Haney, moved and carried the motion to hear the American delegation at Pittsburgh; and was indignant at the Masonic row by which Pres. C. A. Blanchard was denied the privilege of a brief, respectful statement of the American creed, after the privilege had been voted him.

The Monmouth convention is fixed by consultation with Dr. Weede, Mr. Nash, Pres. McMichael, Prof. Hutchinson and several others, to be on Thursday and Friday, September 11th and 12th. Among the opening speeches will be one from Richard Haney, D.D., who, two years ago, made a strong run on the Prohibition ticket in this (11th) Congressional District for Congress. He is a clear-thinking, powerful man; known probably to more men in Illinois than any other one inhabitant.

Secretary Stoddard hopes to canvass the surrounding country, and we hope to kindle a fire here in Monmouth which will set the political heavens of Illinois aglow as the Chicago fire did the literal heavens. When asked if he would give us a Prohibition speech, Dr. Haney replied, "You can count on me for that, one hundred cents on the dollar, and half a hatful thrown in."

Mr. William Reynolds of Peoria said he could not promise to preside at the Monmouth meeting because he had not made up his mind to give up the Republican party. But the fire of a noble ancestry burns in Mr. Reynolds' bosom, and we expect to see him yet at the head of a battalion in the Prohibition army. In short, now is the time for earnest, constant prayer. The worst defeats have sometimes followed close on the bugle-notes of victory.

SATAN'S DEVICES.

MONMOUTH, Ill., Aug. 8th, 1884.—A merchants' runner, here in Monmouth, an Ingersollite, had a pious wife and interesting children, one of whom, a stout girl of 15, had fits. He supplied them with food and Ingersoll documents.

His wife, though a superior woman and Christian, was ignorant of Satan's devices (Greek, methods), who never works with bad people while he can get a good person to work with. A month or two ago, this apparently rational and excellent woman took the girl into a cornfield, and, as the coroner's jury supposed, bandaged her child's eyes, cut her throat with a razor, and then cut her own. This was late in the afternoon. The husband and father slept all that night without alarming the police or the neighbors. Next day the citizens were aroused, and found mother and daughter dead.

A letter in her pocket asked that her "dear husband and children might not see the corpses;" and reasoned that the girl, whose mind was weakened and her passions strengthened by her fits, would "be better off in the next world." Of herself she said nothing.

Dr. Hanna of the First U. P. church here, said at the funeral, "Oh, how much that heart must have endured before it broke!"

Paul was "not ignorant of Satan's devices." Let us not be. The surviving daughter now reads Ingersoll, and haply thinks her mother's religion caused her suicide. Whereas, the devil, who is a murderer from the beginning, doubtless stimulated this double murder by the semblance of benevolence to a weak child; and haply by the heart sorrows of the excellent mother who

"Let concealment like a worm
Feed on her damask cheek."

So Satan still works murder and mischief, and throws the blame on Christ.

"Thus he supports his cruel throne
By mischief and deceit,
And drags the sons of Adam down
To darkness and the pit."

—"Gordon and the Soudan" will read better for the title of the first article on third page.

—The Blanchard, Iowa, Record office has issued in tract form an article by Rev. J. P. Lytle, D.D., of Sago, Ohio, which lately appeared in the United Presbyterian.

—Pres. J. Blanchard had two appointments at Monmouth, Ill., on Sabbath—at a union meeting in the afternoon and in the Second United Presbyterian church in the evening.

—Secretary Stoddard returned to Chicago, Saturday morning. He will speak at the Iowa State convention, and at the meeting near Holland, Mich., working meanwhile for the Illinois State meeting.

—John Wagner Pritchard, late business manager and office editor of the Christian Statesman, is about to begin a new paper in New York, The Christian Nation, which shall be devoted to "enlightened statesmanship, sound public morals," etc.

—Bro. W. D. A. Matthews, the State Prison missionary, called the other day with a warm greeting. He is still gathering and distributing good literature among the penitentiaries of the West and South. Friends who wish to aid him, will please not send packages until they have written him for free transportation.

—A prominent Methodist minister of this city who was thoroughly familiar with every part of the famous H. W. Thomas case, in the Rock River conference, says the defection of the latter was because of his running with the lodge, whose associations and principles overthrew his faith. This agrees with the conviction of the Cynosure at the time.

—A Nashville, Tenn., Mason who signs for "Phœnix Lodge, No, 131," writes in a very sentimental manner upon a copy of our tract No. 49, "John Quincy Adams on the Duty of American Voters:" "Yet despite Adams' speeches and opinions Masonry still flourishes in Massachusetts and all New England as well as New York, and wherever there are civilized communities. Please distribute your tracts freely in Tennessee and Masonry will have a big boom. We Masons like to be abused and traduced by such whining scoundrels as compose your National Christian Association. So whine on and send us plenty of documents."

—Many of our readers will remember Bro. H. Wilcox, of Jackson, Mich., who was till his death one of the warmest supporters of reform in that State. He was buried a few years since in Syracuse, N. Y. The last Wesleyan notices the death of his widow in words that the Cynosure can fully endorse:

"Mrs. Harriet Wilcox, widow of the lamented Harry Wilcox, of Jackson, Mich., died at her home in that city the 21st inst., and her remains were brought by her sons to this city for burial in Oakwood cemetery. Services were held on Thursday, the 24th, in the beautiful stone chapel of the cemetery, conducted by the Editor, Agent, and pastor of the Wesleyan church here. She was in her eighty-second year, a woman of remarkable strength and sterling virtues, a Christian philanthropist and reformer, mother of twelve children, eight of whom are living, four sons and one daughter being able to be present at the burial, also a large company of relatives and friends. She died as she had lived 'in the Lord.'"

—Elder C. E. Rowley, editor of the Holiness Conservator, has publicly renounced Freemasonry and confesses that in taking the three degrees of Blue Lodge Masonry he "made a fool of himself."

Reform News.

THE ILLINOIS STATE CONVENTION.

By order of the executive committee the annual convention of the Illinois State Christian Association will be held in Monmouth, Sept. 12, next. The hospitalities of the city will be tendered to the delegates, and the C. B. & Q railway gives a two-third round trip rate. Let churches and auxiliary associations send delegates, and above all pray for the meeting.

THE IOWA CONVENTION.

Clarence, Iowa, Aug., 9, 1884.

Editor Cynosure:—I want to urge all true reformers throughout the State to be at Washington, Washington county, Aug. 26–28, to attend the annual convention of the State Christian Association, and also the Iowa American political convention. By the help of the Lord we expect to have the best and most interesting conventions that have ever been held in the State. Rev. J. A. Preston, Hon. J. M. Kent, Bro. James Furguson, and others from this place expect to be present. Let the friends arrange to have a good delegation from every county in the State.

Every effort will be made to secure reduced railroad fares to the conventiou. Yours, for victory,

S. E. Starry.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

Lawn Ridge, Ill., Aug. 4th, 1884.

Yesterday morning I preached in Bro. Huston's church at La Prairie Center. This brother has been abundant in labors, and very successful in building up a congregation and establishing outposts in the regions round about. He is much beloved by his people and highly esteemed in the community. Close attention to study and assiduous toil has so impaired his health, that he feels compelled to rest for a time, and has resigned his pastorate much to the regret of his people. He is fully in sympathy with our reform work and ready to do all in his power to help it on.

Bro. Hurd took me to his home for dinner, and, after enjoying the hospitality of his house and being encouraged by the Christian conference of his estimable family, we came to Lawn Ridge where I met Bro. Stone for a few moments conference, and went to the Congregational church, where an audience was gathering for a special evening service. Bro. G. R. Ransom, the pastor, welcomed me cordially and gave me every opportunity that circumstances would allow. It was "Temperance day," and the evening was given up almost entirely to the children, who performed their parts well and deeply interested the large audience gathered.

I gave notice of my lecture at La Prairie Center by permission of the pastor and made a few remarks on the topic of the evening. I found at the close a few friends and accepted an invitation to the house of Mrs. Wetmore, widow of the late L. H. Wetmore, father of Mrs. A. D. Zarophonithes in Andros, Greece, whose letters to the Cynosure are read with interest. This is one of the most attractive homes in this region of beauty and wonderous fertility. To leave a home like this to spend a life in self-sacrificing Christian labors among a people of strange language and brave the opposition of religious enmity, means a consecration to God and duty in striking contrast with the selfish spirit of formalism too often seen in the church and world. Such consecrated lives ought to be followed by the prayers, the benisons, and contributions of God's people, who believe in foreign mission work divorced from the control of the lodge.

This reminds me, that while conversing with a brother minister about the position of ministers in the Congregational connection on the lodge question, he gave me the following respecting a prominent pastor, not a hundred miles from where I write. Said this pastor: "I expected to go as a missionary to a foreign land, and was advised to join the Masons. Supposing it would be a help to me I united; but subsequently changed my plans and do not care much about it now one way or the other." Thus under advice, and the impression that it would help him, this minister united with an organized system of pagan false worship, to obtain help in convertiug the heathen.

I met on the road to-day a physician, I inquired if he was a Mason. He replied: "When I was goiug into the army, I was advised by friends to join and took three degrees, but I don't think very much of it, and my wife is bitterly opposed to it." The man is an intelligent, successful practitioner and his wife an active Christian. Both acknowledge the evil of the lodge, and the woman has grace and grit enough to declare her convictions. Why not put the ballot in her hand so that she can speak to some purpose?

By the kindness of my hostess, I have just seen pictures of Bro. Zarophonithes' two children, and read a letter written at Athens, June 31st, by Mrs. Z. to her sister. It is an affectionate missive, containing a simple account of journeyings and meetings and partings with friends, but no incidents or adventures specially remarkable. There is one thing that impresses me as worthy of note, viz., the kind reception everywhere awaiting them, and the hospitality extended to this Christian family. God going before had prepared their way and provided friends of whom they had never heard. Mrs. Z. mentions an instance at Syra. A young lady there "had heard of Mr. Zaraphonithes through one of our Andros friends, and she and her married sister made us very welcome, and treated us to sweet meats and coffee and gave the children candies." Speaking of the American Minister at Athens and his family: "We found them very pleasant people. We were surprised to find that they had heard of us through the Englishman and his wife who visited us at Andros last winter. So our name goes around."

Thus the Lord is redeeming his word, "Lo! I am with you," and those whose principles are so faithfully represented by this Christian household in a far away land should not be unmindful of their opportunity to "preach the gospel," thus providentially opened.

J. P. Stoddard.

A SHARPSHOOTER AMONG THE NORMAL STUDENTS AT LEBANON, O.

Aug. 2d, 1884.

Editor Cynosure:—I have but recently returned from Lebanon, O., where I managed to do a little work for the reform. The school there has an attendance of about 800 students, the majority of whom are teachers. During my stay I distributed several hundred tracts, a large number of Cynosures and Americans, and sold some books. I found an alarming ignorance prevalent in regard to the American party and its principles, but few having heard of it. This is, of course, due to the studied silence of the press and pulpit on everything pertaining to our reform.

I found, too, a large number of Masons and Odd-fellows among the teachers, this class being influenced to join under the supposition that it will aid them in securing positions. The Southern students in particular are strong advocates of secrecy. One gentleman remarked that slavery and Freemasonry were always stronger in the South than in the North. I replied, "Yes, the two are twin sisters." Another intimated with a very red face that my exposition of Masonry was simply "bosh," and when I pleasantly invited him to make affidavit to the fact, he said that Masons were not permitted to do so. "Because you dare not do so," I replied. Although he would not purchase a book in the presence of others, I noticed that he took care to write down the address of the publishers when he thought no one was looking.

Another Hiramite became quite violent and said I had better attend to my own business and leave things alone that I knew uothing about.

I respouded, "This is my business, and as you are an honorable Mason, no doubt you can give us some information on the subject."

"I don't want to talk to you," he replied; "you don't know anything about it anyway."

"I know this much at least," I replied, drawiug my hand gracefully across my throat. This confused and quieted him for a time.

A friend showed "Freemasonry Illustrated" to a Mason of ten degrees, who scoffed at everything, but took particular exception to uothing save that part of the Royal Arch degree where the candidate is let down through a trap-door in search of the three masters' jewels, declaring that if there was anything of the kind connected with that degree he had uever seen it. I explained to my friend that the reason why he had not seen that part of the "work" was because the lodge-room in which he received the degree was not provided with a trap-door, and consequently that important feature was omitted. The fact that he denied this particular part and said nothing about the rest is good proof that he knew it to be correct.

I talked with a student who told me that while following the trade of a carpenter in a town in eastern Ohio, he once helped tear down a buildiug, the third story of which was used as a Masonic lodge-room. From the floor of this room a perpendicular shaft extended down through the other stories, the cellar, and some distance into the ground. How many of the lodges of our land are provided with just such horrid appendages as this, on the brink of which the obdurate candidate is given his choice of taking the oath or plunging into the dark depths.

One evening I chanced to overhear a minister advising a young man to join the lodge. He said that he was not himself a member of any secret society, but thought it a good thing for a young man to belong to at least one. Next morning I armed myself with a supply of anti-secrecy literature and called on the reverend gentlemau. He admitted that he had read but little on the subject, although he had seen the Cynosure. He did not believe that Morgan had been killed, and if he was it was merely the work of a few misguided men, etc., etc. He also argued that if Freemasonry was anti Christian in its tendency, the best way for Christian ministers to do was to join the order and by their influence set it aright. Strange logic, indeed. Might as well go in partnership with a saloon-keeper to advance the temperance cause, or with a pickpocket to promote honesty. I left him a quantity of tracts and papers and hope he may yet see aright. I called also upon the Presbyterian pastor, a D. D. He said that he was familiar with the Anti-masonic reform, that he had been a Mason, had taken all the degrees and had never seen any wrong in it. Shortly after he remarked that in his estimation opposition only strengthened the order and that fewer would join them if less was said on the subject. I replied that if his theory was correct it would apply to every other evil as well. "Yes," he said, "but the question is whether Freemasonry is an evil." Now, mark you, he had said but a moment before that he saw no evil in it. The Methodist minister at Lebanon is also a member and dances regular attendance upon the lodge. Is it any wonder, then, that the young men and the students in particular are being drawn into these dark places by the score as fast as they become of age, and that the lodges thrive and grow fat on their initiation fees, when those whose duty it is to warn them are silent or in the employ of the same dark power. I think we should make the college towns special points of operation where we can reach large numbers of young men who are not yet in the bonds of lodgery. If lecturers Stoddard, Starry or Ronayne will do anything for Lebanon, I will gladly co-operate with them at any time. It is a splendid point for work in every respect. I forgot to mention that I succeeded in getting the Cynosure and American introduced into the reading-room of the Normal University.

The Home.

A LITTLE CHILD.

Unconscious childhood's tiny grasp
Draws us from business, books and art,
Mightier than all the world, the clasp
Of one small hand upon the heart.

Of late, with lids that mimicked death,
In fever flames our darling lay;
While we who watched her fluttering breath
Could only wait, and hope, and pray.

Pale gliding shapes and whispered words
Haunted the hushed and shadowy room,
Till the first twitter of the birds
Awoke, and daybreak edged the gloom.

On vacant chairs and silent walls,
Where lonely watches of the night
Grow old, how strange, how spectral, falls
The mockery of the morning light!

As in a trance of fear we moved:
Peril to one we cannot save,
Peril and pain to one beloved,
Make trembling cowards of the brave.

The dawn rose, pitilessly bright;
The sunshine wore an alien hue;
There was not any more delight
In song of bird or spark of dew.

How idle seemed the task that claimed
A cold, accustomed service still!
Each worldly wish was quelled and shamed;
Alike were tidings good and ill.

Friendship itself small solace brought;
We came and went like dull machines;
How foreign to the harassed thought
The most familiar household scenes!

The golden fields and azure skies
Were veiled in sorrowful eclipse,
Till beamed again those darkened eyes,
Till smiled once more those childish lips.

Another night; all night she slept.
She woke: O joy! was ever dawn
So heavenly sweet as that which swept
With drizzling showers the trees and lawn!

The hillside frowned, by lowering brows
Of gloomy thickets overhung;
But in the dripping chestnut boughs
A cheerful robin perched and sung.

Dear omen of her blest release
From pain and the Great Dread past by!
Peace filled our souls, the light of peace
Was over all the earth and sky.

O happiest day of all the year!
Each moment had its joyous thrill;
Whatever came brought hope and cheer;
Alike were tidings good and ill.

Now never more, O heart, be sad,
When cloud and tempest drench the pane,
But keep the day with thoughts as glad
As robins singing in the rain.

HIS PLACE IN THE CHURCH.

"I want to tell you a story, young man."

That the young man would be glad to hear any story that Dr. Mentor might choose to honor him with, was evident from the flash of his eyes and the instant look of interest that overspread his face.

Then the doctor began: "About a month ago I attended the funeral of a man in whom I have taken a deep interest all my life. He was an old man, and a plain man all his life, yet, though I have attended a great many funerals in the last half-century, I don't think I ever saw a greater uprising of the people to offer the last tribute of respect and affection to a plain man in their midst. I want to tell you a little about that man. Miller his name was, Daniel Miller; he was older than I, and in my young days I used to watch him in his pew in the church. I liked his face, even then, before I knew him; a grave, half-sad face, yet never gloomy—only a look of patient resignation to the inevitable. A Christian man he was, one of the sterling sort. Talk with anybody in that town about him, and they would pay almost instant tribute to his sterling worth, and almost always close with: 'What a pity that such a good man as he should be so hard of hearing.'

"That was his trouble, and a great trouble it was. I suppose it was the means of breaking in pieces a number of plans of his youth. Well, the thought was written all over his patient, sad face: 'I am hard of hearing and growing worse. It destroys my usefulness, it hinders my work in every direction, it makes me appear unsocial and unsympathetic; in short, it is a burden hard to be borne.' As I watched him, I could see that this feeling grew upon him; grew with his infirmity, and that progressed quite rapidly.

"So it went on, Daniel Miller growing deafer and deafer, and the patient, sad look on his face deepening, and the feeling growing on his heart that he wasn't of any use to the church of Christ that he loved with all his soul.

"One day somebody in that church had an inspiration. 'I tell you what it is,' one of the members said, bringing down his doubled-up fist on the seat before him with emphasis, 'I believe we ought to make Daniel Miller our treasurer. That thing would suit him and he is just the man to do the work.'

"'But Daniel Miller is so deaf,' objected one. 'He grows worse and worse; I notice that his wife always has to find the place in the Bible, and point to the text.'

"'What if he is deaf?' said his champion; 'a man doesn't have to hear in order to add money and keep accounts, and make out bills and send them out, and keep everything straight. I believe it is work that he can do, and I believe it would do him good; make him feel that he can do something for the church, and that we have confidence in him. I tell you what it is, brethren, I'm going to propose his name in our next election.'

"Well, he was as good as his word, and sure enough, all the people said 'Amen.' They did it with so much enthusiasm, and with such a look on their faces that said, 'What a splendid idea! I wonder we never thought of that before,' that there was quite an excitement, and Mrs. Miller looked about her and the tears began to gather in her eyes, and she put her head down suddenly on the seat in front of her. She was a grand, good woman—a helpmeet to her husband in every sense of the word.

"Well, Daniel Miller looked around with that meek, inquiring look on his face, a little troubled, as much as to say, 'Are you having a good time, brethren, or is there something going on in the Lord's house that oughtn't to be; I'm jealous for his honor; I hope all is well.'

"The chairman got out of his chair of office, and went down the aisle, and bent over Mr. Miller, and said in a good, loud voice, 'You have been elected our church treasurer by an unanimous vote.'

"You ought to have seen his face then; it was a picture. It flushed and glowed, and his eyes grew dim, and his lips quivered, and it seemed for a minute that he couldn't speak at all. Then he stammered out something about not being fitted for the work—his infirmity being so great; he wished he could do something, he would be glad to, if he could, but maybe it was a risk to try it.

"Then the chairman put down his mouth to his ear again, and called out, 'We all stand ready to go your security, every one of us.'

"And then, sir, if you believe it, that decorous assembly, made up of the class of people who believe, every one of them, in doing things decently and in order, just clapped their hands, and he understood it, and he got out his handkerchief very suddenly. You never saw anything work more like a charm than that arrangement did all around.

"Daniel Miller took hold of the work with a will, I tell you, and the work was never better done. His 'infirmity,' as he always meekly called it, was a positive advantage to him. There wasn't any use in trying to tell him how the accounts stood, or explain away this, or that; he couldn't hear; it all had to be reduced to writing. And when a man sits down in quiet to make a written account of anything that another man is expected to fully understand, why he uses language carefully, don't you see? You don't suppose they were foolish enough, when his year was out, to go and put in another treasurer, do you? Not a bit of it; the machine was running too smoothly. They elected him again by as large a vote as before.

"'It does my heart good,' one old lady said, 'to see Daniel Miller go up for the collections on Sabbaths. He does it with such a glad look on his face, as if he had found out something he could do for the church, and do well.'

"He did it well, too; no mistakes. By-and-by he began to send out little notes with his bills. 'We owe it to our pastor to pay his quarter's salary on the day promised.' Well, sir, when the next quarter's salary was paid the morning of the day on which it was due, without having been asked for or run after, that minister thought that the millennium was about to dawn! He hadn't been used to that sort of thing. You never saw anything like the promptness with which pew rents were paid in the church. If a man was twenty-four hours behind time, he was almost sure to receive a call from Mr. Miller; no writing notes this time. That man understood human nature well. Just imagine a gentleman standing in his store or office, and trying to carry on a conversation with Daniel Miller about not having paid his pew rent. 'Money has been a little short with me lately,' he begins, 'and I thought a few days' delay—'

"'What is it?' interrupts Daniel, with his hand to his ear. 'I'm hard of hearing, you know, speak a little louder, please.'

"Do you suppose that man is going to yell out for the benefit of the passers-by that he is a little short of money, and had deliberately planned a few days' delay for his minister? The way it worked was for him to scream out, 'You shall have the money at noon to-day, Mr. Miller.' Very likely he grumbled that he wouldn't get caught in that trap again, and he didn't.

The years went by, and at each election Daniel Miller was reinstated, until at last that congregation would have laughed in the face of any man who had suggested a change. 'What should we do without Daniel Miller?' That is as near as they ever came to mentioning the time when they might have to do without him; and the time came when they said that in lower tones, and with a hint of tears; for he was growing an old man, and the church couldn't afford to lose him.

"One night he had a new idea, or rather he worked out what was to him an old idea. He went on Saturday evening to the parsonage with the quarter's salary; he apologized for intruding on Saturday, but said he: 'According to date this money should be paid to-morrow morning, and of course I couldn't do that, so I made bold to come to-night.'

"Well, he happened to be one of those men who never intrude on a pastor, no matter what time they come; so his pastor told him he was glad to see him, and would talk with him while he finished and put up his sermon; but Daniel didn't seem to want to talk; he watched that sermon with a curious, wistful air. At last he spoke: 'I've been turning a ridiculous idea over in my mind for a long time: I don't suppose it could be done, but I've thought sometimes that I would just like to try an experiment, and read over one of your sermons before you preached it, and see if I couldn't follow you from the pulpit better after that.' It was a queer notion, but it took the pastor's fancy. The fact was he loved Daniel Miller so much that almost anything he said took his fancy, and he handed over the sermon and told the old gentleman to try it by all means, he could have it as well as not. It would have done your heart good to see Daniel Miller's radiant face the next day. 'It worked, sir, it worked!' he said to the pastor, and he rubbed his hands together like a gleeful boy; 'I could follow you right along a good piece at a time.' If you'll believe it, that thing grew into a regular custom; the pastor had a boy, a bright enough fellow, who was always ready to scamper over to Daniel Miller's with the sermon on Saturday nights, as soon as the minister could spare it, and wait while Daniel Miller went over it. The fact is, as the years went by, he was more willing to do that than any other errand the father could get up, and he and Nettie went over church accounts and some other accounts together, many a Saturday night. But I happen to know that that pastor came to have a queer feeling that he couldn't preach a sermon until Daniel Miller went over it! That might be in part because he discovered that the old man had a way of going over it on his knees, and every sentence he came to that seemed to him ought to do a certain person good, he would pray: 'Lord, bless that to John Watkins,' and so on, you know. Little Nettie, she let that secret out to the boy one night; and the minister came to feel that Daniel Miller was the associate pastor, and was praying the sermon into the hearts of the people all the time it was being preached. When a minister really feels that, he preaches carefully, I believe.

"Well, sir, it was a wonderful life; and when it ended, as I tell you it did a little more than a month ago, I never saw anything like the demonstration; and I didn't wonder at it. Twenty-nine years they had elected that man to office, and the Lord had elected him to a much higher office here on earth; his little notes bore a big harvest; and when the Lord called him to his seat in the Church triumphant, the church on earth looked around for some one on whom his mantle could fall, and I tell you it seemed for a time impossible to do without him. Why, I moderated the meeting for them when they met to try to fill his place, and they just spent the first half hour in tears and praying! Such lives tell. 'Infirmity,' indeed! God grant us more men like Daniel Miller."—Journal and Messenger.

LIVES OF CELEBRATED MEN.

JOHN KITTO.

Near the beginning of the present century, in a home made wretched by the intemperate habits of the husband and father, a wailing baby opened its eyes only to rest them upon misery and want. In that home there was lack of nourishing food as well as of comfortable clothing for the puny infant. In wretchedness and neglect the baby boy struggled on, living in spite of neglect, until he was four or five years old, when his grandmother, coming one day into the house and seeing the misery there, asked the father and mother to let John go home with her to live. Their consent gained, John was only too glad of the peace and quiet of his grandmother's humble home. It was while living with this old lady that he tasted something of the sweets of childhood, but it was only for a brief period. His grandmother soon became too infirm to live by herself, and as John was not old enough to care for her, they went to live with John's parents, and again the boy entered upon a life of hardship. When he was old enough he began to work with his father, who was a stonemason. One day, when he was eleven years old, he fell from the top of a high building where he was working, and was picked up from the ground white and limp as if he were dead. Then there was confusion in the wretched home, made more wretched by the presence of sickness and the approach of what seemed like death. For many days the boy lay in a stupor from which it was impossible to rouse him. Anxiously the watchers stood around, expecting him soon to breathe his last. But to their surprise he opened his eyes and seemed to know them. Long before this his friends had discovered his fondness for books, and I do not suppose they were surprised when he asked for a certain book which he had been reading before he fell. When he was refused he was unable to understand what they meant, and grew impatient with what seemed to him like stupidity. And when he exclaimed, "Why don't you answer me?" one of his friends wrote on a slate:

"You are deaf!"

Imagine what that would be to any eleven-year-old boy! To be deaf; never to hear the voices that you love, never to listen to the singing of birds, or the babble of brooks, never to hear the wind sighing through the pines, not even to be startled by the roar of thunder—can you imagine it? And this was what befell John.

Things did not mend at home, and when John was fifteen he was sent to the almshouse. Here he was set to work making shoes, and here he remained several years. Once in the time he was bound out to a shoemaker, but he was treated so badly by his master that the authorities interfered and he returned to the almshouse, where he had to work very steadily, but he contrived to find time for a great amount of reading and study.

After a time some benevolent gentlemen found out how he was trying to gain knowledge, and planned a way to help him. He left the place where he had been so long, and went to live with a gentleman who gave him every opportunity for study. You may be sure he improved these opportunities and soon became a fine scholar. Then he had an opportunity to travel. He wrote many books, and I have no doubt you may find in your father's library some of them, as Cyclopædia of Biblical Literature or History of the Bible.

His writings are of great value, and the world could not have well done without John. Yet how many laboring under his disadvantages would have felt excused from doing anything to add to the literary wealth of the world. How many would have persevered in study under such difficulties? From his very babyhood his life was one of struggle and privation, yet by steady, persevering industry he rose above circumstances and at length gained an honored name and position among men of letters, and for several years before his death, which occurred in 1854, he was known as Doctor John Kitto.—The Pansy.

DIME NOVELS—A TRUE INCIDENT.

Willard and Fred Warren had been reading "dime novels" for some time "upon the sly," as they expressed it. Just how they begun in such an evil practice I do not know, but undoubtedly in the same way that many other boys begin to do wrong. Their Christian parents never dreamed for a long time that the boys were doing this and thus trying to deceive them. They were careful to provide their children with suitable reading, and many bright, beautiful books were presented to them, but the boys' taste for reading had been corrupted and they did not care for the fine presents in the form of books. The "dime novels" with their false and unholy teachings were leading the boys far away from the path of right and obedience. The blinded boys were injuring themselves far more than they supposed.

Willard and Fred could not always read such books "upon the sly," and at last it was revealed to the parents just what the boys had been doing. They were greatly surprised and deeply grieved, and they entreated the boys to cast such books aside and never look upon them again. Fred, the youngest boy, was moved at the grief of his parents and promised to heed their advice, but Willard, who was four years older, thought he was able to judge for himself what kind of books to read, and so he made no promise. Fred regained the confidence or his parents, but Willard only grew more disobedient. He would not remain at home the long winter evenings because he was not allowed to read his vile books in the family circle. Soon he left home for good, and became very reckless and wayward. The parents were almost heart-broken, and could only weep and pray. At last he went away, and no one knew just where he had gone. News came after awhile that he was in a western jail, but no one knew whether it was true or not.

Two years passed away, and the parents received a letter from him just before he died in want and degradation. He confessed his folly, and acknowledged that he was led to his life of shame by reading dime novels. He asked to be forgiven, and expressed a hope that God had also forgiven him. Another letter followed this, from another, saying that Willard was dead and buried far away from his friends and kindred.

This is only one of the thousands that are led yearly to ruin by reading dime novels.—Selected.

GAME LAWS FOR BOYS.

The following conversation from Maurice Thompson's new serial, "Marvin and his Boy Hunters," begun in the May St. Nicholas, gives a lucid explanation for the necessity for laws for the protection of game:

"Why is it against the law to shoot larks and robins?" said Hugh; "I don't see why it's any worse to kill them than it is to kill quails."

"Why is it any worse to kill a horse than it is to kill a pig?" inquired Uncle Charley.

"Because a pig's good to eat and a horse isn't," quickly answered Hugh.

"Isn't there a better reason?" said Uncle Charley; "isn't a horse more useful to us as a servant than it would be for food, even if its flesh were delicious?"

"Certainly," said Hugh.

"Well, a meadow-lark is a very useful bird to the farmer. It eats great numbers of insects, eggs, and larvæ that would work great harm to wheat, corn, and orchards; then its flesh is not very good; while a quail eats grain and its flesh is excellent food. Do you see the difference?"

"That does seem reasonable," said Hugh; "I hadn't thought of it in that way. A meadow-lark is like a horse,—it helps the farmer make his crop by destroying bugs and things; and the quail is like a pig,—it eats corn and wheat and gets fat, to be killed and eaten."

Uncle Charley laughed.

"I see you apply a theory in a very practical sort of way," he remarked. "But the law protects all kinds of harmless birds, the flesh of which is not profitable for food," he continued, "out of fear of the influence that the mere wanton slaughter of birds would have upon the morals of the people. If a boy is allowed to be cruel as he grows up, he is likely to develop into a dangerous man. I think there is a great difference between a moderate indulgence in field sports, and the abandonment of one's self to the brutal and indiscriminate slaughter of birds and animals."

TEMPERANCE.

Intoxication no Excuse for Murder.—The following instructions were given by Judge Eustace on behalf of the people, on the trial of Christian Reibling, in the Circuit Court of Whiteside county, Ill., for murder, as reported in the Legal News of this city:

If the jury believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant, with malice aforethought, shot at and hit the deceased with the revolver ball, and thereby inflicted upon him a wound of which he afterward died in manner and form as charged in the indictment, then the defendant is guilty of murder, even though the jury may further believe from the evidence that the wound was not necessarily mortal, and that with proper care and treatment the deceased might have recovered; and it is sufficient, in such case, to warrant a conviction, if the jury believe from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the wound and ill-treatment of the deceased physcians or others jointly caused the death.

That voluntary drunkenness is no excuse for the commission of crime.

If a person is sober enough to intend to shoot at another and actually does shoot at and hit him, without any justification therefor, then the law presumes that such person is sober enough to form the specific intention to kill the one shot at; and in such case he is criminally responsible for the act.

A person who is intoxicated may yet be capable of deliberation and premeditation; and if the jury believe from all the evidence in the case beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant willfully, maliciously, deliberately, and premeditatedly, shot and wounded the deceased as charged in the indictment, and the death ensued from such wound as charged in the indictment; then they should find him guilty of murder, although he may have been intoxicated at the time of the shooting.

Voluntary intoxication does not destroy responsibility, where the party when sane and responsible made himself voluntarily intoxicated, and drunkenness forms no defense whatever to the fact of guilt; for when a crime is committed by a party while in a fit of intoxication, the law will not allow him to avail himself of his own gross vice and misconduct, to shelter himself from the legal consequences of such crime. Evidence of drunkenness can only be considered by the jury for the purpose of determining the degree of crime, and for this purpose it should be considered with great caution, that no undue and dangerous immunity or license be given to crime by persons whose passions are inflamed by drink.

That if a person has capacity and reason sufficient to enable him to distinguish between right and wrong as to the particular act in question, that is if he has knowledge and is conscious that the act he is doing is wrong, and would deserve punishment, he is, in the eye of the law, of sound mind and memory, and capable of committing crime.

The true test of criminal responsibility when the defense of insanity is interposed is, whether or not the accused had sufficient reason to know right from wrong, as to the act with which he is charged.

These instructions were sustained by the Supreme Court with no dissent, an application for a supersedeas was refused, and the prisoner executed. They may therefore be regarded as good law.

LEGALIZED WICKEDNESS.

The dealers in ardent spirits may be compared to men who should advertise for sale consumptions, fevers, rheumatisms, palsies and apoplexies. Would our public authorities permit such a traffic? No; the public voice would be heard at once demanding the punishment of such enemies of our race; and the rulers that would not take speedy vengeance would be execrated and removed. But now the men who deal out this slow poison are licensed by law; and they talk about their constitutional rights, and plead that they are pursuing their lawful callings. These traffickers in the blood of men tell us that this work of death is their living; their means of supporting their families. But where lies the difference in criminality between the dram-seller, who for gain administers in slow but certain death, and public murderers? The former is licensed in his wickedness by law; the latter must be hanged.—Lyman Beecher, 1831.

THE COST OF A DRINK.

I knew a prominent New York lady who gave a great reception to a new pastor from across the water four or five hundred people being present. Many of the young men, Sunday-school teachers, etc., became so boisterous that the hostess was greatly mortified, and resolved never again to offer wine at her public entertainments. A prominent New York merchant, originally an Englishman, never sat down to the table without his wine and brandy, and his three sons, in consequence, all grew up drunkards. One became so abandoned that his father cast him out of the house. At last some temperance people brought about his reformation, and he came to see his father on New Year's day. The old gentleman said, "My son, I'm delighted to see you again. I'm glad you've reformed." Thoughtlessly he said, "Let's drink to your better life one glass of sherry." The young man hesitated a moment, and then thought he would just drink one glass. The old appetite revived, and that night his father found him dead drunk in the stable.—William E. Dodge.

Says Zion's Herald: The Springfield Republican has the following affecting note referring to a brother of two of our esteemed correspondents, one of whom appears on our first page this week. But what shall we say of liquor-sellers and selling in the lurid light of this one of ten thousand similar incidents? "A sadly ruined life was that of Col. Robert M. Goodwin, who committed suicide in the State Prison at Jeffersonville, Ind., this week. He had a brilliant career in the war, and was attaining a high position at the Indianapolis bar when he took to drink. He finally reached such a frenzy that his family placed him in an insane asylum under treatment for alcoholism. He laid his confinement to his brother, Dr. John Goodwin, a banker, of Brookville, Ind., and upon being released in April, 1880, as a cured man, he shot his brother dead upon the street. He was tried for murder, and on account of the strong plea for insanity, or dementia, was sentenced to State Prison for life. The case was carried to the Supreme Court, which ruled that voluntary drunkenness was no excuse for crime, and that delirium was no defense for crime unless it was on when the crime was committed. His counsel said he would kill himself within a week, and he did, by taking poison. He was of a fine family, and has two brothers who are leading clergymen."

A cablegram from London, June 28th, says: The congress of German brewers, which has been in session in Berlin for the past week, concluded its session with to-day's sitting. Fifteen hundred beer manufacturers attended. Among the facts brought out were that 6 per cent. more beer was drank by the Kaiser's subjects last year than during the year preceding, the amount used having aggregated 53,000,000 gallons.

The Louisville, Ky., Courier Journal, one of the most widely circulated and influential general newspapers published in the country, referring to Sunday laws, says they are not based upon fanaticism, but upon a sound business principle. The retail liquor dealer represents the business of a debaucher; a business which nurses and instigates crime, a business that is inimical to the welfare of society, and a business that bears heavily on the purses of the tax-payers.

that can effectually levy and collect it. Should the State of Illinois, for instance, attempt to levy an excise tax on whisky, the distilleries would be removed across the river to Missouri. Each State in turn that should attempt to collect an excise tax would find itself baffled and disabled. It is only the National government that can do it, and the National government can do it for the benefit of all the States.

Instead, therefore, of repealing the tax on spirits the National government can assign it to the States in proportion to their population. The machinery of collection is to-day in complete operation. A bill of ten lines could direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the whole of it, less the small expense of collection, to the States and Territories in the proportion of their population, and to continue it permanently as a part of their regular annual revenues. The amount yielded by the tax on spirituous and malt liquors last year was over $86,000,000. On the basis of the census of 1880 it would pay about $1.75 per capita to all the people. The tendency would be to increase rather than to diminish this ratio as time wore on. Illicit distilleries would disappear when every State and every town should come to realize that it was being defrauded of its own revenue by permitting or winking at the violations of law. On the basis of $1.75 per head the relief to the States would be very great. I append a table showing what each State would receive on the basis of the present revenue. In considering the question, as I have very carefully for several months past, I have possibly overlooked objections which others may suggest.

A FUTURE FINANCIAL UTOPIA.

But the more I have reflected upon it the more evident it has become to my mind that it is wiser to tax whisky than to tax farms, and homesteads, and shops, and that it would be an act of incalculable folly to omit the $86,000,000 instead of giving it to the States for the relief of oppressive local taxation. I trust I have made the difference between this proposition and the Pennsylvania proposition sufficiently plain. The one which I have suggested gives the revenue from a specific tax wholly to the States, and does not depend upon a chance surplus or an accidental remainder in the National Treasury. It makes the tax on spirituous and malt liquors a permanent resource to all the States, enabling them thereby definitly to readjust and reduce their own taxation. Each State could wisely use its share according to its necessities. In Maine, for example, our share would enable us to repeal absolutely the State tax proper, leaving only the county and town taxes upon the people. In your State of Pennsylvania, where licenses support the State government, the cities and towns could receive pro rata the $7,500,000 which would fall to your share. Your City of Philadelphia would receive nearly $1,500,000 per annum. States that have been so oppressed by debt as to be tempted or driven to repudiation would be enabled to regain their credit, and every community from ocean to ocean would, in one form or another, realize that burdens of taxation were in some degree ameliorated. I believe the measure would prove a "great beneficence" to the people in all parts of the Republic. Very respectfully,

JAMES G. BLAINE.

THE CHURCHES.

—The Believers' Conference for Bible Study will be held, August 20–25, at Harbor Springs, Mich., about four miles from Petoskey and thirty-five miles from Mackinac. Among those who will be present to teach, with others, the following brethren can be mentioned: Maj. D. W. Whittle, Pres. C. A. Blanchard, Prof. W. G. Moorhead, H. P. Welton, and L. W. Munhall. Inquiries can be addressed to Mr. Henry Wright, of Harbor Springs.

—Rev. J. M. Adair's congregation purpose celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of his installation as pastor of the Stone Valley, Pa., congregation on the 20th inst. Mr. Adair began his ministerial work in this church.

—Rev. A. J. Chittenden of the College church, Wheaton, is taking a few weeks needed rest. Bro. C. W. Hiatt, Prof. H. A. Fischer and others are taking his place meantime.

—Prof. J. A. Edgren has resigned his position in the Baptist Theological Seminary at Morgan Park, Ill., and has accepted a call to superintend the instruction in the newly organized Swedish-American Bible Seminary at St. Paul, Minn. "Dr. Edgren," says the Standard, "has been for many years connected with our own seminary in this line of work, and takes with him, now, only the best wishes of those with whom he has been so long associated, and who have been glad to do all in their power, under circumstances such as must always attend the first years of educational institutions, especially in the West, to promote his wishes and further and second his efforts. A most important service has been rendered by this department of the seminary; one sure evidence of which is seen in the fact that there has been created through it a ministry and a fellowship of churches such as this to which Dr. Edgren now appeals in behalf of his new enterprise.

—The Chicago Central Woman's Christian Temperance Union has opened the Bethesda Gospel Temperance and Medical Mission at No. 368 South Clark street, where gospel meetings will be held nightly. Medicine and treatment will be given to the poor every afternoon, except Saturday.

—F. H. Revell, publisher, and Charles Herald, both prominent members of the Chicago Avenue church, Chicago, have just returned from a trip of several weeks in Kansas and Colorado, part of the time being spent in gospel work.

—The Berea Evangelist calls attention to the work of four evangelists or missionaries in central Kentucky who are laboring successfully among all classes in an undenominational way. They are not supported by any missionary board, and are faithful in their testimony against the secret orders. Such workers for Christ deserve commendation and aid. The Cynosure will insert their names with other Christian workers.

—Prof. J. R. Sloane, D.D., has been released, at his own request, from the pastorate of the Reformed Presbyterian church of Allegheny City, Pa. His long continued ill health makes it impossible to attend to his duties in the Theological Seminary and the church at once. Prof. Sloane's health has been improving during the season and he expects to take his place in the Seminary at the opening, September 16th.

—Dwight L. Moody will be invited to attend a Christian convention in the city of Detroit, Mich., similar to the one held at Chicago last year. The meeting will continue three days, and will be for the practical discussion of Christian work. Much interest is manifested in the project.

—Many of the London street cars, which run on more than 400 routes and carry 75,000,000 of people a year, have texts of Scripture neatly posted up in them, at an annual cost of two and a half dollars for each. This is the work of a London association formed for the purpose.

—The Bishop of Liverpool, Dr. Ryle, is helping to solve the question, "How to reach the masses." He preaches in the open air; in the great ship-building yards at the noon intermission, and among the 14,000 carters, with their wives, children and babies, and to the men of the great goods' stations, oftentimes from 2,000 to 3,000 in one assembly.

—In the ninety-eight years of its existence the American Bible Society has issued more than 43,000,000 volumes, including Bibles, New Testaments and portions of the Gospels.

—The variations in the Presbyterian name gathered at the Belfast Council recalls the story of the late Dr. William Adams. In a speech delivered at one of these large councils he said: "Brethren, you are R. P.'s and I. P.'s and U. P.'s—why don't you call yourselves split peas and be done with it?"

—Masses for the dead are now celebrated in some of the congregations in the Church of England, but are called "Celebrations of the Blessed Sacrament on behalf of the Faithful Departed." The "Guild of all Souls" is an association formed for the purpose of extending this particular Romish rite in the English Church.

—At the Congregational Club, of New York, Dr. Clapp said, among other evils of the present, one was the building of too costly churches. "Better build fifty churches for the poor than one $500,000 temple. I do not believe the Lord cares whether a church costs $10,000 or $500,000; but I do believe he cares whether there is one church or fifty churches."

—A valiant old Swiss Christian named Pointer has for many years gone through France, selling and giving away Bibles and Testaments. At the same time he preaches against Romanism and Infidelity, leaving the Scriptures to tell the true gospel story of salvation. In 1883, he sold 7,713 New Testaments, 780 Bibles, 17,355 illustrated sheets, and gave away 48,000 single gospels.

—The little island of Atafu, in the South Seas, is said to be the only purely Christian country in the world. Every adult on the island is a member of the church on confession of faith.

—A young Christian Chinaman, who is earning $25 a month in the island of Tahiti, devotes $20 of it to the purchase of tracts and leaflets for distribution among his countrymen.

—Mrs. Walker, of Auburndale, Mass., has for the last fifteen years been caring for the children of foreign missionaries who have been left in this country or returned to it. It is now desired to raise $50,000 to purchase a house and furnish an endowment fund. A meeting was held recently to take some decisive action toward raising the amount. Mrs. Walker has had under her care for the last year twenty children.

—Dr. Jessup estimates that twenty years ago not twenty females out of the 2,000,000 population of Syria could read. Now 7,149 girls attend Protestant schools there, and the change is due to Protestant Christian missions.

—The Mission of the Free Scotch church of Lake Nyassa, is showing much good fruit. At Bandawe, the station midway up the lake, four adults have recently been baptized, and seven natives sat with the missionary party at the Lord's Supper. Two of the young men, before baptism, gave this reason for desiring the ordinance: "Before the white men came, we did not know any God: but they have come and taught us, and now we wish to obey God's word. We do not wish to be baptized that we may become the children of the white man, or that we may get cloth and beads, but because it is obeying God's word, and we wish to serve him." When Dr. Laws, who returns to England, was departing, three chiefs came to express their sorrow. These chiefs have established schools; one in which there were 175 persons, a fair portion being girls. There was an opportunity for opening other schools had there been a force to care for them.

—The conquest of Africa, with its 200,000,000 inhabitants, is greater than that of Canaan. It is a war with "principalities and powers," with the dark superstitions of benighted heathen, and with the intrenched system of Islam, with malaria, heat, and wasting disease. It may seem a superhuman task, but Christ has commanded it: it is ours to obey. Canaan was actually taken; Africa also will be soon. All nations are embraced in our commission. Africa, perhaps, is the Malakoff of the situation, yet to no other land or race do civilized nations and the Christian church owe more than to this dark continent. "Let us not be afraid, neither be dismayed, for the Lord our God is with us," whithersoever we go.

—The Galesburg Daily Republican Register of August 4th in its report of the services of the Sabbath previous says: "Rev. Jonathan Blanchard occupied the pulpit of the First Church on Sunday morning and evening, and was on both occasions favored with large congregations. He is widely known through this section, not only for his having been for so many years the President of Knox College, but for his advocacy of anti-slavery before the civil war. Both of his sermons were directed to the political situation as it is at present in this country. In the morning he preached from the words: 'Render therefore unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's.' In the Pharisees and Herodians, who were attempting to sacrifice Christ by entrapping him in his words, the speaker saw represetatives of the two great parties of to day; and in the tribute money, he saw a question such as the tariff of to-day. * * * * Several times during his sermon the speaker scored the two great parties, and the scoring was taken in good part by the large audience. Mr. Blanchard's face and actions stamp him as a man of great force of character, a man who contends for all that is in him for what he believes, because he believes it is right, and because he believes the right is the only safe path for either individuals or nations."

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

THE "ANCIENT ORDER OF HIBERNIANS."

The status of this secret society, of which the Pennsylvania Mollie Maguires were a component part, has been puzzling the prelates of the Romish church no less than its own members. It has been recognized by Archbishop Purcell and others as Catholic, but has of late sought a more official recognition. The National Convention of the order at Cleveland last spring declared itself "absolutely and entirely Roman Catholic in its inception and tendencies, owing its spiritual allegiance alone to the church in which we were born and for the maintainance and perpetuation of which our fathers bled and died; and we hereby declare, as the representatives of the Ancient Order of Hibernians of the United States, in convention assembled, that we are not affiliated or controlled by, directly or indirectly, any other society or organization of any kind, nature, or description in this or any other country."

Whether it be a Catholic or political society is the question. A writer in the Catholic Review given as an "eminent authority" by the editor, has this to say in the course of a long letter:

The resolutions adopted at Cleveland "declare" that the ancient order of Hibernians "is absolutely and entirely Roman Catholic in its inception and tendencies." This is plainly a claim that the organization is a Catholic society. In the same resolutions they "endorse" the Philadelphia National League Convention; "pledge their earnest support to the loyal, courageous and prudent leader of the Irish people, Charles Stewart Parnell;" take sides with "Ireland's struggle for her national right to self government, and to take her place among the nations of the earth, free and independent;" also they "proclaim unswerving fidelity to the free institutions of the United States of America." This is plainly an official declaration that the organization is a political organization, in so far as political economy deals with the agitation under Parnell, the Philadelphia Convention and Ireland's aspirations for self-government. Hence the Cleveland resolutions claim that the Ancient Order of Hibernians is both a religious and political society.

On the other hand, Rt. Rev. Dr. Gilmour, in addressing the convention before the resolutions were passed submitted that he considers "foreign control" and "political affiliation" as the "real cause of the hostility" and "mistrust" existing, on the part of some church officials, against the organization; that they asked to be "recognized" as a Catholic society; therefore he suggests, as a remedy, that they make the organization "American;" "have nothing to do with politics;" "be Catholic;" and "take the church into their counsels" lest "action be taken" against them "at the coming Council" unto their "final ruin."

It is evident from the history of the organization, as well as from the Cleveland resolutions, that the chief object of the Ancient Order of Hibernians is the temporal benevolence of its members, and still more the temporal weal of Ireland. This being so, it was a grave mistake on the part of the organization to ask to be "recognized" as a Catholic society and to share the honors, privileges and benefits of a Catholic society, such as having a "chaplain," with regalia attending church services, receiving Communion, attending religious rites, funerals, etc. This step ertablishes the dual nature of the organization, and makes it, to the mind of an ecclesiastical judge, a legal monster with two distinct heads. Such a deformation is clearly against the law, and must be repudiated. Repudiating this step does not involve the right of the church to investigate and sit in judgment upon the organization in order to ascertain whether in its nature, or workings, it in any manner coflicts with church principles. This done, and no conflict being proven, the organization, as a political society. is absolutely free and independent and cannot be forbidden to Catholics. To apply Cardinal Manning's words: "The civil society, even though every member of it be Catholic, is not subject to the church, but plainly independent in temporal things which regard its temporal end. * * * In things temporal and in respect to the temporal end, the church has no power in civil society."

The Cleveland resolutions are erroneous and cannot stand. The delegates may have had the best of intentions in making the profession of faith they did make. But the church in her public courts cannot judge of intentions. De internis non judicat praetor. Although the declaration of faith might be accepted, in the sense that it is an official denial that the organization is against religion, the church may judge and condemn the Cleveland resolutions which pretends that the organization is Catholic.

Why should any one insist on the Ancient Order of Hibernians becoming formally a Catholic society, while it is evident from its whole history, that it is "heart and soul" an Irish, secular society, seeking to alleviate the wrongs and secure the rights of Ireland, and this at one of the most critical periods in all the history of that afflicted country? Why should any one make such an effort now, more especially as a new era has evidently opened, with the recent Encyclical Letter of Pope Leo XIII. for popular societies? Such effort is a most unreasonable interference in secular affairs, and tantamount to asking Ireland's ever faithful son s to abandon their undying love for their mother country. The temporal should not "steal the thunder" of the spiritual. The spiritual need not "steal the thunder" of the temporal. If new and powerful organizations are desired or needed to promote spiritual interests, there is faith and virtue enough in the church to create them without "floating double" at the expense of poor, needy Ireland.

THE FLIGHT OF TIME AND ITS RESULTS.

This is an age of progress. Were it possible for the mythical fable of Washington Irving to be realized, and had an inhabitant of this sphere composed himself for the renowned Rip Van Winkle nap some twenty-five or thirty years ago, truly, upon awakening to-day, would he imagine himself in another world advanced far beyond his comprehension. A retrospection of the past ages, based, of course, upon the records and evidence extant, in comparison with the past half century, render the improvement of the latter almost miraculous. The arts, sciences, general intelligence, and other advantages to mankind, have advanced with the rapidity of the mushroom, but with the stability of the pyramids. Probably the most beneficial development has been that of the railroad system. One does not have to go back to the boyhood days of the oldest inhabitant to see the vast changes wrought through the instrumentality of the latter, as many are yet comparatively young that well remember the status of affairs innovated by the introduction of the steam horse. At that time, when removed from water transportation, the turnpikes were the great thoroughfares—the principal medium of communication between the different parts of the country. The latter were certainly a great advance upon previous modes, and from the substantial manner of their construction were, doubtless, considered the limit of human efforts in that direction. They served their turn well, opened up the inland, and still, after many years of use, render valuable service. It is now difficult to comprehend how, even with the use of turnpikes, it was possible to transact business of large dimensions. The slow, plodding freight team, the coaches with their limited accommodations and speed of ten or less miles per hour, surely retarded commercial traffic and almost completely prevented a pleasure trip. How different it is to-day. The immense railway system covers the country like the web of a spider. Time and distance are annihilated. Thousands of cars with unlimited capacity transport the products of the cities into the country and the agricultural products into the cities. Elegant trains convey the army of travelers in every conceivable direction, at almost incredible speed. At the very commencement of the railroad era one was started from Chicago, and, following the old Buffalo Trail, slowly but surely built toward the Great West. Directly through the Heart of the Continent it went, throwing out branches to tap the rich agricultural sections, opening up and developing the country it traversed, until to-day it has five thousand miles of steel track, and extends from Chicago, Peoria and St. Louis in the East direct to Denver in the West. Not built for speculation, nor with monopolistic ideas, it has ever cousulted the best wishes of its patrons, and has always, therefore, received their hearty encouragement and support. Every day in the year palatial trains, equipped with the very latest facilities for eating, sleeping, smoking and lounging, move over its perfect road-bed between Chicago and Denver, Chicago and Omaha, Chicago and Kansas City, and Kansas City and Denver, without change of cars, and with direct connection from St. Louis and Peoria. The principal cities and towns in Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Nebraska, Kansas and Colorado are situated on the lines of this now great corporation. It is, in fact, the great highway through and between the important head centers of the West. Its phenomenal success has been achieved through the perfect system that pervades everything it undertakes. Its representations are facts and are carried out in every particular. Realizing this, the large organizations of Knights Templar and Grand Army of the Republic, journeying to San Francisco and Denver in 1883, together with Religious, Civic, Military and Theatrical bodies, traveling in large numbers, selected this road. For the same weighty reasons the Tourist, Health-seeking and Business travel in the largest majority have always patronized its lines. Upon the completion of the Mexican Central Railroad, which opened commercial relations between the Republics of Mexico and the United States, the first International train passed from Kansas City to Chicago over this great road. If it needed a higher endorsement than the preference of the people, it was supplied by the United States Government selecting it from all others to carry the Fast Mail west of Chicago. It matters not where may be your destination in the great States and Territories west of Chicago, it means, by this line, but a few hours or days, according to distance, of luxurious life on the rail. If your objective point is not located on its lines, it connects direct in Grand Union Depots at each of its western termini with through trains for all railroad points. In conclusion, if you desire your trip to be endowed with all the comforts, luxury, speed and satisfaction that is possible in connection with a railway journey, realizing and enjoying all that is herein described, and following the lead of many of your predecessors, purchase your ticket over the "Burlington Route," Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R.

THE COMING CONFLICT.

A NEW AND RAPIDLY SELLING BOOK IN OPPOSITION TO FREE-MASONRY.

We desire to call your attention to this useful work, and ask you to help us in its circulation. We want Agents to canvass every community.

By selling this book one can do much good. It is by such literature that we must expect to awaken a popular sentiment against secret societies, and overthrow them. By selling this book one can make money. Liberal terms will be allowed, and any energetic Agent can sell many copies. Masons will buy it from mere curiosity. Anti-Masons will buy it for the facts and arguments presented. Many will buy it to send to their neighbors. Those on the fence will buy it that they may learn the truth on the subject. Those not interested in the discussion, and young people especially, will buy it for the story.

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"It is an attack on Freemasonry with a sprinkle of Slavery thrown in to make it go down well."—A. R. Presbyterian, (S. C.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of the best class of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D D., in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia, Pa.)

"A charming work fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the hook, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ill.)

The book is neatly and plainly printed, handsomely bound, 352 pages, thick paper. A specimen copy sent to any one contemplating accepting an agency for $1.10.

Single copy $1.50; Per Dozen. $15.00.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

FARM AND GARDEN.

BREAKING SITTING HENS.

Farmers seldom want hens to sit after June 1st, but they offer to sit all the same, and how to wean them from this is one of the problems many poultry-keepers know not how to solve. If the methods employed were not so cruel, it would be amusing to watch the efforts of farmers and their wives to "break up the settin' hens." One ducks them in cold water three or four times a day; another puts them in a covered tub with a few inches of water in the bottom; the next one throws them from the nest as often as found there, and others fill up the nest with stones, bricks, and old tin pans. Now all such methods are cruel, senseless, and generally useless. If you do not want the hens to sit at all, remove them from the nests the very first night they are found there after the other fowls have gone to roost, and shut them up in a bottomless coop on the ground. Feed lightly, give plenty of water, and in ninety-nine out of every hundred cases, they will be over the sitting fever in a week. Give the obstinate hundreth hen a cockerel for company, and she will soon forget all about raising a family.—Fannie Field, in Prairie Farmer.

"SUMMER PRUNING" THE GRAPE VINE.

Each shoot, upon a bearing vine, will have near its base, two or three clusters of grapes. If left to itself, the growth will continue beyond these clusters, and the shot be prolonged for several feet, ceasing only late in the season. Each shoot will have a few bunches, and beyond them a long stretch of vine to be removed at the autumn pruning. In the earlier days of grape culture, and before the vine was as well understood as it is at present, it was advised to "Summer-prune." After the vine had expended its energies in producing this long shoot, it was advised to cut it away in summer, just above the fruit, thus causing a severe check to the vine, and resulting in the ruin of many of the best vineyards in Ohio and elsewhere. A little leaf-folding caterpillar taught a lesson, which Husmann, and other Missouri vineyardists, were wise enough to heed. This caterpillar was found in the unfolding leaves of the shoot. It cut off the tender stem a short distance above the uppermost cluster of flower-buds. The appearance of the caterpillar caused alarm, but when it was found that the fruit upon the shoots which this caterpillar had pruned, was larger and finer than upon the shoots which had escaped, the hint was at once taken, and shortening the shoots by early pinching, was a great step forward in grape culture. If through neglect, or want of knowledge, the shoots have grown far beyond the fruit clusters, do not cut them back, but stop their growth. Pinch out the growing point of every such shoot, and stop its extending in length. The proper treatment of the laterals is, to pinch back each shoot to its lower leaf. Do not remove them altogether, but always leave the lowest leaf.—American Agriculturist.

The annual yield of the average cow is 450 gallons, and as there are 15,000,000 milch cows in the United States we have 6,750,000,000 gallons of milk a year. At twelve cents a gallon, this is worth $810,000,000. Assuming that one pound of prime beef is equal 3½ pounds of milk, and that a steer furnishes fifty per cent. of boneless beef, it would require 24,000,000 steers of 1,100 pounds each to produce the same amount of food the 15,000,000 cows supply per year.—Iowa Tribune.

The old practice of washing sheep before shearing has fallen into disuse among the most progressive farmers. It does not pay. Aside from the colds, rheumatisms, and other inconveniences incurred by men and animals, the wool is not increased in market value enough to justify the time and labor expended. If the fleeces are filled with burs and rubbish, the washing they get on the sheep's back will not help them any. Better keep the sheep reasonably clean, and let the manufacturers do the washing.

Do not cultivate the trotting horse passion, if you have any other use for horses; it is a most delusive and dangerous business, and if you don't believe it, ask your best friend who is engaged in it. After all, the draft horse is the horse that helps you in the bread and butter line; he is worthy of all the care you can bestow, and will reward you with his paying labor.

The American Cultivator tells how a kicking cow can be well utilized: A farmer who bought a cow which neither he nor his men could milk, found that he could make her profitable to suckle calves, which were very high priced that season. Her own calf sold for $15. Then another was left for her to rear and brought $12. During the season the farmer sold $65 worth of calves reared on this kicking cow, fed her a few dollars' worth of meal and turned her off for beef the following winter. This plan is well adapted for a large dairy where a number of cows calve in succession.

A Tilt with Time.

LADIES in their attempts to baffle old Time are bound to receive some wounds in the encounter. These, however, they can conceal, as far as the complexion is concerned, by a timely and regular resort to the use of "Glenn's Sulphur Soap." Without obstructing the pores, or in any way injuring the health of the skin, it removes from the surface pimples, redness, and the various disfigurements caused by increasing age or exposure to the sun. See that "C. N. CRITTENTON, Proprietor," is printed on each packet, without which none is genuine. Sold by druggists and fancy goods dealers.

Hill's Hair and Whisker Dye, black or brown, fifty cents.

Prof. James A. Sewell, A. M., M. D., of Medical Faculty, Laval University, Quebec, states: "I have found Colden's Liquid Beef Tonic particularly useful in advanced stages of Consumption, Weakness, Dyspepsia, and all Nervous Affections. In pregnant women it has been retained when every other article of food was rejected. I can recommend it as convenient, palatable, and easy of digestion." (Remember the name, COLDEN'S—take no other.) Of druggists.

"SCRIP and STAFF."

BY H. M. HUGUNIN.

This new and attractive volume is now ready. It is composed of thirty-nine chapters on nearly as many topics. Neatly bound in cloth with gilt stamp. Price 60 cents.

The Chicago Evening Journal of May 3, says:

The author of this little volume, for many years a working editor of the EVENING JOURNAL, has here presented us with a variety of topics of a religious character. Among the number we note "The Evils of the Sunday Newspaper," "The Divine Sanction of Church Organizations," "The Good Work and Government of Sunday-Schools," "The Bible in our Public Schools," "Fallacies of the 'Evolution Theory,'" "Chronology—The Age of the World," and "Labor and Laborers." Mr. Hugunin writes as an independent thinker, untrammeled by denominational alignments. His style, however, is marked by the vigor of earnestness and sincerity, and with these characteristics, and with a close adherence to Bible Christianity, his book becomes a suggestive aid to evangelical workers. In discussing the topics above named, as in others, he deals consistently with questions of public interest and great importance in the reform of individual and social evils.

In the United States are over 38,000 locomotives, worth 400.000,000, for the services of passengers and freight. This gives some idea of the progress made in half a century.

The Chicago directory for 1884, just issued, contains an increase of 13,500 names, which indicates, it is believed, an inerease of about 45,000 in the population of the city.

Lightning recently struck a tree on Governor Stanford's California ranch, and the Chinamen employed on the place could not be induced to pick up the debris, as they considered that it was the work of an evil spirit.

Since the beginning of the organized female suffrage agitation in England, in 1870, the official records show that 16,354 petitions, bearing 2,542,162 signatures, have been presented to Parliament, while over 1,000 meetings, on a large scale, have been held.

The largest organ in the world has just been completed by Walck, of Ludwigsburg, and placed in the cathedral church of Riga. The colossal instrument measures 36 feet in width, 32 feet from back to front, and 65 feet high. It contains no less than 6,826 pipes, distributed among 124 sounding stops.

Both in this country and in England the eldest son of the Prince of Wales is called in the public prints Prince Albert Victor, but by the members of the royal family he is invariably called Prince Edward, and when he ascends the British throne he will be known as King Edward.

New Orleans is making stupendous efforts to have its Cotton Centennial Exposition exceed that of 1876. The main building will be 1,378 feet long by 908 wide, and will cover 33 acres; while the main building at the Philadelphia Exposition covered but 22 acres. We look forward with interest to its opening, a few months hence.

The Studebaker Brothers of South Bend, Ind., so well known as wagon manufacturers, had gone a few years ago to the newly started town called Lincoln, in Spencer Co., Ind., where the mother of Abraham Lincoln is buried, and at their own private expense there erected over her grave a monument costing from $400 to $500, as a testimonial of their respect for the memory of her famous son Abraham.

Some time ago a man in Edmonson county, Ky, killed a rattlesnake on his premiscs, cutting the body in two, short off behind the head. About two weeks afterward a child playing around accidentally strayed near the head, when that supposed-to-be-defunct member made a spring and buried its fangs in the child's leg, and only the prompt application of powerful antidotes saved its life.

At Leicester, in England, a few weeks ago, the goods of twenty persons, who had declined to pay the fines imposed upon them for the non-vaccination of their children, were sold at public auction. Fifty policemen were present to protect the auctioneer. Though the sale was very disorderly, no violence was used. At a meeting held afterward resolutions were passed condemning the law which permitted the breaking up of people's homes for the non-payment of vaccination fines.

The rapidity with which one may learn a foreign language is demonstrated by Mr. Howard Vincent, late Director of Criminal Investigations at Scotland Yard, London. On his arrival in Russia he advertised for a Russian family where he could be received, versed in the language, and allowed to study Russian to his heart's content. He employed four tutors, each with a different system, with whom he studied eleven hours a day. In six weeks he was able to converse in Russian with fluency and accuracy.

THE CYNOSURE LIST can and ought to be doubled before November next. Campaign subscribers taken at the rate of four for a dollar till after election will become permanent subscribers in large proportion. But this work, like all labor against the spurious worships of this country, can only be achieved by prayer and self-denying labor.

The investigation of the Soldier's Home at Dayton, Ohio, corroborates the late correspondence of the Cynosure from Milwaukee, in which the management of the Soldier's Home near that city is severely arraigned for Masonic favoritism. The mass of evidence accumulating against the management at Dayton, may determine the commission to come on to Milwaukee. Of course, there is no hint of Freemasonry having any share in the cruelties and indignities put upon the inmates of the Dayton Home, though as likely to be at the bottom of the trouble in one institution as the other.

The earthquake shock of the 10th did little damage to property, but very much to public confidence in property of any kind. It was an appeal to the feelings, not to the understanding, and a thoroughly sensational one. But much as men object to such appeals in the pulpit, there is no doubt the earthquake did more to alarm guilty consciences than all the sermons preached that day on the continent. The universal oblivion of maukind to the reality of a judgment day, needs some such terrible shock to unsettle them from their tenacious grasp upon the world, and destroy their confidence in the most stable of all material things.

The political record of Good Templarism in Wisconsin is interesting. We print it, hoping that it will be remembered when the Prohibition party shall conclude to decide in favor of open work, when it will be found a useful argument: "The Good Templars of Wiseonsin went into the prohibition movement as an order in 1881, having their Grand Worthy Chief Templar as a candidate for governor. That year they lost twenty-two lodges and 1,313 members; in 1882 they lost sixty-nine lodges and 1,853 members; last year thirty-two more lodges with 2,282 members dropped out. Iu the same time they have spent half their $35,000 receipts in salaries to four persons, two of them being the chief political aspirants of the disastrous three years."

The progress of the Gospel in Japan meets with strong persecution in some places, yet the truth conquers the hearts of meu now as when it fell like manna from the lips of Jesus. In one city a kind of Masouic combination was formed against Christianity. A number of natives bound themselves by an oath not to become Christians. To the violation of the oath was attached the penalty of loss of property. The leader of the band was the first to become a Christian. The American lodge is formed on a more subtle plan. Instead of swearing men against Christianity outright, the devil presents them an object of devotion whose hideous and deformed body is hidden with a garment of white and persuades them to the belief that this is just a little better than the religion of the sects.

The awful tragedy which took place in this city last week which resulted in the instant death of an intelligent and amiable wife, who had for years filled a noble place in the activities in one of our Presbyterian churches, and the probable death of the husband and pastor, has one undoubted lesson. Mr. Collisson's career will have many to pity, some to blame. For how much he is to blame for a sensitive and willful nature God only knows. In one thing he was wrong altogether. He had no business to keep a revolver by his side for four years or one day; and when they feared his reason giving way, his friends had no right to allow him to keep the weapon. It was made to kill men, and should be prohibited along with the saloon. The fact that one is at hand is a constant temptation. A fit of lunacy or of anger, an hour of pain or of melancholy, which may come suddenly upon any man, gives an occasion to use this invention of the devil to blast a thousand hopes and blacken the fairest home.

The anti-monopoly convention held last May in this city was satisfied with the nomination of Butler for the Presidency and adjourned without completing the ticket. It was, without doubt, only intended as a starter for Butler, whose cause was to gather thousands as it rolled through the land, receiving first the Greenback endorsement and then the Democratic. The reception of the July convention spoiled Butler's plan, and he could do nothing but severely castigate the Democrats over their platform. Though it is understood that he accepted all the nominations he could get, his adherents have expected a more lengthy and formal answer to their nomination. That answer is promised to the public this week. The Republicau press have been indulging in mutual congratulations that Butler's campaign would lose to the Democrats an equivalent for the reduction of their own vote through Pomeroy and St. John. Some curiosity is also aroused from the delay of Gov. Cleveland to issue his letter of acceptance; and altogether the prospect is of a sharp and short struggle. The committee of the Anti-monopoly party met in this city last week and nominated West of Texas for second place on their ticket, who is the Greenback nominee for Vice President.

The graphic picture of the great people's demonstration at London by our English correspondent, Rev. John Boyes, might be repeated in describing similar proceedings at Birmingham a week later, when 200,000 persons were upon the streets in procession and crowds, all attestiug their loyalty to Gladstone and contempt of the House of Lords. John Bright in a powerful speech attacked the Peers in such words as these: "Who are the Peers?" he asked. "They are the spawu of the blunders, the wars, and the corruption of the dark ages of our history. They entered the temple of honor, not through the temple of merit, but through the sepulchers of their ancestors. They are no better than their fathers; some of them are worse, for their privileges produced ignorance and arrogance." The reform of the House of Lords, he declared, was urgent and inevitable. The creation of new Peers to pass the Franchise Bill would only get rid of the present difficulty. What was wauted was a limitation of the veto power of the House of Lords. Should the people submit, or should they curb the nobles as their fathers had curbed the kings of England? He explained the manner in which he would like to see the power of the House of Lords restricted. He would allow the Peers to retain their present powers during the first sessiou that a bill should be presented to them, but he would absolutely preclude them from vetoing the Franchise Bill or any bill a second time." During the London procession all travel on the streets along the route was intercepted. Mr. Gladstone proceeding to his businesss had to leave his earriage and proceed on foot. He was immediately recognized and greeted by hearty cheers. The crowd parted to right and left and the old hero of a hundred battles for the rights of his fellow-men marched through with uncovered head, an untitled king, amid the ringing huzzas of a people who saw in him more thau ruler—a friend.

THE POLITICAL CRISIS IN GREAT BRITAIN.

BY REV. JOHN BOYES.

Since the refusal of the House of Lords to pass the Franchise Bill, a vast amount of dissatisfaction has been felt toward them throughout the country. During the greater part of the present century, the main result of the procedure of the House of Lords, has been to paralyze the energy of an advancing nation. Since the present government came into office, the House of Lords with Lord Salisbury at its head, has been exhibiting that madness which is proverbially said to precede destruction in men and institutions. Their wish to drive the government to an appeal to the country is evidently not based on patriotism, but is with an intention to delay, and if possible frustrate the passing of the bill. It is quite a new move for the Lords who occupy a seat in the Upper House, not in virtue of any special intelligence, nor legislative skill, nor as in anyway representing the wants or wishes of the nation, but purely, to use the words of Sir Wilfred Lawson, as "a trades union of landlords," to aspire to bidding the real legislators and representatives of the people appeal to the constituencies. Suppose the Lords were to appeal to the people, very few, if any of them would be returned.

As, however, Lord Salisbury professedly wished to know the views of the people in this matter, large and popular gatherings are being held throughout the land to give expression to their views. Even this does not satisfy his lordship, but he sneers at these meetings as holiday gatherings and pic-nic legislation. The demonstration which took place in Hyde Park, London, on Monday last, was a proof of popular earnestness and determination which will not be slighted by wise men. This is evidently but the opening of the campaign which the resoluteness of the English people will not abandon till the House of Lords becomes reformed, and brought into harmony with the progressive ideas of this nineteenth century.

The meeting in London was very unique in character, and consisted of such representatives of the working classes as have not yet obtained the franchise. Forty farriers mounted on good steeds, and wearing bright scarlet and purple sashes, led the procession. These were followed by about 6,000 Kent and Sussex laborers, every one of whom carried a hop-pole, to the end of which was attached a blue streamer, and, in many cases, a spray of hops. After them came contingents representing all imaginable trades bearing a large number of beautiful and imposing banners, on which were inscribed mottoes of various degrees of excellence and appropriateness. The bakers carried two gigantic loaves on the ends of poles, labelled respectively "The Gladstone Loaf," aud "The Franchise Loaf;" and by way of contrast, a diminutive bun scarcely perceptible at the top of a long pole, labelled "The Salisbury Loaf," which caused a good deal of amusement. The Battersea contingent carried aloft an enormous cartoon, representing Mr. Gladstone as a laborer, having an axe in one hand, aud holding out upon the other a tiny but pert-looking pigmy, representing Lord Randolph

Churchill. It also carried the model of a tombstone inscribed: "In memory of the House of Lords;" and another "They whom the gods mean to destroy they first make mad." The shipwrights exhibited a ship mounted on wheels, and drawn by a team of grey horses with outriders.

The procession was about three miles in length, and was variously estimated at from 100,000 to 150,000; while on the Thames enbankment alone the spectators were at least a quarter of a million. About fifty bands of music graced and enlivened the procession, playing a number of popular airs as the "Marseillaise," "Rule Britannia," etc., the choruses of which the crowd took up and sang with enthusiasm, especially the one "Britons never shall be slaves." About 3,000 police were detailed to keep order on the line of march, but their services were not required, for any attempt at a disturbance was quickly quelled by the crowd itself.

By what eyes the procession was watched it is impossible to say. Doubtless many of the Peers who threw out the bill, looked down from concealed corners upon the defiances of these poor but earnest men, with as much characteristic scorn as they could muster; but surely many of them must have felt an uneasy sense of coming defeat and humiliation. The procession was checred with the utmost enthusiasm both by the people in the streets and in the houses. There was no riot or disorder whatever, everybody being as cheerful and good tempered as possible; indeed throughout the day the utmost order and decorum were observed.

Though the number taking part in the procession was immense, it formed but a small portion of the enormous mass of people who assembled around the seven platforms which had been placed in the Park. The speeches were very effective and popular, some of them bristling with witticisms and good points. The resolutions submitted from the various platforms, and in every case carried with unanimity and enthusiasm protested against the rejection of the Franchise Bill by the House of Lords; and approving of Mr. Gladstone's action in reference to an autumnal session, and expressing further the opinion that the continued existence of an unchecked power of impeding and obstructing the popular will is not conducive to the welfare of the nation.

After the meeting was finished the vast concourse melted away as if by magic. There was earnestness without asperity. The sight was certainly without a parallel in the political and social history of the country, and was marked throughout by good humor and moderation. The arrangements were perfect, and its vast proportions were managed without the occurrence of a single serious hitch. However people may try to explain away the demonstration, it was a remarkable success, while of its sincerity no one who saw it could entertain a reasonable doubt. As far as Hyde Park is concerned, we are told that not a shrub or flower has been injured—indeed no class of persons could have been more orderly than those whom Lord Salisbury and the Peers are endeavoring to keep unenfranchised.

Grimsby, England, July 24th, 1884.

REFORM.

BY GEN. J. W. PHELPS.

On the necessity of reform all good men appear to be agreed; but there is a wide difference of opinion as to the mode of effecting it. Some seem to think that a New York Democrat, like Gov. Tilden for instance, of secret telegram notoriety, can head a reform movement, though every instinct of the Democratic party, and every fact in its history show that it is much better qualified for making a need of reform than for making the reform itself. Gov. Tilden was a Democrat reform governor.

For reform work we need a new party; or rather a recognition and organization of the two parties that really exist in fact, and which are to contest the issues of life or death to the Republic. One of these parties is the open party, in favor of American institutions; the other is the secret party in favor of European institutions.

The actual issue, political and moral, before the American people is, which institutions will you live under—American or European? Every effort to shun this question or ignore it, shows ignorance or fraud. The effort to bury and conceal it under a multiplicity of words and phrases like those of Mr Schurz's speech in Brooklyn is like that made before the war to bury the slavery issue. It is but laying thin varnish over fatal defects. The two twin relics of barbarism left us by England on withdrawing from our shores were slavery and Freemasonry, both European institutions. One has already occasioned us a disastrous war, and the other will soon occasion us a more disastrous war still, if it is not voted down.

Mr. Schurz's idea of one single bad Republican man, viz., Mr. Blaine, bringing moral ruin upon the Republic, while he sees no danger in supporting the enormous wickedness of Freemasonry, giving into its hands the political patronage of the government, shows only the European bent of his character. A man who could propose the Democratic slave-power party as an agency for reform while that party is withholding the means necessary to remove the illiteracy which it has fostered and occasioned, is not of a mould or stamp to comprehend the true character of American institutions. Mr. Schurz, while pointing out the impossibility of Washington writing such letters as Mr. Blaine has written, forgets the equal impossibility of Washington ever hiding from public view the dangerous character of Tammany, the least objectionable of all secret societies, but not the least now cultivated.

If Mr. Cleveland were elected President he would stimulate the Ku-Klux lodge instead of abating it, and he could not go beyond his party in the work of removing that great source of danger to the Republic —illiteracy.

Two of the great defects of the Republican party are first—its resort to the secret lodge for party purposes, and second, the subordinating its measures to the conciliation of Democratic tastes and proclivities. From both of these defects the tone of the government and of the business of the country has been lowered far below the original standard of American morality. In order to restore American tone and character to the government a new party is needed, and no time should be lost in its formation.

The political franchise under the present state of things is virtually lost to all the real honest, intelligent men of the country. They cannot possibly vote with any satisfaction for the Republican and Democratic parties. A man might as well stick oranges on the Upas tree and lie down under its shade in fancied security, as to rest his hopes of reform upon either of these parties by merely putting good men at their head. A bad party with a bad head were a far safer hydra to contend with than a bad party with a good head. This "good man" dodge has been carried only too far among us already. It only serves to deceive. The great need of the hour is a good party —one that may prove as apt in effecting a reform as the old parties have been in rendering it necessary.

Has New York in this "Independent" movement brought a reform to the birth, and is it too weak to bring forth? The greatest service which the Independents can render the country is to give us candidates for the Presidency and Vice Presidency on the plain, simple issue of Amerisan institutions against the secret lodge, the worst institution of Europe and the Old World.

As the Republican party began by putting a limit to slave territory, so the American party must begin by putting a limit to the tenure of office by men who have sworn allegiance to this European institution, the secret lodge. No more men of this character must be appointed to office. This work will not wait for us to go and prove the yoke of oxen which we may have bought, or are going to buy. It must be begun now.

If Republicans give their direct vote for bringing the Democratic party into power as an instrument of reform, they will lose thereby all the moral power which they may now possess, and which is necessary for effecting a reform. Nothing has come of making the chief Mormon a governor of Mormons but an increase of Mormonism. Nothing has come of making office-holders of rebel generals but Ku-Klux outrages and monuments to the glory of treason and rebellion; and nothing will come from putting New York Democracy in power but Europeanizing our institutions. An effort to reform American politics through the agency of either the Republican or Democratic party, would be like an attempt to reform the world through the agency of the Pharisees or Saducees.

Let the executive committee of the Independents give us American candidates, with electoral tickets for each State, and they will restore the franchise to thousands, perhaps millions of good men who will call them blessed. Good and true men might thus come to hold the balance of power even at the impending election.

Brattleboro, Vt.

Nothing fails of its end. Out of sight sinks the stone,
In the deep sea of time, but the circles sweep on,
Till the low-rippled murmurs along the shores run,
And the dark and dead waters leap glad in the sun.

Christianity is the true citizenship of the world; and universal peace, and the free exchange of lands and tribes of their several peculiar goods and gifts are possible only as all are grouped around, and united by the cross of a common Redeemer and the hope of a common heaven.

MASONIC THEOLOGY.

BY ELDER NATHAN CALLENDER.

In the Scranton Republican of April 24th, 1884, we are instructed in the way of salvation as understood by Hon. H. B. Payne of Kingston, Pa. In a speech before the "Cœur de Leon Commandery" of Scranton, at an installation of officers, we are treated to some rare gems.

His first assumption is that the Knights Templar of the eleventh century and these of the nineteenth are the same! This baseless and worthless assumption of A. G. Mackey, taken up by our orator, is substantially contradicted both by Rob Morris in his Dictionary of Freemasonry, and Rebold's History of Freemasonry, both recognized by the craft as high Masonic authority. According to the latter, "The order of modern Templars, constituted the 4th of November, 1804, by virtue of an old constitution found in the possession of a brother, and according to which the founders afterward pretended to be the legitimate successors of the Knights of the Temple." Rebold's History of Freemasonry, p. 225. After showing the great wealth of the Knights of the fourteenth century, Morris says, "But wealth and prosperity naturally led to licentiousness, neglect of Templar law and in the end destruction. (Italics mine). Does the orator of "Cœur de Leon Commandery," suppose that every one will consent to his groundless assertions, as perhaps the ignorant masses of Scranton did?

The Sir Knight next asserts the great antiquity of Freemasonry, and the substantial identity of this with knighthood. While the basic principle of Masonry dates back to the Satanic conspiracy against the Anointed One, when the angels "left their own habitation" and were in consequence made prisoners in hell. Speculative Freemasonry was 168 years old last June, and its birth-place was in a tavern bar-room in Covent Garden, London. Unless the offspring is older that its parent, modern Knighthood cannot date back of June, 1717. Make a note of this, dear defender of the women and the church, and if you can refute the statement please do so.

But the questions of the antiquity of Masonry and Knighthood is of little moment compared with the religious claims and bearings of lodgery. Our orator must be a genius to get so much error into so small a space. We must give the reader a sample of his theology. He says of Masonry, "its fundamental base is deity." Not the deity of the Bible, who is the Father of Jesus Christ, but the G. A. O. T. U., the unknown god, whom Masons "ignorantly worship." When Masonry denies the Son of God, it denies the Father also. It does deny the Son. Mr. Payne concedes this in the following words: "It teaches of God, but of no special religion." That is, it ignores Jesus, and expunges his name from Scriptures quoted, in part, in their rituals. It holds and teaches that Jesus founded a sect which Masonry condemns. Of this statement there is abundant testimony in approved Masonic books.

Our Knight also says, "It is founded on the Bible and elevated manhood." Does not our orator know better than this? It is less founded on the Bible than Mormonism, or the papacy. Call us to an account for this statement and we will show it up fully.

Mr. P. ought to know, whether he does or not, that the Bible is held to be one of the three lights in Masonry, the others being the compass and square on the altar. He should also know that the Holy Scriptures are not used at all save in a Christian land. "The book of the law," is any book accepted by the people of the land—the Koran, or Shaster, or Mormon bible, is equal in the eyes of Masonry to the Word of God. In the light of these facts, how is Masonry founded on the Bible? Besides all this, there is not in this land, if in the world at large, a religion which so thoroughly antagonizes the Bible as does Speculative Freemasonry. Meet us like a man and put us to the proof of this. Again our Knight says Masonry "teaches all the virtues and leaves a man to his honor." False again. Is faith in Christ a virtue? Does Masonry teach faith in Christ? No, it teaches no "special religion" and Christianity is a special religion of faith in the Son of God, whom Masonry brands as the founder of a sect and therefore Masonry must count him out. It is our profound conviction for which we hope our "gallant Knight" will call us to defend, that Masonry does not teach any single moral virtue known in the Decalogue on a legitimate basis; that in discarding the Son of God, the embodiment of all virtue, it discards all virtue, while it tends to, and virtually teaches all the vices known in, and forbidden by the moral law. We put this down as our thesis to be met by some Sir Knight. Come let us reason together. What, for example, is Masonic charity? Selfish and clannish. What is Masonic loyalty? Supreme allegiance to the Masonic despotism, and all their boasted virtues are of the same type with these. Mr. P. says, "In this hour, however, skepticism is in the very atmosphere; rationalism is trying to reason God out of the world and infidelity is trying to laugh God out of the soul." Most true, O brave Knight, and "thou art the man" to aid and abet this foul plot against the Christian's God. The conflict is to-day, as it always was, between the god of the heathen—no God—and the Father of Jesus; a god of Ahab and his false prophets and the God whom Elijah preached. See 1st Kings 18:39.

Masonry is rationalism gone mad, infidelity poorly disguised, while Knight Templarism is unmitigated infidelity, baptized in the name of Christ. It comes with the "hail Master" of Judas Iscariot and kisses Jesus to "betray him into the hands of sinners." The fact that Knighthood takes the name of Christ into its ritual service, is the very depth of insult. It no more Christianizes it than the gilded cross of the papacy does the church of Rome. Tacking the name of Christ onto the chapter degrees of Masonry, is to add blasphemy to insult. How can the "Red Cross" change the nature of a system intrinsically bad? It would utterly annihilate lodgery to take Christ into it in his real character.

Take another sample of Masonic theology from Mr. P. "Freemasonry is a power for good beyond description and is a religion, but it is not a religion entirely sufficient for man. Knighthood goes a step further and makes of the highly moral man a living Christian. If the Knight Templar lives up to the tenets of Knighthood, he cannot be other than a true Christian." (Italics mine).

Mr. P. here boldly reiterates what Masonic books all teach, that Masonry is a saving religion. Mr. P. however, adds Knighthood to make salvation sure. The ignorant masses will not believe that Masonry is held to be a saving religion. It is too absurd a theory of salvation to be credited by right-minded people, and therefore even they cannot believe that anybody can believe such an absurd doctrine.

We would like to submit to our Sir Knight a few questions.

1st. How is Freemasonry, as a religion, almost, though "not entirely sufficient for man?" Does it almost regenerate him; and then does Knighthood complete the work? Or does he ignore regeneration?

2d. Is there more than one name and way of salvation, or, is Masonry, topped out by Knighthood, the one way of salvation.

3d. If Knighthood be needed to complete this Masonic salvation, what will become of the half million Masons who never attain to this degree of the "true and living Christian?"

4th. Will these highly moral men, made so by Masonry, dwell somewhere in the suburbs of the G. L. A.? Or will they share the fate of cowans, women, children, cripples, old men in dotage, etc., who cannot share the benefits of the "mystic tie?"

5th. Will any but Knights Templar be saved, or, is there more than one way to the "sheep-fold?"

6th. Do Knights Templar even profess to believe the established doctrines of the Gospel, and live in accordance to them?

7th. How many of them, if any, believe in the Bible doctrines of the depravity of man, the necessity of the atonement, and regeneration by the Holy Spirit?

8th. Are not many Knights Templar infidels, some of them pronounced infidels, and profane swearers, tipplers, Sabbath-breakers and licentious pleasure seekers? Mr. P. knows they are, and that the Knights have no enforced rules against these sins.

Such is the band of Knights sworn to defend the church and the women! What church and what faith will these "intensely Christian Knights defend? As none but an apostate church will allow the sword to defend it, of course the Knights will wield their sword for the apostacy, and against Christ, and, if God permit, cut asunder in the ancient style of "Julian the Apostate," the saints who are faithful and valiant enough to testify against the harlotry of Masonic Knighthood. Has the true Defender of his church, said in vain, "Put up thy sword into its sheath, he that taketh the sword shall perish by the sword?" Let these Knights of the nineteenth century learn wisdom from the fate of those of the fourteenth, who took the sword and perished by it.

On August 17, 18, 19, 1880, the moral and religious sense of Chicago, though not overly sensitive, was shocked by the sacrilegious and profane conduct of the Christian (?) Knights in triennial conclave in that city. To the very pronounced disapprobation of the secular and the religious press of that city we beg leave to call attention. Among the papers which spoke out were the Inter Ocean, Tribune, Interior, Evangelist, and the Christian Instructor. One quotation we give from the Interior as a sample of much more said by the leading papers of Chicago:

"Such horrible incongruities as are seen in the display of the emblem of the Cross over saloons and bagnios, were never seen before in this country. 'Be faithful unto death;' appears amid crosses and crowns, over one of the most prosperous gin-mills in the city. What a ghastly travesty that is! There is a jeer and a sneer in it that could be equaled only by the devil reading the Sermon on the Mount to a convocation of Belials and Molochs and Beelzebubs. 'For God, Man and Brotherhood,' is the motto of another degrader of public morals. 'For God and the Right,' says still another corrupter of public virtue. We are told that a hagnio, with hideous levity, is spangled over with crosses and sacred mottoes. All this to some, is a roaring farce—to some of the hundred thousand strangers in the city—more or less, they are baits and lures and snares. To all pure minds, it is appalling blasphemy."—The Interior of Aug. 19, 1880.

One brief quotation from the Evangelist must suffice. After many well timed sentences, it concludes thus:

"What is the effect? It brings Christ and his sufferings and his religion itself into contempt. All empty forms in the name of religion are blasphemous. Such empty, unmeaning, childish profession is calculated to lead the Templar himself, as well as others, to distrust all the professions of religion."—Evangelist of Aug. 26, 1880.

Thus this K. T. spread eagle display impressed the moral sense of Chicago, and it would so impress any sound religious sense, however such blasphemous work might impress "Cœur de Leon." The Scranton Republican says that "many in the large audience went home with materially changed views upon the subject of Masonry and Knights Templar." Possibly the "changed views" were similar to those of Chicago and the country at large in 1880—changed to detestation and disgust. Says the Chicago Tribune of Aug. 22, 1880: "In fine, it is shown that an enormous amount of crusader beverage was sold in Chicago during the week just past. [Week of the conclave.] One prominent dealer estimated that a round million dollars would not cover the amount spent for this alone." Did "Cœur de Leon" imbibe in the same ratio? We hope not.

Now in view of the "ghastly travesty" on Christianity oft repeated in our country by the Christian (?) Knights, where is the Christian ministry and what is it doing? All silent? So far as we can learn, all silent save such as speak in laudation of lodgery! ! ! Is not this for a lamentation? and shall it not be for a lamentation? Where was the Christian ministry of Scranton while "Cœur de Leon" was perpetrating this travesty on our Christ? Is there not one prophet, one Ezekiel, whom God will take by a lock of his head (see Ezek. 8th) and show him his duty in Scranton city? Will not the Spirit "lift him up" to duty, between the earth and the heavens? There, my brother, is a "hole in the wall." "Dig now in the wall." There is the "angel of the church"—of St. (?) Luke! Rector P., "Behold he prayeth!" He speaks for Baal. Any more of the clergy of Scranton there? Heaven pity! No one in Seranton among the scores of ministers of Christ (?) to speak out in solemn rebuke of this blasphemy? Ah! it would not do to rebuke Cœur de Leon. He has a talent to growl and roar and it would almost seare a Daniel and there are few Daniels here. Speak out, O man of God.

THE BISHOP OF BIRMINGHAM ON FREEMASONRY.

The encyclical letter of the Pope against secret societies outside the papal church has suggested many arguments against the lodge, but few are more instructive and able than the following from the Catholic Bishop of Birmingham, England:

1. It is an historic fact that the Freemasonry of the Continent had its origin and institution from the Freemasonry of Scotland and England. Between the years 1734 and 1800 almost all the Grand Lodges in the Continental kingdoms were established by members of either English or Scottish lodges, and the dates of their establishment will be found in "Mackey's Lexicon of Freemasonry."

2. Although there is every reason to believe that English Freemasonry, as at present constituted, does not contemplate or include within its objects any conspiracy against the church or the state, such as is too frequently the case with various forms of Continental Masonry, yet English Freemasonry is in communion and in formal allianee with the principal Grand Lodges of foreign Freemasonry, if we except the Grand Orient of France, not only in Europe but throughout the world. This is not only proved by many published acts, but still more authentieally by their own official calendars, which give the names of the representatives elected to represent the Grand Lodge of England in the foreign Grand Lodges, as well as the names of the representatives of the foreign Grand Lodges elected to represent them in the English Grand Lodge. Thus the Times of July 19th, 1875, announces that the Grand Master of English Freemasonry had given official recognition to the Grand Orient of Italy.

3. The candidates for initiation into the degrees of Masonry bind themselves by solemn oaths to keep the secrets of the society before they know them, and at every new initiation make a declaration of the severe penalties touching life itself, to which they consent to submit should they ever reveal the secrets committed to them. Moreover, those who are initiated in the lower degrees commit themselves blindly by the very act, to the principles involved in the whole system of Masonry, even in those high degrees whose secrets are known but to a small number who direct the policy of the whole society. But this binding of the individual with solemn oaths and imprecations to unknown responsibilities is equally contrary to the principles of morality and of freedom.

4. Freemasonry is built upon the basis of a natural religion, having for its foundation the honor and worship of the Supreme Architect of the Universe, but excluding the Divine Incarnation and the mysteries of human redemption. Whilst using the sacred Scriptures, as Freemasonry it ignores the divine doctrines of the Christian faith. Pretending to a special and progressive illumination, it resembles, and through several of its writers even claims descent from the secret societies of pagan Egypt, Greece and Samothrace. However this may be, like them, and like the ancient Gnostics, Manicheans, and their successors, it has its initiations, its secrets reserved for a few heirophants, its elaborate ritual and ceremonial, its legendary traditions, its affectation of terrors and illuminations, and its blind obedience enforced by oaths and imprecations. Hence the Christian who accepts the initiations and obligations of Freemasonry must belong of necessity to two religions, one of which is incompatible with the other. As a Christian he believes in the Divine revelations of Christ and in the Divine Sacraments; but when he enters the Masonic lodge he leaves his Christian faith at the door, and worships the God of nature at the altar of nature, with doctrines, rites and ceremonies of whose origin and authority he is wholly ignorant. But the church of Christ proclaims that this cannot be, and that he who accepts the mysteries of Freemasonry deprives himself of the Sacraments of Christ.

The G. A. R. sometimes displays an immoral drift togards the profanation of the Sabbath that bodes no good for the future of this republic, many of whose noblest friends and early founders had a profound respect for its sacred observance. It does not follow that those who, under military orders during the war of twenty years ago fought battles, made forced marches and did many other things not common in this country, on the Sabbath, and in times of profound peace, should keep the Sabbath no better than they did in the army. An army, at best, is a school of vice rather than of virtue, as a general rule, and it shows profound impertinence for the representatives of brute force in it to assume they are competent to tell Christian ministers and evangelical churches, either by word or act in these times of peace, just how the Sabbath is to be sanctified. When the church goes to the soldier rather than the Scriptures to learn what are and what are not moral relations and obligations, she is sure to be seduced into religious slackness. On Sabbath, July 20th, the St. Paul railway ran a special train from Chicago to Minneapolis, carrying the commander-in-chief, his staff and 200 members of the G. A. R., to attend the reunion there on the Wednesday following. There was no necessity at all for this lawlessness, and yet it is the kind this G. A. R. is too extensively practicing, and by its evil example preaching to the young men of America. Such conduct tends to raise grave doubts in the minds of Christian people about the propriety of ex-soldiers joining this association and of the people generally giving it their sanction.—Sandy Lake News, Pa.

The following extract is from a letter of the poet Cowper to his friend John Newton, as cited by Dr. Charles S. Robinson in a paper in the last Century. Cowper is writing about a clergyman recently received at Olney: "He seems, together with others of our acquaintance, to have suffered considerably in his spiritual character by his attachment to music. The lawfulness of it when used with moderation and in its proper place is unquestionable; but I believe that wine itself does not more debauch and befool the natural understanding than music, always music, music in season and out of season, weakens and destroys the spiritual discernment. If it is not used with an unfeigned reference to the worship of God—which cannot be the case when it is the only occupation—it degenerates into a sensual delight, and becomes a most powerful advocate for the admission of other pleasures, grosser perhaps in degree but in their kind the same."

—A minister of the Gospel, excusing himself for not espousing the temperance cause, recently said: "It is unsafe for us to take a higher stand than the lowest of our congregations." Such ministers are on a level with Micah's priest. See Judges 17: 18.

—The editor of the Toledo (O.) Blade has visited Maine to see the working of the prohibitory law. He pronounces the "Maine law" effective, and with his influential paper joins the ranks of prohibition.

—I think it is beyond dispute among the scholars of the first rank that at the Passover the wine used was non-intoxicating, and that our Lord instituted the Supper with such wine.—Joseph Cook.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, Aug. 13, 1884.

Last Sabbath was duly celebrated by grand Masonic parades with a profusion of plumes, banners, and bands of music. The occasion was the funeral of that proverbial character, "the oldest Freemason," and seven different orders of Masons held their meetings as by advertisement, on Sabbath forenoon and in the afternoon made their display. It was a grand opportunity for advertising the order, and very amusing to the throngs of boys who followed in the wake. There was also a grand display of the Knights of Pythias over one of the victims of the Greely expedition. Altogether it was a fine day for the orders and one that will long be remembered by those who delight in Sunday as a holiday.

Another event noticed in the Star of Monday was that of a colored man who kept an open Sunday bar. Had he been white, and had only a side door open, the result might have been different. He has arrested and two witnesses, one a policeman and the other a minister, swore that they bought beer and whisky and paid for them. The court was evidently a little taken aback, and the following dialogue took place:

"What is your business?"

"I am a clergyman."

"What were you doing in there Sunday?"

"Well, we sometimes want drinks and cigars for the brethren."

"What did you say your business was?"

"I preach the Gospel and collect money from the society brethren."

"Who paid for the drinks?"

"I did."

Court—"He is fined twenty dollars."

"That's a good case to take up to the higher court," said the lawyer.

"Yes, on the testimony of a preacher," said the judge.

Now it is to be hoped that for the honor of religion this "clergyman and society brother" does not represent any religious organization. Surely there is no condemnation too severe for such conduct; but as between going into a saloon, buying whisky and paying for it, and celebrating the devil's communion by drinking wine from a human skull, the preference, seems to me, is in favor of the whisky. But sad to say, not a few popular clergymen in this city and elsewhere have not only committed this latter abomination, but glory in their shame. There is, perhaps, no order so popular as the Knights Templar.

I notice that notwithstanding the personal disclaimer, the Christian Recorder still advertises in the People's Advocate of this city as "the organ of the Masonic fraternity and organ of the I. O. of G. T. for the world."

Such discrepancy of professions would hardly be regarded as decently honest among business men. It must not be forgotten that the first lessons in secretism are lessons of dissimulation and hypocrisy. The promise to always conceal the truth, about which everyone is likely to enquire, carries with it the promise to pretend that some things are true that are known to be false. It is not strange that men who are trying to practice both Christian and Masonic morality should sometimes mistake the one for the other.

It is a matter of rejoicing that the police regulations of the city are evidently better than they have been, and that crimes have diminished within some months. Just now they are making raids on the gamblers and policy men who have been driven from the city and make their headquarters on the Virginia side. Last night a nest of them was broken up near the Long bridge. H. H. Hinman.

THE LODGE RUNS THE CHURCH.

Passing from Lacon to Peoria I took occasion to distribute some of our anti-secrecy documents among the passengers on the packet "Grey Eagle." A gentleman, accosted me pleasantly, and after a brief interchange of views, said: "We had a minister sent to us a few years ago who was opposed to secret societies. He spoke against them publicly, which so enraged the members of secret orders that they refused to support him. We had hard work to raise his salary that year, and he has since been compelled to retire from the ministry and go onto a farm, as he would not even silently seem to countenance the secret orders." "In our church," (the M. E. of ——) said he, "the orders demand of each of our preachers that he shall give at least one address during the year at some of their public meetings and make an occasional favorable allusion to them as a condition of support. Our church is run by its lodge members."

How is it with your church, reader?

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

SAMUEL C. POMEROY,

OF KANSAS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,

OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

The Missouri State Central Committee of the American party suggests the following times and places for holding county conventions to select delegates to the State nominating convention to convene at Avalon, September 11th, and transact such other business as may come before them;

Worth county, Grant City, August 23d.

Gentry county, Albany, August 30th.

Livingston county, Avalon, September 11th, 1884.

IOWA STATE POLITICAL CONVENTION.

The Iowa State convention of the American party will be held in Washington, Aug. 27th, to nominate State officers and electors, and transact such other business as any may be brought forward. This convention will be held in connection with the "Annual meeting of the State Christian Association." Let there be a general rally to this convention from all parts of the State, for every person in Iowa who is interested in the success of the American party should try to be present at these meetings and show their faith by their works. Let us hesitate no longer about committing ourselves to this work.

S. E. Starry, Chairman, Central Committee.

ILLINOIS AMERICAN PROHIBITION CONVENTION.

Arrangements are well advanced for holding a State meeting at Monmouth, Ill., on the 11th and 12th of September. The friends at Monmouth are many and hearty in their co-operation. They will do liberally in the way of entertainment and help on the cause every way possible. The opera house has been secured. Speakers are engaged. Reduced rates obtained on the C. B. & Q. R. R., between Chicago and Burlington, also between Rock Island and Beardstown. J. P. Stoddard.

MICHIGAN TAKE NOTICE.

There is to be held at Macatawa Park, on the shore of Lake Michigan, Aug. 28., a Convention by the Michigan Christian Association, in the interest of thorough reform. It has been suggested that this be also a nominating convention to put a State ticket before the people, and the suggestion is hereby acted upon and announced accordingly. Let every loyal man aim to be present. We will give farther particulars soon. Remember the date Aug. 28th, instead of 29th as first announced.

A GOOD ENDORSEMENT FROM A GOOD MAN.

Sabetha, Kansas.

Editor Cynosure:—I am so glad the American convention had the good judgment to nominate S. C. Pomeroy as their standard bearer, as I am satisfied he is one of the purest men of the age, notwithstanding the York lie. How glad I am that the Lord put Bro. Bailey on the track of that York and Belford slander just in the way he has; as he has proved it up so clearly that a Republican or a Democrat, though a fool, cannot err therein, and are bound to believe his innocence. I hope the hand of the Lord is in all this and he will bring Mr. Pomeroy to the front to the help of the Lord against the mighty hosts of sin and dark secret orders which are fast becoming the idolatry of the church and nation.

John Thompson.

TO THE AMERICAN PARTY.

"United we stand, divided we fall." Dear friends, is there no way whereby the friends of prohibition can all pull in one harness at the coming election? It seems to be a very desirable thing.

Prohibitionists as a party cannot go with the American because of its anti-secrecy plank; but Americans can vote for St. John and Daniel, who have a "clear record." They are good men—strong prohibitionists, and not connected with any secret organization. The Prohibition platform is about the same as the American, except the anti-secrecy plank.

Now, why cannot every American vote prohibition and thus roll up a temperance reform vote that will amaze and startle Republicans, Democrats, saloonists, and all liquor men.

Please pass the word around, let the matter be fairly considered, and may the Lord lead the hosts of reform to such a course as will please and glorify him.

Will the Christian Witness, The American, Blanchard Record, Free Methodist, The Vanguard, Telescope, etc., please copy and speak. Geo. Thompson.

Oberlin, Ohio.

POLITICAL OPINION.

THE AMERICAN FIRST.

When the long-time attitude of the party has to be overlooked, the moral paucity of the platform to be ignored, and a microscopic investigation of the candidate is necessary in order to find anything that may serve as a something for religious people to placate their consciences with; and the issue is then made upon the qualities of the man rather than the principles of the platform, we think it is time religious men considered before they vote with such a party. Our position is the American party first and all the time; but if this be impracticable, then the Prohibition party. The others? Why, don't touch them at all, not even with a ten foot pole. It is time, high time, that principles rather than parties or men were the subject of Christian votes.—Free Methodist.

AN INFLUENTIAL ENDORSEMENT.

Were we to choose between the parties which have made or will yet make nominations for the presidency, asking for the suffrages of the American people, we would take the American party. This party goes farther in reform than any other. In addition to all principles of right promulgated by other parties, it makes the declaration in its platform: "That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government." It therefore advocates the recognition of these great truths in our Constitution; the use of the Bible "associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions;" and the observance of the Sabbath because "required by God and needed by man." It further says: "We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law." We heartily endorse all these principles and the whole platform adopted by this party. We honor the leading men connected with the party as among the purest of American citizens, and we intend to be found standing with them in the advocacy of the truths above referred to....

As a religious journal, believing in civil government, and holding it to be the right and duty of the Christian press to take a substantial part in political affairs, we have asked, sincerely and prayerfully, whether we should cast our ballot and use our influence for the Republican party, or for one of the parties above named. If it were in our power to say which of the three should take the reins of government our first choice should be the American party, and under its rule we should rejoice in hope of the purest government known to man; our second choice would be the Prohibition Home Protection party, and our eyes would look with joy for vigorous measures to free the government from the curse of rum; our third choice would be the Republican party, the one with which we have always acted, which has wrought out most wonderful moral and political achievements during its history, and which is now, so far as it goes, on the right side of most of the great questions of the day. [The above is from an editorial in the Christian Worker, the excellent Friends' paper of Chicago. The editor concludes that on the whole it is duty to vote for Blaine.—ED. CYNOSURE.]

CHINESE SENSE.

The following words addressed by the Chinese minister to his countrymen here shows a mind of no ordinary intelligence and appreciation: "The status of the Chinese in America is not what it ought to be, not what it is in European countries, and not what I feel confident it will be in the future. I have but few suggestions to make. Keep out of American politics; they are a whirlpool in which the swimmer is always drowned, and which the Americans understand just as little as you do. Attend to your business carefully and conscientiously, no matter how humble it may be. Let the citizens of this metropolis know how honest and capable our race is. They will find ere long that, however superior they may be to us in the art of war and of machinery, we still can teach them lessons in that morality and fair play which in the long run rule the world."

THE PITTSBUROH CONVENTION.

This convention showed its good sense in refusing to be dictated to by wire-pullers, refusing to be inveigled or driven from its purpose; and the nomination of Gov. St. John, of Kansas, for President of these United States, is in proof of their straightforwardness and singleness of purpose. We are still in hope that he may yet give us such pledges that it will be consistent upon the anti-secreey basis to vote for his election. But there is one thing we can do, that is in our State, county, and town prohibition nominatious: refuse to vote for all those upon the ticket known to be secretists, supplying their places with the names of such as we know to be good temperanee men and not lodge men; for there is plenty of such timber in the prohibition ranks. Thus doing our duty to the temperanee issue and keeping our consciences elean on the anti-secretism question we ean be felt and can afford to bide our time. Of the ultimate issue there ean no doubt. —Free Methodist.

—The Miehigan Holiness Reeord prints the American platform with the following unqualified endorsement.

"We fully endorse the platform of the Amerieau party and hope our readers will give it prayer and thought. We do not believe in Christians making a hobby of politics, uor is it consistent for a Christian minister to negleet his work as a miuister of the gospel for politieal work. We have known many effieient ministers who lost their power and usefulness in this way. Holiness to the Lord should be our only hobby. But in order to be true to God we should be true to our eouutry. Christians should vote as they pray—no matter if they vote alone. As the political eampaign is before us, we believe that our holiness editors can do good work for God by publishing this American platform that our brethren may know how to vote consistently."

ELDER NATHAN CALLENDER, Thomson, Pa.:—"I was satisfied with the first nominee, and believe him as capable and as truc a man as exists, but I am well satisfied with the change to S. C. Pomeroy. Both are moral heroes and of no common ealiber. Pray (not huzzah) for Pomeroy and Conant. PRAY for the triumph of truth. Yours for the God of the Amerieau platform, the Father of Jesus."

A few days ago I was reading a book entitled, "Lives of Blaine and Logan," written by Thos. W. Knox, and published by the Hartford Publishing Company, Hartford, Conn. Blaine's historian, in relating what Blaine eats and drinks, says "he never drinks wine and never has it in his home in Augusta. Occasionally, in Washington, he will take a glass of wine." These are the exact words as they occur on pages 212 and 213 of the "History of Blaine and Logan," and it is a book that is largely used in this seetion as a eampaign document in favor of the Republicau nominees for President and Vice-President, so that I eannot see how partisans can elaim it to be a campaign lie.—Weedsport, N. Y., letter in N. Y. Witness.

THE PROHIBITION CANDIDATES.

Mr. St. John onee joined the Masonie lodge. For seventeen years he has not been inside of a lodge and does not intend to go in again. He has been a friend and correspondent of a prominent American party man and has expressed himself as in favor of open methods in our work. He has endorsed the American party platform, including the anti-seereey plank.

Mr. Daniel has never been a member of any secret society. Like Mr. St. John he has done all his temperance work openly. He has been importuned to join the Masons and Odd-fellows, but has deelined. He likes the American platform and favors open methods. At the Pittsburgh eonvention he, as chairman, fought the lodge rioters with heroic determination and deelared that the Amerieau party representative had been aceorded the floor and must and should be heard. After this firm and manly eourse he was rewarded by a unanimous nomination.

The Pittsburgh eonvention itself was mixed, but no one could fail to see that the lodges were at a diseount. The evidence of this was very surprising and striking. The Masonic eandidate for the Presideney was overwhelmingly defeated. The Good Templar eandidate for chairman of the eonvention was defeated for that office, and several times defeated in propositions whieh he made. The Amerieau party representatives were the reeipients of many friendly assurances from leaders of the convention. More than all the rest, a gentleman, who was a candidate before the convention, says that he was continually beset with the question whether he was a member of any secret society, showing that this was an important consideration with many delegates.—The American.

—Bro. E. B. Graham is chairman of the executive committee in arranging for the annual anti-secret State convention of Nebraska. He expects soon to make a tour of the State in order to select a favorable point for holding this convention. It is proposed to work up the State National Reform Convention in connection. As secretism is one of the evils which the National Reform movement aims to resist, and the anti-secret forces should not unite in conventions.—Blanchard, Iowa, Record.

PAGAN CEREMONY OVER A CHRISTIAN TEMPLE.

GIBBS CROSS-ROADS, Tenn.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Allow me (after having walked in the light of the Polar-Star the past ten months) to congratulate you for the earnest efforts you are making to emancipate our people from secret orders. I have often beeu inclined to write to you as a dear friend, but surrounding eireumstanees have been such that I have not attempted to do so.

Ours is a land of bondage to the lodge. A vast majority of our leading men, politieally and religously, are in some way brought under lodge influenee; even those who do not belong to the lodge are so eompletely under its control that if one should say ought against it, they will eaution him, saying, "You had better be careful," etc. Like the young brother who elosed a telling speech in chureh conferenee, "I thought I would ehoke if I kept silent." Perhaps if it had not been for a lengthy artiele in the Missionary Baptist of July 23d, published at Nashville, Tennessee, of which I have been a regular contributor almost since its birth, I would have kept silent. But for the eause I love dearest I feel constrained to enter my protest against such language from a standard religious paper.

The article referred to claims to be extracts from the Daily American of Nashville, and refers to the laying of the eorner-stone of a ehureh house erected by the First Baptist ehureh of Nashville. I shall eopy only a few of those extracts:

"At 5:30 o'elock the members of Phœnix Lodge, No. 131, who were invited to lay the eorner-stone, marehed to the sceue escorted by a brass band. They ascended the broad platform erected for the oeeasion, upon which were also seated some of the members of the building eommittee and the choir." "Rev. Dr. C. H. Strickland, pastor of the ehureh, and Grand Chaplain of the order of Masonry in Tennessee, stated that Major Jno. L. Weakley, ehairman of the building eommittee, would make the neeessary explanations of the purpose of the building and the objeet of the oeeasion. [Any who had not been hoodwinked and eabletowed eould very well understand the objeet of the occasion.] This Maj. Weakley did in a few earnest and appropriate remarks. In eonelusion, he thanked the time-honored order whieh had aceepted an invitation to lay the eorner-stone, and bade them proceed." "The corner-stone was placed by those engaged in the construction of the building. A eavity in the stone eontaining quite a number of treasures. The Master of Cermonies, Maj. Foster, then gave three distinct raps upon the stone, followed by nine hand claps by the Masons, denoting the eonclusion of the ceremonies." (More properly heathen mockeries.)

Dr. Strickland introduced the orator of the oeeasion—Rev. Dr. A. D. Sears, of Clarksville."

"In the outset of his remarks, Dr. Sears paid a high tribute to Freemasonry and Knight Templarism. He spoke of the noble teachings of the one, and the many illustrious names numbered in its ranks, and of the aggressiveness and courage of the other as the representative of the Crusaders." (How wonderful!) "Dr. Sears said that the corner stone was of Masonie origin, and none but Masons could truly eomprehend its signifieance. (Surprising intelligence!) "Others tried to lay corner-stones, but often laid them wrong." (What an honored fraternity is theirs!) "The speaker conteuded that none but Masons should lay corner-stone."

Who ean wonder that the masses of the people are given over to hardness of heart and reprobacy of mind; that skepticism and infidelity are rapidly inereasing, when a worldly institution, organized by earnal man, and fostered for selfish ends, is to be not only lauded above the ehureh of the living God, but exalted far above, and presented as the guardian of the ehureh of Christ, and that by one who elaims to be ealled of God to preach the gospel of Christ!

When ministers of the gospel publicly present the lodge as superior to the ehurch of Christ; and when the ehurch has so far descended from its lofty position as the "light of the world" as to eall in the worshipers of Hiram Abiff to perform the work which she thereby acknowledges her unworthiness and inability to perform, it is certainly time for us to look for an assembly uneontaminated with the lodge, or not the slave of the lodge, in order to find the church which the "gates of hell" shall not, or rather has not prevailed against.

I have eoneluded that under eireumstanees as above noted, silence, by those who love the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ, is the accomplice of error, and therefore could not keep silent and have the honor of my blessed Master trampled under foot. I am a poor man; have only been engaged in the ministry about three years, but heneeforth hope to "declare all the eounsel of God," trusting him for suecess. If you have any Anti-masonie literature for gratuitous distribution send it to me and I will use it to advantage. Yours, in Christ,

W. H. SMITH.

THE POSITION OF WOMAN.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The fact that woman suffrage lingers along so much, signifies peculiar characteristics. One thing seems still trne, and it must remain a matter of fact; namely, that woman, looking for liberty, for emancipation and equal rights, cannot too soon recognize the fact that her entire, permanent help must come from pure Christianity. The cause of woman, like those of temperance and anti-secrecy can never be any greater than the sum of Bible zeal.

It was not an agreeable sight to see Frances E. Willard ("the Deborah of the temperance cause") sitting in a political convention beside a woman whose clamor for suffrage, or rather whose associations and occupation in no sense recommend her to the attention of Christians as a worthy advocate of their native, inalienable rights.

It will be seen, every time the question is confronted, that the elevation of woman involves a steady consideration of the cause and source of the standing she already has. Now, while it may not be an easy and short process to determine exactly from whence she has and does derive this standing, there are resources, there is a method of elimination whereby we can determine certain influences, some of which, too, profess the loudest friendship, but which are not only not helpful, but are constitutionally and diametrically opposed to her.

In this list may be mentioned the class (Liberals) of which the virago before mentioned is a representative, and who must confess that outside of Christianity woman is a slave; that her freedom from the position of a beast of burden, or the tool of base men, is known only where the Bible shines forth its light.

Next secret societies, temperance orders included, which are well known to be simply a species of legerdemain, of manipulations, though dexterously handled and in many forms, by their parent Freemasonry, to hoodwink and deceive, as it were, the very elect themselves. For woman to have, in any way, collusion with these, is but to toy with the wiles of a charming serpent. Lodgery being professedly and constitutionally pagan, representing and even professing admiration for periods, countries and conditions of society, in which woman is known to have been but a cypher, save for base purposes, what from it can woman expect?

Then the papacy. Miss Willard forgets while standing before the Republican convention, that when she "gave the sop," "A society that has an open hand for the Catholic as the Protestant,"—she forgets that this same institution (papacy) had it the power, would quickly hustle her back to a position not only obscure, but that with a spirit of disgust and indignation which only it can manifest in reference to the "sphere of woman."

The recent papist Total Abstinence conventiou, held in this city, and which perhaps has no equal for lulling to sleep and chloroforming the Protestants, suggested to us, and should to everyone, some striking inquiries. Where were the women? Where, in all this mammoth annual gathering, a gathering for a cause so noble, where, echo repeats, where were the women? Archbishops, bishops, prelates, etc., fill the air from the beginning till the sound dies out in the distance. Scarcely a layman, much less a woman, in a thousand miles—so, practically, at least.

Masonry excludes woman, papacy excludes woman, paganism excludes woman, some Anti-masons exclude woman; but some Anti-masons profess to oppose papacy, who yet exclude woman, and since all which excludes woman must partake of paganism, we easily see that some of pagauism exists outside of papacy, also, that some of what professes to be Christianity is yet paganism. Pure Christiauity, on the other hand, includes woman.

If paganism stands for a synonym of hostility to woman; it also follows that before woman can have pure freedom, there must be eradication of pagauism; that is, in these various forms, as liberalism, Masoury, papacy, etc., with any and all affiliation with them.

As to opposition to woman by papacy, there is reason to fear that the hostility from this source is more serious, more violent, deeper grounded and farther reaching than is at all supposed. Much might be learned on this point by observing converts from this system; the reluctance with which they give up and accord to woman what she has from other Christians. To do this, to observe these facts and yet treat the converts with respect is not always easy, but it must be done with love and patience, remembering that they themselves are not so much to blame as is the system in which they have been trained and molded. To cure disease we must know the cause, also the remedy. To aid woman and to bring to the light her opposers we must know in what consist the evils, especially when they are fundamental.

Finally, let woman look for her rights not to man, but to God, to the establishment of his kingdom on earth as it is in heaven; then will she be free indeed. J. C. S.

THE OLD PILGRIM ON THE PITTSBURGH MOB.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Mr. Coleman of Wisconsin justifies the extravagant conduct of himself among the rioters of the Pittsburgh convention on the ground of President C. A Blanchard's quotation of a historical fact that Rome was saved by the cackling and not the hissing of geese. The Christian Statesman writer says "it was probably severe."

If the President was wrong I would be the last man to sustain him. He should be censured. If not wrong, every healthful human interest requires that he should be sustained, at least left to the common sense of community without criticism, and that will sustain him. Was the historic quotation correct? Nobody disputes this. He was truthful then to say the least, and this in these times is a virtue of high merit. He cannot be faulted as a libeller. Did he charge the convention or any member of it with the disgraceful crime of hissing a man while acting entirely within the limits of the strictest propriety? No, no, not a word of it. He had come to give power and influence to the convention. He was legitimately introduced. He was no intruder. He had a sacred right to the attention of the convention. Not the wildest disturber accuses him with an impropricty of statement or spirit or method until the most outrageous disorder by hissing and clamor was inaugurated. Has President Blanchard no rights? Are mobs privileged characters to do what they will? At this juncture he made a historic quotation. If there was a justification of their hissing and howling it must have occurred before this quotation. That man has not an element of fairness in him, he is wickedly dishonest, who claims the historical quotation as a justification for the mobocratic uproar, when the quotation was not made until after the upaoar occurred. The Statesman must have State regulations of sufficient efficiency to put a stop to mob violence, and defend good men in their rights. This was too severe was it? Stephen was too severe in his cutting rebukes of the mob who stoned him. Christ was too severe in his scathing reproaches of the wilful, malignant Pharisees.

President B. presented no argument but a simple fact. He made a simple statement of the principles of the American party. Cannot we Americans state what we believe? Things have come to a wonderful pass when we Americans cannot tell what we believe.

The Signal should remember when the women were mobbed when they prayed, and sung, and talked their belief, and not throw its weight constructively in favor of those who use mob violence to silence a representative man who is simply stating the principles of a party no one need be ashamed of.

Will the New York Witness cower before the mob and allow a witness for Christ's truth to be trampled down? Though the disciples fled, they finally suffered martyrdom for Christ. So will the Witness, for it loves the truth. All we Americans want is fair, equitable Christian treatment. We want no privileges but such as the humblest may claim, and among these we regard as the most precious, liberty to confess our belief.

AN OLD PILGRIM.

PITTSBURGH CRITICIZED.

PITTSBURGH, Pa.

EDITOR CHRISTIA NCYNOSURE:—The old saying, "The mountain labored and brought forth a mouse," has been again and again verified in the history of the political conventions of this country, and the late convention of the P. H. P. party has proven no exception. I do not intend any reflection upon the candidates nominated. They, for ought I know, are men above reproach and of most sterling principles. If so, the action and conduct of the convention will show them that they are in very uncongenial company. The convention, in point of numbers and enthusiasm (if the effort to keep up an uproar of applause at every possible opportunity constitutes enthusiasm) was a success, taking the most approved political conventions as a model. In all of the modern political clap traps it was a decided success. This was manifest in all of the arrangements and never for once lost sight of.

The Hon. Mr. Stewart's opening address, a very lengthy, tedious, printed speech, over an hour in its delivery, abounded in rhetorical effort to secure applause, and intelligent men, whose hearts and souls are in the temperance cause, left the convention in disgust at the evidence of political clap-trap and disposition to make unsupported and extravagant statements on the part of speakers; and when the morning papers, containing proceedings of the convention, gave an account of the ribald and indecent conduct towards Pres. Chas. A. Blanchard, they were led to exclaim, "false in part, false in whole."

This last attempt of unblushing hypocrisy should, as it certainly will, receive the unqualified condemnation of all honorable men and women who desire to see truth and honesty govern in our political affairs. In order to uphold oath-bound secrecy, this highly moral party in its treatment of Mr. Blanchard, trampled under foot all their protestations of desire to put down the rum traffic, all their pretended love and sympathy for the poor drunkard was cast to the winds. The millions of wretched creatures that were through the rum-curse filling drunkard's graves, whose blood Mr. Stewart would have cleave to the Republican party, must continue to fill the land with mourning before these devoted reformers would consent to give up the advantages of the lodge, the strongest ally the rum-traffic ever had or has! * * *

While ringing the changes on the treatment Miss F. E. Willard received at the hands of old parties, which was civil, this very refined and religious convention invites a Christian gentleman, a representative of a Christian party, to address them, and at the instance of the Masonic beast excel in ribaldry any similar political treatment or conduct of any convention ever held in the same city by the Republican party. And yet men professing undying love of righteousness and hatred for the midnight clans can see no cause of condemnation, and much cause for approval. Well, if our Nation is never reformed until this class of reformers reform it, our prayer is that either of the old parties may live long and prevail over hypocrisy pure and simple.

LIBERTY ENLIGHTENING THE WORLD.

The statue with the above designation which the old spirit of French Jacobinism has presented to the democracy of America (with which it has nothing in common, for the American idea of liberty enlightening the world is a school-house with a Bible in it—not a pagan statue) has been corner-stoned by the Freemasons. It ought therefore to be called the statue of Freemasonry lighting New York Harbor, and have Tweed's head on it; for he was the greatest Freemason of New-York. That Bishop Potter of the Episcopal church should consecrate such a thing in the midst of such a crowd is very lamentable, but it ought to be gratifying to all men of sense and true religious feeling to have observed how few persons (besides the Freemasons) and how little character were present on the occasion. New York now stands distinguished for four things—for a Democrat who proposes to be a reformer; for the great Freemason Tweed, who rendered reform necessary; and for the Mason-honored pagan monument, Cleopatra's Needle; and Freemasonry lighting Bedloe's Island, for all of which we are indebted to Freemasonry.

ANTI-PAGAN.

FINNEY'S "LECTURES TO PROFESSING CHRISTIANS."

OBERLIN, Ohio.

These lectures are the latest publication of the writings of Pres. Chas. G. Finney. An ardent worker in the Christian field was sojourning in Canada where the book in English print, as providence would have it, fell into his hands. "A fellow traveler to the land of life" presented it to him. On bringing it to Oberlin he exhibited it to the enterprising publisher of Mr. Finney's writings, who decided at once to reprint it. The work is done. It contains twenty-five lectures which furnish no ordinary food for the sober reader. None in search of amusement need obtain it as he will be disappointed. Although directed to "Professing Christians" it is to all in downright earnest on religious and moral questions and who regards this life a reality. From the first lecture to the last it has a savor of grace charming to all such persons—a savor they never mistake, whatever they may think of the author of the lectures in his technical method of expressing himself, sometimes criticised as "not theological." But even in theology, as well as in the matter of the lectures, it would be quite advisable for a critic to be conscious of considerable dialectical power before putting pen to paper to show wherein the theology of them is in error. The days of prejudice against President Finney's theology are now over, and the question, What is his error? is now in order.

The very first sentences of the first lecture on "Self Deceivers," are the reminder of "a strong man" about "to run a race." They are the unqualified utterances of conscious power challenging a sinful conscience and bidding contradiction utter defiance. The reader will mark them.

"There are two extremes in religion equally false and equally fatal. And there are two classes of hypocrites that occupy these two extremes. The first class make religion to consist altogether in the belief of certain abstract doctrines, or what they call faith and lay little or no stress on good works. The other class make religion to consist altogether in good works (I mean dead works) and lay little or no stress on faith in Jesus Christ, but hope for salvation by their own deeds."

If any object to these statements on theological or material ground as related to the subject in the hands of the author, more than one would like to hear what he has to say upon the subject.

Next in the list of the lectures is "False Professors," "Doubtful Actions are Sinful," "Religion of Public Opinion," "Conformity to the World," "Dishonesty in Small Matters Inconsistent with Honesty in Any Thing," "Justification by Faith," "Sanctification by Faith," "Perfection," "Love the Whole of Religion;"—topics that alone stir a thoughtful mind.

Speaking of Mr Finney as a writer when it was fashionable to hoot at him, Rev. Wm. Burleigh says:

"We will venture the prediction that fifty years hence this volume ["Finney's Theology"] will rank among the standard works on Theology and the name of Finney be mentioned with those of Edwards, Dwight, and Emmons. The time will come when Finney will have justice done to his exalted talents and when the host of his revilers—men not possessing in the aggregate half his mental grasp will be lost in oblivion unless he should preserve their names from utter extinction by an incidental allusion in his works."—Charter Oak, Hartford, Conn.

Dr. George Redford of Worcester, Eng., edited the London edition of his Theology and speaks thus:

"The editor frankly confesses that when a student he would gladly have bartered half the books in his library to have gained a single perusal of these lectures [on Theology] and he cannot refrain from expressing the belief that no young student of theology will ever regret the purchase or perusal of Mr. Finney's lectures."

Many who cannot procure this large work, will now be glad to know the volume before us—pages 468—can be ordered from Rev. C. Conkling, Oberlin, Ohio, who will send it pre-paid to any address on receipt of the price, $1.50.

—Four Odd-fellows of Elgin, Ill., have been cited to show cause why they should not be expelled from the church.

—Samson wrought all his great works alone. He went everywhere single-handed. God has some such champions. We ought to be ready to serve alone if others are not able or disposed to work with us.—Crisis.

—The N. Y. Mail and Express, in a historical article, says a Philadelphia man makes a business of preparing and mounting skeletons for schools, lodges, and private individuals. This verifies the published expositions of some of the lodges in one very important particular, that human skeletons are used in the initiations. No "perjured wretch" need tell us the lodges use a human skeleton in their mock solemnities.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON IX.—August 31, 1884.—God's Works and Word.—Psalm 19: 1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Thou hast magnified thy word above all thy name.—Psalm 138: 2.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

"The heavens." From heave, the perfect participle of which is heaven. The heavens are plural for their variety, comprising the watery heavens with their clouds of countless forms, the aerial heavens with their calms and tempests, the solar heavens, with all the glories of the day, and the starry heavens with all the marvels of the night; what the Heaven of heavens must be hath not entered into the heart of man, but there in chief all things are telling the glory of God.—Spurgeon.

"The glory of God." The heavens, as Bacon observes, declare the glory but not the will of God: that is known only by his law, revealed to man as the perfect expression of that will, for his conversion, instruction, and guidance.—Cook.

"His handiwork." His hand-work, the work of his hands, hands being attributed to the great creating Spirit to set forth his care and workmanlike action, and to meet the poor comprehension of mortals. In the expanse above us God flies, as it were, his starry flag to show that the King is at home, and hangs out his escutcheon that atheists may see how he despises their denunciations of him.—Spurgeon.

"Night unto night sheweth knowledge." Night sheweth knowledge unto night; i. e., knowledge of God and his glory. The Hebrew word for sheweth means properly "quickeneth," "keepeth alive;" that is, gives a living, quickening knowledge, as though contemplation of the starry firmament awakened deeper, more spiritual thoughts than the brightness of day. Bishop Horne remarks of day and night thus occupied, they are "like two parts of a choir, chanting forth alternately the praises of God."—Cook.

"No speech: no words: no [literal] voice of theirs is heard."—Cowles. The meaning of ver. 3, when thus translated, is that nature utters no audible voice, but yet (ver. 4) without any words powerfully proclaims her lessons to the reflecting mind. The idea, in short, is just that so beautifully expressed by Addison, when he says respecting the orbs of heaven:

> "In reason's ear they all rejoice
> And utter forth a glorious voice,
> Forever singing, as they shine,
> 'The hand that made us is divine.'"
> —A. Roberts, D.D., in Old Test. Revision.

"There is nothing hid from the heat thereof." This is especially illustrated by the scientific doctrine of the correlation of forces, which shows that all the forces which we use are from the rays of the sun. Our coal-fires are from the sun: our engines are driven by heat stored by the sun in coal; our lights find their origin in the sunlight.—Peloubet.

"The law of the Lord." The law refers here to revealed truth, as contradistinguished from the truth made known by the works of creation.—Barnes. To David the law was the Pentatcuch. It contains, beside history, prophecy, and poetry, three codes of law: the moral law, Ex. 20, the civil law, Ex. 21–23, and the ceremonial law, contained principally in Leviticus.—Murphy.

"Is perfect." (1) Is free from all defect or blemish.—Alexander. (2) Complete as a revelation of divine truth; complete as a rule of conduct; there is nothing essential for man to know which may not be found there.—Barnes. (3) The moral law is perfect, inasmuch as the "ten words" form in themselves a complete code, and are all axioms of moral truth that receive the assent of the reason as soon as they are understood.—Murphy.

"Converting the soul." Or, as in marg., restoring, literally bringing it back, &c., from ignorance and sin; the word involves the idea of deliverance and refreshment.—Cook. (1) The ten commandments guide into the way of righteousness. (2) They show us our sin, and hence lead to a better life. (3) The whole ceremonial law was also expressly and perfectly adapted to lead the Jews to holiness. It was a teaching and training in righteousness wonderfully fitted for its work (see Walker's "Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation").—Peloubet.

"The simple." The persuadable grow wise, but the cavillers continue fools. It is not enough for us to be converts, we must continue to be disciples. The perfection of the Gospel converts, but its sureness edifies; if we would be edified, it becomes us not to stagger at the promise through unbelief, for a doubted Gospel cannot make us wise, but truth of which we are assured will be our establishment.—Spurgeon.

"Rejoicing the heart." Mark the progress; he who was converted was next made wise, and is now made happy; that truth which makes the heart right then gives joy to the right heart. —Spurgeon.

"Enlightening the eyes." Giving light and knowledge; showing us the true path of life and happiness; cleansing away all selfishness and prejudice, which are sure to mislead our judgment, and bring error into our views of truth. This is one step farther in the progress of the disciple.—Peloubet.

"Enduring forever." Purity is a sign of life; impurity always marks decay. The law is clean, therefore it is living and enduring. The revealed will of God is never changed; even Jesus came not to destroy but to fulfil, and even the ceremonial law was only changed as to its shadows; the substance intended by it is eternal. When the governments of nations are shaken with revolution, and ancient constitutions are being repealed, it is comforting to know that the throne of God is unshaken and his law unaltered.—Spurgeon.

"In keeping of them." Not only for keeping, but in keeping of them, there is great reward. The joy, the rest, the refreshing, the comforts, the incomes that saints now enjoy, in the ways of God, are so precious and glorious in their eyes, that they would not exchange them for ten thousand worlds. If there be so much to be had in the wilderness, what then shall be had in paradise!—Thomas Brooks.

"Who can understand his errors?" Who can number up the sins of a life? Who can make an estimate of the number of impure and unholy thoughts? The words which have been spoken and should not have been spoken? Who can recall the forgotten sins and follies of a life? There is but one Being in the universe that can do this. To him all this is known.—Barnes.

"Keep back thy servant also from presumptuous sins." Sins committed with deliberation, with design, against the checks of conscience and the motions of God's spirit, such sins are direct rebellion against God, a despising of his command. —Alexander Cruden. It is remarkable that though an atonement was provided under the Jewish law for every kind of sin, there was this one exception: But the soul that sinneth presumptuously shall have no atonement; it shall be cut off from the midst of my people (Numb. 15: 30).—Spurgeon.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

THE BOOK OF NATURE AND THE BOOK OF REVELATION.

1. The book of nature declares God's glory. Vs. 1–6. Of all the millions of twinkling points that stretch out into infinite space beyond the utmost limit of the telescope to scan, or of that scattered star-dust we call the Milky Way, of which every separate grain is a sun, the center of a system of worlds much larger than our own, David had not probably the smallest conception. Yet there is nothing in all the wonderful poetry of this psalm which is false to science, and if he had possessed all the knowledge of Kepler or Sir Isaac Newton, he could not have voiced more truly the sentiments of every thoughtful soul when hearing of the wonderful revelations of modern astronomy. "Day unto day uttereth speech and night unto night showeth knowledge." The heavens always declare the glory of God and are never silent. "There is no speech nor language where their voice is not heard." They everywhere declare it—in the most savage jungle or the loneliest isle of the sea. The psalmist closes as a climax with a sublime description of the sun—the most glorious object in nature. It is an image of God's power, "rejoicing as a strong man to run a race." It is an image of his providence extending over all his creatures. "There is nothing hid from the heat thereof." Then he proceeds to contrast the fulluess of the written Word with natural revelation, which is at best imperfect, for we want to know more about God than that he is glorious, powerful and generally beneficent.

2. The Bible is the revelation of God's grace. Vs. 7–10. "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." This is where nature fails. It has no converting power. It is where all religious systems based upon it fail. Though Masonry claims to be a religion we never hear of revivals in the lodge. We never hear of its teachings convicting men of sin. The reason is because it is a religion based only on the light of nature without any Christ in it, and it can no more convert a soul than a seed could sprout in the earth without the sun. "The testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple.' Nature in regard to the great truths o f man's fall and redemption bears but very dim and uncertain witness. The greatest philosophers of antiquity, even Plato, who comes so near it that he speaks in his writings of the Logos or the Word, the very same term for Christ that the Scriptures employ, could learn more in an hour from a little child than they could learn in a century from the light of nature alone.

3. The Bible the only rule of conduct. V. 11. The Bible is for the warning of nations as well as individuals. A nation that gives up the Bible throws away the only safe-guard and guide for the generations that are to come. Joseph Cook well said in answer to the inquiry what would be the result of throwing out the Bible from our public schools, "Ask Spain, ask Italy. In these degraded nations we may read a lesson that should make us prize our open Bibles as the true fountain of all national progress."

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

Why has God given us the Bible? Deut. 29: 29. Have we any excuse for not studying the Bible? Deut. 30: 11–14. Does national prosperity always follow where the Bible is studied and obeyed? Isa. 48: 18.

LESSONS.

1. God's works have such an analogy to each other that the lower and more material ones may be used to help us to understand the higher and more spiritual.

2. The testimony of God's works to his existence and some of his attributes is amply sufficient. Only those unwilling to acknowledge God refuse to be convinced. The rationalist is irrational; the scientist is unscientific (vs. 1, 2).

3. God's revelation of himself in the gospel is as sufficient for the world, and as free to the world as the exhibition of his glory in the visible heavens is (vs. 3, 4 compared with Rom. 10: 18).

4. As the glory of the heavens by night is not destroyed, but only obscured, by sunrise, so the glories of the Old Testament revelation are not destroyed, but outshone by the glory of Christ in the New Testament. As we study astronomy by daylight, so we do well to study the Old Testament now (vs. 4–6).

5. The Scriptures make provision in what they teach and what they enjoin for all man's physical, mental, moral, social and spiritual needs (vs. 7–11).

6. Happiness is secured only through the right use of God's Word (vs. 7–11).

7. Without the Scriptures man cannot even understand himself aright; nor even with them, unless he obtain the grace of God which they promise (v. 12).

8. Only the renewing or restraining grace of God keeps any man from being as bad as the worst man is (v. 13).

9. That grace not only keeps him from being bad, but makes him good, and finally perfectly good (v. 13).

10. Even the best of men do not claim acceptance of even their best works on the ground of their worthiness, but ask it of divine grace (v. 14).

11. They may do this with boldness because of Christ's relation to them as their kinsman Redeemer (v. 14).—U. P. Bible Teacher.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD, HENRY L. KELLOGG, } EDITORS.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 21, 1884.

We hope next week to give a history and thorough explanation of "The Templars of Honor and Temperance," whose Supreme Council met in Galesburg last week. If a few extras are wanted in Galesburg, they can be sent if ordered.

Two or three skillful young men or young ladies could do a grand work for our cause and something for themselves in Peoria, Knox and Warren counties getting subscribers for the Cynosure just now. Write the publisher, Mr. Phillips, for the terms.

THE MONMOUTH meeting is transferred from Aug. 27–8 to Sept. 11–12, in favor of several hundred college students now away. Secretary Stoddard invites friends in and out of the State to that very important meeting. It is an American Prohibition meeting. Dr. Haney, who makes the opening address is a Prohibitionist; and the strongest Americans are pleased that he is to speak on prohibition. So Dr. Miner addressed us at Washington. We hope the Prohibitionists of Knox and Warren counties will turn out in mass to hear their favorite, and candidate for Congress two years ago.

During the siege of Paris, in the Franco-Prussian war, just before the city fell into the hands of the Germans, the Freemasons of the city, in full regalia, marched out in the sight of both armies, and, having excited the gaping wonder of crowds, went back to the hiding-places from which they issued. When our forces marched into the city of Little Rock, Arkansas, in the war of the rebellion, a lodge of city harlots attired in the regalia of their order, performed a similar evolution between our forces and the confederates. In war and in politics, those "orders" are found on both sides and no side.

Capitol Lodge of Good Templars, Madison, Wis., has issued an address to the fraternity in that State, showing that the attempt to induce members of the order to take part in Prohibition politics has resulted in a loss of 121 lodges and over 5,000 members. —Monmouth Gazette.

The Capitol Lodge does not tell us how these 5,000 Wisconsin seceders from lodgery are going to vote. It is to be hoped they will vote with the American Prohibition party. Every sincere and enlightened Prohibitionist must see that the tie that binds Masons together in their huge and gorgeous temples must and will be stronger than Prohibition. This battle must be won by open, hard fighting. Never, till an open, fair and square issue is made against it, will the liquor crime go to the wall.

JAMES BARTLETT HOBBS, invited by Pres. Stratton to the Monmouth meeting, writes an excellent letter. When a young boy, he waded hip-deep, in Maine snow, to a little country inn, and was initiated into the Know-Nothings. That one night cured him, and he never has entered a secret society since, though of course often solicited to join. Mr. Hobbs has been a member of one Sabbath school twenty-four years, is an irreproachable business man; and, with the Prohibition and American vote, he will astonish those prohibitionists in Peoria and elsewhere, who wish to vote for Oglesby, to keep out Carter Harrison, as the paddy stuffed his old hat in the window not to let in the light but to keep out the cold.

THE HORSE-SHOE.

We see this article, which some farriers think even horses could dispense with, now installed as an emblem of the goddess of Luck or Fortune (the blind goddess standing on a rolling ball) in the holy places of American society: in the kitchen which gives us victuals; in the parlor, where the young do their courting; in the "best rooms" of Congregational deacons and ministers; and even in the chapel of reform colleges on Commencement occasions! And we, not long since heard a good, brave, reform minister preach with a mimic horse-shoe over his head, and make a very ingenious apology for its hanging there, the gist of which was, that it was no worse than the heathen names of the days of the week, a mode of reasoning not popular with Abolitionists and temperance people.

Well, we know that De mininis non curat lex, but it occurs to us that the devil may possibly attach more importance to putting up horse-shoes in our homes, barber shops, churches, etc., than even those do who put them up, without being able to give an intelligible reason why. Sailors used to nail horse-shoes to ship-masts to keep the devil from wrecking the ship. Girls have hung them up to get lovers; and now they are in churches and Masonic ministers' parlors!

AN INTERESTING CATHOLIC ANTI-SECRET MOVEMENT.

A monthly review entitled Freemasonry Unmasked, is started in Paris, and the promoters write to us proposing an international organization, including Catholics, Protestants, and everybody else against the secret lodge system the world over. What say our subscribers to this bold proposition? Shall we have a world's Anti-masonic, as we had world's anti-slavery conventions? Let us hear. We give below the letter translated by Prof. W. H. Fischer of Wheaton College. Read and reflect.

Will not the French people of Chicago subscribe for this review? What says Pastor Seguin? The price is eight francs per year.

TRANSLATION.

Rev. Jonathan Blanchard, Chicago:

We have noticed the militant attitude of the Christian Cynosure to the encroachments of secret societies We have the honor of sending you, enclosed, which we beg you will circulate as widely as possible.

Freemasonry attacks everything which we hold dear. Should not, therefore, a general Anti-masonic movement be organized, extending its action everywhere; since the sect (Freemasonry) manifests itself everywhere? The Christian press of America should call public attention to the Masonic question by original articles and extracts from reviews, pamphlets, etc., unmasking the sect. Our nascent review wishes to secure subscribers, editors, and zealous correspondents who will keep us up with facts and movements of American Masonry. All documents and communications resting on sound proof will be very acceptable.

I pray you, Rev. Sir., accept my sentiments of the most distinguished regard for the editors.

CTE TOURAND DE QUINSOUAS.

POMEROY AND ST. JOHN.

At Pittsburgh (July 24th) in consultation, Pres. C. A. Blanchard asked Senator Pomeroy, "What will you do if this (Pittsburgh Prohibition) Convention nominates St. John?"

"I shall ask leave to withdraw," answered Mr. Pomeroy. "I don't wish to run against a good man who tells me, 'I stand on every plank of the American platform.'"

Prof. Bailey writes from Washington of St. John, "He has endorsed the American platform, including the anti secrecy plank." Mr. Bailey also writes, "Since the Pittsburgh convention we have corresponded with Messrs. Pomeroy and Conant." "We are authorized to say that the National Committee will be called together, by request of Pomeroy and Conant, and will be recommended to support St. John and Daniel." "The question of supporting the Prohibition candidates will be left wholly to the National Committee to decide," etc., etc.

Now Messrs. Pomeroy and Bailey are on that National Committee, and its decision will doubtless follow their judgment; and we may as well assume now that we are to vote for the Prohibition candidates who "stand on every plank of the American platform," as to wait and stand on ceremony. The American party is made up of men and women who carry their heads with them. They will see, as we do, there is no sense in our asking the thousands of Prohibitionists to give up their candidate and take ours, when Mr. Pomeroy himself, as a wise man, does not ask it. Neither does this matter brook delay. Napoleon said the Germans were whipped because they did not understand the value of fifteen minutes.

St. John tells us he "stands on every plank" of our platform. In this he "Does well, acts nobly; angels could no more."

Let us not be picking our flints in the face of two political lines of battle whose guns are in battery. The Republicans and Democrats are forming clubs all over the country; they have already captured Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Susan B. Anthony; and Phœbe Couzins has gone over to Butler. It is time to mass our forces with the Prohibitionists, "Right face," and "march!"

But, it is objected, St. John has not yet published to the world and in the newspapers, that he is an American.

And wouldn't he be foolish if he did, before we have asked him to? Why should he alarm and drive off thousands of Good Templars, Templars of Honor, and what not, who are with us in heart, and will be with us in head just as soon as our arguments reach them?

Five years ago this Gov. St. John said to the senior editor of the Cynosure in writing, "May God bless your good cause." Not a nerve in him has twinged, or a muscle quivered since. If he had toadied to the lodge, "the great whore sitting on many waters," it would have supported him as it has Ingalls and Glick. Who bought with brewers, and distillers, money, the thirty to forty thousand votes which defeated St. John in Kansas? Freemasons! Secretists in the Kansas lodges. These invisible hands bought up the poor darkies who voted against their deliverer and good angel, St. John. No open, visible hands took the Peoria and Milwaukee money and scattered it all over the hundred counties of Kansas, to strike down St. John, and elect Glick, a Lecompton Democrat and open, professed secessionist and rebel during the war; and that, too, in the name of Republicanism and Prohibition. And have we read in vain the operations of the Masons, who are the devil's cashiers, against Pomeroy? The bullets which brought down those leaders were fired from Republican rifles, but they were bought by the whisky of Peoria and the brewesies of Milwaukee.

If the eefeat of St. John by the lodge, which elected the high Masons, Glick and Ingalls, is not certificate enough to justify Anti-masons in trusting him, perhaps he ought to consent to have his "throat cut from ear to ear and his tongue torn out by the roots" in order to satisfy good people who are less "wise in their generation" than the children of this world! But we shall require no such thing, but like sensible men go for St. John and Daniel.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

TEMPLE OF HONOR AND TEMPERANCE.

GALESBURG, Ill., Aug. 14.

Seeing a notice that the Supreme Council of this secret order would meet in their hall and that all were invited to a sociable preceding their secret conclave. I took my seat along with Mr. Holyoke, and soon found we appeared to be the only outsiders present.

The meeting was opened without prayer and the speaking was miscellaneous, devoted almost exclusively to the exaltation of the "order." The presiding officer was Dr. Tait of Galesburg, who is said to be a member of the Presbyterian church, a professor in a Cincinnati medical college, and he has the mien and tone of a Christian gentleman.

I was seated by a gentleman from Massachusetts, not a Mason himself, who gave me the following particulars: That this order dates back to 1846; that it is an order complete in itself, and a part of and subordinate to no other; that it took the place of the old Temple of Honor, which was a higher order of the Sons of Temperance; that there are many Masons in it; that he was present at a Supreme Council meeting where twenty-one were present, of whom nineteen were Masons!

The speakers claimed for this "Temple," that it first admitted women to a side degree; that it first pledged members, kneeling, "for life." All the speakers but one, spoke of their Temple as "superior" to any other organization on earth! One speaker added the words "outside the church." Those present, most of them, wore badges, some of which were highly ornamented. Two preachers, a Methodist for New Jersey, and a Baptist from Reading, Pennsylvania, were among the members. There were fifteen speakers, beside myself, who came from eight or ten States. They all addressed the audience as "Brothers and sisters," though it did not appear that they professed faith in Christ. The speakers, in the usual way, spoke of removing from their "Temple to the Temple above!" and though the allusions to the ladies were not in every case strictly delicate, the treatment of the sex was strictly Masonic.

The natural question is, What are these gentlemen here for? They come from eight or ten States, and are capable and intelligent men. What is their mission?

Art. 11, By-laws of the Galesburg Temple, says: "No subject of a religious or political character shall be debated in this Temple." Well then, they are here for neither religion nor politics; what then are they here for? Timothy Parsons, P. G. W. T. of Missouri, who followed me, declared that "It is not a secret society." What then is it? We answer:

1. It is some ceremonies invented by men, professing to send men to their "Temple above" without faith in Christ.

2. It borrows its altar in the lodge-room, with the Bible lying on it, from the Masons.

3. It would seem that the devil's "principalities and powers;" which inhabit gentile worships, enter and give zest to every little side-show of secret orders which surround the Masonic lodges, which is their mother and type.

The universal revival and increase of these secret orders on the eve of a Presedential canvass, looks, to the "naked eye," as though they had some connection with politics; and they doubtlessly have, if no other, such connection as mistletoes have with trees. The secret "Supreme Council" at the top of every such order, makes it possible for those who run the orders for gain, to make something by the sale of their supposed influence with their orders to political parties; and the fictitious importance which they gain by the air of secrecy and mystery, common to all systems of jugglery and cheat, makes it possible for their leaders to gain a cheap notoriety to which neither their talent nor their worth entitle them.

But the grand object and end of all these legions of secretists now infesting this and other countries like locusts out of the smoke of the pit in the Apocalypse, is to supercede the civil oath by secret oaths and obligations, and to kill out the worship of God through Christ by a deluge of false worships. Thousands of respectable people who are in them to-day would quit them to-morrow if they knew their nature.

In the remarks of our senior editor at the "Templars of Honor and Temperance Sociable" in Galesburg, occurred this paragraph:

"I have never before attended a meeting of a secret temperance organization. I have ever held myself firmly bound by the example of Christ, who 'in secret said nothing.' This remark did not prevent the customary tokens of friendly approbation of the little speech. The sociable was open to the public.

—Pres. J. Blanchard returned to Wheaton from Galesburg and Monmouth, Saturday evening, and preached next day to the College church.

—Secretary Stoddard after a day or two spent in Wisconsin last week went to Paxton, Ill., where he was to speak on the Sabbath.

—The address on "Freemasonry and Free Government" at the Washington convention last February has been reprinted in response to a number of calls for the document. It will form a handsome pamphlet of twelve pages.

—Mr. T. B. Arnold, the publisher, will soon issue a new edition of the book "Mah-hah-bone." Mr. Ronayne has revised the book and has written considerable additional matter, so that the new edition will be enlarged by some fifty to seventy-five pages.

—Elder J. F. Browne wss at Bloomington, Ill., last week. He spoke to a small audience on Monday evening, and had appointments at the United Brethren church near Shirley on Tuesday and Weduesday of this week.

—Bro. Hope Davis, of Huntley Grove, Ill., reports that the Masonic lodge of that place has gone down, and its charter is given up. So may all systems and organizations hostile to our Lord Jesus Christ perish and be forgotten.

—It is said that even the dumb animals of Iowa are filled with the prohibition spirit and enraged at the sight of a saloon. A cow brought to the stock yards here from Iowa, when let out of the car, saw a saloon in the vicinity, and charged it at the point of her bayonets. The defenders fled and "old bos" cleaned out the concern, bull and china shop style.

—An Iowa friend asks why the two notices of the meeting at Washington, Iowa, give different dates. Because the political convention will be held one day, and the annual convention of the State Christian Association on the other. Every Anti-mason in Iowa should be at both. So, too, in Illinois.

—The Tennessee Baptist, of Nashville, contains a report of the proceedings at the corner stone laying at the First Baptist church in that city, concerning which one of our correspondents writes this week so strongly. It was truly a scene to make angels weep and the cheeks of the professors of Christianity tingle with shame. Dr. Strickland is pastor of the church and Grand Chaplain of Masons of the State. It is a cheering sign to read, just after the report of the pagan ceremony, a brave letter rebuking the servility of the church to the lodges, which were especially invited to the performance, while not a word was sent the Baptist and other churches of the city.

CONSPIRACY AND VILLAINY UNDER LODGE COVER.

Fond du Lac, Wis., Aug. 13th, 1884.

"The tender mercies of the wicked are cruel." This has been verified in unjust and wicked prosecutions in this city. Daniel Varney is an old settler and was recently one of the wealthy and prosperous citizens of the place. Reared in the Quaker faith, and of naturally quiet demeanor, he has passed his four score years with unsullied reputation and unquestioned integrity. What he believes, he firmly but courteously asserts, and enforces his theories by consistent practice. Being in favor of open methods and averse to all combinations to obtain undue advantages, his principles are exceedingly repugnant to the lodgites, who, it would appear, have combined to rob and ruin him through the civil courts. His only child having died in infancy, and his companion for many years having also died, he sought companionship and comfort in what proved a very unfortunate marriage. Considerations of personal security compelled him to abstain from the use of food prepared by the woman he had wedded "in an evil hour," lest a fifth attempt upon his life should prove more fatal than the four he apprehended had already been made. He did not seek at the time a divorce but absolute separation indomestic affairs.

A suit for maintenance and other claims soon followed in which Mr. Varney sought to defend himself against the exactions of what he believed to be a conspiracy to rob and disgrace him. After a series of trials in lower and superior courts running through eight or nine years. and costing defendant over $9,000, cash, besides personal inconvenience, a final decree was entered, and the case closed.

The lodge standing of most parties conspicuous as judges and lawyers has been ascertained, and any one familiar with the secret code and at all conversant with the proceedings in this trial, cannot doubt but that justice and the civil law were superceded by that "covenant" which, in the words of Robert Morris, "No law of the land can affect."

Mr. Varney's first attorney was not a Mason, and while he lived his rights were at least asserted if not secure. At his decease the case was intrusted to a man who professed great interest and was confident of success. This man proved to be a Freemason and an avowed atheist. If this atheist Freemason was loyal to his client, he was certainly deficient in managing this case, for about the only services he rendered were in obtaining postponements and accumulating costs, and now after receiving $1,524 he has entered suit for $5,500 attorney fees and personal expenses in the case.

Soon after this trial began it became known in Fond du Lac that Mr. Varney was liberally disposed towards the N. C. A., and contemplated remembering its work in his bequests. To this the fraternities very naturally and strongly objected. As he was one of the most capable men in Fond du Lac it would be impossible to set up a plea of insanity or incompetency and so by direct methods defeat his purposes, but this law uit resulting from his unfortunate connection with a woman who was responsive to their wishes, and eager for both money and vengeance, furnished the coveted opportunity to accomplish their designs while enriching themselves with fees and spoils, wrested from an infirm but resolute old man, by the "benevolent arts" of the "ancient and honorable order of Freemasonry."

No one can predict the result of this suit brought for $5,500 fees, but it is quite apparent that these harpies and vampires in lodge covenant with each other and with the devil will never cease to prey upon their victim until he is beyond the reach of suborned judges and perverted courts or made incapable of aiding a society that exposes their craft and appeals from fraudulent decisions to the public sense of right. J. P. Stoddard.

NATIONAL REFORM FIELD NOTES.

Des Moines, Iowa, Aug. 8, 1884.

Editor Cynosure:—I came here this week to arrange for our annual Iowa State convention in the interests of the National reform movement. We are depending on Judge Cole of the Supreme Court, Dr. Stewart and other prominent friends of the cause here to help us. I find that the tendency of conventions is to the capital, and they come so frequently that they awaken very little attention. It is desirable to hold the convention at some point where the subject has not been presented. The friends here think the best point would be Indianola, where there is a radical United Presbyterian, Methodist and Quaker community. I hope to be able by next week to announce the program definitely. It is proposed to hold State conventions at Monmouth and Milwaukee in September.

The presiding elders of the M. E. Church of the Northwest, held a three days' convention here this week. The third party question excited the most interest. The Iowa elders argued strongly against the St. John party, but the elders from Wisconsin, Illinois and Dakota could not be kept in line. Dr. Evans, of Macomb, Illinois, made a strong speech. He said the position of the two old parties might be stated as one was not in favor of prohibition and the other was opposed to it. He was acquainted with some of the members of the National Republican convention, and it was a well known fact in Illinois that the convention made a secret compromise with the liquor party in the clause in their platform pledging their adherence to all the past declarations in their platforms; and there was a plank in the platform of 1872 in opposition to prohibition. He knew it to be a fact that Republicans pointed to this clause when they wished to satisfy liquor men. The Republican candidate for Governor of Illinois had said publicly that the prohibitionists were a set of d——d cranks. He had said in his opening campaign speech that he was not only in favor of giving the laboring man a whole loaf of bread, but a whole gallon of beer. Leading Republicans in Illinois had declared it to be their policy to satisfy the liquor party, and to whip the d——d Methodists and Presbyterians into line. The motto of the liquor men was "Beer first and party second." It was a mistake to say that the liquor interests were largely in the Democratic party. No one would deny that the prohibitionists of the South were overwhelmingly in the Democratic party, and the whisky friends were principally in the Republican.

It was true that the temperance sentiment of the North was mainly in the Republican party, but this was not true of Illinois, for out of the twenty-six prohibition counties of the State, eighteen of them were Democratic. Chicago ruled both parties in Illinois. I am more and more satisfied that what our country most needs at present is not the organizers of parties, but the manufacturers of good moral sentiment, without which no good party can succeed. M. A. Gault.

THE HOME.

THE IVY IN THE DUNGEON.

The ivy in a dungeon grew,
Unfed by rain, uncheered by dew;
Its pallid leaflets only drank
Cave moisture foul and odors rank.

But through the dungeon grating high
There fell a sunbeam from the sky;
It slept upon the grated floor
In silent gladness evermore.

The ivy felt a tremor shoot
Through all its fibers to the root;
It felt the light, it saw the ray,
It strove to blossom into day.

It grew, it crept, it pushed, it clomb—
Long had the darkness been its home;
But well it knew, though veil'd in night,
The goodness and the joy of light.

Its clinging roots grew deep and strong,
Its stem expanded firm and long,
And in the currents of the air
Its tender branches flourish'd fair.

It reached the beam—it curled;
It bless'd the warmth that cheers the world,
It rose toward the dungeon bars,
And looked upon the sun and stars.

It felt the light of bursting spring;
It heard the happy sky-lark sing!
It caught the breath of morns and eves,
And wooed the swallows to its leaves.

By rains and dews, and sunshine fed,
Over the outer walls it spread,
And in the day-beam waving free,
It grew into a steadfast tree.

Upon that solitary place
Its verdure threw adorning grace;
The mating birds became its guests,
And sang its praises from their nests.

Wouldst know the moral of the rhyme?
Behold the heavenly light and climb;
To every dungeon comes a ray
Of God's interminable day.

GATHER UP THE FRAGMENTS.

Do not smile when I tell you that the fragments of your time may be utilized for intellectual improvement. Select your author and keep him in some convenient place. Read a page or two at a time, in the morning when you are in advance of the family at the breakfast-table, later as you wait for the butcher or grocer who comes for orders or brings supplies, and now and then, as you drop your sewing for a moment, or wait for the little one to finish her nap. I speak the words of truth and soberness, and from personal experience, when I affirm that a great deal of most profitable reading may be done in the fragments of a day.

If you would grow spiritually, however, take, if it be possible, some stated time daily for Bible reading and study. Do not be content to leave religious and devotional reading, as a matter of habit, to the pauses and intervals of your time. While the Christian should live in an atmosphere of prayer, so that to pray without ceasing should be neither puzzle nor enigma, but a fact, it is due to God and to ourselves that we employ some routine in our approach to him.

A mother who has young people growing up in her household gains a great deal by frequent dips into their school books. For example, your boy Ralph is studying Roman history. The long names are difficult and he stumbles over them. Suppose you go over his lesson with him for a few evenings. You will find, for one thing, your own youth coming back. Your own reviving interest will stimulate your child and he will learn much faster on account of mother's sympathy. Then, too, you will, through the charm of a common pursuit, bind him to you in closer confidence and more real union.

Fragments of time may often be spent to advantage in doing those little kindnesses which make so small a show, yet which so beautifully adorn social life. Making calls, for instance, is to many a woman a dreaded duty rather than a pleasant privilege. If it be undertaken heartlessly, only because one owes calls to a certain number of people who must be visited or else lost from one's list of acquaintances, the obligation may well be far from agreeable. It is not an unheard-of thing that a lady feels rather relieved than otherwise when she finds that her friend is not at home, and therefore her card can do duty for her presence. But "the gift without the giver is bare." Put your heart into even your occasional intercourse with your friends. Love is the fulfilling of even this law.

Never let a week pass when in health that you do not call on somebody whom you can comfort, help, amuse or rest by your words, looks and friendly handclasp. The fragments of your time will suffice for this. On the way home from market you can stop for a single moment and leave a flower or leaflet or a pretty illuminated card with some dear aged or invalid friend. Late in the afternoon when you have staid in the house as long as you ought to, slip on your outdoor things and call on some neighbor who needs to feel that she is not forgotten, and that somebody loves and thinks of her.—Mrs. Sangster, in Christian Intelligencer.

A LESSON FOR PRIDE.

I was looking over my little lawn one spring, in search of small weeds, when I saw a few tiny ovate leaves, I scarcely knew of what, but certainly not grass or clover, and therefore doomed. My knife was passing rapidly to the root when I saw suddenly among those leaves a flower, but such a flower! A pansy! but surely the sorriest pansy that ever struggled into existence. A stray seed had been lodged in the close turf, and had succeeded in this small way. I was smitten at once with admiration for its bravery—its fidelity, too. Cast out, trodden under foot, among aliens, with no kind recognition, with little to help it, and with very much to hinder it, still it would do its best to be true to its calling, and was still a pansy. It could not look very bright, nor be very graceful, and yet it had done its utmost. "It shall live," I said; "forlorn as it is, it shall have a chance now." And so, looking hither and thither for a new home for it, I set it down finally in the rich soil of my rose-border. Before that summer ended it had won the admiration of all who saw it. Not one of all my high-bred pansies equaled this. I am sure that little pansy had a special mission in this world, and I long for it to speak to others as it has spoken to me—to be ever of a good courage, and to accept all such straitness as may come through circumstances over which we have no control, and to bear with a meek heart all that may come to us through the misunderstanding, or even the malice, of others; saying only softly,—

"When obstacles and trials seem
Like prison-walls to be,
I do the little I can do,
And leave the rest to thee!"

In the lack of all human recognition, surely the Lord knoweth them that are his. He will never mistake their littleness so as to cast them away; and his great heart of love will go out to them, till he has done for them exceeding abundantly above all that they ask or think.—"Garden Graith," *by Sarah F. ABOUT HATING.

Hate not. It is not worth while. Your life is not long enough to make it pay to cherish ill will or hard thoughts toward any one. What if that man has cheated you; or that woman has played you false? What if that friend has forsaken you in your time of need, or that one, having won your utmost confidence, your warmest love, has concluded that he prefers to consider and treat you as a stranger? Let it all pass. What difference will it make to you in a few years, when you go hence to the "undiscovered country?" All who treat you wrongly now will be more sorry for it then, than you, even in your deepest disappointment and grief, can be. A few more smiles, a few more tears, some pleasure, much pain, a little longer hurrying and worrying in the world, some hasty greetings, and abrupt farewells, and life will be over, and the injurer and the injured will be led away, and ere long forgotten. Is it worth while to hate each other? —Selected.

THE ROCKS OF CALVARY.

In Fleming's "Christology," it is stated that an unbeliever visiting the sacred places of Palestine, was shown the rocks about Calvary. Examining them narrowly and critically, he turned in amazement to his fellow-travelers, and said: "I have long been a student of nature, and I am sure the rents and clefts in this rock must have split according to its veins, and where it was weakest in the adhesion of parts; for this," he said, "I have observed to have been done in other rocks, when separated or broken after an earthquake; and reason tells me it must always be so. But it is quite otherwise here; for the rocks are split athwart and across the veins, in a strange and preternatural manner, and therefore," said he, "I thank God that I came hither to see the standing monument of miraculous power by which God gives evidence to this day of the divinity of Christ."

ALPHABET OF PROVERBS.

A good example is the best sermon.
Better a bare foot than no foot at all.
Content is the philosopher's stone that turns all it touches into gold.
Do what you ought, let come what may.
Eat to live, but do not live to eat.
Fruits are deeds; words are but leaves.
Good to begin well, better to end well.
He who spends more than he should, shall not have to spend when he would.
It is not how long, but how well, we live.
Just men will flourish in spite of envy.
Keep thy faith.
Love rules his kingdom without a sword.
Men that break their word bid others be false to them.
Neither praise nor dispraise thyself; thine actions serve the turn.
Of evil grain no good seed can come.
Patience is a flower that grows not in every one's garden.
Quiet conscience gives quiet sleep.
Reason is a ray of divine light.
Step after step the ladder is ascended.
That is not good language which all do not understand.
Under this sign thou shalt conquer.
Virtue alone is invincible.
Wine is a turncoat, first a friend then an enemy.
Xperience is the best teacher.
Young man idle, old man needy.
Zeal without knowledge is the sister of folly.

THE HERMIT OF LIVRY.

In the early times of the Reformation in France there still remained a large tract of forest within three leagues of Paris, which was mostly untenanted, except by some scattered wood-cutters' huts: bare, and hardly to be distinguished in color from the bark of the trees which surrounded them.

There was one, however, standing near the public highway which bore some touches of taste and culture. It had a window of glass and a clay chimney, instead of a hole to admit the light and let out the smoke, as was the case with the neighboring hovels. A rude porch sheltered the doorway, and around the unhewn posts there had been trained a climbing vine, rich in bloom and fragrance. Nor was this all; for, where the trees had been felled and allowed the sunbeams to come in, a small patch of ground was cultivated, and made to yield a goodly supply of vegetables that formed a welcome addition to the scanty fare of the foresters.

A boy stood at the door of this hut, shading his eyes from the level rays of the sun which was slowly dipping below the higher branches of the trees.

"Mother," he called to some one within the dwelling, "isn't it almost time for the good hermit to come back from his rounds? You know you promised to save the crusts for him to take home with him."

"Yes, truly, Pierre. But they are not crusts this time. See, I have baked a whole loaf of bread for the dear old man. Did he not bring to us the bread of life to satisfy the hunger of our perishing souls? And when we gave him a cup of cold water did he not tell us of that well of water which springs up into everlasting life, of which if a man drink he shall never thirst? This is the free and full salvation of our Lord Jesus Christ, who loved us, and gave himself for us."

"Is it so, then, that you have become an evangelical, mother?" asked the boy, softly. "I mark that you have taken down the picture of 'Our Lady' from the wall; and the crucifix that Father Mathias blessed is gone, too. And you never go to mass now, nor cross yourself; neither do you pray to the saints to intercede for you with the 'Holy Mother' as you taught me to do."

"That was in the days of my ignorance, dear child. But now I trust God has opened my blinded understanding to receive the true evangel—the gospel news of salvation by a Redeemer. There is no other name given in heaven whereby we can be saved but that of Christ, and we dishonor him by putting any created beings in his place, and asking them to help us when we pray. Christ is the alone Mediator."

"Then I need not say my 'Aves' any more, nor the 'Pater Noster,' nor 'Credo,'" said Pierre, wonderingly. "I am glad of that, for it is very tiresome to repeat so many prayers when one is sleepy."

"The 'Aves' was addressed to the Virgin Mary, and the evangelicals do not use them; but the 'Credo' is our belief; and the 'Pater Noster' is the prayer which our Lord Jesus Christ taught to his disciples. Don't you remember the good hermit read it to us out of the little book which told us so many blessed words? Only it was in our own language, and not in the Latin, which is for priests and learned men, who doubtless understand it better than we can."

"Mother, must I be an evangelical, too?" questioned the boy after a thoughtful pause.

"I hope and pray that you may be, my beloved Pierre; one of the dear little ones whom the Saviour will put his hands on and bless, as he did in the days when his feet trod this sin-stricken earth."

"Ah! that was one of the brave stories the old hermit read to us out of his little book. I will ask him to repeat it, or tell us some as good. And in truth he is coming now, for I hear his staff striking against the pebbles in his path. How he stoops as he walks! Poor old man! I think he must be very warm and tired."

This was the good hermit of Livry, who had long dwelt in the depths of the forest near the spot where once stood an ancient abbey of Augustine monks. He had felt the burden of guilt on his conscience, had determiued to merit pardon of his sins by withdrawing from the world, and by vigils, fastings and repeated prayers to the Virgin gain the favor of God. But he failed to find the peace he sought.

In one of his excursions to secure the scanty food that public charity bestowed upon him, he met some men of Meaux—Farel and Leferre—who had received the evangelical doctrines into their hearts. Having learned from them the way of God more perfectly, he carried back with him to his poor hermitage Jesus Christ and his grace. Now he felt himself rich in his retreat; now he was never alone, for Christ took up his abode with him, and manifested himself unto him as he doth not unto the world.

But he was uot content to keep the good news to himself. Like the early disciples, who, when they believed said to one another: "We have found the Christ," he "published to all around what a dear Saviour he had found." Henceforth the good hermit of Livry became a simple and devout missionary, going from house to house, and speaking to the poor peasants of the perfect pardon offered in the gospel to the burdened soul better thau absolution given by the priests.

The doctors of the Sorbonne and the fierce Beda were furious when they found that this little leaven of divine grace—this feeble spark of gospel truth—had permeated the whole mass—had lighted a fire which should girdle the earth until the nations "sitting in the darkness and shadow of death should see the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in his wings."

One day little Pierre ran breathless into his mother's dwelling. "Oh, mother," he exclaimed, "the good old hermit has gone, and we shall never see him any more. I was picking berries in the forest when I heard the tramp of many feet, and saw the dear old man, with his hands bound behind him, walking between two soldiers. People say who were on the spot that they have pulled down his hermitage, choked up the fountain where St. Augustine baptized so many heathen Gauls in the oldeu times, because they believe that the hermit has polluted it with his unholy lips. And I heard them whisper that the poor old man will be thrown into prison, and made a martyr. What is a martyr, mother?"

"One who suffers the death for Christ's sake, my Pierre. The dear Jesus enable him to be faithful; so that he may receive the crown of glory."

And he was faithful. It was determined to burn him alive by a slow fire, in the front of the great cathedral of Notre Dame. All the clergy were convened as to a pompous festival. The great bell tolled solemnly, and the people flocked in crowds to the spectacle. The workman left his bench, the scholar laid aside his books, the poor peasants, who had hung on the words of the good old man, as he preached to them the true evangel of our Lord Jesus Christ, joined the sad procession.

On it came until it reached the gates of the cathedral, the hermit in the midst, with his head and feet bare, and clad in the penitents' robe, worn by those who are condemned by the Inquisition to suffer the torture of fire.

Calm, firm, and collected, he made no reply to the exhortations of the confessors, who presented a crucifix to him, save by declaring that his sole hope was in the pardon of God. The doctors of the Sorbonne in the front rank of the spectators, seeing his constancy and the effect it was producing on the people, cried aloud: "He is damned; they are leading him to hell-fire." The great bell still continued tolling, and its loud strokes, by stunning the ears of the crowd, increased the solemnity of this mournful spectacle.

"Who is he?" asked a man in a leather apron, to one in a student's garb who stood by his side.

"I do not know, I never heard his name. He is called 'The Hermit of Livry.'"

"Is he an evangelical?"

"Truly I should think so. See how like a saint he looks! Aud, besides, Holy Mother Church does not make martyrs of men who allow themselves to be led blindly into its errors. Those who stand up for the truth in these days must be ready to die for the truth's sake."

"Perhaps you are an evangelical yourself, friend; your speech smacks somewhat of heresy, rejoined the artisan.

"Hush! hush! that is a dangerous word to use. It is well for us that the bell clangs so loudly, for a bird of the air might tell the matter. Noel Beda has his spies around in every hole and corner, and methinks that man over there, wrapped in a dark mantle, has his sinister eyes fixed upon us even now. Let us draw back a little. I have no wish to burn for a heretic."

While the two time-servers, fearful of bringing upon themselves the displeasure of their spiritual rulers, moved away to a safer position, the bell was silent, the match was applied to the green wood, and the martyer having replied to the last questions of his enemies, that he was resolved to die in the faith of his Lord Jesus Christ, and trust to him alone for salvation, was burnt by a slow fire according to the tenor of his sentence.

No one ever knew him as any other than "The Hermit of Livry." History does not record his name. But, having gained the victory through the blood of the Lamb. his name is written in the book of life, and to him has been given "that new name which no man knoweth, saving he that receiveth it."—Our Banner.

YOUNG NATURALISTS.

Some boys found some frogs with small fresh water mussels clinging to their hind legs. Puzzled by the phenomenon, they made bold to write to Mr Darwin, asking him if he could throw any light upon the subject. In return they received a very kind answer, thanking them for the very great light which they had thrown on a problem which had long puzzled him; namely, how it came about that mussels, which can neither fly nor walk, can migrate from one pond to another. Let this be an encouragement to all young naturalists not only to observe, but to record their observations.—Field Naturalist.

TEMPERANCE.

HEART BEATS.

Dr. N. B. Richardson, of London, the noted physician, says he was recently able to convey a considerable amount of conviction to an intelligent scholar by a simple experiment. The scholar was singing the praises of the "ruddy bumper," and saying he could not get through the day without it, when Dr. Richardson said to him:

"Will you be good enough to feel my pulse as I stand here?"

He did so. I said, "Count it carefully; what does it say?"

"Your pulse says seventy-four."

I then sat down in a chair and asked him to count it again. He did so, and said, "Your pulse has gone down to seventy."

I then lay down on the lounge, and said:

"Will you take it again?"

He replied, "Why, it is only sixty-four; what an extraordinary thing!"

I then said, "When you lie dowu at night, that is the way nature gives your heart rest. You know nothing about it, but that beating organ is resting to that extent; and if you reckon it up it is a great deal of rest, because in lying down the heart is doing ten strokes less a minute. Multiply that by 60 and it is 600; multiply it by eight hours, and within a fraction it is 5,000 strokes different; and as the heart is throwing six ounces of blood at every stroke, it makes a difference of 30,000 ounces of lifting during the night.

"When I lay down at night without any alcohol, that is the rest my heart gets. But when you take your wine or grog you do not allow that rest, for the influence of alcohol is to increase the number of strokes, and instead of getting this rest you put on something like 15,000 extra strokes, and the result is you rise up very seedy and unfit for the next day's work till you have taken a little more of the 'ruddy bumper,' which you say is the soul of man below."—Scientific American.

A SHOWER OF GOLD.

There is a Chinese tradition which tells that, four thousand years ago, the Emperor of China was much troubled with the wretchedness and destitution of his people, many thousands of whom lived amidst scenes of squalor and brutishness. At length he became most anxious to do something to relieve the "bitter cry" of miserable and outcast China. All at once he recognized that the bad habits of the people had much to do with the bad habitations in which they were existing. The Emperor, by a wise act of authority, with a stroke of his pen closed up every liquor shop in China; and the tradition records that for three days the heavens rained gold. For three days the shower of gold continued, and the people, being sober, were able to gather in the rich harvest of the bountiful skies.

The Rev. Archdeacon Farrar, in referring to this tradition, says: "Considering that there is hardly a pauper in England who has not wasted on intoxicants enough to have secured him long ago a freehold house and a good annuity, I say that if the curse of drink were thoroughly expelled it would rain gold in England, not for three days but for many days."—Alliance News.

TOO REAL TO BE EXAGGERATED.

Mr. Gough says that there are many persons who talk about temperance men as being fanatics. They tell us that we are rabid on the subject of temperance. I ask any reformed drunkard if it is not right to be rabid against an evil that has scorched and blasted, scathed and scarred us till we carry the marks of it to the grave?

Young men sometimes have an idea a young man can sow his wild oats and get over it. You put your hand in the hand of a giant and he crushes it. Still it may be healed, and by and by in some way it may be a useful one; but it is a mutilated hand; its beauty and symmetry have gone forever. We who have passed through this fire know something of its awful scourge; we know something of the terrible struggle to get out of it. I think we ought to be what they call fanatics. They tell us that we exaggerate the evil of drunkenness. Do we? Let me appeal to the intelligent and ask a question. Do we exaggerate the evils of drunkenness?

No, sir, we can not. God never gave a man a mind capable of grasping the extent of the awful evil of drunkenness for time and eternity.

A Murderous Wine-Dealer.—A rich wine-dealer residing in London, recently, on his death-bed, being in great distress of mind, acknowledged to his friends that his agony was occasioned by the nature of the business he had followed for years. He stated that it had beeu his habit to purchase all the sour wines he could, and by making use of lead and other deleterious substances, to restore the wine to palatable taste. He said that he had no doubt he had been the means of destroying hundreds of lives, as he had for some time noticed the injurious effects of his mixtures on those who drank them. He had seen instances of this kind where the unconscious victims of his cupidity, after wasting and declining for years, despite the best medical advice, went to their graves poisoned by the adulterated wines he had sold them. This man died rich. But alas! what a legacy did he leave his children!

LITERATURE.

Irving Classics, Vol. I. Select Essays and sketches by celebrated authors; reprinted from the Irving Library pp. 420. Price 50 cts. John B. Alden, New York.

The best notice of this remarkably cheap, but excellent compilation is to give the list of authors and their essays contained in the volume. A Dissertation upon Roast Pig, by Chas. This is a volume of selections similar to the above, but of a more modern date. This beautiful little volume contains from the pen of Herbert Spencer, "The Coming Slavery" and "Philosophy of Style"; "Numbers" and "Emerson" by Matthew Arnold; "Wendell Phillips," by George William Curtis; "Progress of the Working Classes," by Robert Griffen; "Evidences of Evolution," by T. H. Huxley; "Count Rumford," by John Tyndall; "Public Health," by Edward Orton.

Choice Literature for August in its reprint from English magazines continues the fifth part of the excellent "Notes of a Naturalist's visit to Egypt" by Principal Dawson, which besides the scientific data presents a graphic view of the present desperate condition of Egyptian affairs uuder the rigorous rule of task-masters almost as heartless as the Egyptians themselves in the time of Moses. "Arthur, the Mystic King," "A Gossip about Orchids," "The Great Political Superstition," "The Federal States of the World," and "The Visible Universe—Is it a Physical or Spiritual Production?" are other articles which will find and deserve many readers.

The English Illustrated Magazine for August has an interesting historical article upon William Wykeman, architect, bishop and statesman, who exercised great influence in England during the 14th century. Another illustrated article gives a sketch and specimens of the work of James Ward, artist. Archibald Forbes, the war correspondent, contributes a very graphic description of New Zealand scenery. The world-renowned Sheffield cutlery has an illustrated article. The trade unions are strong among the workmen and have some notice during the article. The following passage is worth preserving:

"Sheffield and trades unionism will probably always be bracketed together with a sinister suggestiveness; but the theories which exploded so disastrously with their own gunpowder twenty years ago, though narrow and unsound, were not new. They had a long. and even distinguished, pedigree, for they were the lineal descendants of the doctrines laid down under the inspiration of those great lords of the Sheffield manor who were good enough to take the infant industry under their care. The idea that the main body of the members of a trade had an inherent right to dictate to all concerned in it the terms upon which the craft should be followed had its inception in the fifteenth century, and was transmitted from generation to generation as a code of honor to be maintained at any risk and in spite of every blandishment. As time rolled on the execution of the trust grew more and more difficult. In exact proportion, indeed, as the gospel of individual liberty progressed, the difficulties of the trades unionists increased. The 'black sheep' multiplied, and speckled the flock at au alarming rate. Invitations to conform to the ordinances of the trade were openly flouted. Polite appeals gave place to heated argument, argument to menace, menace to murder. And then the bubble burst; and the world lifted up its hands and said what wicked men Broadhead, and Crookes, and Hallam, and the other leading actors in the policy of assassination were, which was all painfully true; but there was nothing in the circumstances that was specially new, except that contumacy had for the first time reached such a daring pitch as to invoke the 'extreme penalty' of an unwritten law three or four hundred years old."

If there is one thing on earth that is truly admirable it is to see God's wisdom blessing an inferiority of natural powers, where they have been honestly, truly and zealously cultivated.—Dr. Arnold.

COLLEGE NOTES.

It is said of us all that sometimes we strain our eyes to see the good that is far off, overlooking that which is nearest at hand. This was surely our editorial blunder last week when the name of Wheaton college was omitted from the list of those characterized by sympathy with the temperance reform. There is not only sympathy at Wheaton, there is the most active co-operation. Its President, Rev. C. A. Blanchard, and its professors, among them Prof. Fischer, who with the president has done such valuable serviee on the temperance platform, are all strong advocates of the cause. Its trustees, twenty in number, and among them "our very own" Mrs. L. H. Plumb, (for Wheaton believes not only in co-educating but in co-honoring) are all staunch friends of the temperance reform. Every student who was a legal voter in the town last spring, voted to put prohibition in place of license and succeeded, greatly to the comfort and peace of the town. There is no institution in the country, east or west, which stands out so grandly as the friend of all moral reforms, as the propagandist of so many ideas which should be enshrined in government as well as cherished by the people, as does Wheaton College, and the stupidity which overlooked it on the hunt for good things deserves the castigation which we hereby give ourselves. One thing more, Wheaton College authorities not only forbid students the use of intoxicants, but tobacco, and on a reeent evening when it was the writer's good fortune to stand before these students, a finer, cleaner looking body of young men, it was never her good fortune to see. As to the young women, it goes without saying that their faces were pure, sweet, refined and earnest. —Union Signal.

Wilberforce University, located near Xenia, Ohio, was the first chartered institution in the United States owned and managed by the colored people. After an existence of twenty years its position of usefulness may well be considered to be established. Unfortunately, however, the institution has a larger field for usefulness than endowment. It is, therefore, seeking to raise $10,000 to meet the pressing needs.

The use of tobaeeo is to be absolutely forbidden in all the Government schools of France, on the grounds that it affects injuriously the faculties of the miud and the general ability to study. The regulation is based on the recommendation of a commission of men of scienee.

The Religious Intelligencer says: "The Republican candidate for the Presidency, Hon. James G. Blaine, is a trustee of Bates' College (Free Baptist), at Lewiston, Maine. He has been actively connected with the institution from the first, having helped to prepare its charter, and has always taken much interest iu it."

The average cost per head of education in England is about $4, which would be higher were it not for the voluntary schools, which lessen the expenses of the educational department by about $10,000,000 per year.

President Porter, of Yale College, receives for his services about $4,000 a year. The professors receive about $3,000, and the tutors from $1,200 to $2,500. Harvard tutors are paid $1,000, while most of the professors get $4,000, and some $5,000.

THE CHURCHES.

MISSION WORK IN KENTUCKY.

BEREA, Ky.

It seems to me the Lord has led us, these thirty-seven years, in the simple, undenominational way of the Gospel. There is a desire and persistent effort to "swallow us up"—whelm into a sect. We must now contend STRONGLY for "the old paths" or go under—lose co-laborers.

Outside of our faculty, as laborers in the field, are Bros. John Drew and Mason Jones (white), both in Jackson county, a "hill" or "mountain" county, few colored, but intensely loyal whites—poor and willing to hear.

Bro. Anderson Crawford (colored) lives here in Madison county, near to Berea; preaches frequently round about Berea, and has one appointment in Gerrard county, twenty-eight miles distant—a small church of colored people, with some good members. Bro. Crawford does not, as the other brethren, give his whole time to preaching. He makes some money with his horse and little wagon, plow, and butchering; would give all of his time if we had a support for him.

Bro. Wm. Overstreet lives in Camp Nelson, Jessamine county. He can make money with his stone hammer when he can find a "job"; has a good one now. He has spent most of his time in the three weeks past in a revival effort, four miles distant from Camp Nelson. I preached one sermon to his people after the protracted meeting closed. There is there a small church of good substantial men and women. He will succeed in erecting a small, plain church house as I believe. He is a fine looking colored man, so is Crawford; both slightly colored—mulattoes. I write to show that only those of us here can judge what each needs, and therefore have simply announced that there are four laboring—two all of their time, two part of their time—all would give all if they had a support. JOHN G. FEE.

—The Augusta, Ga., papers contain glowing descriptions of the new Sunday-school rooms built through the munificence of Miss Mary Telfair, of Savannah, and costing $32,000. It is pronounced to be the finest and most complete Sunday-school building in the United States. The dedication exercises, which took place on the last Sunday in June, were of the most interesting character.

—Presbyterians began their work in Kansas in 1853 by establishing a mission among the Indians near where Ottawa now stands. A church was organized by Rev. Joseph Kerr, consisting of eight or ten red men, who all continued faithful unto death. This was the little grain of mustard-seed which grew and expanded until it is now over 300 Presbyterian churches in Kansas itself, with over 12,000 members. During the last fifteen years they have averaged eighteen new church organizations per year.

—The Misses Leitch, of Ceylon, India, supported by the Woman's Board, have a parish which includes 30,000 souls. In this are twenty-six day-schools, of which they have the supervision, besides a large number of Sunday-schools, moonlight religious meetings, and work by the Bible-women.

—B. F. Ousley, a graduate of Fisk University and of Oberlin Theological Seminary, has been ordained as a missionary, and is to join the mission to Umzila's kingdom in Southeast Africa. Mr. Ousley, having been born a slave to Joseph Davis (brother of Jefferson), was, at his master's instance, baptized in infancy, having as godfather a good colored man, who required the child, as he grew up, to read a chapter in the Bible every day.

—The Lutheran Standard speaks in the following terms of affection and esteem of a leader in the Swedish Lutheran church well known for his opposition to the lodge: "Rev. Dr. Hasselquist, although at an age when many would think of retiring from their labors, is yet the President of the Augustana College, Professor in the Theological Seminary, pastor of the Swedish Lutheran church at Rock Island, the chief editor of the weekly Augustana, Chairman of the Education Committee and many other things. With no small effort, the friends have suceeeded in getting him off to Colorado, avowedly to give him rest, but that he will rest is quite another thing. Where he hears of his Swedish countrymen without the gospel, there he will go, and his presence and words for Christ are weighty and most blessed."

—The Norwegian Missions in the interior of Madagascar have had a prosperous year. Their schools show a gain of 20,000 pupils, the total uumber being 33,642, with an average attendance of 30,000. The churches have gained 1,111 by baptism, besides 136 accessories from the London Mission, thus returning a total increase of 1,247. At Betafo, the oldest of the fifteen stations, 466 persons have been baptized. Three native-born pastors have been ordained.

—Under the preaching of Rev. Dr. Hoyte there has been a great revival in Pensacola, Florida. More than one hundred persons have been converted. Thirty-six persons have been added to the Presbyterian church.

—Eighty years ago William Cary wrote from Bengal: "The people here hate the very name of Christ and will not listen when his name is mentioned." Now a missionary writes that the books most in demand there are such as bear conspicuously the name of Christ. His name has become the great attraction and great power in missionary work there.

—The Christian Union says: "An Inter-Ecclesiastic Congress, composed of clergymen from different Protestant denominations, will be held in New Haven in May, 1885. This movement took form June 18th, at Pittsfield, Mass , a meeting being held in response to a circular issued by the clergymen of that place. A committee, composed of Dr. J. H. Seelye, Rt. Rev. Thomas M. Clark, D.D., and Joseph Anderson, of Waterbury, reported recommendations, which were adopted, to the effect that the new organization should be 'The American Congress of Churches,' and its object to promote Christian union and advance the kingdom of God by the free discussion of the great religious, moral, social questions of the time, and that it should assemble at intervals of two years. The movement is regarded as significant as showing that the differences in doctrinal points, which formerly served as complete barriers between the different denominations, have been to a great extent removed by a larger toleration and more united spirit in working to promote the essentials of Christian faith."

—The eyes of the whole civilized world are now resting upon the Dark Continent. Five railroads are projected into its very heart; these are backed by the energy and capital of as many Christian nations. They carry with them the paraphernalia of commerce, arts, science, literature, modern civilization. What do these things mean? Are they not the fundamental preparation for stupendous moral and spiritual changes in this country, and a clear indication of their speedy coming? The weird cry of the advance guard of the followers of El Mahdi, "I am coming, be ready," is doubtless the herald of a voice beyond their ken. Does it not seem as though not the El Mahdi, but the real Prophet and King, even Jesus, is proclaiming aloud in the ears of all Christian nations. in regard to the Soudan and all Africa, "I am coming, be ready"? Is it not significant that the most prominent arbitrator in the Soudan, General Gordon, is himself an eminent type of the character which Christianity produces, and in all attributes of manliness notably in contrast with what the inhabitants have been accustomed to see? Doubtless into many hearts the seed of divine truth will be cast incidentally in the midst of these stirring events, which may germinate and be the first fruits of a glorious harvest.—Woman's Work for Woman.

—Bro. J. D. Nutting, pastor of the Congregational church in Cortland, Ohio, has purchased a set of temperance charts and will give lectures on that subject during the coming season.

—The Evangelical Christians of India have sent an urgent request to Messrs. Moody and Sankey to visit India. The Irish Protestants have likewise sent them a monster petition to conduct evangelical services throughout Ireland. The petitioners declare that the country is ripe for such a movement.

—The Waldensian mission in Italy reports about 500 converts last year, chiefly from the Roman church.

—At the sixtieth anniversary of the American Sunday-school Union, recently held in Baltimore, Md., the following summary was given of mission work from March 1st, 1883, to March 1st, 1884: Schools organized (new), 1,979; teachers in them, 8,681; scholars in them, 71,624; schools aided (not before reported), 1,503; teachers in them, 12,585; scholars in them, 123,590; scoools aided (previously reported), 2,902; teachers in them, 17,589; scholars in them, 171,158; Bibles distributed, 6,239; Testaments distributed, 9,835; family visits, 31,844: addresses delivered, 8,613. A large number of churches are reported as the outgrowth of these pioncer schools. In the South much attention is given to the spiritual wants of the colored people.

—The ladies of the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, recently sent twenty trunks to home missions, each having a suit for a missionary, a dress, comfortable, and shawl for the wife, linen and household articles, and twenty new, valuable volumes, aggregating $3,885.54.

THE

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform leeturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

The bad water, the scarcity and class of provisions, and the terrible heat, is causing sickness among the poor. I have never known Tampico so dull, nor have I ever seen so much suffering. All business is paralyzed, and the principal topic of conversation is the hard times.

The Government officials are poorly paid; the soldiers worse; the railroad, which employed so many, has been completed to such a distance that its influence is not felt in the city; the graveyard reputation that the Gulf ports have in the United States, and the decreased demand of foreign productions, have cut us off almost entirely from the world by water; vegetation is withered and dying; cattle dying from starvation; and the farmers very low spirited; the country flooded with a depreciated currency which many will not receive; and, lately, added to this, a most extortionate revenue imposed by the Government on almost everything that represents a value of more than twelve and a half cents. The hats, clothing, shoes, suspenders, socks, plates, cups and saucers, tumblers, knives and forks, kitchen utensils, sewing machines, thimbles, scissors, pens, ink and paper—almost everything that enters as a necessity into the business and callings of life are stamped. The stores look more like an exposition of revenue stamps than establishments of commerce, and as if everyone was trying to excel his neighbor. Many rebelled and closed their establishments, but they were fined; they held indignation meetings and protested, and for a time the outlook was critical; but they had to pay, all of which the consumer has ultimately to bear. The excuse is that there is no money to meet the expenses of the Government, at the same time the President has bought and is buying valuable haciendas in different parts of the Republic, as also in many places large and well furnished houses. In this place no one whispers their thoughts, that the present occupant of the palace and his clique have given themselves credit for about seventeen millions from the public funds. Yet the treasury is empty, and the Mexican Congress two weeks ago invested the President with authority to effect a loan for thirty millions. These are some of the causes that make times hard with us, and probably if the election for President were not so near, and the candidate any other than the people's beloved, Gen. Diaz, peace could not be maintained. Last month he ran a narrow escape. He went down the Vera Cruz railroad with a party on a hunting expedition. On their return an engine was sent in advance to guard against any mishap. After it had passed some desperadoes near a curve and in a defile heaped a pile of rocks on the track to wreck the train, but fortunately it was discovered in time to prevent the anticipated result and prepare the party for their defence. Highway robberies and murders are common in all the northern part of the country, and particularly along the completed and constructing lines of railroad. On our railroad from this point, the first large contractor's company of railroad construction had their camp attacked by a heavily armed band, with picks, drills, and pack mules, and after a few rounds were in possession of the safes, and carried off as spoil about twelve thousand silver dollars.

About two months ago the authorities here were notified by telegraph that in the republic there was a regular organized band of robbers called La mano negra, the black hand, and that a party had gone in the direction of Tampico. At every corner and in every house La mano negra was discussed, causing no little stir and great fear, and to heighten the excitement there were a few robberies, but of little consequence, and fearful murdering just above the city on the Panuco river. A small canoe was coming to Tampico with some money, and followed by another was attacked, three were killed outright and others badly hacked with machetes. The capture of one of the assassins proved that it was not La mano negra, but algunos vecinos, some neighbors, and was soon forgotten.—Correspondence Associate Ref. Presbyterian.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.
In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."
The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

HINTS FOR WARM WEATHER COOKING.

A cotemporary asks: "What shall we eat and what shall we drink?" This seems to assume double importance in warm weather, from the trouble it takes to prepare meals in a broiling kitchen on a 90-degree day. I think Rev. Antoinette Brown Blackwell is not far wrong when she styles the cooking stove and sewing machine "the two Molochs on which many of our American women are sacrificed." It is the summer season in particular that the kitchen work "tells" on the women of only average strength.

What shall we do to lessen its evils? One way which helps many is to do up as much of the day's cooking in the cool of the morning as is possible. Run through your mind as well as you can the three meals to be prepared when you first arise. Settle it well before you begin just how the kitchen fire shall be utilized. The big baking fire will boil various vegetables and the meat, which take long to cook and make the big pudding which may be set aside to eat cold at supper. Where a hearty meal must be had at night, double the supply in the dinner kettles and warm up the remaining portion for a substantial supper dish. A big platter of the dinner stew set on cold will greatly lessen the demand for your "breadstuff," which is so much harder to prepare. Everything which you can prepare in the early morning seems "twice done." It gives such a restful feeling as you go about the day's work to think that the last meal of the day is provided for; that time when the "last straws" seem to be piling on your shoulders, and when the anxious worry, "What shall we have for supper?" seems to be the very climax. I know the old experienced housekeeper will say, 'Why, that is the way we always do." Of course it is. I am only writing for the young and inexperienced ones.

I have wondered if it was not a mere matter of fancy and habit that we think a dish of cold vegetables unsuited for the table. Is not a nicely prepared dish set away and allowed to get as cold as possible in the cellar, a very nice thing to set on the supper table? We must have our cucumbers and sliced tomatoes fresh from the ice if we can; why not a dish of cold lima beans, new potatoes, string beans and peas? After a little trial should we not find them very appetizing in hot weather, and a great saving on baked flour in its many forms? Surely they would be quite as wholesome as the stereotyped bread and butter which usually makes the basis of the supper—whatever other concomitants there are. This is only a theory with me, but I mean to experiment on it in a small way. If I lived on a farm I think I should try and get up a sentiment in its favor on a large scale. I knew a merchant who was so addicted to this habit that his wife always set on a plate of cold boiled potatoes for his supper, whatever else might be on the table. I believe more "cold victuals" in hot weather would be a gain to all the household.—Christian at Work.

POISONOUS COFFEE.

Most people think if they buy coffee in the berry, roast and grind it at home, they are sure of having obtained a healthy article—the Simon pure Java. But it may be they have been both deceived and poisoned. In Brooklyn the health inspectors recently found several well-known coffee dealers who were in the habit of doctoring cheap Central American coffee so as to make it resemble and sell for the true Java. This was accomplished by polishing the coffee berries in rotating cylinders, with the addition of such stuffs as chromate of lead, Silesian blue, yellow ocher, Venetian red, drop black, burnt umber, charcoal, soapstone, chalk, and Prussian blue. Some of these substances contain lead, copper and arsenic, and when the doctored coffee was subjected to chemical test these metals were found in poisonous quantities. The Health Board promptly ordered the discontinuance of this mode of adulteration, and the enterprising dealers will now have to move across the river into New Jersey or some other State where their nefarious traffic may be conducted without interference of the authorities.

Visiting a farm a few years ago, some excellent coffee upon the table disclosed the presence of cream. This surprised me, for I knew the cows were dry, and there were no very near neighbors. I asked and the answer was, "Oh, that is canned milk." Since then, I have done the same way two seasons, and I intend to do so again soon. When the milk is brought in and strained, put it on to boil in a steamer, or pail set into a kettle of boiling water. As soon as it reaches the boiling point and begins to bubble, pour into glass jars already prepared and heated, and screw up immediately. Keep it where it will not freeze, and when needed it is ready for use.—Orange Co. Farmer.

The best butter color is a pailful of corn meal mush, fed warm once a day, the corn to be of the yellow variety. It will increase the milk and butter as well as give a good color.

—Green tomatoes fried, are preferred by some people to the egg-plant, and it may well take its place; cut the outer slices off, and then cut the inner part in slices about half an inch thick, roll them in flour, and fry in butter; sprinkle pepper and salt on them. This may be used as an entree or a garnish with meat of any kind.

—New-potato pie is a novelty. Grate a teacupful of potato; to this quantity allow one quart of sweet milk; let the milk come to a boil, then stir in the grated potato; when cool add three well-beaten eggs, sugar, and flavoring to suit the taste; nutmeg or cinnamon are the most suitable. Bake with under crust only, and eat while fresh.

—A receipt for tomato pie is contributed by a Southern reader: Peel and slice enough green tomatoes to fill one pie; to this allow four tablespoonfuls of vinegar, one of butter, and three and a half of sugar, flavor with nutmeg, bake with two crusts very slowly. If you choose you may stew the tomatoes first, and then there is no danger of the pie being too juicy.

I can recommend it as convenient, palatable, and easy of digestion." (Remember the name, COLDEN'S—take no other.) Of druggists.

"SCRIP and STAFF."

BY H. M. HUGUNIN.

This new and attractive volume is now ready. It is composed of thirty nine chapters on nearly as many topics. Neatly bound in cloth with gilt stamp. Price 60 cents.

The Chicago Evening Journal of May 3, says:

The author of this little volume, for many years a working editor of the EVENING JOURNAL, has here presented us with a variety of topics of a religious character. Among the number we note "The Evils of the Sunday Newspaper," "The Divine Sanction of Church Organizations," "The Good Work and Government of Sunday-Schools," "The Bible in our Public Schools," "Fallacies of the 'Evolution Theory,'" "Chronology—The Age of the World," and "Labor and Laborers." Mr. Hugunin writes as an independent thinker, untrammeled by denominational alignments. His style, however, is marked by the vigor of earnestness and sincerity, and with these characteristics, and with a close adherence to Bible Christianity, his book becomes a suggestive aid to evangelical workers. In discussing the topics above named, as in others, he deals consistently with questions of public interest and great importance in the reform of individual and social evils.

IN BRIEF.

The Journal des Arts states that during the last seven years New Yorkers have paid almost $12,000,000 for French paintings, the sums varying from $630,000, in 1878, to $1 997,000, in 1882.

The treaty recently negotiated with King John, of Abyssinia, has been officially published. In it King John binds himself to abolish slavery and the slave trade within his dominions.

Some capitalists are negotiating for the purchase of a large tract of land in Utah —between one and two hundred thousand acres, as is stated—to be applied to the purpose of founding a self-supporting Irish colony.

Two Danes have undertaken the task of paddling, in a skin-covered canoe, from Alaska to San Francisco, a distance of about two thousand five hundred miles. The canoe is nineteen feet long, and covered with the skin of sea lions.

The North Chicago Rolling Mills report 5,800 men on their pay-rolls, which, with their families, constitute a third-class city. We are glad to learn that the establishment has been doing a good and increasing business during the past year the gross earnings amounting to $7,900,000.

The Mayor of Oakland has ordered the revival of the old custom of ringing the curfew bell at nine o'clock every evening, with responses from all the bells on the engine-houses, and all the police are ordered to arrest all boys under fifteen years of age that are in the streets after that hour, and lock them up. "The city is interested to a certain extent in every boy living within its limits," he says, "and therefore the city must take cognizance, when necessary, of every boy's proneness publicly to form idle and vicious habits, and the aid of the law should be invoked as far as possible, to compel every boy to eschew all practices that would result in making him a bad citizen."

The effect that the disappearance of forest has upon climate receives new illustration every day. In Italy, the clearing of the Apennines is believed to have seriously changed the climate of the Po Valley, and now the African sirocco, never known to the armies of ancient Rome, breathes its hot, blighting breath over the right bank of the river in the territory of Parma. The removal of the pine forests near Ravenna induced the same desolating wind; and the same destruction of the old forests of Vosges and of the Cevennes has had like deteriorating influences upon the climate. In Egypt, where during the French occupation in 1798, not a drop of rain fell for sixteen months, and where from time immemorial the country has been a rainless bed of sand, Mohammed Ali, by planting his millions of fig and orange trees, has seen his country blessed with an annual rainfall of several inches.

"What is Tammany Hall?" is a frequent inquiry. It was originally the Columbian Order, or Society of St. Tammany, and was founded in New York in 1790, and is therefore co-existent with the government. Admission is obtained by election, which requires nearly a unanimous vote. "The registry of members, the proceedings, and even the organization of the society is as secret as that of any other secret club, and it is to this that the Indian characteristics, titles, regalia, and customs apply. It has Indian names for all officers but those of Scribe and Treasurer, for which there were no Indian equavalents. From 1790 to 1820–4 this society was all there was of Tammany Hall. In 1824 the society entered actively and openly upon politics in favor of Gen. Jackson, and has ever since been in the field as a factor of no little influence in local and State affairs.

The Pike's Peak Railway, which will be in operation next year, will be the most notable piece of track in the world. It will mount 2,000 feet higher than the Lima and Oroya Railway in Peru. It is now in operation to a point over 12,000 feet above the sea level. The entire thirty miles of its length will be a succession of complicated curves and grades, with no piece of straight track longer than 300 feet. The maximum grade will be 316 feet to the mile, and the average grade 270 feet. The line will abound in curves from 500 to 1,000 feet long, in which the radius changes every chain.—Scientific American.

—Three children were burned to death in a barn near Circleville, O., Tuesday. They went to the barn to smoke and set fire to the structure.

—At Swit's City, Ind., George Rankin, aged 19, accidentally shot his brother, 13 years old. George then shot himself through the breast and died Monday, while his mother's death is momentarily expected.

—The British ship Deerfield, from Havana, with yellow fever aboard, is at the mouth of the Mississippi, and has been warned by the New Orleans authorities that if she proceeds up the river she will be quarantined for forty days.

—The river boat Mamie Glass exploded her boiler at Madison, Ind., instantly killing one man, drowning another, and blowing the pilot-house and pilot in the air, the latter, however, escaping slightly injured.

—A discharged employe of the Key City Furniture Factory at Dubuque was arrested Wednesday for tampering with the boiler, for the purpose of causing an explosion.

—Several head of cattle infected with Texas fever, were killed by the authorities Friday, at Clinton, Ill.

—The Old Beach street theater building at Boston, occupied by three manufacturing firms, was destroyed by fire early Wednesday morning, two firemen perishing in the flames. The financial loss is about $70,000.

—A report of organization of the Hicks' Humane Live Stock Car Company, of Chicago, was filed Tuesday, at Springfield. The vehicle is especially constructed for the transportation of stock, and the company intends to operate the cars on all roads in the United States and Canada.

—The Southern Pacific Railroad bridge over the Colorado River at Yuma was opened for traffic Tuesday, and through trains from San Francisco to New Orleans will be resumed.

—Thomas Henchy, an escaped lunatic, attacked Julius Perkins and John Colvin about two miles west of Springfield, Ill., with a jackknife, and attempted to cut their throats. Coming on the men unawares he nearly succeeded in accomplishing his mad purpose.

—A band of masked men surrounded a house in Lewis County, Tenn., Sunday, the 10th inst., wherein a Mormon meeting was being held. Six of the Mormons and one of the raiders were killed, and the wife of one of the former was painfully wounded.

—Governor Murray, of Utah, has asked that troops be used to drive back from San Juan County, Utes from Colorado, who have killed two men, burned and destroyed property, and threaten other outrages. All the whites in the valley have been expelled by the maerauding Indians.

—A two-year-old child of Jacob Thompson was killed on the track near Jerseyville, Ill., Friday. The father and mother rushed at the same moment to rescue the little one, but too late, the engine beheading it and hurling the body so that it struck the mother. A search for the child's head proved fruitless.

—Fire broke out in Hinton & Cole's saw-mill in Fulton, a section of Cincinnati, Friday afternoon, and the explosion of the boiler sent burning brands in all directions, resulting in a conflagration which destroyed ten frame houses, the cattle sheds of the Little Miami Road, the tracks of the latter, and a quantity of lumber, the total loss reaching $80,000. There were some very narrow escapes from death and five firemen were overcome by the heat.

—The Wall Street (New York) Bank failed to open its doors Monday morning, the directors deciding that justice to all parties demanded such action. The cashier, John P. Dickinson, is charged with causing the collapse by lending money too freely on insufficient collaterals. The bank paid a clearing house debt of $28,000, and the cashier's shortage is placed at $200,000. The feeling is that depositors must be paid in full, and statements are made that sufficient money will be advanced to enable the concern to resume business to-day.

—Near Sycamore, Ill., Wednesday afternoon, Louis Taylor, a hired man, shot and killed Florence Mitchell, 17 years old, and then set fire to her clothing. The murderer went to a creek near by, plunged in, and shot himself through the heart. The theory is that he made improper advances, was repulsed, and in his rage killed the girl, and then, fearing lynching, he committed suicide.

—Near Iowa City, Iowa, Wednesday, two brewers were on trial for violating the liquor law, when a mob, inflamed by whisky, seized the prosecuting attorney, stripped him of his clothing, and tarred and feathered him. A constable who interfered was seriously cut. The rioters then went to Iowa City, awed the town officers, and attempted to kill the principal prosecuting witness and his brother. The ringleaders are known, and warrants have been issued for their arrest.

—In the Frankfort (Ky.) Penitentiary, Thursday, a prisoner received permission to place a bundle for mailing outside the gate, and while the guard was attending to him he was struck from behind by a bottle in the hands of another convict. A rush was made for the arms by other prisoners in the plot, and a battle resulted, one of the convicts being severely wounded, and two of the prison officers badly hurt. Three convicts escaped, and a posse is hunting them. The engine bell was rung for help from the citizens, and for a time the wildest excitement prevailed.

—The plan of the expedition for the relief of General Gordon has been settled by the War Office. The expedition will leave Wady Halfa in the third week in September, in detachments, and will concentrate at Hannek, from which point it will ascend the Meraweh, where it is expected to open communication with General Gordon for a simultaneous move on Berber.

—Henry M. Stanley, the African explorer, who is now in this city, declares that the Congo Free State will soon be recognized by the whole world. The State proposes to give open commerce to all nations, and expects to become a great federation of native chiefs under the control of European and American commissions. Mr. Stanley states that he will shortly visit London and convert the English, who now stand alone in opposition to his projects. He praised De Brazza, the French explorer, who, he said, was destined to render great service to France.

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS.

The New Reform Story, by E. E. Flagg, author of the popular book, HOLDEN WITH CORDS, will begin in the next number of the Cynosure. Be sure to get the first number. The talented author writes with a consecrated pen and a devotion to the reform that will make her works a lasting memorial to the truth.

SEND FOR THE CYNOSURE THIS WEEK.

Mr. Blaine's advice to the young men of Bowdoin College is worth remembering, whether the eminent candidate practices it or not. He had three words of advice especially for those who were about to engage in their life work, and would have to combat with differences of opinion on almost all questions. First, there is always a right side. Be sure to take that side. Second, Be one of the first to take the right side; and third, as soon as you have taken the right side, open your mouth. We wish to advise Mr. Blaine and all his supporters to remember this good counsel when confronted with the lodge.

"Dare to be a Daniel, dare to stand alone, Dare to have a purpose true, dare to make it known."

The threatened collapse of the U. S. Post-office and Custom House building in Chicago brings vividly to mind the events of ten years ago when the corner-stone was laid amid a great Masonic parade. The petitions of Anti-masons robbed the lodge of part of the honors of that day; but Masonry was in control, at least until the architect Rankin was superseded, and the result of Masonic work has been displaying itself ever since in rotten stone, sinking foundations, crumbling piers, and walls out of plumb so that the heads of our citizens are likely to be broken with falling stones from the cornice. The social or political structure founded on the falsehoods of the lodge has a striking illustration in the history of this lodge-blessed government building.

The World's Convention of the Young Men's Christian Associations at the German capital last week was a meeting of much importance since it attracted some sixty Americans to Berlin, among them some of our most devoted Christians from the pulpit and pew. H. Thane Miller of Cincinnati; Dr. James H. Brookes of St. Louis, editor of the Truth; Dr. Charles Thompson of Kansas City, former editor of the Interior; Gen. O. O. Howard of Omaha; and Dr. A. J. Gordon of Boston were among the American delegates; and their presence indicates that the discussions were of that earnest, practical character as will result in good to the churches of both continents.

The thirtieth anniversary of the foundation of the Republican party, celebrated at Strong, Maine, on the 20th, which was graced by the presence of Blaine, Hamlin and other notables. It is claimed that on the 8th of Aug. 1854, a county convention has held in the place, which organized by the name "Republican party." It is said that on the February previous a Republican meeting had been held in Ripon, Wis. Michigan and Vermont held State Republican conventions, it is claimed in July of the same year; and the biographers of Charles Sumner affirm that the Republican party was inaugurated at Worcester by some of the best blood of Massachusetts. Old Thomas Heywood"s distich in 1635:

"Seven cities warr'd for Homer dead,
Who living had no roofe to shrowd his head:"

or as an anonymous writer has improved it—

"Through which the living Homer begged his bread," not inaptly describes the history of this party. Nobody would care for an anniversary if the Republican party was now, as in 1854, the joke of the streets.

Last Sabbath a committee, appointed by a meeting of prominent members of the Chicago Avenue Grace Methodist and New England churches, waited upon the police authorities and had a circus suppressed which was performing in the vicinity of the churches. On the same day one Monday-morning daily reports a pic-nic of the "Young Men's Democratic Club" with races and games, the pic-nic of a company of "Hibernian Rifles," the meeting of the 57th Regiment to arrange for a soldiers' and sailors' reunion, a procession, concert and theatrical performance by the annual reunion of the Bohemian Gymnastic Association, the "usual" Sunday afternoon gathering of the Socialists to hear denunciations of every prosperous business enterprise in the country, and how many more things of the same kind who can tell? Under the Masonic administration of Carter Harrison the license of the lodge has been added to that of the saloon, and Chicago presents a shameful spectacle of a Sabbath-breaking city.

Butler's letter to his constituents appeared last week Tuesday, a document of remarkable length (one half longer than Blaine's) but one that will be read. If Butler is a demagogue no one will deny his ability, nor that his address to his constituents will gain him voters among the discontented spirits that hover about the borders of great parties, or that have grievances, real or imaginary, against employers. He is severe on the Republican party and particularly so on the Democrats, and the document will be remembered as one of the remarkable features of this campaign. Cleveland's letter of acceptance followed next day—not long, but brevity almost its only merit. Without pointedly discussing the merits of his platform, he deals only in generalities that do not even glitter. Mr. Hendricks sent out his letter the day after of hardly a doven lines, accepting the nomination on the ground of the unanimity of the convention in tendering it. The warmth of partizanship is wanting in both these documents, and the general acceptance of the story of Cleveland's immoralities is cooling the zeal of thousands in his party.

Rev. W. F. Crafts of New York has been preaching in the First Congregational church of this city on the Sabbath. The sixth discourse has been given to large audiences, and with extended notices from the daily press, some of the sermons being printed in full. Mr. Crafts places Chicago, San Francisco, St. Louis, New Orleans and Cincinnati in the class of cities which have been degraded to the "continental Sunday;" while Philadelphia, New York, Boston, Baltimore and Charleston were mentioned as examples of the value of earnest, Christian agitation of the subject. The day in Chicago is now much like the New York Sunday in 1857, when the Sabbath committee was formed in that city, and by persistent effort every Sunday theatre has been closed and all irreligious observances stopped. In Toronto the day is observed by stores of all kinds, and three through trains caused by American competition are the limit of the railway business. In London, the metropolis of the world, there are no Sunday papers and no Sunday mails. Mr. Crafts urges that the 9,000,000 children now in the Sabbath schools of this country be properly instructed upon the observance of the holy day, as a pivot upon which to turn back our nation from the godless condition of a "continental Sunday" which now threatens us.

LET US HAVE A NEW PARTY.

BY GEN. J. W. PHELPS.

The only real American government that we have had, ended with the administration of John Adams. Since then the political current has swept on with growing force towards European ideas, habits, and institutions. Thomas Jefferson's idea of democracy was European, Jacobinical, imperial, not American. He taught people their rights but never their duties. The American idea is to put duty first, rights afterwards.

With the increase of immigration to our shores, European instincts and tendencies have increased. The people as a mass gravitate more towards European habits and propensities, and they care and know less of American institutions.

Slavery and Freemasonry are both Old World institutions which England left us as a legacy. They have both been cultivated by Jeffersonian, Jacobinical politicans, who have led the democracy, and especially the Jacobinical element of it, to sustain them. There were never two institutions more aristocratic and less democratic than slavery and the SECRET LODGE, and never were there greater aristocrats than our Ku-Klux slave-holders; yet they have been sustained by our Europeanized democracy.

George Washington and John Adams were opposed to both slavery and secret societies; Washington virtually renounced them both among the latter acts of his life, and thus set an example which the democracy have not followed. On the contrary, the whole tendency of American politics is to gravitate away from American institutions.

The SECRET LODGE is not an American institution. It is hoar with the iniquities of the Old World; yet aided by an Europeanized democracy, it fills our offices with its supporters, and shapes our destiny, as slavery has done.

There was nothing done during the war of the rebellion to counteract this tendency. A weak, slack administration aggravated it rather. The fires of war give shape to a nation's destiny; but the war of our rebellion gave shape to nothing American. The SECRET LODGE was allowed to shape things as it pleased to its own uses. It made use of the war as it does of corner-stones, and of monuments, such as Cleopatra's Needle, and the Statue of Liberty lighting Bedloe's Island, to magnify itself, not to serve American institutions.

The SECRET LODGE deceives when it talks about "good men," as slavery did when it talked of "sound men." The only use that it makes of good men is to bait its hook with them; and all that real, good men can do on that hook is to wiggle in the spasems of wounded virtue, and thus serve better the purpose of catching the gullible. The goodness of the man who is willing to serve the SECRET LODGE, is of a very dubious character. What better men in office were there ever, than Madison, John Quincy Adams, Harrison, Taylor, Lincoln, so far as their mere personal character and intentions were concerned; but what else have they done than to float on the strong current that has been sweeping on since the days of Jefferson, and with more than redoubled velocity since Jackson's time towards the European ideas of democracy which inevitably flow into the broad sea of Napoleonism?

The SECRET LODGE is a Napoleonic political party, which puts on the Pharisaic air of morality and religion in order the better to conceal its moral rottenness. It has perverted American institutions in order to serve its own fixed purposes of aggrandizement and power. It has struck a taint of moral corruption to the very heart of American society, perverting the pulpit, controlling the press, and destroying business faith and credit.

The only way to oppose the farther progress of this secret political party and save American institutions from utter ruin, is to organize an open American party against it; a party that would nominate that good and great man, John Adams, to a second term of office if he were living. We must brave the disgusting, hypocritical odium that a European, Jacobinical democracy have cast upon the only purely American administration of the government that we have ever had, and do it speedily, or the restoration of American institutions will be an impossibility. To look to an Europeanized democracy for that purpose, would be like looking to the party of a Davis, a Breckenridge, a Toombs to abolish slavery. To look to the Democratic party for the hero that is to lead us to reform, is an absurdity; it has led to slavery; it has led to Ku-Kluxism; it has led to Mormonism; it has led to Copiahisms, and it can never lead to anything else than such isms. It is hypocritical; pretending to love the dear people, while serving only itself. It is pervaded and permeated by Freemasonry, which, in its legion shapes of evil, crawls into every thing, even into swine. Let us have an open, breezy, sunshiny party, in which American manhood can grow and thrive.

In order to show how completely the American press is bound and shackled by the power of this foreign institution, this SECRET LODGE, this dark, mazy channel for bribery and corruptions of all kinds, we may say that there is probably not one daily paper, nor even one single mere sect paper of the United States that could be induced to print this article, except by the love of much money. Yet is there anything in it that a free press ought not to publish? On the contrary, is there not much in it to excite the alarm and concern of every lover of the Republic when he learns that the general press is not free to publish it?

Let us have a party that will unshackle the press, give freedom to speech, and which will resent the "alien and sedition" laws of the SECRET LODGE, laws which make aliens of American citizens; and threaten them with violence, infamy and death for sedition against its power. The pretended statesman whose lips are closed and whose eyes see not in the face of the SECRET LODGE so full of dangers to the Republic, is like the figure-head of some stately ship, which, as it looks out over the storm, seems grand and serene with the conscious dignity of giving direction and safety to the company that follows its lead.

Let us have a new party; one not only headed by a "good man," but one for which good men can vote.

Brattleboro, Vt.

THE MASONIC "NEW BIRTH."

BY GEO. THOMPSON.

What! do Masons believe in being "born again," as Christ said to the old Jewish Rabbi, all must be? No, and yes. No, i. e., they do not mean the "new birth" of the Bible—this is not required—nor do most of them know anything about it. But yes, i. e., they call it the new birth. And what they mean by it they clearly explain in their books.

Masons in Protestant countries are fond of using Bible terms and figures, while they distort and pervert the meaning.

Well, what do they mean by the "New birth," in Masonic phrase? In the "Manual of the Lodge" Mackey says of the applicant for admission, as he stands without, blindfolded: "Here he stands without our portals, on the threshold of the new Masonic life, in darkness, helplessness and ignorance. Having been wandering amid the errors, and covered over with the pollutions of the outer, or profane world, he comes enquiringly to our doors SEEKING THE NEW BIRTH, and asking a withdrawal of the vail which conceals divine truth from his uninitiated sight." And the "Beauty of Masonry, will be fully revealed to him, only when the NEW BIRTH has been completely accomplished."

This, of course, implies that none who apply have been "born again" until they have been "initiated."

How must our ministers and church members feel as they stand there, classed with thieves, drunkards, liquor-sellers, infidels, Jews, Mohammedans, pagans and idolaters, and hear the master of ceremonies say, "You are covered over with the pollutions of the outer and profane world and must be born again before you can be admitted to the privileges and benefits of the lodge!" Should they remonstrate, and say, "I was born again" at such a time, and in such a place, and have been living the new life so many years. I feel that I am a "new creature in Christ Jesus." He would be answered, "My dear sir, all that goes for nothing in this Institution. You must be 'born again' after our manner or you cannot enter." Poor man! How humiliating! How degrading from his high position as a Christian!

Instead of being taught to trust in Christ and in obedience to his will for salvation and eternal life, they are taught at the outset, in the first degree to trust in the "gavel" (a small wooden mallet used by the Master in conducting the ceremonies), and he is exhorted to "use it for the more noble and glorious purpose of divesting our hearts and consciences of all the vices and superfluities of life, thereby fitting us, as living stones of that spiritual building, that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

But what is meant by this trust in the gavel? Simply this: The gavel is the symbol of authority. The Master knocks with it on the table to call attention, and in giving his orders. To trust in the gavel then, is to submit one's self without questioning, to all the requirements—the forms, and absurd ceremonies—the fearful oaths and mummeries, and blasphemies that are practiced in a Masonic lodge, to "conceal and never reveal any of the secrets or doings, on pain of a fearful death."

And the applicant is assured that if he will faithfully do this, he thereby is "born again," and will be, in heart and life, "divested of all the vices and superfluities, and be fitted for heaven!"

He must submit to be stripped to the shirt, be dressed in an old pair of drawers, the left leg, arm and breast made bare, while a rope is put around his neck, and, blindfolded, be led about, and put through a long process of questionings and instructions, be taught and accept the fearful oaths, threatened with frightful punishment if he ever violates them! And by "keeping his jewel" of secrecy, paying his dues, and attending to all the requirements of the order, he is taught (Mackey's Lexicon) that "by strict obedience to the obligations and precepts of the fraternity, he is "free from sin," and fitted for the lodge above!

Such are the teachings of Masonry, and such the "New birth" of the lodge! Christ, and faith in him are entirely excluded, and the whole reliance is on an observance of the rules and requirements of the system. But this implies not only many foolish things, but great enormities:

(1) Complete secrecy of all the doings of the lodge.

(2) A complete yielding of private judgment.

(3) Obedience to all signs and summons. If a criminal gives the "sign of distress," he must be assisted and hidden, or rescued from justice if possible.

(4) The crimes of a brother Mason must be concealed except "murder and treason," and they at option, up to the seventh degree, from that onward "not excepted."

(5) He must not cheat or defraud any brother Master Mason, or strike one, or violate the chastity of a Master Mason's wife, mother, sister or daughter.

(6) He must never speak the sacred name of Masonry, "Mah-hah-bone," "except upon the five points of fellowship, and then only in low breath."

(7) He must swear to submit to all the fearful penalties of the system, if in any way he violates any of the rules; all this, and more is implied in trusting in the gavel for a new heart and an upright life. Those who faithfully comply, have experienced the Masonic "new birth," and those who do not, are still "in the gall of bitterness, and bonds of iniquity." What poor creatures are all outsiders!"

But what does this "new birth" accomplish for those who experience it? Does it reform the liar, the profane, the Sabbath breaker, the drunkard, the libertine, the defrauder, the thief, the murderer, the liquor seller, the blasphemer, etc.? Are they saved from their vices? Are they better men, husbands, citizens, neighbors, magistrates, rulers? No, a thousand times NO! In most, if not all cases, they are made vastly worse. There is nothing in the whole system, from beginning to end, at all calculated to reform, to elevate, to lead to a hatred of sin, and break the power of evil in heart and life.

And no matter how a member may live—how vile his character may be—when he comes to die, he is spoken of as having been translated to the "Grand Lodge above," where he is in a state of happiness! And this, though his last breath was in oaths and curses. Such cases we have known.

How superlatively absurd, in view of such facts, then is talk about "New birth!" and "engaged in the construction of a spiritual temple in the heart, pure and spotless, where every evil thought and worldly passion are to be banished?" And to be attained while rejecting Christ, and scorning the Holy Spirit, and trifling with the Bible! All by the Masonic "gavel."

Mackey has said one true thing—viz., "The Mason is ever to be in search of Truth, but is NEVER TO FIND IT!"

YOUTHFUL CRIMINALS.

BY REV. S. A. GEORGE.

From the Mansfield Herald of Jan. 31st, 1884, I clipped a piece with the above heading. It began as follows:

"Less than four months ago, Bertie Gaylord, of Cleveland, aged fourteen, organized a band of boys from eleven to fifteen years of age, called the 'Silver Skulls.' Their meetings were held in a barn. Each boy before admittance to membership had to take the following oath: 'Cursed be friendship, cursed be fathers, mothers, sisters, and brothers; may the offspring ourselves canker, blister and decay on its dying mother's breast; may the blood of each breed pestiferous plague; may the hair of each fall from his head, the teeth crumble in his jaws, the brains rot in his skull, the eyes canker and fall from their sockets and the fingers grow palsied, if we ever betray the secrets of the Skulls. So do I swear. Death to our enemies, life to the Skulls.'

"Jason Coskey, a boy who refused to join them, soon after received a warning written in red ink, signifying blood. A glowing skull and crossbones decorated the paper, and below was a bloody hand with the word 'death' written on it. The paper read:

"'Jason Coskey, one month from to-night, if you don't join us, you will receive your death warrant, and two days from then your death. By order of the Skulls.'

'This put the police of the city on their track, and Bertie Gaylord immediately left his home, taking two revolvers with him, and started west."

Now the writer in the paper mentioned, commented at length upon this and other youthful criminals and their crimes to which he referred, saying that "the tendency to high crime by the youth of our country is largely the result of education." That is undoubtedly correct. But it was the writer's purpose only to refer to the education which boys get from the criminal literature and dime novels that are everywhere to be found, even in many of the so-called best homes. None deplore this kind of education more than I do.

Yet it occurs to me that there is another source of education that is little if any less dangerous than criminal literature, as the case of the "Silver Skulls" plainly shows. I refer to the example which fathers and brothers set the younger boys, by meeting at stated times and places, in their club and lodge rooms, and binding themselves by horrible oaths. The boys will imitate, and why may they not? What the father may do has not the boy a right to do on a small scale? If he has not, then farewell parental authority. I have heard of a father whipping his boy for swearing, and swore himself while he was whipping him. If the father swears, how can he persuade the boy that he may not? And if the father meets once a week in the lodge room with closed doors and hedged in with secrets and horrible oaths, how can he persuade his boy that he may not meet in like manner with the other boys?

Fathers! don't you know that your example is shaping the future destiny of your boys? I once read of a father who was walking through the deep snow, his two little boys were following him; he heard the elder son saying, "I'll step in father's tracks." He looked around and the other little fellow was trying to do the same thing. The father was a wicked man, but he at once saw the position he was occupying in relation to his boys, and that night he went and related his experience and made a public profession of faith in Christ Jesus, saying, "If I am to lead my boys thus I'll make tracks for heaven."

It is for the boys I plead that there may be raised up a generation of noble and honest men, and as a means to this end without which it cannot be accomplished, I ask you, fathers, who weekly and nightly frequent the club-house and the lodge room,—I ask you, as you love your boys, in the name of Jesus Christ to break down the altars of Baal and Bacchus, and save your boys for God and humanity. Open your hearts, divulge all your secrets in the bosom of your own family, then shall we see many more happy homes, more beautiful wives and mothers, because less careworn and heart-broken, and we shall no longer hear as an almost every-day occurrence of mere boys plotting mischief, arson and murder. Keep the boys at home, stay at home with them, surround them with love and sympathy, and plenty of good and pleasing literature, and all made palatable by an abundance of wholesome amusement. And those boys—yes, and the girls, too—shall grow up filled with noble principles and correct ideas of home, and their lives will be actuated by pure and holy motives.

Must not every honest heart bleed at the thought that mere boys could frame and impose on another an oath of the character of the above. But the responsibility must rest upon older heads.

Mansfield, O.

I have heard that in the deserts, when the caravans are in want of water, they are accustomed to send on a camel, with its rider, some distance in advance: then, after a little space, follows another; and then, at a short interval another. As soon as the first man finds water, almost before he stoops down to drink, he shouts aloud, "Come!" The next one, hearing the voice repeats the word, "Come!" while the nearest again takes up the cry, "Come!" until the whole wilderness echoes with the word, "Come!" So in that verse, the Spirit and the bride say, first of all, "Come!" then let him that heareth say, "Come!" and whosoever is athirst let him come and take of the water of life freely.—Spurgeon.

WEEK DAY SERMON.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

Everybody has heard of "the new departure," though not one in a thousand seems to know exactly what it is, only that its advocates take especial delight in trying to batter down one particular landmark of doctrines that our forefathers reared up, not at expense of time and labor merely, but of their very heart's blood: the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures. I wonder if those ministers of the present day who are winning a cheap notoriety by slurring from their pulpits the very Word of God which it is their especial office to defend, even think as they pocket their comfortable salaries of another "new departure" centuries ago, made in the face of the rack and the dungeon, axe and flame! Of Wickliffe, and the Poor Men of Lyons, and the hunted Lollards; of meetings in hillside caves and on lonely moorlands, when the next moment might hear the oaths of the pursuing soldiery break rudely on the voice of praise, and see the defenceless little band, half women and children scattered, some to prison, some to death, some to exile andslavery under the burning sun of Barbadoes! For if they do it seems as though it must sometimes occur to their minds that in their own delicate living, soft raiment and pleasure vacations in Europe every summer, there is a very strong contrast between the apostles of the first "new departure" and the prophets of the second.

The mischief such men do is that of the eating moth and corroding rust. We all know that the Bible has passages which are never read by dying beds, never prayed over in the hush of the closet, never clasped as golden amulets to the heart in hours of temptation and trial, yet none the less does its wonderful adaptability to every individual want depend on its entirety and wholeness. Throw aside such passages at our will and pleasure, pierce them with the shafts of vapid ridicule, and what have we? A Bible that drops to pieces like the robe of kingly ermine which the moth has made its dwelling place, like the chain of beaten gold with a link here and there eaten through by cankering rust.

As art, morals and religion, however separate in themselves, are always touching and interchanging, much of Ruskin's advice to painters might be followed to advantage in higher matters. Let us hear him:—"The more a painter accepts Nature as he finds it the more unexpected beauty he discovers. . . . but once let him arrogate the right of rejection and he will gradually contract his circle of enjoyment until what he supposed to be nobleness of selection ends in narrowness of perception."

Nature as she is includes her fetid morasses, her untamed wildernesses, her desert plains, her untrodden mountain peaks. The Bible as it is includes narratives of shameful sin, histories of a savage and brutal era, chronologies of names covered with the dust of four thousand years, and doctrines deep, high that pierce into eternity, yet whose bases are set in loving, simple obedience, as the everlasting hills nestle in the green luxuriance of the valleys at their feet.

I remember how a friend who had lost a pet dog told me she was comforted by reading the parable of the poor man's ewe lamb; how its exquisite tenderness—not a word of blame for the love lavished on a mere dumb animal, was like oil poured into a wound for which even friends have but careless sympathy. Was she irreverent? Was she not rather in the highest degree reverent thus to believe, in her childlike symplicity, that the loss of her little favorite was not too trivial a grief for the Almighty Father to think about and store up this special drop of balm in his great storehouse of consolation? Like the wild honey found in the dead lion, strength and healing for our daily life often flow from the very pas sages that the partial inspiration theory in the pride of its human wisdom would reject altogether.

Such "liberality" will surely end in a terrible narrowness—the narrowness of that prison house which the soul makes for itself when blind to the glory and deaf to the comforting it gives on its way seeing but blackness and silence and mystery where guiding voices are forever sounding, and an infinite light forever shining for the childlike heart that is willing to walk therein.

THE SERMON.

THE LESSON OF THE HARVEST, BY REV. C. H. SPURGEON.

The church is God's farm. Paul is a laborer; Apollos is a laborer; Cephas is a laborer; but the farm is not Paul's, not so much as a rood of it, nor does a single parcel of land belong to Apollos, or the smallest allotment to Cephas; for "ye are Christ's." Our Master means that every laborer on his farm should receive benefit from it, for he never muzzles the ox that treadeth out the corn. The laborer's daily bread comes out of the soil. The laborers employed by God are all occupied upon needful work. "I have planted, Apollos watered." Who beat the big drum, or who blew his own trumpet? Nobody. On God's farm none are kept for ornamental purposes. Many of the members of our churches live as if their only business on the farm was to pluck blackberries or gather wild flowers. They are great at finding fault with other people's plowing and mowing, but not a hand's turn will they do themselves. The reward is proportionate, not to the success but to the labor. Many discouraged workers may be comforted by that expression. You are not to be paid by results, but by endeavors. You may have had a stiff bit of clay to plow, or a dreary plot of land to sow, where stones, and birds, and thorns, and travelers, and a burning sun may all be leagued against the seed; but you are not accountable for these things; your reward shall be according to your work. The laborers are nobodies, but they shall enter into the joy of the Lord.

We are singularly dependent upon God; far more so than many of us imagine. When the children of Israel were in the wilderness, they went forth every morning and gathered manna. Our manna does not come to us every morning, but it comes once a year. It is as much a heavenly supply as if it lay like a hoar frost round about our camp If we went out into the field and gathered food which dropped from the clouds we should think it a great miracle; and is it not as great a marvel that our bread should come up from the earth as that it should come down from the sky? The same God who made the heavens drop with angel's food bids the dull earth in its due season yield corn for mankind. Therefore, whenever we find the harvest comes, let us be grateful to God, and let us not suffer the season to pass over without psalms and thanksgiving.

I believe I shall be correct if I say that there is never in the world, as a rule, more than sixteen months' supply of food—that is to say, when the harvest is gathered in, there may be sixteen months' supply; but at the time of harvest there is not usually enough wheat in the whole world to last the population more than four or five months, so that if the harvest did not come we should be on the verge of famine. We still live from hand to mouth. Let us praise and bless God, and let the joy of the harvest be the joy of gratitude. To the Christian it should be great joy, by means of the harvest, to receive an assurance of God's faithfulness. The Lord has promised that seed-time and harvest, summer and winter, shall never cease; and when you see the loaded wain, carrying in the crop, you may say to yourself, "God is true to his promise."

We are going to the cornfields to rest with the reapers where, under some wide-spread oak, they sit down to take refreshment. God's reapers have their mealtimes. Those who work for God find him a good master. The reapers in Jesus's fields shall not only receive a blessed reward at the last, but they shall have plentcous comforts by the way. He is pleased to pay his servants twice; first in the labor itself, and a second time in the labor's sweet results. Nothing can be more flattering to the soul of the believer than feeding on the word and digesting it by frequent meditation. No wonder that men grow so slowly when they meditate so little. Cattle must chew the cud; it is not that which they crop with their teeth, but that which is masticated and digested by rumination that nourishes them. We must take the truth, and turn it over and over again in the inward parts of our spirit, and so shall we extract suitable nourishment therefrom. Is not meditation the land of Goshen to you? If man once said, "There is corn in Egypt," may they not always say that the finest of the wheat is to be found in secret prayer? Private devotion is a land which floweth with milk and honey; a paradise yielding all manner of fruits; a banqueting house of choice wines. Ahasuerus might make a great feast, but all his hundred and twenty provinces could not furnish such dainties as meditation offers to the mind. Where can we feed and lie down in green pasturs in so sweet a sense as we do in our musings on the word? Meditation distils the quintessence of joy from the Scriptures, and gladdens our mouth with a sweetness which excels the virgin honey. Your retired periods and occasions of prayer should be to you refreshiug seasons, in which, like the reapers at noonday, you sit with the Master and enjoy his generous provisions. God's reapers find it hard work to reap, but they have a blessed solace when in one way or another they sit down and eat of their Master's rich provisions: then with renewed strength, they rise, with sharpened sickle, to reap again in the noontide heat. To these meals the gleaner is affectionately invited—that is to say, the poor trembling stranger who has not strength enough to reap, who has no right to be in the field except the right of charity—the poor trembling sinner, conscious of her own demerit, and feeling but little hope and little joy, is invited to the feast of love.

We go to-day to the gate of the harvest field with another object—to see the wagon piled up aloft with many sheaves come creaking forth, making ruts along the field. We come with gratitude to God, thanking him for the harvest, blessing him for favorable weather, and praying him to continue the same till the last shock has been gathered in, and the husbandmen everywhere shall shout the "Harvest Home." What a picture is a wagon loaded with corn of you and me as loaded with God's mercies! From our cradle up till now, every day has added a sheaf of blessing. What could the Lord do for us more than he has done? He has daily loaded us with benefits. Let us adore his goodness and yield him a cheerful gratitude. Alas! that such a sign could be capable of another reading! Alas! that while God loadeth us with mercy we should load him with sin! While he continually heapeth on sheaf after sheaf of favor, we also add iniquity unto iniquity till the weight of our sin becomes intolerable to the Most High and he cries out by reason of the burden, saying, "I am pressed under you, as a cart is pressed that is full of sheaves."

Be astonished, O heavens, and be amazed, O earth, that God should speak of being pressed and weighed down! I do not read anywhere so much as half a suggestion that the whole burden of creation is any weight to the Most High. "He taketh up the isles as a very little thing." Neither sun, nor moon, nor stars, nor all the ponderous orbs which his omnipotence has created, cost him any labor in their sustenance. The heathen picture Atlas as stooping beneath the globe; but the eternal God, who beareth up the pillars of the universe, "fainteth not, neither is weary." Nor do I find even the most distant approach to a suggestion that providence fatigues its God. He watches both by night and day; his power goeth forth every moment. 'Tis he who bought forth Mazzaroth in his season, and guideth Arcturus with his suns. He beareth up the foundations of the earth, and holdeth the corner-stone thereof. He causeth the dayspring to know its place and setteth a bound to the darkness and shadow of death. All things are supported by the power of his hand, and there is nothing without him. Just as a moment's foam subsides into the wave that bears it and is lost forever, so would the universe depart if the eternal God did not daily sustain it. This incessant work has not diminished his strength, nor is there any failing or thought of failing with him. He worketh all things, and when they are wrought they are as nothing in his sight. But strange, most passing strange, miraculous among miracles, sin burdens God, though the world cannot; and iniquity presses the Most High, though the whole weight of providence is as the small dust of the balance. Sin makes God's creatures unhappy, and shall not the Lord therefore abhor it? God never designed that any creature of his hand should be miserable. He made the creatures on purpose that they should be glad; he gave the birds their song, the flowers their perfume, the air its balm. He gave the day the smiling sun and the night its coronet of stars; for he intended that smiles should be his perpetual worship, and joy the incense of his praise.

The art of husbandry was taught to man by God. He would have starved while he was discovering it; and so the Lord, when he sent him out of the Garden of Eden, gave him a measure of elementary instruction in agriculture, even as the prophet puts it—"His God doth instruct him to discretion, and doth teach him." God has taught him to plow, to break the clods, to sow the different kinds of grain, and to thresh out the different orders of seeds. The Eastern husbandman could not thresh by machinery as we do; but still he was ingenious and discreet in that operation. God has taught husbandmen to distinguish between different kinds of grain in the threshing; so does he in his infinite wisdom deal discreetly with different sorts of men. About the best of men there is still a measure of chaff. All is not grain that lies upon the threshing-floor. All is not grain in those golden sheaves which have been brought into our garner so joyfully. Even the wheat is joined to the straw, which was necessary to it at one time. About the kernel of the wheat the husk is wrapped, and this still clings to it, even when it lies upon the threshing-floor. About the holiest men there is something superfluous, something which must be removed. We either sin by omission or trespass. Now threshing is useful in loosening the connection between the good corn and the husk. Of course if it would slip easily out of the husk the corn would only need to be shaken; there would be no necessity for a staff or a rod, much less for the feet of horses or the wheel of a cart to separate it. But there's the rub; our soul not only lieth in the dust but "cleaveth" to it. Threshing becomes needful for the sake of our usefulness; for the wheat must come out of the husk to be of service. We can only know God and bless men by being holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners. Unless thus severed from sin we cannot be gathered into the garner.

In gathering in the wheat good angels will be employed; "the angels are the reapers." This casts special scorn upon the great evil angel. He sows the tares, and tries to destroy the harvest, and therefore the good angels are brought in to celebrate his defeat and rejoice together with the Lord in the successes of the divine husbandry. It will be a gathering from very great distances. Some of the wheat ripens in the South Sea Islands, in China and Japan; some flourishes in France; broad acres grow in the United States. There is scarce a land without a portion of the good grain. "Gather in the wheat." The saints will be found in all ranks of society, the angels will bring a few ears from palaces, and great armfuls from cottages. Many will be collected from the cottages of our villages and hamlets, and others will be upraised from the back slums of our great cities to the metropolis of God. From the darkest places angels will bring those children of sweetness and light who seldom behold the sun, and yet were pure in heart and saw their God. The hidden and obscure shall be brought into light, for the Lord knoweth them that are his, and his harvest men will not miss them. To me it is a charming thought that they will come from all the ages. Let us hope that our first father, Adam, will be there, and mother Eve, following in the footsteps of their dear son Abel, and trusting in the same sacrifice. We shall meet Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and Moses, and David, and Daniel, and all the saints made perfect. What a joy to see the apostles, martyrs, and reformers! I long to see Luther, and Calvin, and Bunyan, and Whitfield. I have not much doubt that we shall have fellowship with all the saints of every age and the general assembly and church of the first-born, whose names are written in heaven. No matter when or where the wheat grew, it shall be gathered into one barn. Gathered never to be scattered, gathered out of all divisions of the visible church, never to be divided again. They grew in different fields. Some flourished on the hillside, where Episcopalians grow in all their glory, and others in the lowlier soil, where Baptists multiply and Methodists flourish; but once the wheat is in the barn none can tell in which field the ears grew.

AN INDIAN LETTER.

HYDERABAD, Deccan, India, July 5, 1884.

DEAR BRO. K.—Yours of May 16 came duly as also both the packages of tracts and books you mention. I recently sent you a copy of a brief history of our work. "Five Years of Faith-Work." This will give you a fair view of our work. I long since ceased to feel that my mission in India was a narrow one. Many years ago God began to prepare me for my present work. The last school of preparation I passed through was Halsted Street Methodist Mission under Bro. S. A. Kean of Preston, Kean & Co., in your city.

I came to India for life. Thus all my plans take in the ultimate triumph of the Gospel in India. I have been out here nearly eight years and my wife, also from Halsted street work, came five and a-half years since. We are acclimatized and pretty fully Indianized. I myself wear the costume entire of a Hindoo. Ordinary missionary operations are on too costly a scale. Most missionaries live and fare better in India than they would in the ministry at home. They doubtless deserve it. But when hundreds of young preachers on the frontier work on a line of far greater sacrifice, and the people in India are so poor, I feel it incumbent on me to get down near them.

God is blessing us in our work in the Deccan. We have here over twenty workers now, all faith workers: and we are laying plans for wide expansion. We want a dozen more workers who can trust God for their bread, as we do, without salary. If any Cynosure readers, "wholly sanctified" and "full of the Holy Ghost and faith," are called to come and join us, let them write me.

I note the Cynosure carefully and often make use of things I find in it. The copy you send me in exchange I give away when read. Many men have confessed to me that your depictions of Masonry are correct. When men get saved out here they get out of the lodge of necessity. We are personally acquainted with a barrister, a doctor, a locomotive foreman, a station master on the railway, a principle of a high school, a commissariat officer, a military officer, and others who, when saved, at once quit the lodge for Christ's sake without anyone saying much to them. The evil of the institution is too apparent to need pointing out in India.

I do not doubt that God has sanctified some men who were Masons. But I doubt utterly that any man can remain an entirely sanctified man and remain an active Mason. How can God approve of a man who becomes one of a party who deny Jesus a place among them and sacrilegiously expunge the name from every passage of Scripture containing it that they use in their ritual? I know many good men whom the experience of entire sanctification has taken out of the lodge at once.

I shall scatter these tracts you sent all over this empire among ministers and people. Wherever the British flag waves it is very fashionable to be a Mason. "The Prince of Wales is a Mason," etc., etc. But the curse of the thing is none the less. I do not think Masonry has made any astonishing progress among the natives of India. Yet a good many educated, deistical Hindoos, Parsees, and Mohammedans join English officers and clergymen and others in Masonic lodges. It is time light was scattered. I have a brother, Arthur M. Ward, employed at 192 East 22d street, your city, whom I would be glad if you met and invited to some of your meetings. He is a Christian. At another time I will write something of the progress of mission work at large in India. I am too busy to do so to-day.

Accept my thanks for the tracts and books. Give my special thanks to that brother in Iowa who helped send the tracts because his daughter had been in Ceylon. Any persons wanting the Watchman may apply to Mrs. A. R. Kean, of Preston, Kean & Co., 100 East Washington street, Chicago, Ill. Pray for us.

Your Bro. in the Lord,
C. B. WARD.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,
SAMUEL C. POMEROY,
OF KANSAS.

For Vice President,
JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

ILLINOIS POLITICAL CONVENTION.

An American Prohibition convention will meet at Monmouth, Illinois, September 11th, in the Opera House at 7: 30 P. M., and continue its sessions the day following. The opening address of Richard Haney, D. D., will be followed by other distinguished advocates of prohibition and reform. The object of this convention is to put in nomination a candidate for Governor and other State officers to be voted for on the American platform, and transact such business as may legitimately come before the body. All prohibitionists who favor and practice open temperance work are cordially invited to attend and co-operate in efforts to exterminate the curse of strong drink, and its causes and consequences in our State.

L. N. STRATTON, Chairman of the Illinois Committee of the American party.

THE MONMOUTH MEETING.

There are times when more can be accomplished by a decisive stroke than at other times by a protracted effort. Such a time is the State convention at Monmouth, Sept. 11th and 12th.

The prediction that a strong National meeting at Washington last March would advance the cause of anti-lodge prohibition has been verified. Results have verified the wisdom and economy of the attendance at that meeting, although it was a tax on the time and money of some of the delegates.

As an influence on the State work the proposed meeting at Monmouth is equally and even more important. The possibility of influencing political action has been demonstrated since the Washington convention, and the hearty co-operation of real prohibitionists in this State, assured so far at least as voting for governor is concerned. The season has been favorable and the harvest unusually abundant so as to make the burden exceptionally light on the farmers who furnish a large per cent. of the reform constituency of all parties. The time, after harvest, is favorable, and the deep interest felt throughout the whole country in politics calls for a decided expression of the temperance people in favor of united, vigorous, onward efforts. Churches favorable to prohibition should appoint delegates. All open temperance organizations should be represented. Every American club or association should be heard from, and every temperance man or woman who favors open methods in work ought to arrange, if possible, to attend the Monmouth convention. All parts of the State should be represented, for it is a matter in which the remote has no less at stake than neighborhoods contiguous. Dr. Haney remarked, "We have got beyond fractions into whole numbers, and the effect of the convention will be in proportion to the members who attend." There is sound wisdom in this remark. If the reformers of Illinois leave this convention to be simply a local affair they will allow a golden opportunity to pass unimproved that is not likely again soon to occur. You cannot afford to do this, and I am persuaded that you will not. A failure would be extremely disheartening, but a grand rally and enthusiastic meeting at Monmouth would set the wheels of progress in motion and greatly accelerate the work, especially in Illinois.

J. P. STODDARD.

STAND BY YOUR PRINCIPLES.

ARCADE, N. Y.

It certainly augurs well for the future of our country when its political electors call for such good men as John P. St. John and William Daniel are reported to be. These men being put in nomination as candidates to fill the highest and perhaps the most important offices that the sovereigns of the nation can confide to man, are put forth as representatives of the principles, mainly, of the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of liquid craze and death. This work is a glorious one.

It is well known that, weeks previous to such nomination, a national council assembled at Chicago and put in nomination for the same offices men of equal ability and merit, who individually and also by their pledge, fully represent equal opposition to the base intoxicants; and, in addition, were personally and by pledge opposed to an institution far more deadly, in its being and in its inherent principles, to a free republican government and to the throne of the infinite Sovereign, than even the demon alcohol, diabolical as he is.

This institution, "Freemasonry," has a government of its own, declared by its adherents and expounders to be independent of any and all others, rejects the Christian's God, and improvises for itself, in place, a god that it denominates the "Grand Architect of the Universe."

This institution is more formidable as an enemy to republican government and to the government of the great "I AM," than King Alcohol, in that it is more thoroughly and systematically organized as a foe to all other governments, that of the God of the Bible included.

We, whose vision is clear, as viewing this "abomination of desolation" "stand in the holy place" of God's omnipotence, cannot afford to ignore this last-named blasphemy by dropping it as represented in its opponents, as such, in the persons of Samuel C. Pomeroy and John A. Conant.

MRS. STANTON AND THE AMERICAN PLATFORM.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I think the American party has dealt with the question of woman's suffrage in a most direct, manly and Christian way. Hence, the course of the leaders of the National Woman Suffrage Association is inexplicable to me. I should, at least, expect from them expressions of gratitude toward those who have espoused their cause, coupled with respectful, courteous treatment.

While I honor Miss Anthony and Mrs. Stanton, and have been, to a certain extent, one of their followers, I am constrained in this instance to be an "Independent."

If it were possible to conceive of the present Republican party as giving to women the ballot, and if women should on that account give it their votes, what would be accomplished? The platform of that party has not a single high moral issue that would wake the earnestness of our best women. It never rises above the level of the political huckster, and in many of its features it must repel all the intelligent, good and true. These ladies may expect by some lobbying or wire-pulling to secure to women their political rights, but I do not believe it can be done.

Not the question of rights, but of duties, wakes the women of the time. We must have the trumpet call of the prophetesses of temperance to rouse the women in such force as will fairly command recognition of their rights. The party that refuses to pledge protection to homes, that tramples on the poor Chinaman and bids for the votes of the lowest elements of society, can never rouse the enthusiasm of our women reformers.

Having little power to help our friends, many of us do, yet, appreciate their service. The banners of the great parties trail in the mire; he who follows must creep. The banner of the American party is planted on the heights; its followers must move onward and upward. That their principles may become engrafted in our Constitution is the hope and prayer of countless Christian suffrage women. S. OSGOOD UPTON.

AN INDEPENDENT OPINION.

On our fourth page there is an article concerning the American party. Last month we published the platform of that party. The platform is excellent. The article referred to is also able and manly. We indorse most of its views. But the Star does not propose to be the organ of any party in the presidential canvass. Indeed, we have never had as much faith in the utility of periodic efforts to make a national canvass for candidates of the American party as some have, though the movement has our sympathy to a considerable extent. We think, however, that the time may come, in the future, when the American party will hold the balance of power in this nation. It certainly will, if secretism shall not learn that "prudence is the better part of valor;" and it is not in the nature of counsel from the throne of darkness to be so wise as that. Our special reason for not making the Star anything else than independent in politics is this: We are in a crisis as to our church position against secrecy, and we deem this interest too important to allow it to be affected by a political canvass.—Rev. Milton Wright in Richmond Star.

POLITICAL HONORS IN CHINA.

In order to secure even the first fruits of political emolument, a mode of proceedure diametrically opposite to that which obtains in most nations, and especially in the United States, is required. Instead of money or its equivalent in "backers" and "heelers," brain is there required, and an exceedingly well-balanced and disciplined brain at that. In no other nation upon the earth are political honors based upon scientific attainments in all branches of study as they are in China, wherein are illustrated the true principles by which talent and wisdom are honored and rewarded; literature, science, morals, and philosophy encouraged; and a nation's happiness and prosperity secured.

The avenues to station and power are open alike to all. There are no distinctions save those of education; none relative to nationality, color, or previous condition of servitude. All are alike free to seek, and, if competent, to obtain, positions of honor, from that of petty magistrate of a village to Grand Imperial Secretary—an office second only to that of Emperor.

Few there are, it is true, who possess the fortitude to undergo the necessary educational training consequent to, and upon which depends, his sole hope of success. Of his studies there is no end. To diligence he must add patience, and to patience continuity, else will he fail to secure the coveted prize.—Wong Chin Foo, in Harper's Magazine.

THE AMERICAN PARTY PLATFORM.—A remarkable political document is that which the American party adopted at its recent convention in Chicago, as its platform for the Presidential campaign. It is refreshing to hear in the lips of any body of voters, explicit declarations of their belief that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government, and an acknowledgment of the binding obligation of the Sabbath; a demand for the continued use of the Bible in schools, for the prohibition of the liquor traffic, for equal rights for negroes, Indians and Chinamen, for the suppression of polygamy, and for the settlement of international differences by arbitration, as well as for the withdrawal of charters to secret lodges and the prohibition of extra judicial oaths. These statements include principles which will sooner or later form the staple of political agitation in this country. We regret the reference to contract labor from foreign countries, which smacks of the anti-Chinese agitation, and the reference to the competition of "prison-labor," which will be generally understood to mean opposition to the employment of prisoners at remunerative labor, although we are satisfied this was not the intention of the platform.—Christian Statesman.

THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM.

With respect to the platform on which he is placed, its planks may be divided into three classes—good, bad, buncombe. In this respect it is very like the Republican party's platform—both being intended not so much to assert just principles as to catch votes. The Democratic platform is, however, more openly inimical to the temperance cause than that of their opponents, and we fail to see how Christian men can endorse either.—N. Y. Witness.

NO MORE ALONE. "I have been voting the American ticket all alone for four years, but I will not be alone this fall. I have found a man in the township who believes in the providence of God, for he says it is through Providence that he has concluded to be an Anti-mason. It gave me much joy to meet him and shake his hand. God bless the National Christian Association, the American party, and the whole church."—CYRUS SMITH, Clearfield, Iowa.

LITERATURE.

LYRA LUTHERANA. A souvenir of the 400th anniversary of Luther's birth. By Joel Swartz, D.D., Gettysburg, Pa.

The Luther anniversary last spring was one of the great occasions marking the triumphs of Protestantism in its proclamation of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. The genius of Dr. Swartz gave us at the time a noble hymn sung at the unveiling of the Luther statue in Washington May 21st last. Others had preceded; all are gathered in this little collection—"Luther and Washington," "The Luther Monument," "Luther an Alpine Man," "Luther at the Wartburg," etc.

Specimen pages of Alden's Manifold Cyclopedia show a wonderful scope to this new claimant for popular favor. It will comprise an unabridged dictionary of the English language, and a concise dictionary of the Greek, Latin, French, German, Italian and Spanish. Beside, it will include a cyclopedia of biography, science, domestic and religious knowledge, etc., round the whole circle of literature, science and the arts. The publisher has undertaken a great work, as any may see from examination of these pages.

Among the articles in the North American Review for September, three in particular merit the serious consideration of everyone who studies the tendencies of our government. The leading one is by Bishop J. Lancaster Spalding, who insists that the only sure "Basis of Popular Government" is morality, not culture of the intellect, nor universal suffrage, nor the development of material resources; and that if the country is to be saved from ruin, there must be a return to the uncompromising moral code of the founders of New England. The policy of "The Exclusion of the Chinese" is advocated by John H. Durst, who presents a striking array of forcible and original arguments against Mongolian immigration. Four distinguished writers on political economy, namely, David A. Wells, Thomas G. Shearman, J. B. Sargent, and Prof. W. G. Sumner, set forth, from nearly every conceivable point of view, the "Evils of the Tariff System"; and it is announced that in the Review for October several writers of no less distinction will exhibit the "Benefits of the Tariff System." The other articles in the current number are "The Demand of the Industrial Spirit", by Charles Dudley Warner; "Inspiration and Infallibility", by the Rev. Dr. J. H. Rylance; "The Need of Liberal Divorce Laws", by Elizabeth Cady Stanton; and "Our Remote Ancestry", by Prof. Alexander Winchell.

The current number of the Missionary Review of Princeton, N. J., opens with an account of New Guinea and its missions. The great work that has been already done in this largest island in the world, counting Australia as a continent, is told in a graphic, earnest manner. The Review is faithful to the great mission work and from its independent position can speak freely of any measures taken by any of the societies. Its remarks on the late conference at Constantinople, referred to not long since in the Cynosure in our letter from Ada Bazar, Turkey, show with what faithfulness the editor contends for the real interests of the kingdom of Christ against the demands of personal consideration. The churches of America owe more than they acknowledge to the Review. Twenty-five foreign missionary societies have a summarized report in this number.

Charles G. Leland will contribute a curious paper to the September Century, on the legends of the Passamaquoddy. It will be illustrated by drawings on birch bark, by a Quadi Indian. Mr. Leland has spent a number of years in studying the legends of the Algonkin Indians, which he regards as superior in the subtle charm of the myth to the mahrchen of Scandinavia and the Teuton and the Celt.

Dr. Dio Lewis has gained control of his Monthly, which has been suspended for nearly a year. All who have sent money for the magazine or for any of Dr. Lewis's books and have received nothing in return, are requested to write Dr. Lewis at once at the Bible House, New York.

The practical gardiner and fruit grower will never open amiss the Fruit Recorder monthly published by A. M. Purdy, Palmyra, N. Y. Each number contains such a variety of practical information, the result of experience, that its value is at once appreciated.

IOWA NATIONAL REFORM CONVENTION.

The friends of the Religious Amendment movement in Iowa will hold their annual convention at Indianola, Tuesday evening, Wednesday, and Wednesday evening, Sept. 16th and 17th. The aim is to secure a thorough discussion of moral issues in politics by thinking men of the various denominations. "A higher law for nations than the will of the people," will be discussed by Rev. W. C. Martin, D.D., and Judge C. C. Cole, LL.D.; "The Bible the life of the nation," by Rev. E. B. Graham "The Sabbath question," by Revs. R. T. McCrea and J. A. Thompson; "The Sabbath-school a national reform factor," by Rev. J. Talbott; "What will the movement effect?" by Revs. C. D. Trumbull and D. McKee; "National prohibition, the people's right and duty," by Rev. C. T. McCaughan, D.D.; "The Bible against the union of church and state," by Rev. T. P. Robb.

Free entertainment is promised, and all friends of the cause earnestly invited to attend. The settlement of this question, Shall God's law be enthroned as the standard of national legislation? involves the settlement of every moral issue in government. The agitation of this question is ramming home powder for every reform ball. It is laying the foundation of every moral reform. The present political aspect of our country makes it a most opportune time to press the agitation of this vital issue.

M. A. GAULT, Dist. Sec'y.

FEARGUS O'CONNOR.

EVANSVILLE, Ind.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—In your paper of Aug. 7th there is a short article headed "The National Labor Convention," in which the following language appears:

"So it has been in England from time immemorial. Gassy adventurers like Feargus O'Connor have arisen into importance by bravado; and deceiving their ignorant, trusting followers have sold out to the Tory party."

Now, sir, I am not able to say how far this may have been true from time immemorial; but I am able to say that for over fifty years I have taken a good deal of interest in the movements of the working classes of Great Britain for an extension of their political rights, and I have no knowledge of a single instance where they have been sold out by any of their political leaders during all that time.

As to leaders amongst the Irish agitators in connection with their own national troubles I have nothing to say. But as to Feargus O'Connor, although an Irishman by birth, he was not an agitator against the wrongs of Ireland only; but, being a member of Parliament for an English constituency, his labors were more especially for an extension of the suffrage to working men.

Having known him during his lifetime as a gentleman and an honest advocate of the political rights of the masses of the people, I am astonished that through the ignorance or prejudice of any one that they should attempt to slander the character of one who spent his fortune and his life in the interests of the working men of Great Britain, and went down to the grave in poverty and distress. In respect to the memory of a worthy man, I ask that you will give this a place in your paper at the earliest possible opportunity. Respectfully,

WM. TROUP.

REPLY.

In 1843 I dined, by his own invitation, with Feargus O'Connor at the White House, Picadilly, London, near Charing Cross. I had conceived a high opinion of him; as our friend, Mr. Troup, has. But my opinion of him changed. He became rudely angry with me because I refused to drink brandy with him. He denounced to me Mr. Joseph Sturge of Birmingham, and his associates in the "Complete Suffrage Association," who were the excellent of the earth. And a year or two later, Mr. Feargus O'Conner, while visiting this country, was arrested by the police for insulting a lady while he was in liquor; and Mr. Henry Vincent, afterwards in Parliament, spoke of O'Conner and his associates as bought up by the Tory party, and induced to betray the Chartists, who at one time took his "North Star," published I think at Leeds; and regarded him as their leader and oracle. If our friend, Wm. Troup, will satisfy me that he was not mistaken in O'Connor as I was, we will print his proofs.

QUESTIONS FOR THE MYSTICS.

We propose from time to time to submit profound questions to our mystic doctors bearing on the deep arts and the advanced sciences, and this is our introduction. Forasmuch as it is claimed that our universe is peculiarly Masonic and that our G. A. O. T. U. commits to his mystic sons nearly all his secrets, we conclude to "eaves drop" a little and catch a few crumbs from the "seven wise men" of the world.

1. What Mason superintendes lubricating the axis of the universe, and who furnishes the oil?

2. As Noah is claimed to be a Mason, we suppose he laid the corner-stone of his ark, or was it lain by his son Ham? If the latter, then should not Ham's posterity be eligible to the benefits of the craft, as well as Caucasians?

3. Was Samson a Mason? Why then could he not keep his secret from Delilah? It is unpardonable in our Delilahs to pump our Samsons. Beware ye wives of Masons!

4. Who was "worshipful master," when St. John the Baptist was made a Mason, and how many degrees did he take? How did it happen that Herod's Masonic oath took his life? Did John give him the grand hailing sign?

5. What did Pandora's box contain? Did the craft find their grand secret in it? Is Masonry entirely satisfied with its contents? Did Jupiter take it back, or is it among Masonic jewels, a sacred relic?

6. What Mason drilled the eye in Cleopatra's needle?

7. Was the great red dragon of Rev., chap. 12, an "intensely" Christian knight whose mission was to defend women and the church? He had more horns than heads, more push than brains; and had a penchant to destroy "the man child" and its mother. Are all Christian knights that way? And does the oft recurring serpent in Masonic jewelry indicate the serpentine nature of Freemasonry? See the serpent bordering around Masonic symbols, in "Scotch Rite" book by McClanihan—coiled round the globe, and other symbols. The red dragon was "east out into the earth," etc. "Prince of this world," etc. How significant! Gallant Knight!

When the great Mentors of all science shall answer the above questions, we will propound more. Yours, for the "Orders," CATECHUMEN.

ROUGH PLACES IN THE PATH OF RIGHTEOUSNESS.

CUSTER CITY, Pa., Aug. 10, 1884.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The Richmond Star for August tells us of Revs. St. Clair Ross and A. Hartzell, members of the Colorado mission district (U. B. church), being suspended in the first place, and finally were given letters of dimissal from church for the awful crime of writing to Star and U. B. in Christ on the anti-law proclivities of members of that conference. Adding, "with careful solicitation another anti-law itinerant from Michigan was added to the itinerant ranks of the district, and probably another from the East." (Italics mine.) And all this in an anti-secret church! O for an Edwards to preside over such a conference! Heartily can I endorse the prayer of the Star editor: "We could wish the good Lord to deliver from the tender mercies of nullifiers all our gray-headed law men."

United Brethren to the rescue! You who are well versed in ecclesiastical law, is there no way to sustain the characters of these faithful preachers? Can this rebellious conference make or unmake at their will? Can they stop free (loyal) speech? Is there no way to press nullifiers to a division? The longer we wait the more will they, by their soft speeches and cunning, cause to slough off with them. The division must come. We are losing valuable members, men with backbone, because they will not bow to domineering nullifiers, and see no prospect of professed law men coming to the rescue. They are sneeringly called Come-out-ers.

If the U. B. church does not soon shut the mouth of nullification, and cut down the groves of the anti-Christ among us, the good Lord will say, "Come out of her my people." The pulling up of the tares then will destroy more wheat than now. Like Absalom, they'll talk fair things to the people, promise them that justice the "law party" will not give, and so win their hearts. Good Lord, deliver us from deceptive speech and lying tongues. Amen. J. C. YOUNG.

"CONSPIRACY OF SILENCE."

The above expression in a daily paper refers to some proceedings in Ireland, but has such aptitude for the whole secret empire that the Cynosure and its readers will readily accept it as a fit description of the lodgery in our country as a foe to our free institutions, and is brought into special activity at our ever recurring elections. Instead of public meetings being what they profess to be they may become merely the instruments and occasions for venting, by plausible publicity, the decisions and plans of the "Conspiracy of Silence"! Secret cabals under lodge oaths draw into themselves that strength and loyalty which belong to our free institutions, and should be the expression in the open assemblies of the views of the people, but these meetings of the people if not watched, become the deluded tools and victims of the secret lodge.

The recent exposure (see Cynosure Aug. 7th) of the corruption and falsehood which caused the defeat of Senator Pomeroy years ago is an illustration of the base and treacherous character of the "Conspiracy of Silence," whose reign and power are necessarily at war with the first principles of our free institutions and of our religion. "Oh," says lodgery, "we are religious! we are sworn, and common voting citizens are not in every case." True, indeed you are sworn, but your oaths are contrary to the plain command and intent of the Christian's Lord and Master, and in harmonious obedience to his Satanic enemy. In fact, there are only two religions, Christ's and the devil's! And as the "Conspiracy of Silence" binds men to "conceal and never reveal," and the teachings of the New Testament are free and open for "all the world," it is clear that the two systems are fundamentally different—they start from, they are based upon, two opposite principles. In short, the one is concealment, the other revealment; the one is darkness, the other is light. And just so far in our National politics as the one or the other predominates, just so far will the curse or the blessing attend the destiny of our beloved country. Yours,

A. NOLDBOY.

AN OLD ANTI-MASON GONE.

DESMET, Dakota, Aug 3, 1884.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—You have of late been publishing sketches of some of the prominent Antimasons of the Morgan days. Let me call your attention to another, who has just passed away, at the great age of 96. Rev. Joel Mann died at New Haven, Conn., July 31. If any one has preserved files of the Anti-Masonic Intelligencer, published at Hartford, Conn., he can find in some number of about 1829, Mr. Mann's renunciation of Masonry, in a published sermon, which brought down a cyclone of Masonic wrath and vituperation. I read the sermon at the time, and heard some of the curses (I was fifteen years old at the time); one indiscreetly saying, "I would like to help put Mr. Mann through another degree,"—not thinking of the maxim that speaks of "pitchers that have ears." But it convinced me of what I have never since doubted, that Masonry had been revealed. Truly yours, E. BROWN.

PITH AND POINT.

"MYSTICS."

That is the name by which Masons ought always to be called now, because their institution, founded upon and cut out by the old Egyptian "mysteries," has taken upon itself the responsibility of preserving and perpetuating those vilest of the old Pagan abominations. "Mystics," then, "mystics," is the only suitable and appropriate name for them. C. A. S. T.

THE MASONIC PENN BANK.

The writer has been waiting to see if you would notice the failure of the Penn bank in Pittsburgh. It was the head institution of Masonry. All its officers were Masons, and it has robbed the whole community. It is impossible that the nation can long remain in its present state. If magistracy is a divine institution, was it so arranged that it was to be given up to the worst part of the voters? "He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God.—SCOTIA, Pittsburgh, Pa.

BLAINE AND LOGAN.

Would it not be a benefit to the cause of temperance and aid many workers to publish the position of Blaine and Logan in relation to applying the liquor tax to the support of education, with some extracts from their letters and speeches to which workers may refer without fear of successful contradiction, as most persons do not keep files of their papers and cannot now recall their exact position. Their several relations also to secret societies, if known and stated in brief, could do no harm, and the same might apply to the Democratic candidates. It strikes me that a few such items in condensed form would be a pretty good political text-book.—J. W. ALBERTY, Lockport, N. Y.

[Blaine does not belong to any secret order. Logan is a Mason and a Grand Army member. Blaine's plan for disposing of the liquor tax we printed Aug. 14; Logan's differed from it chiefly in applying the revenue to the educational interests of the States. Of the Democratic candidates we know little. No reader of the Cynosure ought to vote for them anyhow.]

SEPARATION.

God's command to the Egyptian king was to let the children of Israel go free. Israel went out; but Pharoah and all his host perished, because they dispised God's command. Israel, God's chosen people, were commanded to flee idolatry; but they disregarded God's command in so much that they fell to worshiping a golden calf. God commanded the righteous to come out from among the wicked. The righteous stood over to the right and the wicked to the left; the ground opened and some twenty thousand idolaters were buried in one grave. Has God changed since then? Is he not the same God, yesterday, to-day and forever? Then the command to-day to God's people is to flee from idolatry, and to come out from among the wicked and touch not the unclean thing, and God says, "I will receive you." Is this command to be separate and flee idolatry regarded? Verily, it is set at defiance. God is mocked. Many of the churches have formed a partnership with idolatry. They employ Freemasons to preach for them. Freemasonry is tolerated in the churches, and Freemasonry has no Christ in it, and if so, what is Freemasonry but a league formed with the devil, for the purpose of overthrowing the government, and destroying the Church of Christ? and many Freemasons that belong to Christ's Church are striving to sustain the cause of Satan, which is Freemasonry, to the destruction of the church and their own souls.—O. C. M. BATES, Constantine, Mich.

"TOBACCO IS A FILTHY WEED, 'TWAS THE DEVIL SOWED THE SEED."

"Woe to him that putteth the bottle to his neighbor and maketh him drunk." And is he not a near relative in iniquity who provides, by raising on his beautiful farm lands, the poisonous narcotic, tobacco? I was passing about in a beautiful township in Rock Co., Wis., and admired the beautiful farms, some of them small, others large. I thought how quiet, how happy these farmers ought to be! How the Father of all our mercies is blessing the labor of their hands. They were abounding in plenty for man and beast. Their hay and their grain was very abundant. And—shall I tell it?—I am certain that nineteen in twenty of these farms, the choicest parts of them, were producing tobacco. The Chinese Emperor has destroyed lately four million dollars worth of opium. When will our Christian nation do as well as that?—A. C. WIGGINS, Footeville, Wis.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON X.—September 7, 1884.—Confidence in God.—Ps. 27: 1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? Ps. 27: 1.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Lord is the confidence of the righteous. Vs. 1-3. No one can stand up for the truth and not find himself surrounded by foes. Satan is the commander-in-chief of the hosts of evil, and he is always stirring up wicked men to oppose God's work. Prohibitionists in many places are beginning to find out that the liquor traffic, like every other great evil, will persecute when it has the power. The attempt to blow up a temperance hotel in Denver, Colorado, May last, besides the numerous attempts to burn or injure the property of prominent prohibitionists, of which we read in the papers, and the resolutions passed by various liquor associations to fight all laws which aim to restrict their business, prove that they are already an armed host, defiant and ready for battle. As saloonists make a clean profit of 95 per cent, and the amount of their business is estimated at nine hundred millions every year—nearly twice as much as the bread bill of the entire Union, and three times as much as its butcher's bill—we see how formidable the liquor interest has grown by means of its immense wealth, which can defeat law and control legislators. Masonry is in its very nature a persecuting power. Dr. Judson, it is said, before his departure as a missionary was urged on by friends to take the higher Masonic degrees, but was so shocked at the terrible blasphemy of the Knights Templar that he avowed his intention to write an exposure, and was only with difficulty dissuaded when told that his life would certainly pay the forfeit. If it cannot shut the mouths of good men it slanders their characters, hurts their business, and tries to injure them by other methods. But all who are persecuted for righteousness' sake can say with David, "The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? the Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?"

2. Reformers need especially the help of the Sabbath and of God's house. Vs. 4, 5. Great evils unite in hating the Sabbath. Saloonists fight the Sunday laws, for they know that if allowed to keep their places open on the Sabbath they would sell more liquor than on any other day of the week. That the lodge would gladly pull down the Christian Sabbath is proved by its constant violations of the day in parades and pleasure excursions. On the contrary men and women who are trying to put down these evils have a peculiar love for the Sabbath and the house of God. It is there that they gain new strength and courage for their warfare. "In the secret of his tabernacle shall he hide me."

3. Prayer is the reformer's constant ally. Vs. 7-12. In Bunyan's allegory, Christian is shod with shoes called All Prayer, that can never wear out. Reformers need especially to be thus shod, for their thorny and perilous way. The beautiful truth in v. 10 has often been proved in heathen countries where confessing Christ shuts on the convert the doors of his nearest kindred. But faith makes us strong to endure ("I had fainted unless I had believed") and patient to wait God's time, sure of gaining at last the victory over every foe.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What especially noteworthy instances of confidence in God? 1 Kings 18: 1, 16; 2 Kings 6: 15-18; Acts 20: 22-24. How has God made the keeping of the Sabbath a sign between the righteous and the wicked? Ez. 20: 20.

OTHER NOTES.

"The Lord," Jehovah. The personal, loving, eternal Father. This name of hope and grace occurs six times in the first, and seven times in the second part of the Psalm. "The God of my salvation" appears once as an equivalent.—Murphy.

"Is my light." The Lord is to the soul what the sun is to the world. (1) He reveals the truth, the facts that surround the soul. (2) He brings brightness, and cheer, and warmth, and joy. (3) He is the light of life, inspiring life, and activity, and giving health. (4) He discovers our sins and the needs of our hearts. (5) He shows us the way of rightcousness, and salvation, and heaven.—Peloubet. Salvation finds us in the dark, but it does not leave us there; it gives light to those who sit in the valley of the shadow of death. After conversion our God is our joy, comfort, guide, teacher, and in every sense our light; he is light within, light around, light reflected from us, and light to be revealed to us. Note, it is not said merely that the Lord gives light, but that he "is" light; nor that he gives salvation, but that he is salvation.—Spurgeon.

"And my salvation." (1) From sin; (2) from danger; (3) from trouble; (4) from temptation; (5) from enemies. He is pledged to guide us right; not only to show us sin, but to save us from it. Not only to make us see God's hatred of sin, and his curse upon it, but also to draw us unto God's love, and to take away the curse. —Sacramental Meditations.

"Strength of my life," or "stronghold of my life," in which my life is preserved, or, it may be, "my living stronghold."—Cook. That which makes my life as safe as walls and fortifications.—Alexander.

"When the wicked." This verse records a past deliverance, and is an instance of the way in which experience should be employed to reassure our faith in times of trial. Each word is instructive.—Spurgeon. It is a hopeful sign for us when the wicked hate us; if our foes were godly men it would be a sore sorrow, but as for the wicked, if they hate us and oppose us because we stand up for what is right, and resist their evil deeds, it is a good sign, for so they hated Christ himself.—Peloubet.

"Even mine enemies and my foes." There were many of them, they were of different sorts, but they were unanimous in mischief and hearty in hatred. It was not because they were his enemies merely, but because they were the enemies of God, that he so easily subdued them.—J. A. Alexander.

"Stumbled and fell." This was literally true in the case of our Lord in Gethsemane, when those who came to take him went backward and fell to the ground; and herein he was a prophetic representative of all wrestling believers who, rising from their knees, shall, by the power of faith, throw their foes upon their faces.—Spurgeon.

"My heart shall not fear." None are so truly courageous as those who are truly religious. If a Christian live, he knows by whose might he stands; and if he die, he knows for whose sake he falls. Where there is no confidence in God, there will be no continuance with God. When the wind of faith ceases to fill the sails, the ship of obedience ceases to plow the seas.—William Secker.

"Though war should rise against me, in this (emergency, in this great trial) will I be confident," trusting with all the heart. The encamping host often inspires greater dread than the same host in actual affray. Young tells us of some—

"Who feel a thousand deaths in fearing one."

Doubtless the shadow of anticipated trouble is, to timorous minds, a more prolific source of sorrow than the trouble itself; but faith puts a strengthening plaster to the back of courage, and throws out of the window the dregs of the cup of trembling.—Spurgeon. I have been delivered from the lion, therefore shall be from the bear; from lion and bear, therefore from the Philistine; from the Philistine, therefore from Saul; from Saul, therefore God will deliver me from every evil work, and preserve me blameless to his heavenly kingdom.—John Sheffield.

"One thing." Divided aims tend to distraction, weakness, disappointment. The man of one book is eminent; the man of one pursuit is successful. Let all our affections be bound up in one affection, and that affection set upon heavenly things.—Spurgeon.

"That will I seek after." Holy desires must lead to resolute action. The old proverb says, "Wishers and woulders are never good housekeepers," and "Wishing never fills a sack." Desires are seeds which must be sown in the good soil of activity, or they will yield no harvest. We shall find our desires to be like clouds without rain, unless followed up by practical endeavors.—Spurgeon.

"That I may dwell in the house of the Lord forever." That he might be always under the influences of the Lord's house, always fill d with its spirit, always inspired by its powers, always enjoying its blessings. There is comparatively little good obtained from an occasional visit to the Lord's house. The regular attendants—those who abide under its influences—receive the blessing. The Sabbath's influences should extend over the whole week; the brief morning prayer over the whole day. Communion with God is the greatest of all blessings. One of the chief objects of prayer and of worship is to make us acquainted with God, and help us to abide ever in that consciousness of his love.—Peloubet.

"The beauty of the Lord." The beauty of the Lord is seen in Christ. It is seen in Christ, for he is the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person; and he that hath seen Christ hath seen the Father.—Andrew Grey.

"He shall hide me (defend, protect) in his pavilion." The royal pavilion was erected in the center of the army, and around it all the mighty men kept guard at all hours; thus in that divine sovereignty which Almighty power is sworn to maintain, the believer peacefully is hidden, hidden not by himself furtively, but by the king, who hospitably entertains him. Though God does not always deliver his people out of trouble, yet he delivers them from the evil of trouble, the despair of trouble, by supporting the spirit.—From a Broad Sheet in the British Museum.

"In the secret of his tabernacle." In the Holy of Holies, which no one could enter upon pain of death to molest him. The gracious presence of God, his power, his promise, his readiness to hear prayer, the witness of his Spirit in the hearts of his people. These are the secret of his tabernacle, and in these the saints find cause for that holy security and serenity of mind in which they dwell at ease.—Henry.

"Hear, O, Lord, when I cry with my voice." Note his anxiety to be heard. Pharisees care not a fig for the Lord's hearing them, so long as they are heard of men, or charm their own pride with their sounding devotions; but with a genuine man, the Lord's ear is everything. The voice may be profitably used, even in private prayer; for, though it is unnecessary, it is often helpful, and aids in preventing distractions.—Peloubet.

"Have mercy upon me." He is conscious that though God is so good, yet he himself is unworthy, and therefore he entreats for mercy.—Peloubet.

"When thou saidst, Seek ye my face," etc. Marg., My heart said unto thee, Let my face seek thy face. The literal translation would be, To thee hath said my heart, in answer to thy command, "Seek ye my face," Thy face, O Lord, will I seek. He calls us by the whispers of his Spirit, by his Word, by the stated returns of opportunities for his worship, and by special providences.—Henry.

"Teach me thy way, O Lord." He does not pray to be indulged with his own way, but to be informed as to the path in which the righteous Jehovah would have him walk. This prayer evinces an humble sense of personal ignorance, great teachableness of spirit, and cheerful obedience of heart.—Spurgeon.

"Lead me in a plain path." Not the way of duty but of providence, which he calls a straight or smooth path, as distinguished from the rough or crooked way of adversity.—J. A. Alexander. Help is here sought as well as direction; we not only need a map of the way, but a guide to assist us in the journey. A path is here desired which shall be open, honest, straightforward, in opposition to the way of cunning, which is intricate, tortuous, dangerous.—Spurgeon.

"For false witnesses are risen up against me." Slander is an old-fashioned weapon out of the armory of hell, and is still in plentiful use; and no matter how holy a man may be, there will be some who will defame him.—Spurgeon. The opponents of religion are continually bearing false witness against religion. They assert contradictions in the Bible which are not there; they misrepresent the doctrines of Christianity; they bear false witness against the work and the results of religion, the character of the churches and of church-members. It is rare to find an opponent who states things as they are.—Peloubet.

"Wait on the Lord." This is the sum of all the instruction in the Psalm; the main lesson which the Psalm is designed to convey. The object is to induce others, from the experience of the psalmist, to trust in the Lord; to rely upon him; to come to him in trouble and danger; to wait for his interposition when all other resources fail (comp. Ps. 25:3).—Barnes.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD,
HENRY L. KELLOGG, } Editors.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 28, 1884.

CAMPAIGN RATE!

Four copies of the Cynosure until after election for $1.00, to one or different addresses.

He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone.—John 8: 7. Last winter Senator Brown of Georgia declared, in the face of Congress, that many members were living in polygamy without the Mormon superstition to excuse them. There is one good to arise out of the game of blackball between Blaine and Cleveland. It will make vice dangerous as well as loathesome. Yet there are wretches who will justify their crimes by those imputed to these candidates.

Is Mr. Hobbs a Gambler?—A Blaine and Logan man justifies his purpose to vote the Republican ticket by calling Mr. Hobbs a gambler, who replies thus:

"The Rev. Waterman says I am a 'gamhler in grain.' If to buy and sell grain on the Board of Trade is gamhling; if to be engaged in that husiness for more than a quarter of a century is gambling; if to be entrusted with other people's money, and handle it honestly, and return to them every cent due them is gamhling; if to have fulfilled every contract made during that time, to the satisfaction of all interested, is gambling; if to have done husiness during all that time fairly and squarely, as between man and man; if to have aided in establishing and maintaining a market for the produce of the great Northwest is gambling—then I am a gambler of the first water."

Before the Cynosure recommended Mr. Hobbs, the Prohibition candidate, to Americans, we were assured by business men that he was not a speculator, but a veritable, responsible, upright dealer in grain.

Correction Asked.—Will the Cynosure point out the sentence in which The American pushes toward St. John? Will it even point to an illusion to the question of supporting St. John? Will it point to an editorial in which there is any intimation that the party will support any other candidates than Pomeroy and Conant.—American.

In the two numbers, Aug. 7th and 14th, the American gives at least six solid columns setting the Prohibition party and its candidates in a fair light, to less than a half column for the American party and its candidates. This leads the Tonica, Ill., News to say, "The American leans strongly to St. John and Daniel." So say we. Prof. Bailey's caution is praiseworthy, and perhaps the Cynosure should have more of it. But November is soon here, and the Cynosure, at the center of information, being satisfied that we shall vote for St. John and Daniel, by the sound advice of Senator Pomeroy and Mr. Conant, pays the American party a high compliment by taking a stand where it is sure to come.

"Don't Keep Changing."—Who says that? A Liberty party, Freesoil party, Republican party, men who went from Birney to Van Buren, thence through John P. Hall and Fremont to Lincoln. A shallow friend said: "It wasn't the Abolitionists who abolished slavery, but the Republicans." All right. To the best of our knowledge and belief, slavery is abolished; and the name "Abolitionist" looks a little like the word "abolished." Men who float like mosquitoes on the stream of political opinion know very little of its currents under them; and less of the springs whence they come. If we vote for Prohibition candidates who are clean of the lodge, they are opposed to the lodge; and if the Prohibitionists put up Masons or Masons' jacks, then we will not vote for them. The lodge is as much worse than liquor as hell is worse than a dram-shop. It shuts off Christ and worships Satan.

The Friends Review.—We took up from our exchange table this interesting weekly for Aug. 16th and literally read it through from beginning to end. It holds that the "Adaptation" of Quakerism to the needs of the present, though attended "with painful opposition of views among those of equal sincerity and devotion to the right," is yet "practicable;" and beautifully sums up thus: "But we believe that no church can be or do anything without Christ as its present recognized leader, its all in all." To which the Cynosure adds its fervent Amen. This Friends Review is above thirty-eight years old, published weekly at 1316 Filbert street, Philadelphia, and the above number is catholic, literary and every way admirable.

—Secretary Stoddard returned from Wisconsin on Friday and spent the Sabbath in Jefferson, Iowa. He speaks at the Iowa State meeting this week, and then hastens to the Michigan meeting, near Holland City.

THE BROWNLEE MURDER.

David Brownlee, murdered April, 1836, near Little York, Warren county, Ill., left three sons and two daughters who are respected citizens. We have lately seen three of them, and two of Brownlee's neighbors who saw his corpse. One of them was of the coroner's jury. We get this added clue to this mysterious murder:

Brownlee, his children say, insisted that he was not a Mason; that he got his Masonry from Morgan's book, which he found in his Pennsylvania wagon; that Masons "forced him," while plied with liquor, to sham the Apprentice oath, and he insisted "he was not bound by an oath taken under duress."

This gives the rational theory, that they quarreled, he denying and they insisting that he was bound by an oath, which, when sober, he abhorred; and that they killed him because they could not conquer him.

This would explain what they were doing with him that horrible week, from Saturday night, when last seen by old Mr. Coon (or Kuhn), until the Sabbath of the week following, when the neighbors found him on a spot which they had traversed again and again, with his throat cut and his tongue gone.

It was neither accident nor suicide. Accident did not lay the stirrups carefully over his saddle; and suicide did not take up his body and lay it where his neighbors found him. He was kept that whole week, and then killed (for the blood ran fresh from him), by more than one man; for Brownlee was six feet and well proportioned. He was killed; his corpse proved that. He came back to wife and children dead, and with his throat cut; and if the coroner, Dr. Wright, was a Mason, that explains the verdict of "don't know."

Christ said: "There is nothing secret which shall not be revealed, neither hid which shall not be known and come abroad." Somebody knows who killed David Brownlee, and if the coroner's verdict is stolen from the county office, somebody stole that record.

"PROHIBITION IN POLITICS."

Under this head the Advance protests against the St. John and Daniel party. It says: "Even if the Prohibition candidate should be elected, and propose temperance legislation to Congress, what could that body effect?"

Congress could "regulate commerce with foreign nations and between the States," (Art. I, sec. 8,) by inhibiting the traffic in liquors as it has the traffic in slaves, both foreign and domestic. "The Bonded Whisky" legislation asked of Congress by distillers occupied more of the time of Congress last winter, than almost any other single business. It would be something for Congress to clean out the liquor vaults from under the White House, and the grog-shops from under the Senate and House in the Capitol; and unless the newspapers are sadly at fault Congress licenses more liquor than all the States. Douglas said Congress or a State could expel slavery by "unfriendly legislation," and the saying was so true that it cost Mr. Douglas the South.

But does the Advance really endorse Mr. Blaine's policy of running the States and counties of this great country by a permanent liquor-tax? We fear the Advance editor is on the retreat, from the high moral ground which he seems born to by the fearlessness of his nature and the vigor of his pen. In another paragraph he does better where he says: "Whatever may be thought of female suffrage, it is undeniably making real, though slow progress."

THE TEMPLE OF HONOR.

AN OPEN LETTER TO W. F. TAIT, G. W. T. OF THE SUPREME COUNCIL OF THE TEMPLARS OF HONOR AND TEMPERANCE, MET IN GALGSBURG, ILL., AUG. 12, 1884.

Dear Sir:—When you asked me to address your Temperance Sociable, I really knew but little of your order. I now know more of it. But I knew something of you as an able physician and medical professor; and the courtesy and ability with which you presided on that evening, and the eloquence and sound temperance sentiments of the speakers whom you called out, gave me an agreeable evening's entertainment, for which I felt grateful to you and to them; and expressed the gratitude I felt.

And, though I am going to criticise and condemn your secret orders, I do not wish you to think I consider the members present that night, or the "Templars" at large, "Sinners above all the men of Galilee."

President Bateman of Knox College was some fourteen years superintendent of schools in Illinois, by the grace of the Masonic lodge, for which he sometimes officiated as "Grand orator." His successors in the superintendent's office, have, I believe, been Knights Templar, having drunk "the cup of devils," from a human skull, invoking double damnation on their souls, if they break their Templar's oath: and Dr. Bateman advised Mr. Boltwood, of Princeton, to join the Masonic lodge as the only means of rising in the teachers profession in Illinois! Though President Bateman has convinced many honored citizens of Galesburg that he "is not a Mason," or, at least, is indifferent to the lodge, the students of Knox College as missionaries of secret orders, have debauched the students of Monmouth College by teaching them to form secret oath-bound orders; thus contemning the example of Jesus Christ, and violating their duty to their parents, the laws of their college, and the tenets and rules of their church. Though these things have been patiently borne, Dr. Bateman, though encouraging us that he would attend our large and respectable convention in Galesburg, failed to do so; and yet allows Anti-masons to believe that he has left or is leaving the lodge while he still stands as a pillar in it. And students converted to Christ in other colleges, have been ensnared into secret orders after going to Knox, and are now yearly dunned to keep up their dues in those secret orders, which they long since abandoned. My authority for this statement is a respectable merchant in Peoria county, who was ensnared into the secret organized deism of the lodge while in Knox College. If Dr. Bateman has changed his opinion of the lodge, it is his duty, as a gentleman of honor, not to say Christian, to let the world know it and repair the evil he has done.

I have given the above sketch, which might be supplemented by one equally painful concerning the First Congsegational church in Galesburg, to convince you that I do not intend to be partial in condemning your order of Templars of Honor, whose worst errors are but

"Poor faults,
More monstrous standing by."

THE ORDER of the Templars of Honor and Temperance sprang out of the Sons of Temperance, June 2d, 1845. Your historian, Wadsworth, tells us (page 228) the motive was "To adopt degrees and signs by which members could recognize each other out of doors."

Along the Mediterranean, the brigands of the mountains have secret signs by which they know each other in the crowd on the streets and wharves; while they are unknown to the citizens with whom they mingle.

The simpler National Division of the Sons of Temperance refused to organize after this bandit model; hence arose your distinct order, which was first called "Marshall Temple." A regalia of purple and red was adopted with "rosettes and emblems." The Bible was placed on an altar, as in your Galesburg hall; mottoes were adopted taken from names of the Christian virtues, degrees were invented of a solemn seeming nature; the secrecy intensified as the degrees ascended, the upper being bound to concealment from the lower; and the fees increasing with the density of concealment. There was no patent for originality in this invention. It was a Masonic lodge with other names and tools; a new child born into the family of "unfruitful works of darkness," every one of which "works," like Satan's proposition to Eve, professed to benefit men, and ended in a Cain's religion of nature, without Christ."

I have underrated your clear thinking intelligence, unless the swarming hosts of secret orders now deluging the United States gives you, at times, some misgivings as to their nature and effects.

Freemasonry had so disgusted statesmen like Adams, Seward, Stevens, Weed, Lincoln and others, that, after 228,000 votes had been cast against it in 1832, the lodge fled South and became an adjunct of slavery. A few mongrel secret orders crept out of the fallen lodges, which Thaddeus Stevens called, "The maggots which had crept out of the dead carcase of the old harlot Masonry." But they made small progress, being composed mostly of the loafers, saloon-keepers, and fast young men of the towns and villages, with just a sprinkling of keen, sharp men to look after the dues.

The temperance cause dates back to 1809, when the learned Judge Cowen of Saratoga, then a youth, circulated a pledge. The conflict was sharp; but the argument was carried, and temperance became popular in 1835–40. Then secrecy, which never selects an unpopular virtue to ride, jumped on the temperance cause and formed the Sons of Temperance. The simple division was speedily surmounted by the Temple of Honor, which, in five years, ripened into Marshall Temple; which became the National Temple; which spreading into Canada and England, eventuated in your "Supreme Council of Templars of Honor and Temperance," whose sociable I addressed Aug. 12th in Galesburg.

Your Temple had competition. In 1851 a Mason, S. B. Chase, started the Good Templars, to charter, tax, govern, and initiate into Christless worships, "Sons," "Daughters," "Rechabites," "Cadets," etc., etc., all temperance orders in short, into "one grand organization." The Good Templars, though five or six years younger than you, have outnumbered you; and several other secret swindling orders besides, are competing in the business of selling idolatry, in broken doses, for fees, popularity and power; and there are Masons enough in each of these lesser "orders," to tie them together at the top, and represent them in the huge Masonic temples in our great cities.

Do you ask, "How I know this?" I answer, a gentleman by whom you seated me in your hall, Aug. 12th, told me he had met in a Supreme Council where out of twenty-one present, nineteen were Masons. In Iowa, there was not in the grange lodge of the whole State, a prominent member who was not a Mason.

These temperance lodges brought back their mother into popularity and power. But the Spirit of God has lifted up a standard against this Apocalyptic harlot, so that still she prefers to hide under other names than her own. In 1853 there was organized a lodge of Know-Nothings which swept several Northern States including New York, where the name of Masonry was still a loathing and a terror. Now, the lodge walks the cities of that State like the harlots described by Isaiah, chap. 3d, with the "bravery of their tinkling ornaments," "chains, head-bands, mufflers," etc., and that too before the witnesses are dead who saw the men who murdered Morgan defy and defeat the government and laws by the money and oaths of the lodge.

These lodges "are not political"—O, no! Yet Logan is riding the G. A. R. and Butler the secret labor unions, and the lesser progeny of the mother lodge are stretching out the hands of their leaders, for the bribes of this Presidential canvas. There are many thousand "veterans" now who never shouldered a musket or drew a sword, and plenty of soft-handed "laborers" who never earned an honest meals victuals. Yet they are not "political" in their constitutions, though every one knows they are so in fact.

Now, respected sir, do you ask, "Where's the harm? Why not let the boys have their fun; and their Logans and Butlers the offices?"

The harm is just this. All these orders use the religions in man to get money, votes, etc., and thus, like their mother in the Revelation, make merchandize of "the souls of men." Every speaker that night but myself, addressed a promiscuous crowd as "brothers and sisters;" though the meeting opened without prayer and closed without benediction, for, when you asked me to pronounce one, I only invoked "the Divine Guidance," which I most devoutly pray may "guide" you all out of the courts of Babylon the Great. Yet all were encouraged to believe that they were on the way to "the Temple above," though some of them are "without God and without hope in the world."

This is not all. These secret orders are as fatal in politics as in religion; in time as in eternity. Every secret "order" has what is equivalent to an oath, and every such counterfeit oath weakens and destroys the true oath. Now marriage rests on an oath. The couple are joined in the name of God. But if the groom has two oaths in his conscience, which is he married by? If he kneels before two altars, one of God the other of Baal; how is the bride to trust him? One may repeal what the other sanctions. Property rests on marriage, and descends by it. The secret oath therefore destroys by slow degrees both property and marriage. A court house with two sorts of oaths in it, is a Bank of Justice with genuine and counterfeit bills; the last engraved on purpose to deceive. Such court houses destroy justice in a coun try, as such banks would destroy its currency. My dear brother, let us "turn from these vanities to serve the living God!

Do you say, "Oh! the world is full of cheats and swindling impositions?" Yes. But secret orders are sworn swindlers. They make religion sanction crime. The Mason swears to have his "throat cut; and in the seventh degree, swears to conceal the criminal who cuts throats. And your Temple is a feeder of tha mill!

Do you say, "Needn't tell me that. Masons are as good as their neighbors. They never would do such things." Then why swear them to do it? But if you will come down to Monmouth Sept. 11–12, you will meet there the children of a man whose throat was thus cut, and as they and hundreds of good Pres bythrian people believe, cut by Masons for telling the truth about their lodge.

And now, my dear respected brother, let me entreat you as an American and Christian, to join the ranks of those whose religion and politics are Christ's who "In secret said nothing."

Very respectfully and truly
Your brother in Christ.

—Elder J. F. Browne will probably be at work in McLean county, Ill., during the month. He thinks that with a few weeks labor a large county convention could be held in Bloomington, and a county society formed. He spoke in Bloomington on the 10th and 11th, and had several lectures engaged in the vicinity, from which we hope to hear soon.

—Bro. Alexander Thomson of the N. C. A. Board of Directors, and a valued contributor to these columns, has returned from a few weeks sojourn on Great Manitoulin Island in Lake Huron, with improved health. He fears, however, that the benefit is only temporary.

—Rev. A. T. McDill of the Christian Instructor, though he will continue for a time his relation with the paper, yet intends removing to Colorado for his own health and that of his family. It is announced that Rev. J. A. Collins, brother of the present senior editor, has become an assistant on the Instructor. The new editor has had some experience in the conduct of a religious journal and is, says the United Presbyterian, "one of the loveliest characters in our ministry."

—The Herald of San Jose, Cal., mentions the admission to the bar of that State of Thos. E. Kennedy, late principal of the High school of that city. Mrs. Kennedy is one of our esteemed Cynosure contributors, and his father has been from the first among the warm friends of our reform. The Herald says that after a rigid examination the court was satisfied of his superior knowledge of law, and predicts for him "a splendid future." The readers of the Cynosure who may need a business correspondent in California will find Mr. Kennedy honest and capable.

—Rev. J. C. Webster, formerly connected with Wheaton College, died at his home in Wheaton, August 13th, after an illness of some weeks. The funeral services at the Congregational church were attended by a large congregation. The sermon was preached by Rev. L. Taylor, a former pastor of the church. Remarks were also made by Profs. L. N. Stratton of Wheaton and F. W. Fisk of Chicago, in which the labors of the deceased in the anti-slavery and temperance reforms were eulogized. Mr. Webster was elected president of the first national convention of the N. C. A., held in Chicago in 1869, and presided during a part of that meeting.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

Paxton, Ill.

When at Paxton on the 17th inst., I learned that the meeting of the anti-secrecy State association held there four years ago, was followed immediately by a special and protracted effort on the part of the lodge to rally and recruit their forces. They were partially successful in strengthening the things that remained, but so far as I could learn from those who had carefully observed, but very few had been induced to join. Numbers had come in from surrounding small towns to obtain higher degrees, and some already started advanced to higher degrees, but very few if any, were known to have entered the mysterious caverns for the first time. Some gave it as their opinion that the craft were not prosperous although they seem to have in Paxton what is not found in many lodges, viz., a few respectable, moral, and even active men in Christian work.

Bro. Morrow of the U. P. church was not at home, but calling with Rev. W. W. Blanchard at his house on Saturday A. M., arrangments were made for me to preach on Sabbath morning, and notices were sent out into the country and circulated through the town. A good congregation gathered on Sabbath morning and gave excellent attention. I preached in the Congregational church, where union services were held in the evening, to a full house. I found Bro. W. W. Blanchard alive and active as ever in every good word and work, and am personally indebted to him and his estimable wife for help and attention to my comforts. A club for the Cynosure has been maintained here through efforts mainly of this good brother, who is instant in season, with prayer and efforts to push on the work. Bros. Bushnell and Mercer quietly maintain a position of opposition to the lodge and read the Cynosure with interest, but it is not in the nature of either of these estimable brethren to be aggressive in opposition to their neighbors for whose feelings they have great regard. I left Paxton glad that I had enjoyed another opportunity of speaking to so many of the citizens and trusting that my visit might be with profit to some.

The Fellowship of Saints.

Fond du Lac, Wis., Aug. 21st.—No "Grim Tyler with drawn sword" met me at the "outer door" of Ingram's Hall, and I needed neither mystic word to whisper through "a hole in the wall," or "potent grip" to gain admission to the "upper chamber" where a devout band of Christian worshipers had gathered. The Master led, by the Spirit, the Word, and Elder E. D. Warner, and there were no "upper seats" or "higher degrees," but one body in Christ Jesus. They tell me sometimes that secret signs, tokens, grips and pass-words help a man to friends when among strangers, but from such helps may the "good Lord deliver us."

Prayers were brief but fervent, and the tone of the meeting pre-eminently spiritual. Of course there was liberty for all. An abrupt expression that I made about the condition of the finally impenitent lead to quite a free discussion of the "two ways" and the future state of the wicked, which was, I think, profitable.

Bro. Warner is a young man of very superior ability, and wholly consecrated to the Lord and his work. He has been successful in gathering a band of Christians (sometimes called Wesleyans) who are "contending for the faith," and following on "through evil as well as good report," where a testimony against the lodge is sure to stir the "beast" in his stronghold and be accounted "imprudent" by such as call all the fish that come into their nets, with pieces of silver in their mouths, good.

I am waiting in the depot for the midnight train, and feeling greatly refreshed in spirit and strengthened for the tax on body and soul incident to two successive nights divided between depots and cars.

May God's rich blessing be upon this little band and their leader who, though but a mere youth in appearance, does "not shun to declare the whole counsel of God."

REFORM ENTERPRISE IN MISSISSIPPI.

Columbus, Miss, July 30, 1884.

The Convention of the Associated Churches of Christ met on the 25th of July at Hopewell Church, Lowndes Co., Miss. It was a meeting of more than usual interest. The lecturer formerly appointed had not been able on account of very feeble health to lecture often, but was willing to continue the work. In the discussion of secret orders, speeches were made by brethren Brown, Bonner, Tapley, Turner, and others. As among the speakers there were seceders from the Masonic fraternity, the Immaculates, a temperance secret order and the Workingman's society, they were able to show to the deeply interested audience the false pretensions and deep wrongs of organized secretism, from actual knowledge and experience, with great force and clearness. One of the speakers brought out very impressively the duty of leaving off not only the sin of secretism but all sin.

Rev. E. Tapley, J. Witherspoon, and I. Feemster were continued as the Executive Committee to employ and remunerate a lecturer. Rev. T. Brown and Rev. Joseph Brownlee, brethren whose praise is in the churches for straightforward uprightness and sincere piety, were appointed to take the lecture field.

It was again made obligatory upon me to collect funds for the lecture work. The money in the treasury is only $10.80. The greater number of the people among whom these lecturers will go are very poor and have no permanent homes. A great influence is brought to bear upon the colored people to lead them into secret orders. They are thus deprived of their hard earned means, and brought into subjection to designing men. The Associated Churches of Christ are sending out lecturers to keep the people free from the bondage of secret orders. Does not the Spirit of God prompt you to aid in this Southern lecture work? If so, your contribution will be gladly received and will doubtless do good.

M. Tapley.

THE HOME.

GOD KNOWS.

God knows—not I—the devious way
Wherein my faltering feet must tread,
Before into the light of day
My steps from out this gloom are led,
And since my Lord the path doth see,
What matter if 'tis hid from me?

God knows—not I—how sweet accord
Shall grow at length from out this clash
Of earthly discords which have jarred
On soul and sense; I hear the crash,
Yet feel and know that on his ear
Breaks harmony—full, deep and clear.

God knows—not I—why, when I'd fain
Have walked in pastures green and fair,
The path he pointed me hath lain
Through rocky deserts, bleak and bare.
kindly trust—since 'tis his will—
This way lies safety, that way ill.

His perfect plan I may not grasp,
Yet I can trust Love Infinite,
And with my feeble fingers clasp
The hand that leads me into light.
My soul upon his errand goes—
The end I know not—but God knows.

"ONLY MOTHER."

In one of the prairie towns of Northern Iowa, where the Illinois Central railroad now passes from Dubuque to Sioux City, lived a woman whose experience repeats the truth that inherent forces, ready to be developed, are waiting for the emergencies that life may bring.

She was born and "brought up" in New England. With the advantages of a country school, and a few terms in a neighboring city, she became a fair scholar—not at all remarkable; she was married at twenty-one to a young farmer, poor, but intelligent and ambitious. In ten years after the death of their parents they emigrated to Iowa, and invested their money in land that bade fair to increase in value, but far away from neighbors. Here they lived, a happy family, for five years, when he died, leaving her at the age of thirty-five, with four boys, the eldest nearly fourteen, the youngest nine. The blow came suddenly, and at first was overwhelming. Alone, in what seemed almost a wilderness, she had no thought of giving up the farm. It was home. There they must stay and do the best they could. The prospect of a railroad passing near them in time was good; then some of the land might be sold. A little money had been laid by—nothing that she ought to touch for the present. Daniel, the hired man, who had come out with them, and who was a devoted friend and servant, she determined to keep—his judgment was excellent in farm matters. Hitherto the boys had gone regularly to school, a mile or two away; for a settlement in Iowa was never without a school house. They were bright and quick to learn. Their father had been eager to help and encourage them. Newspapers, magazines, and now and then a good book, had found their way into this household. Though very fond of reading herself, with the care of her house she had drifted along, as so many women do, until the discipline of study, or any special application, had been almost forgotten. It was the ambition of both parents that their sons should be well educated. Now Jerry and Thede, the two oldest, must be kept at home during the summer to work. Nate and Johnnie could help at night and in the morning. The boys had all been trained to habits of obedience. They were affectionate, and she knew that she could depend upon their love.

One evening, alone in her bed room, she overheard some part of a conversation as the children were sitting together around the open fire-place:

"I don't mind the work," said Theodore, "if I only could be learning, too. Father used to say he wanted me to be a civil engineer."

"If father was here," said eleven-year-old Nate, "you could study evenings and recite to him. I wish mother could help; but, then, I guess mother's—"

"Help, how?" she heard Jerry ask sharply, before Nate could finish his sentence; and she knew the boy was jealous at once for her. "Isn't she the best mother in the world?"

"Yes, she is; and she likes stories, too; but I was just thinking, now that you can't go to school, if she only knew a lot about everything, why, she could tell you."

"Well," replied Jerry, with all the gravity of a man, "we must take hold and help all we can; it's going to be hard enough for mother. I just hate to give up school and pitch into work. Thede you shall go next winter, anyway."

"Shan't we be lonesome next winter?" said little Johnnie, who had taken no part in the talk until now; "won't mother be afraid? I want my father back"—and without a word of warning, he burst into tears.

Dead silence for a few minutes. The outburst was so sudden, she knew they were all weeping. It was Terry who spoke first: "Don't let mother see us crying. Come, Johnnie, let's take Bone and all go down to the trap;" then she heard them pass out of the house.

Desolation fell upon that poor mother for the next hour. Like a knife Nate's remark had passed through her heart. "Father could have helped!" Couldn't she help her boys, for whom she was ready to die? Was she only "mother," who prepared their meals and took care of their clothes? She wanted a part in the very best of their lives. She thought it all over, sitting up far into the night. If she could only create an interest in some study that should bind them all together, and in which she could lead! Was she too old to begin? Never had the desire to become the very center of interest to them taken such a hold upon her.

A few weeks after, she said, one morning at the breakfast table: "Boys, I've been thinking that we might begin geology this summer, and study it, all of us together. Your father and I meant to do it some time. I've found a text-book; by and by, perhaps, Thede can draw us a chart. Jerry will take hold, I know, and Nate and Johnnie can hunt for specimens. We'll have an hour or two every night."

The children's interest awoke in a flash, and that very evening the question discussed was one brought in by Nate. "What is the difference between limestone and granite?" A simple one, but it opened the way for her, and their first meeting proved a success. She had to study each day to be ready and wide awake for her class. They lived in a limestone region. Different forms of coral abounded, and other fossils were plenty. An old cupboard in the shed was turned into a cabinet. One day, Nate, who had wandered off two or three miles, brought home a piece of rock, where curious long, finger-shaped creatures were imbedded. Great was the delight of all to find them described as orthoceratites, and an expedition to the spot was planned for some half-holiday. Question led back to the origin of the earth. She found the nebular hypothesis, and hardly slept one night trying to comprehend it clearly enough to put it before the others in a simple fashion. Her book was always at hand. By and by she classified each specimen, and the best of their kind were taken to shelves in the sitting room. Her own enthusiasm in study was aroused, and far from a hardship, it now became a delight. Her spirit was contagious. The boys, always fond of "mother," wondered what new life possessed her, but they accepted the change all the same. She found that she could teach, also could inspire her pupils. They heard of a gully, five or six miles away, where crystals had been found. Making a holiday, for which the boys worked like Trojans, they took their lunch in the farm wagon and rode to the spot; and if their search was not altogether successful, it left them the memory of a happy time.

In the meantime the farm prospered. She did all the work in the house and all the sewing; going out, too, in the garden, where she raised a few flowers, and helping to gather vegetables. Daniel and the boys were bitterly opposed to her helping them. "Mother," said Jerry, "if you won't ever think you must go out, I'll do anything to make up. I don't want you to look like those women we see sometimes in the fields." Generally she yielded; her work was enough for one pair of hands. Through it all now ran the thought that her children were growing up; they would become educated men; she would not let them get ahead, not so as to pass her entirely.

Winter came. Now Daniel could see to the work; but these habits of study were not to be broken. "Boys, let us form a history club," was the proposition; "it shan't interfere with your lessons at school." They took the history of the United States, which the two younger children were studying. Beginning with the New England settlements, and being six in number, they called each other, for the time, after the six States, persuading old Daniel to take his native Rhode Island. "The woman beats all creation," he was heard to exclaim, "the way she works all day and goes on at night over her books." The mother used to say she hardly knew if she were any older than her boys when they were trying to trip each other with questions. The teacher of the district school came over one Saturday afternoon. "I never had such pupils," said he, "as your sons, in history; and indeed, they want to look into everything." Afterwards he heard with delight, the story of their evening's work. The deep snow often shut them in, but the red light shone clearly and bright from that sitting-room window, and a merry group was gathered around the table. Every two weeks an evening was given to some journey. It was laid out in advance, and faithfully studied. Once, Theodore remembers, a shout of laughter was raised when nine o'clock came by Jerry's exclamation: "Oh mother, don't go home now; we are having such a good time!" Five years they lived in this way, and almost entirely by themselves. They studied botany. She knew the name of every tree and shrub for miles around. The little boys made a collection of birds' eggs, and they began to watch closely the habits of the birds. It was a pure, simple life. It would have been too wild and lonely but for the charm of this devoted mother. Her hours of loneliness were all hidden from them, but she learned in an unusual degree to throw every energy into the day's work of study, and create, as it were, a fresh enthusiasm for the present hour. Her loving sacrifice was rewarded. Each child made her his peculiar confidante. She became the inspiration of his life.

English history opened a wide field to this family. One afternoon she brought in Shakespeare to prove some historical question. It was a rainy day, and the boys were all at home. Jerry began to read "Hamlet" aloud; it proved a treasure that brought them into a new world of delight Sometimes they took different characters for representation, and the evening ended in a frolic, for good-natured mirth was never repressed.

First of all a preparation had been made for the Sabbath. There was a church in this town, but at a distance of several miles, and during many days the roads were not passible. She had leaned upon Infinite strength, gathering wisdom through all the experiences. The secret of many a promise had been revealed to her understanding, and, above everything, she desired that the Scriptures should become precious to her children. She took up Bible characters, bringing to bear the same vivid interest, the same power of making them realities.

The lessons were varied by little sketches or reports of one Sunday to be read aloud the next. Of this Nate took hold with a special zest. None of this family could sing. She thought of a substitute. They learned the Psalms, much of Isaiah, and many hymns, repeating them in concert, learning to count upon this hour around the fire as others do upon their music. How many of these times came to her in after life—a vision of the bright faces of her boys, as they clustered affectionately around her.

Time rolled by. The railroad passed through. A village sprang up and the land was ready to sell. She could keep enough for her own use, and the boys could prepare for college. Thede and Nate went away to school. The old home was kept bright and pleasant, friends, new settlers, came in, and now there was visiting and social life.

Jerry stayed on the farm; Thede became an engineer; Nate a minister; Johnnie went into business. Theodore used to say: "Mother, as I travel about, all the stones and the flowers make me think of you. I catch sight of some rocks, and stop to laugh over those blessed times." Nate said: "Mother when I am reading a psalm in the pulpit, there always comes to me a picture of those old evenings with you in the rocking-chair, by the firelight, and I hear all your voices again." When Jerry, who remained faithful always, had listened to his brothers, he put his arms about her, saying tenderly: "There will never be anybody like mother to me."

She died at the age of sixty-five, very suddenly. Only a few hours before, she had exclaimed, as her children all came home together: "There never were such boys as mine. You have paid me a thousand fold. God grant you all happy homes." They bore her coffin to the grave themselves. They would not let any other person touch it. In the evening they gathered around the old hearthstone in the sitting-room and drew their chairs together. No one spoke until Nate said: "Boys, let us pray;" and then all kneeling around her vacant chair, prayed that the mantle of their mother might fall upon them. They could ask nothing beyond that.—Penn. School Journal.

STAND.

When you can do no more, stand, "Having done all things, stand." But beware how and where you stand. "Stand fast in the faith." Stand on covenant ground. Stand with face to the foe. Stand watching, waiting, victorious. "Stand still, and see the salvation of God." Stand not in your own caprice, or by human order. Even though Red Sea barriers lie across your way, it may be the will of God that you go forward without a halt. It is easier to march than to stand. It is easier to rush forward to the charge than to stand still and receive the fiery assault. The good soldier must be ready for both. They serve well, who march and fight for their king. But "they also serve who only stand and wait."—Sel.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

MAKE CHILDHOOD SWEET.

Wait not till the little hands are at rest
Ere you fill them full of flowers;
Wait not for the crowning tuberose
To make sweet the last sad hours;
But while in the busy household band,
Your darlings still need your guiding hand,
Oh, fill your lives with sweetness.

Wait not till the little hearts are still,
For the loving look and phrase,
But while you gently chide a fault
The good deed kindly praise.
The words you would speak beside the bier
Fall sweeter far on the living ear;
Oh, fill your lives with sweetness!

Ah, what are kisses on clay-cold lips
To the rosy mouth we press,
When our wee one flies to her mother's arms,
For love's tenderest caress!
Let never a worldly bauble keep
Your heart from the joy each day should reap,
Circling your lives with sweetness.

Give thanks each morn for the sturdy boys,
Give thanks for the fair girls;
With a dower of wealth like this at home,
Would you rifle the earth for pearls?
Wait not for death to gem love's crown,
But daily shower life's blessing's down,
And fill your hearts with sweetness.

Remember the homes where the light has fled,
Where the rose has faded away;
And the love that glows in youthful hearts,
Oh, cherish it while you may!
And make your home a garden of flowers,
Where joy shall bloom through childhood's hours,
And fill young lives with sweetness.

HOW JAMIE HATED ORDER.

When Jamie came rushing in from play to supper, his mother was obliged to speak to him about hanging up his hat; and when his hunger was satisfied, and he started from the table, she said: "Jamie, do not leave your napkin like that! Fold it, and put it in the ring. Has my boy no sense of order?"

"No, mamma," cried Jamie, rushing back to do as his mother told him; "I hate order! It's always hindering and interfering."

"Some people might say it was disorder, that is always hindering and interfering. For instance, had you folded your napkin at the proper time, you would not have had to come back to do it," said Mrs. Wright. She added, "I guess you love order as well as any of us, if the truth were known."

"No, mamma, I am sorry, but I positively hate order. What I love is to fly my kite—or to make a boat and sail it on the pond; and when it is dark, I love to come in and see you, and eat supper of huckleberries and milk, and doughnuts; but I just despise to be always folding or hanging up something."

In emphasizing his views, Jamie jerked the table-cloth so that the baby's tray and spoon went clattering to the floor. Then there were two more things to pick up!

"Still," said Mrs. Wright, "I think there are some kinds of order which you like."

"I am afraid not, mamma, not one."

"When you have played out of doors until the last minute, and you get into the house just as the clock strikes one, then do you mind dinner being all in order?"

Jamie smiled and looked a little sober.

"Yesterday, when Uncle Charles came to take you to ride with him, if you could be ready in five minutes—Uncle Charles who is so elegant—then were you sorry to find clean collar, neck-tie, handkerchief, gloves, hat, all ready for you to lay your hand on them?"

"Mamma?"

"Would you like to find yourself at school with holes in your jacket? Do you hate when you go up-stairs at night tired to find a bed made up comfortable?"

"Mamma, what do you mean?"

"That it is not order which you hate, but the trouble which is necessary to gain it. Ah, my boy! no one of us likes that; but ought not each of us to take a part of it? Or should papa or mamma and Bridget do all the tiresome picking up and 'fixing up,' while Jamie only enjoys it?"

Jamie put two arms around his mothers neck: "Mamma, you are great for explaining things, aren't you?"—Boston Beacon.

HOW A GIRL MAY ALWAYS LOOK NICE.

When I was a girl there was one of my young friends who was distinguished for "making her things last." Her dress, hats, gloves and ribbons were a marvel of durability. I used to wonder how she managed to make them so without their looking shabby, but I ceased to do so after I had visited her in her own home. The reason why her clothes wore so long was that she took such good care of them. Her dresses were brushed and folded away carefully, and the slightest spot on them was removed as soon as it was discovered.

Her hat was wrapped in an old pocket handkerchief, and put away as soon as done with, the strings and laces being straightened and rolled out most systematically each time. Her gloves were never folded together, but were pulled out and laid flat in a box, one upon another, each time they were used, the tiniest hole being mended almost before it had time to show itself.

But the thing that impressed me most was the care she bestowed on her ribbons. When making up bows she used to line the under part of the ribbon with white paper, and this not only prevented the ribbon becoming limp and creased, but it kept it clean, so that when the bow was soiled on one side she could turn the ribbon, and the part that had been covered came out looking new and fresh.

The girl married and brought up a large family. Her husband had to fight his way, and did so bravely, and was unusually successful, for he became wealthy. But his prosperity was due quite as much to his wife's care and economy in saving money as it was in his in making it.—Christian Chronicle.

A BRAVE LITTLE GIRL.

The following incident, related of a little heathen Bengal girl, shows what children in those far-away countries sometimes suffer for the sake of their religion.

A little girl came to school a few days ago with a severe bruise on her forehead, and on being asked by Mrs. M. what had caused it, would give no answer, but looked ready to burst out crying. But another little child, a relative, was not so reticent, and said that her father having observed that she had not done her "puja" for a great many days, asked her why she had so neglected her devotions, to which she replied, "Father, I have not neglected my devotions—I have prayed every day to Jesus; I do not pray to idols, because I do not believe in them." This so enraged the father that he seized her by the back of her neck, took her before the idol, and, having first reverently bowed before it himself, forcibly bent the child's head several times, striking it so violently on the ground that it bled profusely, the child bitterly crying the whole time. But she smiled happily enough when this was related in school, and said she did not much mind, adding, "I cannot believe that trees and wood and stone will save me."—The Heathen Woman's Friend.

One day a boy was tormenting a kitten. His little sister, with her eyes full of tears, said to him: "O, Phillip! don't do that; it is God's kitten." That word of the little girl was not lost. It was set on wheels; Phillip left off tormenting the kitten, but he could not help thinking about what his sister had said. "God's kitten, God's creature—for he made it;" he said to himself; "I never thought of that before." The next day, on his way to school he met one of his companions beating unmercifully a poor, half-starved looking dog. Phillip ran up to him, and before he knew it was using his sister's words, saying, "Don't, don't do that, Ned, it's God's creature."—Selected.

TEMPERANCE.

WHY THE SALOONIST IS UNPUNISHED.

Gentlemen, let me call your attention to one thing, and that is we must divorce the virgin daughter of temperance from the Christless lodges, as the lodges and whisky are indissolubly connected, as much as the Siamese twins, for where you find Chang you find Eng. Now then, all liquor dealers are lodge men, or nearly so, and very many temperance people are. Now what are the obligations, one to the other? It is, sir, first to warn a brother of all approaching danger if within the length of their cable-tow, which is three miles. Secondly, to keep a brother's secret as inviolate and sacred in his breast as with the brother who communicates them, murder and treason excepted, and left to the election of the brother receiving them.

Third.—When they see the signal of distress or hear the words accompanying it, to fly to assistance of the brother unless there is a greater probability of losing their lives than saving that of the brother in distress. And when is a man in greater distress than when under arrest as a criminal.

Fourth.—I furthermore promise and swear to espouse the cause of a companion Royal Arch Mason when engaged in any difficulty, so far as to extricate him from the same if within my power, whether he be right or wrong, taking upon myself no less penalty than having my skull smote off, my brains exposed to the scorching meridian sun, should I knowingly violate my sacred obligations of a Royal Arch Mason, so help me God, and keep me steadfast in the due performance of the same.

Now what must we expect when temperance men and saloonists meet on the level and part on the square. Gentlemen, I repeat it to you, you can punish a poor drunkard, but the render or seller you cannot.—L. I. Wicker in Oakland Co. Mich. Advertiser, Holly, Mich.

It has long been a wonder why brewers get so wealthy, while they constantly complain that they are selling their beer at cost. Since the business has been squelched in Iowa, a prominent brewer advertises that he will furnish the material and full instructions for making a barrel of good beer for $1.50. It sells by the barrel for $7.50.

The ease with which temperance law may be enforced when its enforcement is in the hands of earnest men is shown by the fact that six young men of Prince Edward's Island have banished every saloon from one county of 40,000 inhabitants. In a town in this county not a single arrest for drunkenness has been made in six months, and the docket of the last circuit court did not contain a single criminal case.

It seems that the Wells & Fargo Express Company sought to aid the whisky sellers of Kansas by bringing into the State liquor packages. The agent of the company at Garnet, R. S. Ayers, has come to grief, having been arrested on several charges, convicted and fined $50 and costs on each, and now, it is stated, the company is to withdraw its agency from the town because it is not permitted to violate with impunity a law of the State. And the Chicago Tribune denominates this effort to enforce law "prohibition fanaticism."

Thus our boys will be ruined so long as we permit the existence of saloons. The police of the Larrabee Street Station found a boy hopelessly drunk on the street Sunday night. Monday, when he appeared at the Chicago Avenue Police Court he was a complete physical wreck. His eyes stared wildly, his face was pale, and his hands trembled. There was every indication that he had the delirium-tremens. He gave his name as Edward Reddison, aged fifteen.—Chicago Standard.

The census of 1880 shows that the number of saloon keepers and bartenders in certain States was as follows:

Georgia	399
Kentucky	1,191
Maryland	1,276
Mississippi	323
North Carolina	171
South Carolina	200
Texas	1,259
Michigan	2,197
Iowa	1,858
Massachusetts	2,474
Illinois	5,775
Wisconsin	2,321
Rhode Island	445
Delaware	113

Twelve thousand British sailors in her Majesty's service belong to the Temperance Society, and there is not a single ship in the British navy on which there are not some of them practicing and recommending total abstinence. This encouraging state of things is due very largely to a Miss Weston, who has been working among the sailors for nearly twenty years. She has been instrumental in establishing five "Sailors' Rests," or homes for the sailor ashore, which are self-supporting.

The (Whisky) Champion of Chicago has published the following in several recent issues: "We have for sale a Compounder's Establishment, in the city of Chicago, manufacturing a dozen or more of the choicest bitters, cordials, fine liquors and other specialties used by the trade. The proprietor offers for sale all his machinery, stock, materials, essential oils, flavoring extracts and manufacturing receipts, together with the good will of the firm at a very reasonable price. He now furnishes over 300 regular customers. The services of the foreman, who is thouroughly acquainted with the manufacture, and has the whole management of the business, can be secured upon moderate terms. Not less than $3,000 cash required. For further information apply to the publisher of the Champion." The "stock" of this establishment is suggestive of the stuff used in making Chicago whisky, and there is no reason to think that this is any less pure than that generally sold the country over.

It is easy to decide which of the two young men was the gentleman, in the following story from an exchange:

On a Fort Wayne train approaching Chicago, there was a short-statured, straight-haired, copper-colored Indian, going back to the reservation after a trip to the Indian school at Carlisle, Pa. He wore a nice suit of clothes which fitted him badly, and a paper collar without any necktie. He attended strictly to his own business, and was unmolested until a young sprig came into the smoking car from the sleeper. "An Indian, I guess," said the young chap, as he lighted a cigarette. And then, approaching the son of the plains, he attracted general attention by shouting, with strange gestures: "Ugh, heap big Injun! Omaha? Sioux? Pawnee? See great father? Have drink firewater? Warm Injun's blood!"

The copper-colored savage gazed at the young man a moment, with an ill-concealed expression of contempt on his face, and then he said, with good pronunciation: "You must have been reading some dime novels, sir. I am going back to my people in Montana, after spending three years in the east at school. I advise you to do the same thing. No. I do not drink whisky. Where I live gentlemen do not carry whisky flasks in their pockets."

The cigarette was not smoked out, and, amid a general laugh, a much crestfallen young man retired to the sleeping coach.

THE CHURCHES.

—Rev. C. F. Hawley visited his home in Wheaton to attend the wedding of his daughter to Prof. E. G. Paine of Wasioja Seminary, which took place on Wednesday evening. This week he returns to his gospel work in New York State. His immediate appointments are camp-meetings in St. Lawrence, Cattaraugas and Saratoga counties.

—The United Presbyterian congregation of Paxton, Ill., are taking advantage of the absence of their pastor, Rev. T. G. Morrow, on a short vacation, to refit and enlarge the parsonage.

—Revs. T. P. Proudfit and R. E. Wilkin are familiar names connected with the Illinois State convention at Sparta, last year. One has just accepted a call to Taylorstown, Pa.; the other was elected moderator of the U. P. Presbytery of Southern Illinois.

The following from the Christian Union indicates, says the Free Methodist, the triumphant march of reform:

"Three colored children were received into Trinity church, Brooklyn, Connecticut, July 20. Just fifty years ago this month Miss Prudence Crandall, of the adjoining town, was put into a murderer's cell because she was found guilty of teaching a class of colored girls in her own house. Trinity church now stands on the site of the jail."

—The first Sunday-school in St. Petersburg, Russia, was established through the instrumentality of a lady teacher. It began with forty-three children on January 15, 1878. Now there are Sunday-schools connected with all the large churches, in which about 1,500 children are instructed.

—The children in Presbyterian Sunday-schools contributed last year to the Boards of the church $76,885, and to other benevolent objects $119,942, or a total of nearly $200,000.

—At the late Reformed Presbyterian an interesting report was made of the work of the National Reform Association for Christianizing the Constitution:

"Three men, Revs. W. J. Coleman, R. C. Wylie, and M. A. Gault, have been laboring throughout the year, Revs. J. Lynd, T. C. Sproull, W. R. Laird, J. S. T. Milligan, and H. P. McClurkin have labored in the cause from one to three months each. Rev. J. H. Timmons of the U. P. church also labored for eight months, with great success among his own people and elsewhere.

"We are able to report 272 lectures and addresses, 230 sermons, a majority of which were delivered in other than R. P. pulpits. 14 church courts were addressed. More than 30 newspapers published articles prepared by our agents on the subject. 23 conventions were held and one convention of the National Reform Association at Cleveland, Ohio. Hundreds of ministers and influential persons have been interviewed and many enlisted in the cause."

—Ben Hogan, reformed rough, spoke to a large audience in Farwell Hall, Sabbath night, on "Physical and Spiritual Culture." After the services the meeting adjourned to lower Farwell Hall, where Mr. Frost of Omaha, addressed the meeting, speaking in a highly eulogistic manner of Mr. Hogan and the good work he had done in Omaha. Mr. Hogan made a stirring address, and twenty-five persons were converted.

—The missionary steamer, Morning Star, was launched at noon of Aug. 6, at Bath, Maine. The launching was viewed by about 3,000 persons. Appropriate ceremonies were held in the yard, conducted by the Rev. Mr. Folsom. It is expected that the ship will be ready for sea Sept. 10th, and will sail from Boston for Honolulu.

—At the Congregational Club, of New York, Dr. Clapp said, among other evils of the present, one was the building of too costly churches. "Better build fifty churches for the poor than one $500,000 temple. I do not believe the Lord cares whether a church costs $10,000 or $500,000, but I do believe he cares whether there is one church or fifty churches.

—The Believer's conference for Bible study will be held Aug. 20–25 at Harbor Springs, Mich., about four miles from Petoskey and thirty-five miles from Mackinack. Among those who will be present to teach, with others, the following brethren can be mentioned: Major D. W. Whittle, President C. A. Blanchard, Professor W. G. Moorhead, H. P. Welton, and L. W. Munhall. Inquiries can be addressed to Mr. Henry Wright, of Harbor Springs.

—The Rev. John McCullah has just celebrated at Louisville, Ky., the fiftieth anniversary of his engagement as a missionary in Sunday school extension. During the half century he organized 1,000 union Bible schools, with 60,000 scholars. During the last thirty-two years he has superintended the missionary work of the American Sunday-school Union in the South. Mr. McCullah was a pupil of Dr. Thomas Chalmers in Edinburgh before coming to America.

—The tenth annual conference of the Young Men's Christian Associations of the world convened this evening. The opening exercises lasted two hours, after which Count A. Bernstorff, President of the Berlin Committee Y. M. C. A., delivered the address of welcome. The Count speaks English fluently, and having visited America is conversant with the American Association methods of work for young men. The Emperor William wrote the conference, expressing sympathy with its objects; regretting his health prohibited his meeting with the conference as a delegate and invoking the Divine blessing upon the convention. Count Bernstorff was re-elected President, and W. H. Seagram, of London, Secretary. The convention meets here on invitation of the Berlin Association and on the call of the Central International Committee, whose headquarters are at Geneva. Every arrangement has been made for the comfort of the delegates and for the sessions of the convention.

—The Rev. G. D. Maitra, pastor of the Free Mission church, Calcutta, baptized Poorna Chundra Bose lately, son of Mr. Raj Mohun Bose, who is a leading member of the New Dispensation and a brother of the well-known lecturer, Mr. Ram Chundra Bose.

—The pastors of the Church of Wurtemberg seem to be much pleased with the revised Bible. Forty-five of the forty-nine dioceses of the kingdom are busy with examining the advance copies, and it is quite probable that the revised text will be first introduced into that church, whose members are noted for their great love for the Word of God.

—M. Clermont Ganneau gives the following list of the archæological discoveries made in the Holy Land and Syria during the year 1883. They include a marble pedestal, ornamented with bas reliefs and inscriptions, which, it is believed, must have come from the Pagan temple, erected in the Græco Roman epoch, on Mount Gerizim; a Christian inscription, a Jewish sepulchre, and other remarkable finds at Amwas, now identified with Emmaus Nicopolis; a votive patan, or plate for Eucharistic bread, on the Mount of Olives; and various Roman, Greek and Arabic inscriptions.

—The revival in Japan still goes on. In some places it has roused strong persecution. In Komatsu a number of natives bound themselves by an oath not to become Christians; and, if any one violated his pledge, he was to give all his property to the others. The leader of the band has, however, become a Christian. The church at Akashi (American Board) has a daily prayer-meeting at four o'clock in the morning. In Osaka, ten years ago, there were seven baptized Christians. Now there are 350 in the Congregational churches alone.

—The liberality of Japanese Christians is illustrated by an item from Rev. D. C. Greene, of Kioto. He writes: I have just been looking over the subscription book for the Tamondori church building. I notice one subscription of two hundred yen, one of one hundred and fifty, three of one hundred, and six of fifty. The yen is about seventy-five cents. An aggregate of eighteen hundred yen is pledged by members of the church. These sums do not mean wealth on the part of the givers, but they do mean consecration. When we make appeals for outside help, we ask help for those who are ready to help themselves, and whose liberality is beyond, far beyond, the average of Christians in America.

—Rev. R. W. McAll writes from France to the American McAll Association: Notwithstanding all that your Christian liberality has enabled us to effect and all that the similar aid sent to us from England and Scotland, and afforded in France itself, has rendered possible, we are yet receiving constant appeals for the opening of new stations in towns and districts yet wholly destitute of evangelization. Hence we have need, dear friends, of your combined and persevering efforts to enable us to go forward, and thus to hasten the glad day when in every city and village and household of fair France the good news of heaven's mercy to a lost world shall be made known.

—The Royal Library in Berlin contains a valuable treasure in the possession of the identical Hebrew Bible which Luther used and from which he made his translation of the Old Testament. It is a copy of the Brescia edition of 1494, and Luther used it from his Wartburg days down to his death constantly. The book is full of Latin and German margin notes, written in the Reformer's handwriting, and there is no doubt that this is really his copy. Prof. Franz Delitzsch last fall closely examined the work, and in the Leipzig Kirchenzeitung, of December 28th, gives a most interesting account of the volume and its history. Its literary importance lies in the aid it renders in determining the depth of Luther's Hebrew scholarship, as well as for the explanation of some peculiar translations found in his version.—The Lutheran.

—A religious awakening has been experienced in Anderson, S. C., which has powerfully pervaded the entire community. The movement originated in the Presbyterian church under the preaching of the Rev. J. De Witt Burkhead, evangelist of the Presbytery of Eastern Texas, and continued for twelve successive days. The congregations continued to increase every day to the last. Sixty-three persons have been added to the Presbyterian church by examination and three by letter. Quite a number more, it is expected, will be added to the Baptist and Methodist churches. The whole meeting has been exceedingly quiet and orderly, though the religious excitement was and is thorough and deep.

—The Rev. P. Milne, a Canada Presbyterian missionary in the New Hebrides, gives a wonderful summary of progress in ten years in those islands. Ten years ago, Aneityum was the only Christian island in the group, and there were printed in the language of that island the New Testament and several small portions of the Old Testament; and now the whole Bible is printed, and the natives have contributed $8,500 toward it in arrowroot. Ten years ago, Aniwa and Futuna were all but heathen islands, with nothing printed in the language; now Aniwa is a Christian Island, the whole population attend church and school, and a good many of them are church members. On Futuna, about half of the population there regard themselves as worshiping people, and they have the substance of the four Gospels in their own language. Ten years ago it was not safe for missionaries in Tanna. Now the gospel is preached freely to thousands, and the New Testament has been translated into the language of the people. Ten years ago there was little of Christianity in Erromanga. There were not above eight or ten church members. Two years ago there were fifty church members, twenty-five of whom were teachers. A good many more have been baptized since then. The majority of the people are favorable to Christianity. The New Testament is nearly all translated. Ten years ago there were but two Christian villages on Efate. There are now five or six others partially Christian. Genesis, Mark, Luke, and the Acts are printed. Ten years ago Nguna, a small heathen island, about five miles north from Efate, was occupied by a missionary for the first time. Last year thirty-four adults and seven children were baptized, and there are now forty church members in full communion, and eight baptized children. Two of the baptized are chiefs, one of whom is the highest chief on the island. He had ten wives, but before his baptism he put them all away except one. Only about a third of the group has been reached thus far; but all the heathen islands are asking for missionaries. A hundred thousand people still remain in heathenism.

—The Watchman illustrates the power of persistent and prayerful effort by the following recital: "Some twenty years ago Mr. William Reynolds, then a young business man, between whom and the irrepressible young Moody an intimacy had sprung up, went into a neglected portion of Peoria, Ill., and organized a Sunday-school. He began with thirty-six members. Six years after he organized a church with twenty members. He and his family identified themselves with it. The school now numbers 600, the church 400. The church property, mainly paid for by themselves, is worth $50,000. This church has two mission schools of its own. The pastor of the church has remained with it from the beginning, and the Sunday-school has had but one superintendent, Mr. Reynolds. With the same enthusiasm of courage and of love, his wife is said to have given herself to the same enterprise. A remarkable change in the social, as well as the religious quality of all that section of the city is the result."

—The bishop of Liverpool, Dr. Ryle, is helping to solve the question, "How to reach the masses?" He preaches in the open air; in the great ship-building yards at the noon intermission, and among 14,000 carters, with their wives, children and babies, and to the men employed at large freight stations, oftentimes from 2,000 to 3,000 in one assembly.

—The Pacific mail steamer sailing from San Francisco, September 2, will carry thirteen missionaries for China. Eight of these are sent out by the American Board. Four of them with their wives are medical missionaries. Nearly all of the number are from the West.

—Of 2,141 missionaries sent forth into the heathen world by the Moravian church no fewer than 800 have died at their post. One of them, D. Zeisberger, has labored for sixty-three years with great success amongst the North American Indians.

—An interesting work of grace accompanied the labors of Rev. Dr. Guerrant, evangelist, at Frenchburg, Ky., during a series of services extending over eight days. More than sixty persons made profession of their hope in Christ, and a Presbyterian church was organized with sixty-eight members.

—Mr. John Evans, converted about the year 1763, was the first person who joined the Methodist society in America. He was awakened by a conversation at table about experimental religion with Mrs. Strawbridge. Thus the first convert of Methodism in America was led to a conviction of sin by the testimony of a faithful Christian woman.

THE
A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

What kind of a secret society is this? A New York dispatch of Friday says: "In response to the circular issued by General James E. Negley, Chairman of the Blaine and Logan National Union League, a meeting of the Executive Committee of that organization was held at the Astor House to-day. The meeting was held with closed doors. The object of the organization is to further the interests of the Republican National candidates." The Sovereign Grand Inspectors General of the Masonic order is the 33d degree and can have but a limited number of members. To accommodate others outside this number an honorary title is given, but neither official or honorary degrees are conferred except upon those who have by long and arduous service as Masons attained the proper degree of notoriety.

—In October a re-union of Masons of this degree will be held in this city. The honorary members are published as follows: Rev. O. H. Tiffany, 33d deg., [Methodist] Newark, N. J.; Rev. Clinton Locke [Episcopalian] Chicago; Rev. W. H. Jefferys, 33d deg., Camden, N. J.; Rev. John McLeish, Cincinnati, Ohio; Rev. F. D. Rickerson, Des Moines, Iowa; Edward A. Gilbert, 33d deg., Dubuque, Iowa; L. P. Hilliard, Chicago; I. E. Hardy, Alton, Ill.; Horace Fritz, R. E. Patterson, 33d deg., Wm. H. Baker, Dennis F. Dealy, John L. Young, Augustus R. The Inter Ocean:—The Supreme Council of Sovereign Grand Inspectors General of the thirty-third and last degree, for the Northern Masonic jurisdiction of the United States of America, has its Grand Orient at the city of Boston, in the State of Massachusetts. There is but one supreme council in any country but the United States, where there are two only. The membership is distributed among the different States of the Northern jurisdiction, one of whom is appointed deputy of the supreme council for the State in which he may reside, invested with sovereign powers in his district. Illustrious Brother John C. Smith, [Republican candidate for Licutenant Governor of Illinois] thirty-third degree, of Chicago, is the Deputy for Illinois. Hosmer A. Johnson, thirty-third degree; Vincent L. Hurlbut, thirty-third degree; Walter A. Stevens, thirty-third degree; Robert H. Foss, thirty-third degree; John C. Smith, thirty-third degree, are active members of the Supreme Council of the State of Illinois.

—The Masons of Washington City had a big funeral the other day. A giant named Dawson died in that city, who was over seven feet high and weighed 480 pounds. The body was laid out in the rear yard adjoining the house, where, under a large grape-arbor, the coffin was placed. The casket was of gigantic dimensions, being seven feet six inches in length, three feet wide, and two feet deep. It was of plain black walnut, with silver handles and trimmings, and weighed, exclusive of these, 270 pounds, making the entire weight of the casket and body 750 pounds. At a signal from the undertaker twelve muscular men stepped forward and raised the coffin from the rests, a choir chanting the Masonic requiem. In the alley was a funeral wagon, draped in black, and drawn by two white horses, this being necessary, as there was no hearse in the city or the country, so far as known large enough for the purpose. The coffin was put into the wagon by the efforts of fifteen men, and covered with the floral emblems.

LUCILE VERNON.

THIS is a pleasant surprise in many ways. The author is Rev. W. T. Meloy, of the United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and the book is published by the Board of Publication of his denomination. It is a love story, not "fascinating," but with so much of genial interest that the reader is in no danger of laying it down unfinished. * * * The moral purpose of the book is to describe and vindicate Christian character, in its more heroic aspects, and it is a success. We congratulate the author and the United Presbyterian Board of Publication on this literary lily of the valley.—The Interior.

"LUCILLE VERNON" is evidently not an ideal sketch, but the fictitious names used represent to a great extent real men and women of flesh and blood. The characters of many of them are by no means attractive, but are perfect counterparts of querulous, obstinate and parsimonious professors who are thorns in the flesh of many a pastor in all the churches. But as in all the churches, there were also good and true men and women at Lansington, who upheld and encouraged the pastor. * * * In its author will be recognized the worthy pastor of the First United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and a welcome contributor to these columns.—United Presbyterian.

It belongs to the class known as the religious novel. It is a love story written in the Pausy style, and so constructed as to teach sound moral and religious principles, in connection with quite an interesting narrative. Indeed, when the writer sat down to examine it, he commenced as a critic on the sharp lookout for blunders, but soon he became absorbed in the story, and forgot altogether his critical duties. He also noticed that when the members of his family commenced to read it, they had but little time for anything else until it was completed. Tried as a work of art by the practical test, it must be regarded as a success. Its influence will doubtless be good in correcting false views, and in helping the reader to sounder principles and to a better spirit. * * * Some may think some of the scenes depicted are not true to nature, but the critic would be likely to find, on inquiry, that the very incidents which he would select as unnatural are actual facts. "We often find that truth is stranger than fiction."—D. A. W. in the Christian Instructor.

The heroine, who becomes the bride of the pastor of the church at Lansington, is a wonderful exemplification of how a woman who is a true wife and help-meet may throw her life and energies into the great work of saving souls; aiding, by gentle words and sympathy, wise counsel and brave endurance, the husband having charge of a congregation where the Demon of Misrule held full sway. We follow with interest the history of the wife and husband through their hours of despondency and discouragement to the happy ending, where religion, harmony and peace have gained the ascendency and the good man and wife find their reward.—Pittsburgh Daily Telegraph.

FLAGG, author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story, accurately true to life because mainly a narration of historical facts. 384 pages. NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"There is no important history extant but has connected with it numerous other histories of which it was the initial point, or the dominating influence. The abduction and murder of Morgan set ten thousand secret springs in motion, as the surrender of the charters of so many lodges at that time, and the severing of their connection with the order of some forty thousand of its members indicated. This story is one of these histories, and is a collection of facts woven into a story. It cannot fail to be read with interest."—Free Methodist, Chicago.

"The republication of the Reform Story which run through the columns of the Cynosure for nearly a year is at last completed, and the book so anxiously expected by thousands of our readers has come from the press of Ezra A. Cook. The book is finely bound and fairly introduces the reader to the treasures within. The publisher has made occasional selections from Masonic works to verify the statements of the text; these make a helpful addition for some who can afford no more complete an armory of this kind."—Christian Cynosure.

"Our Anti-secret society friends are certainly entitled to great credit for their persistence in their efforts to expose and root out secretism. The object of the writer of this story is to present in its true light the crafty, unscrupulous and exceedingly hurtful influence of Masonry, the parent of all the orders."—Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter.

"In an incidental way the story tells much about the manner of conducting lodges and much about the spirit and methods of Masonry. The story covers the period of the abduction and murdering of William Morgan. The strategic position from which the author writes put a charm in the book, while it gives a good opportunity to show the workings of the order. We wish all the people would read it."—Telescope.

"It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."—Lutheran Standard, Columbus, O.

"The exciting scenes of the fall of 1826, at Batavia, N. Y., when Wm. Morgan was murdered by Masonry, are woven into the story so as to give the truth of History a setting of attractiveness. The forty chapters of the volume are soon compassed by the eager reader who begins the volume. This volume ought to be read and will be sought as its merits become known."—United Brethren in Christ.

"The story is intensely interesting and the author has succeeded in weaving into it a great deal of information in regard to this mysterious order, which is certainly startling if true, and he gives what seems to be undoubted evidence to prove his assertions. The book is one which should be read by both Masons and Antimasons."—Wayne Co. Herald.

HOME HINTS.

PASTE IN YOUR NOTE BOOK.

There is no remedy of such general application, and none so easily attainable, as water; and yet nine persons out of ten will pass by it in an emergency to seek something of far less efficiency.

There are but few cases of illness where water should not occupy the highest place as a remedial agent.

A strip of flannel or a napkin folded lengthwise, and dipped in hot water and wrung out. and then applied around the neck of a child that has croup, will usually bring relief in ten minutes.

A towel folded several times, and dipped in hot water and quickly wrung out and applied over the seat of the pain in toothache or neuralgia, will generally afford prompt relief. This treatment in colic works like magic. I have seen cases that have resisted other treatment for hours yield to this in ten minutes. There is nothing that will so promptly cut short a congestion of the lungs, sore throat, or rheumatism, as hot water when applied promptly and thoroughly.

Pieces of cotton batting dipped in hot water, and kept applied to old sores or new, cuts, bruises, or sprains, is the treatment now generally adopted in hospitals. I have seen a sprained ankle cured in an hour by showering it with hot water, poured from a height of three feet.

Tepid water acts promptly as an emetic; and hot water taken freely half an hour before bedtime is the best cathartic in cases of constipation, while it has a most soothing effect on the stomach and bowels. This treatment continued for a few months, with proper attention to the diet, will cure any curable case of dyspepsia.

Headache almost always yields to the simultaneous application of hot water to the feet and the back of the neck.

POTATOES IN THEIR JACKETS.

Should potatoes be peeled before cooking, or should they be boiled in their jackets? I say most decidedly in jackets, and will state my reasons. From fifty-three to fifty-six per cent of the saline constituents of the potato is potash, and potash is an important constituent of blood—so important that in Norway, where scurvy once prevailed very seriously, it has been banished since the introduction of the potato, and according to Lang and other good authorities, it is owing to the use of this vegetable by a people who were formerly insufficiently supplied with saline vegetable food.

Potash salts are freely soluble in water, and I find that the water in which potatoes have been boiled contains potash, as may be proved by boiling it down to concentrate, then filtering and adding the usual potash test, platinum chloride.

It is evident that the skin of the potato must resist the passage of the potash into the water, though it may not fully prevent it. The bursting of the skin only occurs at quite the latter stage of the cookery. The greatest practical authorities on the potato, Irishmen, appear to be unanimous. I do not remember to have seen a prepeeled potato in Ireland. I find that I can at once detect by the difference of flavor whether a potato has been boiled with or without its jacket, and this difference is evidently saline.—W. Mattieu Williams, in Popular Science Monthly.

—One of the small economies, which, if constantly practiced, will result in a large saving in the course of the year, is to purchase soap in large quantities and allow it to dry before using it. almost all the soap found in the stores is freshly made, and the great waste grows out of the fact that when soft it will rapidly dissolve in water. In the course of the Monday's wash a large part of the bar will melt away with no perceptible result, unless indeed, an unnecessary reddening and softening of the hands is taken into account.

—About the best way of solving the scrap-book question is to get a number of the long, flat boxes that spools of thread come in; into each of these put scraps relating to a certain subject, label the box in large, clear letters on the end, put these boxes on a shelf laid one upon another so that you can see at once what and where is the needed scrap. This is the simplest and best known plan, and is far more convenient than the scrap-book proper, or the envelope, and the gain in time from its practice is wonderful.

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE.

In Liver and Kidney Troubles.

Dr. O. G. CILLEY, Boston, says: "I have used it with the most remarkable success in dyspepsia, and derangement of the liver and kidneys."

A Tilt with Time.

LADIES in their attempts to baffle old Time are bound to receive some wounds in the encounter. These, however, they can conceal, as far as the complexion is concerned, by a timely and regular resort to the use of "Glenn's Sulphur Soap." Without obstructing the pores, or in any way injuring the health of the skin, it removes from the surface pimples, redness, and the various disfigurements caused by increasing age or exposure to the sun. See that "C.N. CRITTENTON, Proprietor," is printed on each packet, without which none is genuine. Sold by druggists and fancy goods dealers.

Hill's Hair and Whisker Dye, black or brown, fifty cents.

Prof. James A. Sewell, A. M., M. D., of Medical Faculty, Laval University, Quebec, states: "I have found Colden's Liquid Beef Tonic particularly useful in advanced stages of Consumption, Weakness, Dyspepsia, and all Nervous Afflictions. In pregnant women it has been retained when every other article of food was rejected. I can recommend it as convenient, palatable, and easy of digestion." (Remember the name, COLDEN'S—take no other.) Of druggists.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.
In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."
The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

IN BRIEF.

—A piper in a Northumbrian town was once asked if he could play "Within a Mile o' Edinboro' Toon." "Within a mile!" he exclaimed "Wey, maun, I cud play within ten yards o't."

—The changes of the level of the Caspian puzzle geographers. It has risen and fallen, at irregular intervals, since 1870, but was ten feet lower in 1830 than in 1870. In 1882, it was ten inches and a half higher than in 1830.

—The sources of our supply of lumber in Canada and in Michigan are disappearing quite as rapidly as in Ohio or New York, and long before the trees that we plant now have grown to a size for use, the prices they will then bring will prove it to have been a good investment from the beginning.—Dr. Franklin B. Hough.

—The total length of public roads in France is 18,750 miles, of which 7,250 are bordered with trees, while 4,500 more will shortly be planted, On the remaining 7,000 miles the nature of the soil does not admit of plantations. The number of trees already planted amounts to 2,678,603, consisting principally of elm, poplar, acacia, plane, ash, sycamore, and lime trees.

—The General Land Office report shows that 19,430,032 acres of public domain have been disposed of by acts of Congress. Of this 339,235 acres were Indian lands and 1,999,335 acres railroad sections. For these lands $11,713,883 have been received, The increase in receipts in 1883 over 1882 is $3,319,367.

—The Commissioner of Pensions reports 303,658 pensioners, of whom 38,162 were added during the year, while 20,997 were dropped from the roll, leaving a net increase of 17,961. The average annual value of each is $106.18, aggregating $32,245,192, an increase over the previous year of $2,904,090. Total amount paid out in 1883 was $60,046,009.

—Gen. Butler was once engaged as counsel for the defendant in a case where the prisoner was accused of manslaughter, and, in the course of his argument, based on the assumption of self-defense, he informed the jury that "we have it on the highest authority that all that a man hath he will give for his life." Judge Hoar, counsel on the other side, rose and demolished his opponent's argument by quickly saying that he had "long wondered what Gen. Butler considered the highest authority, and was very glad to have the question settled," and proceeded to read to the court from the book of Job: "And Satan answered the Lord and said, All that a man hath he will give for his life."

—The Rome correspondent of the London Times is authority for the following: A discovery of statues, busts, and other works of sculpture, almost equalling in number and importance those found in the atrium of the House of the Vestals, has just been made at a place called Il Sassone, situated between the town of Marino, on the Alban Hills, and the farm of the Frattocchia, where, at the beginning of the last century, the Constable Colonna was wont to receive and entertain the Popes on their way from Rome to Castel Gandolfo. At that spot the remains of a very extensive villa, ascertained to have belonged to the Voconia Gens, are now being excavated by Signor Boccanera. There have been dug out no fewer than eighteen pieces of sculpture, including statues of Marsyas, of an athlete, a faun, a genius, a Sylvanus, and a copy of the Laocoon—the first ancient copy of this group that has yet been found—five marble candelabra, a bust with a curious kind of Phrygian cap, a group of an eagle devouring a lamb and several pieces of marble, vases, and very fine bas reliefs. The Marsyas, the athlete, the bust with the Phrygian cap, and the eagle with the lamb all exceed life size, the Marsyas measuring three metres in height. The others are less than the size of life, and the copy of the Laocoon is smaller than the original.

—The Agricultural Department at Washington announces an improvement in the condition of cotton since last report, and that the corn average is higher than in any August since 1880. Oats have fallen off a fraction, while barley and buckwheat are up to the average. The prospects for large crops of tobacco and potatoes are favorable.

—Professor Stevenson, of the Smithsonian Institution, has gone with a party of explorers to the region of the cliff and cave dwellers to make a collection of relics, and curiosities, to be taken to the New Orleans Cotton Centennial Exposition. Explorations will be made in Arizona and New Mexico, and conducted in part among villages never before visited.

—The New Orleans postoffice has received a thorough inspection by a special commission, which reports that there is neither organization nor discipline; that mail-sacks were found made into hammocks or sold to junk-shops; that a son of the postmaster holds a sinecure; that the porter is a fraud, and that salaries should be readjusted at once.

In Germany, tests have been made in the use of dynamite for pile-driving, with promising results. An iron plate five inches thick was placed upon the top of the pile, and upon it a pound and a half charge of dynamite was exploded by electricity. It was driven into the mud as far as it would have been by a weight of three thousand two hundred and fifty-nine pounds falling upon it five times from a height of ten feet.

"SCRIP and STAFF."

BY H. M. HUGUNIN.

This new and attractive volume is now ready. It is composed of thirty nine chapters on nearly as many topics. Neatly bound in cloth with gilt stamp. Price 60 cents.

The Chicago Evening Journal of May 3, says:

The author of this little volume, for many years a working editor of the EVENING JOURNAL, has here presented us with a variety of topics of a religious character. Among the number we note "The Evils of the Sunday Newspaper," "The Divine Sanction of Church Organizations," "The Good Work and Government of Sunday-Schools," "The Bible in our Public Schools," "Fallacies of the 'Evolution Theory,'" "Chronology—The Age of the World," and "Labor and Laborers." Mr. Hugunin writes as an independent thinker, untrammeled by denominational alignments. His style, however, is marked by the vigor of earnestness and sincerity, and with these characteristics, and with a close adherence to Bible Christianity, his book becomes a suggestive aid to evangelical workers. In discussing the topics above named, as in others, he deals consistently with questions of public interest and great importance in the reform of individual and social evils.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

—President Arthur received the officers of the Greely relief expedition at the fifth Avenue Hotel, Thursday morning. Secretaries Chandler and Lincoln and General Butler were present. Secretary Chandler informed Commander Schley that the President had decided to appoint him Chief of the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting.

—Governor Murray, of Utah, has sent a telegram to Governor Bate, of Tennessee, thanking him for his efforts to bring to justice the murderers of the Mormon elders.

—The United States naval steamer Tallapoosa collided with a schooner off Martha's Vineyard, Mass., Thursday night, and sunk in two fathoms of water. Surgeon Clarence E. Black and George A. Foster, landsman, are reported lost. She was on her way to Newport to take on board Secretary Chandler and party.

COUNTRY.

—All the property of the Sprague Manufacturing Company at Augusta, Me., was sold at auction Thursday. What fifteen years ago cost $2,000,000, realized about $200,000.

—Eighty tramps took possession of Castleton, D. T., Tuesday, drove many families from their homes, and committed other excesses. Four of the tramps were captured by the sheriff. The others escaped.

—The body of William Whistler, of the Greely party, was exhumed at Delphi, Ind., Tuesday morning, in the presence of two physicians and his father and other relatives, and evidences of cannibalism were unmistakable.

—A fire at Roseburg, Oregon, Tuesday morning, destroyed property aggregating $100,000. Louis Zeigler, proprietor of the Metropolitan Hotel, while trying to save his guests, was burned to a crisp. The United States Signal office was consumed.

—The large brewery of C. Magnus, at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, was seized by the authorities Tuesday on the charge of violating the prohibitory liquor law. On the premises being searched there were found in the building 700 barrels of beer, which the proprietor claims to have made previous to the 4th of July.

—The New York Journal of Commerce Wednesday publishes a list of seventy-seven cotton mills that will stop two weeks or longer, with a capacity of 2,706,000 spindles and 66,000 looms, insuring a curtailment of 66,000 pieces per day, or 792,000 pieces in two weeks, mostly all brown and bleached goods.

—Tuesday evening a party of seven young men left Albion, N. Y., in a sailboat, since which time no tidings have been heard from them, and it is feared all are lost, as the lake was quite rough that night.

—Two freight trains collided Friday afternoon in the yard of the Pennsylvania Railroad at Columbia. Four cars filled with sheep and hogs were smashed. The wreck caught fire, and upward of 800 animals were killed.

—During a hailstorm Thursday afternoon several houses were struck by lightning in Lansingburg, N. Y. At Greenbush lightning struck the house of Clark Lape, and Miss Ida Lee, one of the inmates, was badly burned. The house of John Mattison, at Cambridge, was struck, Sarah Allen killed, and a daughter of Mattison fatally injured.

—The New York Independent, which has heretofore supported Governor Cleveland, in a double-leaded editorial this week bitterly assails the Democratic candidate for President, assigning as a reason its belief in the truth of the Buffalo scandal.

—Supports have been put under the girders which rest upon the piers which cracked on Saturday in the Government building. The architect says that there was great danger to the building, as, if it broke in any place, it would be difficult to tell where the damage would stop, as there are so many weak points in the building. It is said that measurements show that the building is several inches wider at the top than the bottom.

—The Streator, Ill., Sunday-school picnic excursion of thirteen coaches, carrying 1,000 people, was run into by a freight at the crossing at Kankakee Thursday morning. James Penn was killed, and Father O'Kelly of St. Michael's church of Streator was probably fatally wounded. Many others were seriously hurt.

—A fire broke out Wednesday in the Buck Ridge Mine slope near Shamokin, Pa., 1,000 feet from the surface, and, while men were engaged in drilling a hole for the purpose of turning a creek into the mine to flood it, gas suddenly poured in from the burning mine, and before they could escape seven men fell victims to the deadly vapor.

FOREIGN.

—The announcement that China would not declare war but would consider any further demonstration by France as such a declaration, was followed by an attack on Foo Chow by the French fleet last Friday. The arsenal and Chinese fleet were entirely destroyed by the French iron-clads, excepting two small vessels which escaped. The correspondents of the London papers describe the action of the French as savage in the extreme, giving no quarter, but shelling the fleet and the town after the Chinese had ceased firing.

—The Vienna Tagblatt states that a powder magazine and five government officers at Kasan Russia, were blown up by dynamite on the 14th inst., and that 100 persons were killed. The authorities had previously received an anonymous warning, but had disregarded it.

—The French Legation left Pekin Friday. Admiral Courbet was instructed to bombard the arsenal at Foo Chow, land a detachment of troops, and destroy the war materials and stores accumulated there, which are of immense value.

—A death from Asiatic cholera occurred in Birmingham, one of the principal manufacturing cities of England.

—Colonel Kitchener telegraphs to Cairo, Egypt: The Mahdi's lieutenant, El Hoda, attacked and defeated the friendly tribes at Merawe; that the corpses of those killed by the enemy, with their hands tied behind their backs, have been floating down the Nile past Debbeh, and that El Hoda is advancing to Ambukol to effect a junction with the other rebels. The dispatch states that El Hoda is only three days distant from Debbeh.

—Salvation Army riots occurred at Worthing, England, the disturbance being so great that the riot act was read. Dragoons from Brighton were ordered to Worthing, and succeeded in dispersing the assailants of the Salvation Army. Several arrests were made.

—The Nile is beginning to rise slowly, and it is now hoped that the plan of the English expedition to Khartoum can be carried out. Orders have been received to supply the expedition with stores sufficient to last six months.

—The Mudir of Dongola has a letter from General Gordon dated Khartoum, July 20. He says he is safe and everything tranquil, and asks for news of the expedition for his relief. He also says he intends to remain at Khartoum, harrassing the rebels by steamer until the expedition arrives. Gordon gives warning that the Nile cataracts are very rapid and dangerous at present. He adds the troops are well.

PHINEAS CHAPMAN of Farmington, Ill., a friend ninety-two years old, sends in eight campaign subscribers for the Cynosure. What a good example for our young men of vigor and activity!

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen. $3.50.

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM. MORGAN. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

General Washington Opposed to Secret SOCIETIES. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS:

THE QUESTION OF TO-DAY.

Some further arrangement being necessary for putting the new reform story into permanent form, we have postponed its publication in the paper for a week. Readers of the Cynosure will not be disappointed in their expectations of this work, and no one should fail to read it from the first. It is a story of the working of the "minor" orders, and soon introduces us into the mysteries of Odd-Fellowship. SECURE EVERY POSSIBLE CAMPAIGN SUBSCRIBER POSSIBLE THIS WEEK.

In the last year of the war General Burnside, then commanding in the northwest, suppressed the Chicago Times for giving "aid and comfort" to the rebellion. The paper had not long been in the hands of Wilbur F. Story, for Cyrus H. McCormick owned it during the Lincoln and Douglas campaign in 1860. General Burnside was overruled from Washington, though every loyal heart rejoiced when the traitorous voice was choked. During the decade following the war the Times was made the greatest news-gatherer of the dailies. It paid more for telegraphic reports than any other, and to accommodate its reporters it set the example and led the way in the expanded "blanket" sheet style, which other papers were constrained to imitate. Everything was wheat that came to the Times hopper. Scandals, outrages, divorces, seductions, everything that was horrible and everything that was vile was written up with disgusting particularity in its columns. It was a Police Gazette without the pictures. Decent men would forbid it their homes, and for a man to be slandered in its reports was almost an evidence of his honor. The man who made the Times the great organ of the slums and divorce courts is now a drivelling idiot and imbecile, and his young wife, his business manager and the lawyers are fighting to get the biggest pile of his millions.

Injustice and rapacity are making France hot-tempered and sensitive to protest. The republic of 1793 knew neither justice at home or abroad, and began that process of seizure upon foreign territory which culminated in the ambition of Napoleon. The ambition of France in Madagascar and Tonquin is marked with a jealous eye by other powers and the severe criticisms of the English press are bringing angry replies from the journals of Paris. Hatred of England has become rampant and Gladstone and the Queen are treated to abuse and scurrility. The expedition for the relief of Gordon is the pretext, but jealousy is the motive. England, in her days of Jingoism and foreign aggression, has given too many examples of colonization, so-called, to be forgotten. Bismarck, too, is appearing upon the scene, and seizes a strip of African coast which claimed protection of the British flag. The times make strange bed-fellows. Germany and France, the mortal enemies, seem to have an understanding against England, and even Russia is said to be in the coalition. Thus Beaconsfield's blustering brings retaliation upon Gladstone, whose peaceful policy may be maintained, let us hope, against the bullying of all the despots of Europe.

Archbishop P. J. Ryan of St. Louis wrote to the late meeting of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union in Chicago that he hoped the society would stand by the teachings of Catholic ethics, and not be drawn away by the fanaticism of prohibition. The Union was obedient and voted down a resolution favoring prohibitory laws; and all the eloquent periods of Bishop Ireland about legal measures against the drink traffic, meant nothing but license. The prelates of the Romish church, though they may use much flattering speech, evidently lead their followers no further in the temperance way than the legalizing of the liquor business under the restraints of a tax. They thus stop short of the end, just as in matters of religion they trick the soul with human inventions instead of pointing it to the Lamb of God only.

The same policy is pursued respecting secret societies. The Ancient Order of Hibernians is anxiously laboring for the official endorsement of the Catholic Council soon to meet in Baltimore. If any one does not believe the Hibernians are a secret society, and one competent to concoct and conceal within its lodges the most desperate of crimes, let them read the evidence given the world by the late renowned detective, Allan Pinkerton, in his book on the Mollie Maguires. At La Sallette, in southeastern France, an Anti-masonic League has been formed under the patronage of the Bishop of Grenoble. The Anti-masonry of this society stops short at a personal pledge to special religious observances and never to join any secret society. The inaugural ceremonies were high mass in the open air and the bearing of a large cross brought from Jerusalem up the mountain by barefooted men and women. Such appears to be the character of reform movements against the lodge and the saloon controlled by the Romish prelates. A work of more independent, evangelical and thorough nature is begun in Paris, which, although Catholic in origin, seems not to be controlled by the priests.

The horrors of the Greely Arctic Expedition, now sufficiently revealed by the examination of the remains of the members brought back in coffins, are made more dreadful by the statement that when the provisions were nearly gone a secret league was formed which seized upon the remnant and it was in the effort to secure his share that Henry, one of the crew, was shot. The Knight Templar demonstration over Lieut. Greely gives some color of truth to this story. If a part of the expedition were Masons, their dark oath bound them to each other, and such a conspiracy against the rest, horrible as it may seem, is not without confirming evidence in the records of Masonry. It is doubtful if the seven survivors ever reveal all the story of their three years' experience, and the government is evidently unwilling to make any investigation that will reveal the facts; so that we may never know whether to the horrors of cannibalism must be added a damnable Masonic conspiracy.

In spite of this repelling experience, another party is anxious to try the battle with fate in the ice-locked regions of the North. Melville, the surviving leader of the ill-fated Jeannette expedition is named as leader, and it is said more have already volunteered to go than are needed. General Butler in a speech the other day patronized further exploration. The North Pole, went on the demagogue speech, belongs to the United States, whose territory must soon include the entire hemisphere, poles and all. Men who are alarmed at Blaine's movement for the perpetuation of peace among the nations of North and South America may make a note of Butler's idea. If men are determided to commit suicide and choose the North Pole as the place to die, we cannot make a law to prevent them, but public sentiment may be so aroused on the subject that to suggest an exploration thither shall be regarded as an evidence of insanity.

A PIOUS FRAUD.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

The arrogance of the secret societies is unspeakable. They thrust themselves on public attention on all conceivable occasions and make use alike of the most sacred and saddest of seasons to advertise their orders.

The Sabbath is appropriated because people have leisure to witness their displays; and funerals, because respect for the memory of the dead brings together all classes of people. But what is worse, by false pretensions they decoy people into the support of what in conscience they condemn.

We have for a short time attended religious worship at the First Presbyterian church of this city. Last Sabbath it was announced that there would be a Gospel temperance meeting at that place in the evening. Heartily approving of such meetings we attended with our children. What was our surprise to see the presiding officer bedecked with the emblems of his order, and hear him announce that the meeting was under the auspices of Minnehaha Lodge of Good Templars, and that an opportunity would be offered to unite with the order. We were also told that by Gospel temperance was meant Good Templarism. This was followed by an address by Mrs. Belva Lockwood, which was able, as was to be expected, but had in it no element of Gospel temperance. After this came a very dramatic recitation by a lady, of which it may be said that it had nothing of the Gospel in it, and was wholly out of place in Sabbath evening service. I noticed that each of these ladies were addressed as "sister," and that they addressed the "officers, brethren and sisters." Of course it was not Christian brethren and sisters that was meant. We were also told that they expected to continue to use this church and its Sabbath evenings for similar entertainments, which determination, if it must be so, ought to be well advertised, so that conscientious Christians need not go to such a Gospel temperance meeting.

Our objections to Good Templarism are that it is a wholly unreasonable, inadequate, and improper method of promoting the temperance cause. It has a costly and cumbrous system of machinery wholly distasteful to those who are not ritualists. It has served to repel the more earnest and thoroughly Christian temperance forces and to put them in the back-ground. Wherever secret temperance orders have established themselves they have made the unjust claim of being the temperance organization, and often denounced as enemies of the cause those who could not in conscience adopt their methods. They have brought Christian men and women into intimate fellowship and under the control of a secular brotherhood conducted on purely selfish and worldly principles.

They have given their countenance and endorsement to a religious worship that was intended to include the devotees of all religions, and could not be distinctly Christian. They had been the warmest apologists for, and defenders of Freemasonry and other un-republican and un-Christian orders, and have been largely officered by members of these orders. The so-called minor secret societies have done more to resist the anti-secrecy reform than all the direct efforts of Masons and Odd-fellows. To all who regard this reformation as essential to the promotion of religion and the perpetuity of free government these minor societies are a most serious obstacle to the progress of the Gospel.

THE PROPHETS HAVE NO VISION AGAINST MASONRY.

BY REV. J. D. GEHRING.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The corresponding editor of the (Cincinnati) Herald and Presbyter, Dr. C. E. Babb of California, writes things worth remembering every week. He is very practical in his ingenious way of turning everything to account for the honor and advantage of the cause of religion. The subject of his last letter is, "Is the Young Man Safe?" Under this head he says:

"Our Sabbath schools are now studying the life of Absalom. He was a handsome young man; he had splendid abilities and opportunities. Yet how utterly he failed. Think of him thrown into a pit, with stones and imprecations heaped upon him! Many a young man who started in life full of energy, ambition and hope, like Absalom, has died as prematurely and as miserably. It is a good time, while the figure of this beautiful but vicious prince of Israel moves before us, to consider the perils of Young America, and to inquire how the youth of our country can be saved. There is no inquiry more important than this. Said a minister the other day: 'We have scarcely any young men in our churches, and few even in our congregations. We can get the little boys to go to Sabbath school, but when they are fifteen or sixteen they think they are to hig and too wise to go.'

"The statement is sad indeed. But is it exaggerated? Are not millions of young men in this country growing up without any settled religious principles, selfish and worldly, if not dissipated and vicious? And these young men are soon to control the destinies of society, the church and the nation. We older men must pass away from the stage of action; and the tendency of the age is to push us off before we die."

Then he goes on and points out, and comments upon the special perils that surround our young men: "Literature, business, politics and society." In the closing paragraph he says: "We can only hint at the perils of the young men of to-day. What is the remedy? Education? No! Our vicious young men are often well educated. The only way to save them is God's appointed way."

All he writes on this subject is good, excellent. But he has omitted to name one of the greatest perils to which young men are exposed. It is a thing to be classed among the mysterious that a man who is in the foremost ranks among the ministry of his church; noted for practical wisdom, culture and genuine piety, and by his labors doing great good, should forget, overlook, or neglect to notice the fact that one of the most powerful, one of the most dangerous "stumbling blocks" in the path of our young men, is Masonry. Right here, in this article of his, would have been the proper place to mention the fact. He is not entirely ignorant of the matter. He has had abundant opportunity to notice the tendency and effect of Freemasonry. It cannot have escaped his acute observation that young men are filling the ranks of the secret empire by thousands every year, and that these recruits are, almost without exception, the kind of young men mentioned in his article who are without any settled and definite religious principles. This being the case we find them possessed with high and artificial notions of life, ambitious, selfish and not over scrupulous about the means by which they may obtain what they are living and striving for. Need we wonder that such young men as these fall easily into the beguiling snares of Masonry?

Need we wonder that they very soon become arrogant and blatant in their denunciation of the church and of "inconsistent" church members? Need we be surprised that conversion, through the influence and power of the Holy Ghost, is an occurrence so extremely rare among this class of men, that when a case does occur the convert is no longer a Mason?

It has been said, over and over again, by zealous prohibitionists, that a man like Dr. Crosby can do, and does, the temperance cause more harm than a dozen brewers or saloonists. I believe that too. Likewise do I believe that such men as Dr. Babb, by their careless—if not criminal—neglect to investigate the system and tendency of the Masonic system before giving it their countenance and moral support, are doing many times more harm than a man like the one I mentioned in my last letter. (Grand Master Coffinbury of Constantine, Mich.)

This free expression of my views may seem, even to you, unnecessarily personal and severe. Let me tell you why I am so plain and pointed—call it severe if you please:

In a Herald and Presbyter of last year I find a whole letter, of two and a half columns (nearly), from the California editor, devoted to the performances of the Knights Templar assembled in "Grand Conclave" in San Francisco last summer. He gives a careful report of a "religious service" (!) held by the Knights in Mechanic's Pavilion, and a synopsis of a sermon preached on the occasion by the "Very Eminent" (!) "Sir Clinton Locke, D. D., of Chicago, Grand Prelate" (! !) "of the Grand Encampment of the United States."

Now, had C. E. B. performed only the part of a reporter, we might still have room to believe that he did not approve of the performance or believe in the great sham; but he leaves us not in doubt as to that, for he says, in closing the report: "I belong to no secret society, and yet I do not sympathize with opposition to them." * * * "And I see in the popularity of the Knights Templar, the influence of Christianity upon the age." (!) "The men who respond to such prayers, on bended knees, cannot be infidels," (! ?) "and we may hope that the Spirit of God will come to them as a living presence and power, while they use the forms of adoration and supplication which he inspired." All this, this noble man of God could coolly write down for the readers of a religious paper, after saying in another part of the same letter: "Many Knights Templar are members of Christian churches; but the majority of them on this coast are not."

"Knight Templarism," he says a little further on, "is Masonry Christianized." (!)

Is it not strange that a man of profound learning, and a theologian of the first rank, should write such illogical nonsense as that? "Knight Templarism is Masonry Christianized," and yet, it must be confessed, the majority on the Pacific Coast are not Christians! And, what is still more against his declaration, the majority of these "Christianized" Masons everywhere are not Christians.

Moreover, this good, but sadly deluded D. D. ought to inform himself of the fact that a large minority—if not a majority—of these uninformed and drilled military "Christians" are, not only no Christians, but active, bitter and relentless enemies of the Cross of Christ. And, being such, they are, as can be conclusively proven from the Knights Templar ritual and solemn obligation, "perjured wretches." They are false to their oath. They are not honorable men. They cannot be trusted, even when they unite in their prayers and re-pledge themselves in "sacred conclave" assembled.

Men of influence in the church commit a great sin when they encourage our young men to unite with an order which is continually proving itself to be an enemy and a rival of the church of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Another cause of my indignation is the fact that our popular religious journals never allow a sentence, adverse to Masonry, to appear in their columns; but they will print, to almost any extent of space, such sickening flattery as that above alluded to. Masonry, it seems, has a monopoly of "Free Speech."

SHORT SERMON.

TEXT:—The fatted calf.

MY BRETHREN:—If we interpret the Bible through a political spirit, or a Masonic spirit, rather than through the Holy Spirit, we shall make sad work of it. During the wicked war of the rebellion it became very fashionable among a certain set of politicians to find Biblical authority for Mr. Lincoln's criminal looseness in the parable which we have chosen for our text. The enemies of the Republic, who were assailing it with arms in their hands, were compared to a prodigal son, who had run away from "Father Abraham," and who was to receive forgiveness, favor, and a perpetual feast whilst engaged in throwing up breast-works and firing cannon against the United States.

We know that according to the parable the father forgave a repentant son, but reserved what remained of the inheritance for the loyal son to whom it belonged, and to which the profligate had abandoned all claim. But according to the interpretation which Masonic politicians put upon it, the Father goes over to the profligate son's side of the question; takes the whole estate with him; joins in with the profligate in riotous living, indulges in Credit Mobilier swindles, back-pay grabs, land jobs, Star Route frauds, Indian-war outrages, river and harbor schemes, "liberalized" pensions, false coinage, systematic illiteracy, Ku-Klux operations, Masonic Hall Associations, Grand Army demonstrations, etc., etc., and strives to deprive the loyal heir and supporter of American institutions of all his rights.

My friends, the profligate of the parable could never have gone to a wilder extent in squandering the patrimony than the Republican party have gone in squandering the Puritan vitalities of our American institutions. Sad work, indeed, it has been to identify the criminal laxness of the Republican party with the good old father of the parable. That party is far more like a profligate son that grows worse every day, than like a father who forgives a heedless fault. The idea was a very vague one, as all Masonic ideas are. The Democratic, slave-holding party seemed to personate the profligate son; the Republican party stood in the place of the good and virtuous son, while Mr. Lincoln, who let everything go at loose ends, was the good old, indulgent, forgiving father.

My brethren, if you interpret the Bible by the lesser light of the square and compass, instead of by the light of the cross, you will make sad havoc with moral truth; you will confederate with profligates instead of forgiving them; you will waste the substance of national banks; you will water stocks; you will rob your employers; you will present fifty thousand dollars of assets to meet five hundred thousand liabilities; you will arm yourself with concealed pistols to cherish your wives and sweethearts; and in the end throw Christian, Republican society into that chaos which breeds imperial government.

My friends, as you cherish your birthright as American citizens, never vote for the square and compass, nor for a party that has squared its moral duties by those mysterious instruments. SO MOTE IT BE!

LYING SPIRITS.

Our attention has been called to a late utterance of one of these. This oracular utterance is funny, false and vindictive, and found in the columns of a sheet published in California. It is funny, in that it classes the Masonic order among "close temperance societies" and claims that "the Masonic, Good Templar and other close temperance societies," have been defamed. The Masonic fraternity, a temperance society, close or otherwise! We have not met so huge a joke for a long time. But by the beer-sellers and beer-guzzlers who belong to the order—by the liquid accompaniments of Masonic feasts—by the hundreds of champagne bottles left around the encampments of Sir Knights—by the scores of whisky drinking prostitutes, who congregate as by affinity, where such gatherings are held, we protest against the institution being in any sense classed along with Good Templars or any kind of temperance societies.

But this oracle is not only false and ridiculous in its falsity, but in its spirit as toward Micaiah of old, it is exceedingly vindictive and intolerant. A few men met in Chicago in June last to give utterance to their sentiments; among them some of the tried temperance men of the country; men who were in this conflict ere this callow-temperance advocate had ventured to ally himself to this issue, or had dreamed that Masonry and temperance were at all synonymous. But these men were anti-secretists, and because they were such, this vindictive Baalite assures his readers that these men are in "Most virulent hostility to the most numerous and active body of prohibitionists and temperance people of the nation," and that the American party "has no sympathy or good will for the reform we seek. It is of the opposition." A more vindictive, false and foolish utterance was never penned, and though gratifying to the oracle himself, it will disgust honest men.

We are glad that the oracle has spoken aud has declared the spirit that animates such temperance workers as he represents. A true temperance man would rejoice in that any body favored prohibition, and that a prohibition plank was put into any political platform. But this man denounces old and tried temperance men, who have labored and suffered in the temperance cause; who have been known all their lives as temperance workers, of whom there has been no shadow of room to question their principles—as virulent in their hostility to the "most numerous and active body of prohibitionists and temperance people of the nation!" And all this because these men honestly believe that the secret orders are anti-American in their character, and un-Christian in their tendencies.

We would advise this snarling lodge man that we shall continue to advocate prohibition notwithstanding he would deny us the right, and shall vote for a prohibition candidate anyhow. Nor shall we object to himself nor as many red-nosed lodgites as he can influence, voting a temperance ticket. God carries on his work by such instruments as he can, and does not wait for such instruments as he would have. The scalawags of Israel went to David in the cave of Adullam and these were used to fight the battles of the Lord at that time, but they were not the men that stood with David in his house after the kingdom was settled to him.

We thank this oracle for this avowment of sentiment and feeling. He is a temperance man, but if his language means anything, it seems to us to mean that temperance interests must subserve lodge interests, and that men who cannot endorse secretism must be driven from the temperance ranks if possible. We know of nothing that the anti-secretists have said about the abominable pretensions of the lodge, that is equal to the pretensions of this Pacific Coast oracle. If this Masonic oracle thinks they are going to utilize the prohibition movement to their exaltation, they will need to get better timber into the institution. We are of the opinion that the convention to meet at Pittsburgh on the 23d inst., will contain among its members, men who are temperance men first, last and all the time, and who will not be twisted around the finger of any secret order.—Free Methodist.

GERMANY'S SABBATH.

"How shall we sing the Lord's song in a strange land?" Foreign scenes may enchant us, yea, hold us in a magic spell from day to day, but when Sabbath comes, the bonds are loosed, the necromantic charm dissolves, and the heart longs for the chimes of the home church bells, and that Sabbath calm and rest found alone in the home church. The magnificent cathedral, the glorious paintings, the chanting choir boys, the presence of royalty, the gloomy grandeur of antiquity,—none of these, which meet us so richly in the Old World, can fill the heart, far from home, reaching out to that familiar spot, hallowed by the most precious of life's experiences. Far over the sea, in the Sabbath hours, the soul cries, as the children of old, "How shall we sing the Lord's song in a strange land?"

This feeling reaches its intensity in the land known as "the land of skepticism." Alas, that Germany, so enthusiastic in celebrating Luther's memory, should know so little of the true spirit of that Word he delivered unto them! Yet this ardent, outer demonstration, with little conception of its true significance, is one of the characteristics of the German religious life. There is, in the national life, abundance of outer form,—far more than we see in America—but there is an evident lack of practical Christian loving. Nearly every citizen has been confirmed, is nominally a member of the church,—the form had been gone through, but the Spirit has never moved upon his heart. Think of a nation of church members and yet no holy Sabbath! The union of church and state necessitates much religious ceremony, but the irreligious life of the people stamps it as insincerity, as merely "the letter of the law." One Sabbath in a German family reveals how great the contrast to the holy day in the Christian families of America.

Where was the evidence of Sabbath in the house? At breakfast—always rolls and coffee, never more,—the gentleman of the house announced the programme for the day. We were to go with him to Potsdam to see the royal palaces and the many old historical relics, particularly those of Frederick the Great. It would be a fine walk, we could stop at one of the gardens for lunch, and then return by the evening train. It was a very pleasant picture, but we replied that we were going to church. In amazement he cried, "To church! Why, I thought you went there last Sunday?" It was true, we said, but we were accustomed to going every Sabbath. The whole family was dumbfounded, and it was simply impossible to make them understand the pleasure or the duty of a regular church attendance,—either for the sake of their own Christian growth, or of a reasonable service to the Lord.

The dinner was more elaborate, and wine took the place of the customary beer. What objects of pity we are daily, with our glass of water or cup of tea! In our family, grace is said at dinner—a rare occurrence in Germany. Our family is more religious than ordinary—the grandfather was a preacher, preached Mendelssohn's funeral sermon. After dinner it is a family law in the land to sleep. Later we have "coffee." Quite a company had gathered for this. They were quite gay, drinking the coffee and industriously plying their needles. What a remembrance of the Sabbath day to keep it holy!

Naturally we talked of the two countries. Our Sabbath, in Christian families, struck them with horror! To go regularly to church—to Sunday school—to read—to sing hymns!—not to sew—no parties, no dance, no concert, no theatre! How "langweilig!" (tedious). Yet they were all church members. We spoke of this. They were of opinion that we could not be a Christian nation if we did not compel our young people to be confirmed before the age of sixteen. Indeed, they were thankful that their parents had performed their duty, and that they were trained in religious instructions—thankful that Germany was a nation of church members. We ventured to question the sincerity of professions where lives were so irreligious, and to show our church system, which demands a conversion before confirmation. It was not possible to make them understand the very basis upon which our Christian life rests,—regeneration. What is the use of a nation learning, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," and then denying the confession in practical living?

Where was the holiness of the Sabbath evening? The streets were crowded; all Berlin had turned out to seek pleasure. Theatres, concerts, circus, gardens—all lower their prices, and give their choicest programmes on Sunday. From every corner there is a sound of music and revelry, and the nation is given up to pleasure. It is ancient Babylon, forgetting the Lord, who ruleth on high. This is the day for gayety. No newspaper appears on Monday morning, and although in America we say business demands the paper and its Sabbath labor, in Germany pleasure rather than religion forbids such Sabbath labor. The perfect abandonment to pleasure is amazing.

Has not America something to fear from such a people crowding to her shores? Hundreds of thousands, with such a training, such principles, are mingling with our nation, and will the religious and moral sentiment of the country be able to withstand their influence? The deep moral principles infused into our nation by our stern forefathers—what a debt we owe them, European life reveals—has kept us in these our early centuries—will it not be overwhelmed by this flood of lower life from the Old World? Let us be strong to resist this influence, and while our broad charity and free government bids us tolerate all creeds and nationalities, let us be true patriots and guard our country against the threatening evil of a lower moral life. Life in Europe opens our eyes to danger we cannot see at home, until its roots have found deep soil. Let us guard our homes and our country from impurity, and at the same time defend the liberty and beauty of our nation by a stern demand for the Christian Sabbath.—Emma L. Parry, in Lutheran Observer.

THE LODGE ARRAIGNED IN NEW BRUNSWICK.

The Daily Telegraph of St. Johns, New Brunswick, printed July 10th the following powerful appeal to Rev. Dr. McCrea, of that city, who had a few days before delivered an oration for the lodge, during a patriotic celebration. The letter was written by Rev. A. J. McFarland of the Reformed Presbyterian church, and is herewith reproduced almost entire:

DEAR BROTHER: Having carefully read and considered your oration delivered in the Mechanics' Institute, on Dominion Day, in praise of Speculative Masonry, will you suffer a word of friendly comment and criticism? You can the better afford me this liberty since your effort was received with such general commendation and applause. Allow me to say that while I admired the ability and shrewdness you displayed, it pained me exceedingly to see a ministerial brother, for whom I have learned to entertain a profouud respect, eulogize in such an unwarrantable way the order of Freemasonry. Your brethren of the lodge will doubtless be jubilant in that they have secured a minister of the gospel in your high standing to "sound the praises of Masonry." But this is particularly what I lament, that an institution which I feel is so unworthy of Christian favor and patronage should be able to point to your willing support and endorsement as an evidence of its respectability. It has ever been the ready reply of Masons to any objections to the order: "Surely it cannot be bad, or such good men as Rev. So-and-so would not belong to it." But, however this may in former times have satisfied to silence objections, the fact that many good men have left the order in shame and disgust, and have proclaimed to the world at the risk of their lives the true inwardness of the institution, renders people slower to believe in its goodness and nobleness.

I have long had, dear brother, a very decided and settled conviction that the order of Freemasonry is one with which no Christian, and much less a Christian minister, should have any connection, and your oration has only tended to strengthen this conviction. You say that on the platform of Masonry Jew and Gentile, Christian and Brahmin, can stand side by side. This is true, and pity 'tis, 'tis true. But what is the great leading principle in this platform, as stated by yourself? It is the "belief in God." Yes, but what God? You say, "The Creator, the Architect of the universe, the God of providence." But this, after all, is not very explicit, for the Brahmin claims all this for his god. So whatever you may have done for the Brahmin, I don't see that you have done any great thing for a Christian and an embassador of the Lord Jesus Christ, when you put him on a platform along side of a Brahmin who believes in and worships his heathen god.

You speak of the Bible as an indispensable article of furniture in every rightly constituted lodge. But I ask you what Bible? In these lands I know it is the Christian Bible; but what Bible does the Brahmin Mason use? Surely it is not the Christian's Bible. What Bible will the Mahommedan use? Will it not be the Koran? What Bible will the Mormon Mason use? Will it not be the Book of Mormon? Here, then, is a strange mixture. Brahmin lodges, Mahommedan lodges, Mormon lodges, and Christian (?) lodges, each using a different Bible from the others, and yet all learning alike the principles of the order.

Again I ask how it comes that a minister, and especially a Christian minister, can find anything "noble" in a sworn alliance on such a platform as this?

But you aver that your "system is permeated and throbs through and through with the spirit of religion," and you cite in evidence the prayers and worship of the lodge. Every well-conducted lodge begins and closes its proceedings with prayer. May I venture to ask you, as a Presbyterian minister, who I know believes in the Westminster Shorter Catechism, what is prayer? Is it not "the offering up of our desires to God for things agreeable to his will, in the name of Christ?" Can it be prayer to offer desires to God and ignore the name of Christ? Is it not indispensable to our right approach to God that we come in the name of Christ? I am sure that you and I have one faith on this point. Our common faith is formulated by our Saviour when he says: "No man cometh unto the Father but by me." "I am the door; by me, if any man enter in, he shall be saved." "Whatsoever ye shall ask the in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son." Christ is the one and only Mediator appointed by the Father. Man cannot come to God immediately. Our only way of access is through and by the merits of Christ. God is dishonored by prayers which are offered contrary to his appointed way. "He that honoreth not the Son honoreth not the Father." But Masons do not pray in the lodge in the name of Christ. Your platform does not warrant it. Your platform, logically, and of necessity forbids it. Masons are not required to believe in Christ. Your Jew brother, and your Unitarian brother, and infidel brother, to say nothing of the Brahmin, Mohammedan andMormon would not allow it. So it comes to this, after all, that your praying in the lodge is only and wholly a solemn farce. It is an insult to Christ. It is a dishonor to God. God does not hear Masonic prayer. Your order is indeed "permeated and throbs through and through" with something like religion, but I wolud not call it religion. Better call it senseless mummery or, better still, audacious blasphemy. How a Christian, and a Christian minister can consistently enter into sworn alliance with an order that thus dishonors Christ is something I cannot reconcile. I could not but observe, too, that in your oration as published, there was no mention of Christ, or even indirect reference to him. In this respect your address was truly Masonic in the strictest sense. Surely this was not intentional on your part. I cannot bring myself to believe, that you would knowingly bring dishonor to the Master we serve, that blessed Lord who died for us, and whose honor we should everywhere sacredly maintain. But pardon the allusion, when I say that as I read your address and saw the absence of any reference to Christ I could not help thinking of Absalom's exclamation to Hushai: "Is this thy kindness to thy friend?"

You refer to heaven as the "lodge on high" into which you and your brother Mason "hope to enter through the mercy of your God." Yes, and your Brahmin brother hopes to enter the Grand Lodge above through the mercy of his heathen god, and the Mohammedan brother, and Jew brother, and Unitarian brother, and infidel brother, and unregenerate brother, and all good Masons, whether they believe in Christ, Confucius, Mahomet, Joe Smith, or nothing, hope to go to heaven, to the "lodge on high," through the mercy of their Masonic god. So we are to understand that Masonry is a saving institution. But what are the conditions of salvation in Masonry? Not surely the conditions of the Bible, which as you and I believe are, faith in Christ, repentance unto life, and sanctification by the Holy Spirit. These cannot be the conditions on which Freemasonry proposes to save its members, for thousands of Masons in the world do not accept of the Christian's Bible. The teachings of Masonry on this subject may be summarized in one brief sentence, "Obey Masonic law and live." Salvation by Masonry is not salvation by the gospel. The teachings of Freemasonry are another gospel, in which there is no recognition of Christ and of the doctrine of the justification by faith in his blood. This must be so, since, as you say, the Jew and the Brahmin are on the same platform with you and share with you the hope of entering the "lodge on high," through the mercy of the Masonic god. I know that you, personally, do not believe that God shows saving mercy to sinners except through Christ; but how, then, can you address your Jewish and Unitarian and unbelieving brethren as those who are to be associated with you hereafter in the "lodge on high," as the possible spectators of the future progress of Masonry in this lower world?

Another great fundamental truth which you say enters into your platform, is the brotherhood of man. If I understand you correctly, you would represent the churches as sadly deficient in teaching faith in God and the brotherhood of man; for you claim that these tenets are the "strength of your order," and say, "when these aspects of life are set in the forefront of the churches, then, and not till then," do you expect, "that Masonry and kindred orders will be superceded."

But what does this doctrine of brotherhood, and boasted benevolence, as held and illustrated by Masons, amount to after all? It excludes all women, old men in their dotage, young men in their nonage, all deformed persons, in short it initiates none who are likely to become chargable to the order. And yet you call this a benevolent institution, and would bid the churches come and sit at its feet and learn, and see illustrated the great doctrine of the brotherhood of man. Here is a true picture, as I believe, of the Masonic idea of brotherhood and benevolence: Suppose a large family consisting of an aged father and mother, five full-grown stalwart sons, two daughters, woman-grown, several small children and a cripple son, together with a servant or two. Suppose these five able-bodied sons organize a mutual aid and benevolent society. Suppose the other members of the family apply for admission to this society. The aged father applies and they blackball him because he is too old; the mother and daughters apply and are told that women cannot be members of this society; the younger children plead for the protection of their strong brothers, but they are told they are too young. The servants are blackballed because they are too poor, and to the piteous pleading of the little cripple, these heartless brothers say they want nobody in their society that is physically unsound. Would not everybody say it is a misnomer to call such a society a benevolent institution? And yet such an unmitigated sham and fraud is the boasted benevolence of Masonry. Masonic benevolence is the refinement of selfishness.

He who is the most slow in making a promise is the most faithful in the performance of it.—Rosseau.

EXPERIENCES AT A MAINE WATERING-PLACE.

BY REV. HENRY T. CHEEVER.

The attractions of York as a restful watering-place for the thoughtful and appreciative, never tire. Beauty is here, by exquisite sunset, moonlight and sunrise; by ocean, river and land; by sea-worn crag and moss-clad rock, flower, field, forest, and hill-side; by verdant landscape of copse and meadow; by upland and lowland; by placid lake and blue mountain; by the mysterious yet cheerful in-coming and out-going tides, never monotonous, always fascinating, ever new and ever young. Beauty, as Wordsworth wrote in the Excursion:

> "A living pretenee of the earth,
> Surpassing the most fair ideal forms,
> Which eraft of delicate spirits hath composed
> From earth's materials—waits upon my steps;
> Pitches her tents before me as I move,
> An hourly neighbor. Paradise, and groves

The produce of a common day in York is beauty most soothing and satisfying. The ordinary course of nature in all its varying moods and phases, to those who look through nature up to nature's God, is suggestive, foodful and refreshing, without unhealthy surprise or startle. But, a few weeks ago, on a quiet evening of the sixth of August, there occurred a phenomenon in this beautiful York River never before seen by that traditional personage, the oldest inhabitant. At about half tide, between eight and nine at night, there came rushing from the ocean, as though in mad panic, a prodigious school of herring, reckoned at many millions. The sound they made was like that of water rolling over stones or shallows, or of a strong wind stirring the tops of trees. Visitors and people at a little distance from the river-side thought at first by the noise, that a notable dam had given way and that its pond was breaking loose. But on reaching the shore, behold, innumerable shining fishes leaping up into the moonlight, crowding the channel, dashing against the piers, striking and jostling one another; cleaving the flood and plunging into the mud on the bottom; flirting into boats that were out on the river; and capering every way in a most extraordinary manner, as if on a lark or a fright or frenzy, one could not tell which. Many were seen to fall back into the water and sink, but millions followed on, continuing for six or seven miles with the inflowing tide; passing under three bridges, covering all the coves and marshes, and leaving their dead in countless numbers caught and stranded by the returning tide, or sunk in deep water.

In the morning the river flats, rocks and marshes were piled with countless thousands, that looked from a distance like a shining pavement of silver or of white stones. Whether any appreciable number swam back to the ocean seems to be unknown; and the cause of their dying so largely is also in doubt. Was it from panic and fright by pursuing dogfish, that hideous monster of the deep? Was it from panting and suffocation (if asphyxia be possible to fish when in their native element) by being crowded in such numbers in the river channel and flats, when they had been used to the roomy breadth of the deep sea? Was it from concussion in the coast-waters by late torpedoes and dynamite? Or were they smitten with an epidemic or plague from the sewage of cities turned into the sea? Or did any noxious gases evolved in connection with earthquake commotions, have to do with this remarkable phenomenon? Here are proper questions for the scientific gentlemen of the U. S. Smithsonian Fish Commission to inquire into.

It is happy for inhabitants and visitors that the invigorating air of this salubrious region has not been poisoned by the putrid carcasses left to decay and become rancid oil and "gurry" on the shores and flats. The farmers gathered them for manure to their lands, but millions were left to rot in the sunlight, and to exhale their pestiferous odors in the surrounding atmosphere. Had there been an oil mill in the vicinity, one may think a small fortune might have been realized by at once collecting and grinding them up for oil and fertilizers.

It is but fair to say, as an offset to such temporary nastiness, that the cardinal flower, rosemary, evening primrose and golden rod, (the latter especially) are now smiling in all their superb beauty by bank and field, wayside, wall, nook and corner, compensating for whatever else is displeasing to sight and smell. I have seen a painting of the same by a native artist here, that is quite a master-piece of loveliness and truth to nature.

It should not pass unnoticed among the ongoings of this watering-place that a large sword-fish was recently captured off the Harbor, being harpooned from a pleasure yacht belonging to Dr. Town, the harpoon having its line attached to a barrel for a drag. A boat was then lowered to secure the game, but the fish plunged under it, and rising thrust his sword clear through the bottom, with no small danger to the two occupants before it broke short off. With help from other boats the prize was then lanced, taken, and forthwith served up at the various hotels and boarding houses with no little satisfaction, as your correspondent can testify,—one of the most flavorous and solid products of the sea.

A still larger marine monster by this name has since been taken by local fishermen off Boon Island Light, which I have myself seen and examined, weighing by estimate five hundred pounds, with a sword-blade three and a-half feet long, and measuring nearly twelve feet from the tip of the sword to the flukes. The eye is full and exactly round, and considerably larger than that of an ox. The ear is small, the fins, three in number, beside the flukes. The lower jaw is without teeth, set on hinges two and a-half feet back from the sword, pointed, not rounded, and of the same bony material, lined inside with a membrane like the coarsest and sharpest sand-paper, that doubtlessly aids in tearing and swallowing prey. The sword, which is a prolongation of the upper jaw, strikes and thrashes both up and down and sidewise, and thrusts endwise with a poke that penetrates like steel.

I can henceforth believe all the fishermen's stories about the encounters of this nimble, armed creature with the enormous whale. And if the hardy fishermen of Maine can tackle and take, as they do, sword-fish, dog-fish, and devil-fish, they can be trusted to make a final disposition of that worst of freebooters, the liquor-traffic, on the 8th of Sept. next.

The ministers of Maine, I am glad to say, of all denominations, are up to the hour. There has been, or will be an earnest plea for the Prohibitory Constitutional Amendment in every pulpit of the State. Beside the Methodist and Baptist ministers and the voices of visiting clergymen, the Congregational pastor of this ancient church of York, Rev. David Sewell, has devoted a Sabbath morning service to a very able and judicious argument and appeal for the ratification by his people. Such appeals to the intelligence and conscience of freemen without respect to party, cannot be lost, neither upon Maine nor upon the country at large. The eagle of victory is about to light upon the standard of Prohibitory Reform. Courage and confidence are all along the lines in the army of the East. The order is issued by Providence, Forward—March. Maine believes in moving and pushing for the kingdom with vim and enthusiasm, as her soldiers did in the late war. Prohibition flourishes by healthy agitation. Mobilitate viget, vires aequin't eundo. It says to its loyal champions what Horace Mann said to one of his friends, Be ashamed to die till you have won some worthy victory for Humanity.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

SAMUEL C. POMEROY,

OF KANSAS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,

OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

ILLINOIS POLITICAL CONVENTION.

An American Prohibition convention will meet at Monmouth, Illinois, September 11th, in the Opera House at 7: 30 P. M., and continue its sessions the day following. The opening address of Richard Haney, D. D., will be followed by other distinguished advocates of prohibition and reform. The object of this convention is to put in nomination a candidate for Governor and other State officers to be voted for on the American platform, and transact such business as may legitimately come before the body. All prohibitionists who favor and practice open temperance work are cordially invited to attend and co-operate in efforts to exterminate the curse of strong drink, and its causes and consequences in our State.

L. N. STRATTON, Chairman of the Illinois Committee of the American party.

A STATESMANLIKE VIEW.

[A letter from Massachusetts, written by a prominent supporter of the American party, gives so calm and comprehensive a view of the relations of Americans to the Prohibition party that we cannot forbear to print, though a private letter:]

The American party organization has a mission, to do a certain good; that must be kept steadily in view, and not think of disbanding or faltering until it is accomplished. It is not altogether a political organization, nor chiefly political. Voting is one of the ways we can bear a testimony against what we deplore in society, and this year is one of the important years for that work. Under usage and under law, we vote for a number of electors who are of the college which elects the President. These men have only a representative character. They stand for candidates. So we care little for these men, and look only to those they represent; and the nominees are in this indirect manner voted for.

This is why the character of the nominees becomes all important to us. If we can support St. John and Daniel, and add to their vote, what do we do?

1st, We bear a testimony against the liquor power; and 2nd, we support men not allied at this time (and never propose to be) to any secret lodge against which we labor. Now if we vote for them, they know distinctly, and all know, that it is for that reason. In this way we secure such nominees, or else they lose votes—which no party likes to do. Thus we put the lodge men in the background, and have moulded the party to our way of thinking and acting.

If it don't have this effect, then there is a split; and we shall have a grand occasion to show why they should not be supported, and our own ranks will fill up. If they welcome our support, they will be influenced by us, and the "lump" may yet be "leavened." God direct us.

MR. CLEVELAND'S LETTER.

As compared with others it has the merit of brevity, but alas! this seems to be its only merit. The Circumlocution Society that contrived "how not to do it," is rivaled by the astute Governor who manages how not to say anything definite, and yet make insinuations that, like the Democratic platform, can be variously interpreted. Recognizing the power of the trades unions he gives them honied words, which if they mean more than that the rights of the laborer ought to be strictly protected, are misleading and dishonest, and in any sense uncandid. What he says about immigration might have in it some elements of wisdom were it not that those who object to the immigration of Chinese, Italians, etc., do not do so on the ground of their unwillingness to become citizens, but rather because they fear they may become such. The hatred that would exclude the Chinamen would rigidly exclude him from becoming a citizen. Mr. Cleveland's plea is only a pretext. It is the same in character with the old negro hate that so long sustained slavery, only it is now transferred to Asiatics instead of Africans.

What the governor thinks of, and would do about prohibition, the great practical question of the hour, he does not distinctly tell us; but leaves us to infer from the following words which considered simply as truisms cannot be objected to, but regarded in the light in which they were intended to be understood, they are simply a plea for free beer and whisky. "In a free country the curtailment of the absolute rights of the individual should only be such as is essential to the peace and good order of society. The limit between the proper subjects of government control and those which are more fittingly left to the moral sense and the self-imposed restraint of the citizen should be carefully kept in view. Thus, laws unnecessarily interfering with the habits and customs of any people which are not offensive to the moral sentiments of the civilized world, and which are consistent with good citizenship and the public welfare are unwise and vexatious." Of course all whisky drinkers and sellers consider their habits as consistent with good citizenship, and that their own moral sense is sufficient restraint. When the Democratic platform protested against "sumptuary laws" it said only what all citizens say; but it meant to be, and was understood as opposing prohibition, and so with Mr. Cleveland. Much as Mr. Blaine's subsubserviency to the whisky interest is to be deplored it is altogether probable that Governor Cleveland's is greater.

H. H. HINMAN.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE—A REPLY.

CORTLAND, O.

The following are the objections of Bro. Foote in his article of July 10th:

1. "Unwarrantable inference from uninspired prophecy." As I have neither quoted nor made any prophecy, nor drawn inferences from such, I cannot see how this applies; and Bro. Foote must himself, perhaps, get out of range of Dr. Emmons' quotation. My argument was based on Gen. 2, 7, and 22—not prophecy. Only additional and contrary facts on this point, from revelation or elsewhere, can shake the argument.

2. "Your argument applies as well to ministers as to women." No, for the cases are not parallel in a single essential particular. Not in a single item, save that of putting his ballot into the box, would the minister's relations to the world, to society or to business have been changed. He was a man already, with every masculine employment in his natural sphere before he entered the ministry, and after he should leave it, should that become his duty, and with the duty of constant familiarity and contact with politics and every branch of business and class of humanity within his reach coustantly upon him, as a condition of knowing how to make his ministry effectual for them. Voting would neither add to nor diminish this task. He was purer than his surroundings, not because of his outward separation from knowledge of and contact with evil, but because of his constant inward union with God and knowledge of him and his Word, which destroys affinity for evil and produces a constant moral separation from it, however much one may mingle with it for its good—as Christ did while on earth. Here comes in a vital point—that the state is not made up of regenerated persons with unusual facilities for and motives toward knowing God and righteousness, but the opposite—which I shall be glad to discuss, perhaps, in future. There is thus no essential point of likeness between the situation of womankiud and the ministry with reference to politics. If voting would have taken his Bible or his God away, or would have separated him from them, then there would have been a parallel—and with all the zeal born of terror at the awful catastrophe impending, we should all have cried out against the ballot for ministers. (The word "political," inserted by Bro. Foote in my sentence quoted is entirely wrong, the meaning without that limitation being just what was intended.)

3. "The ability of woman as shown in church work proves her as capable of political duty as men." I do not deny woman's equal intellectual ability under equal circumstances, and generally superior spiritual tact—neither are these recent views with me. But to say that because this is so she can, in addition to the duties in those lines already upon her, discharge the same political duties as man, is to credit her with powers nearing Infinity, and to make a very improbable statement, and to beg the question besides. Her spiritual superiority is the very fact in question—how did it arise and will it continue permanent under the changed circumstances proposed? On this fact hangs the whole question, and it will not do to assume it as the basis of the argument. If woman suffrage is a good thing it ought not to fear the light of a fair and full discussion. It is the most important plank in the new platform, touching vitally as it does the foundation institution of earth, and it must have a full discussion. If it is right, others with myself only wait to be convinced before supporting it: otherwise we shall not. All of us would sooner vote for the perpetuation of the Masonic lodge than for the destruction of the family, and that is the simple issue before us unless the position of my previous article can be disproved. This no one, to my knowledge, has even attempted.

Yours for all truth,

JOHN D. NUTTING.

UNITE ON THE AMERICAN PLATFORM.

In a long editorial on "Political Duty," which we regret is so indefinite in its final conclusions, the Christian Press of Cincinnati will say in its September number some good things for reform politics, as follows:

We have no apology to make for writing on this subject. We believe it our duty, and it is the object of our publication to bring public opinion into line with God's law on every subject. God's law should be accepted as the rule of life in social and political, as well as in religious things. The voter should cast his vote for Christ just as truly as he gives his money to promote Home and Foreign Missions, and we regard it as much our duty to give light on this subject from God's Word, if we can, as on the other subjects. We say if we can, for it is often confessedly difficult to determine what is duty in the premises. Often all that can be done is to throw out a few hints which may aid each one to determine the question for himself.

There are now five parties before the people—the Republican, the Democratic, the Temperance, the American and the Workingmen's parties. Their candidates for the Presidency respectively are Senator Blaine, Governor Cleveland, Governor St. John, Senator Pomeroy and General Butler. And now concerning their professed principles, as found in their platforms: In all of them there are good things, and also things to which we cannot subscribe; and in others things probably true and right, but not of sufficient importance to place in a political platform. This latter remark will specially apply to the Temperance and American party platforms. These parties ought to have united and made the canvass on a few of the principles so admirably stated in the American platform, such as: "That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government. That the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks ought to be prohibited. That polygamy ought to be immediately suppressed by law. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen." This would have been a sufficiently broad platform for the present, and the other questions named in it could have waited for future recognition. As it is, the temperance people are divided into two parties, with several distinct principles enunciated, and can accomplish nothing. Thus the contest is narrowed down to the Democratic and Republican parties.

THE RELIGIOUS ELEMENT IN POLITICS.

An editorial in the daily Chicago Herald of last Thursday morning reads as if the editor had been profitably instructed from the pulpit and reflected something of the wisdom and moral conviction of the Gospel message. He speaks for St. John, but the argument is much more appropriate for the American party, its platform and candidates, as the Herald will doubtless agree after inquiry. The article is this:

The moral issue in politics has attracted a great deal of attention this year and led to some crimination and recrimination. Men who are profoundly religious have been splitting hairs for some time in the discussion of the divers degrees of immorality. We have heard from distinguished and zealous ministers and religious editors on this and that man's morality or lack of it. All have agreed that good morals should have a representative in politics, but there has not yet been any agreement as to the particular candidate which the religious element ought to support.

The Herald believes that its ecclesiastical friends have been doing themselves and some other people an injustice. The question with them ought not to be: How bad are the candidates of the leading parties? but, have we a candidate who stands for religion and morality? In their vacillation between Cleveland and Blaine many good men have lost sight of St. John. He is as much a candidate as any of the others. He is a national figure standing for a national issue. The platform to which he has subscribed begins by acknowledging Almighty God as the rightful sovereign of all men, from whom the just powers of government are derived, to whose laws human enactments should conform, and that peace, prosperity and happiness can only come to the people when the laws of the national and state governments are in accord with the Divine will." The campaign which he will make will be essentially a religious campaign. The movement whose representative in politics he is is essentially a religious movement. If he can make men temperate one-half of the work of making men Christians will have been accomplished. He undertakes to lay broad and deep the foundation of Christian character. He appeals to Christian men, homes and organizations for support. Is it not the duty of ministers of the Gospel to give him aid and countenance?

In accepting the Prohibition nomination for Governor of Michigan, David Preston, of Detroit, said: "The political party that will acknowledge God in all its platforms and in all its ways as the author and giver of every good and perfect gift, that party shall be my party and its God shall be my God." There is no uncertain sound about that declaration. He is not weighing nicely just how tolerable would be the condition of affairs with either Blaine, Butler or Cleveland in the White House. He sees no great difference in them so far as morals are concerned. He leaves to others the questionable task of sifting their private characters and passing upon the nature of their departures from the paths of rectitude. Not one of them is pre-eminently a Christian man. Not one of them is a candidate of a party which openly makes morality an issue and which ascribes to God the majesty and glory due him in its platform. Turning from these he gives his cordial adherence to St. John with an approving conscience.

Can great Christian organizations, ministers, doctors, professors and newspapers afford, when endeavoring to introduce the moral issue in our politics, to ignore the one candidate who comes in the name of the God whom they serve?

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOUTHWESTERN MINNESOTA.

Having spent a week in Martin county, Minnesota, I will attempt to describe this grand country. Having traveled from Canada to seventeen degrees south of the Equator, all things considered, I never saw its superior. It is picturesquely beautiful, gently rolling, interspersed with lakes of fine, clear water, from a quarter of an acre up to thousands of acres in size, and having shores of sand and gravel, containing fish of different kinds, in weight from one to forty pounds. Its soil is a dark sand loam; its subsoil from six to eight feet is marl; under this is clay. It is wonderfully productive. Its present corn crop is as good as it is in Illinois. Its grasses, both tame and wild, cannot be excelled. I saw on its low lands some that would turn off from three to four tons of hay to the acre, and these grounds yield two crops in a year—cut in June and August. It is not unusual for oats to yield from sixty to seventy bushels per acre, and sometimes to reach as high as ninety. Wheat is said not to be a certain crop, though this year it produced well. I saw as handsome wheat there as I ever saw anywhere. Potatoes and vegetables are grown of the finest quality, and without stint. Small fruits are natural and grow abundantly. I saw as fine apples as grow anywhere.

Though a degree and a half north of Chicago, it is eminently a stock country. The grasses are nutritious beyond what they are in Central Illinois, and cattle fatten better on them. This may be doubted, but cattle men drive from Texas to Nebraska to raise and fatten cattle. They incur this labor and expense, because a steer raised and fattened in Texas that weighs seven or eight hundred, if driven to Nebraska and raised there will weigh eleven or twelve hundred. Minnesota grasses have the same superiority. Cattle fattened on grass will hold good on hay made of this grass until spring. if well cared for; hence, stock raising is the idea of the country. Butter making is a staple business. There are three creameries in Martin county, and they go to every man's dwelling in the county daily and take his cream, and pay him by the inch for it. The price varies as the price of butter varies. It is now at its lowest, twelve cents per inch. The milk is fed to calves and hogs. Good cows, well cared for, have made fifty dollars profits in a season. One man had fifteen cows, and made fifty dollars on each cow. There are farmers who have lived here for twenty years and have large herds of the finest stock. They came poor and are now rich.

And what about society? It is as good as our average society in Illinois; and as I saw it, it will compare with our best. Rev. John H. Nason, pastor of the Congregational church in Fairmount, county seat of Martin county, will rank among our ablest ministers. He is in labors abundant, and visits every part of the county and preaches and lectures and teaches the young people to sing, and there is growing up a state of things more enjoyable than in many of our old settled communities. Such an opportunity of getting homes I never saw before. Unimproved land of the best quality can be had from $7.50 to $15 per acre. Improved farms can be had from $10 to $25 per acre. At Sherburn there are the best opportunities for cheap homes. They have a Congregational and Free Baptist church, a good school, a creamery, and all kinds of business, and the best of society. Should this reach the eye of any who want a home in one of the best of countries, you can write to J. R. Harnden of Sherburn, Martin county, Minnesota, and he will give any needed information or assistance.

Thomas and Leslie Hall live in one of the best sections of the country, and land of the best quality is to be had near them in any quantity. Regular preaching is maintained in their school-house. All this land will be taken up and double in value in a short time. It would surprise you to see the numbers who come, often one hundred in one day; and still they come, and I have not seen the first man who was not pleased with the country. It is a place for young, enterprising business men. My communication would be imperfect without a word about the climate. It is north. How about the cold? I saw numbers of people who lived in unplastered houses several years in succession, and they say they did not suffer. And many from Central Illinois said they did not suffer with the cold in Minnesota as they did in Illinois. And as for health it far exceeds sections further south.

WM. W. BLANCHARD.

CHURCH AND STATE.

As the natural world has its north nd asouth poles, so has the social world also two poles which are church and state. And while these two are in many respects opposed to each other, they are far from excluding each other absolutely. God has the government of this world administered under two heads, the law, and the Gospel. It is the duty of the state goverument to administer the law of God; and it is the duty of the church to administer the Gospel of Christ. These are the two olive trees because the olive oil to make the light comes through them. They are also the two candle-sticks. The state government is the candle-stick to hold up before the world of mankind the Light of the law; and the church is the candle-stick to hold up before a dying race of men the saving Lamp of the Gospel.

The church and the state are essentially distinct. They both receive their task from God, but that task is different in each. The task of the church is to lead men to God; it has to deal with their faith. The task of the state is to secure the earthly development of a people in conformity with its peculiar character: it has to deal with their actions. There are certain bounds traced by the particular spirit of each nation, which give it a local character, within which the state government should confine itself; while the church, whose limits are co-extensive with the human race, has a universal character, which raises it above all national and local differences. These two distinctive features should be maintained. A state which aims at universality will not suit the different climates, soils, and races of men; and a church whose mind, and aim are sectarian brings about its own destruction. Church and state are and should be forever kept separate.

GEO. W. STEWART.

ODD-FELLOWSHIP DYING OFF.

A dispatch from New York, August 19th, says:

"At the session of the State Grand Lodge of Odd-fellows to-day the grand master recommended the holding of funerals at night. He said less money ought to be spent on the dead and more on the living; that the order of Rebekah should receive more attention; that Odd-fellowship was decreasing in this city so rapidly that it was almost unknown in polite society, and he recommended the changing of the meeting places of some lodges from tenement houses and saloons."

Taken from any standpoint, this alleged confession of the grand master is of interest. The implication is that in the grand master's estimation Odd-fellowship was formerly well known in polite society. Now the question is, does he know what polite society is? He knows, or ought to know, that Odd-fellowship originated in conviviality, that is, this was originally its prominent feature. This fact is admitted by their own writers, with the usual remark appended, namely, that notwithstanding this unfortunate odor connected with its origin, it is rapidly being refined, and destined to accomplish a great work (a great work of selfishness, and the perpetuation of heathenish abominations, we suppose they mean).

It is also recommended that they "discontinue to hold meetings in saloons." A queer suggestion this, and it is certainly hardly in harmony with "friendship, love and truth;" it is rather a reflection on many of their members, who are themselves saloon-keepers. The day on which Garfield was buried occasion was taken to notice the Odd-fellow certificates in various store windows in reference to their being closed in honor of the occasion, and the revelation was shocking; namely, that they were seen more often in saloon windows than anywhere else. From a study of its history the cause of the decline of Odd-fellowship, bad as it is, can hardly be due to its degeneracy of morals, but probably to the light brought about by Anti-masonry, and probably it is due to the fact that the secret societies, from their being multiplied "like the frogs of Egypt," are getting improvements on the order of Odd-fellowship.

THE TEMPLE OF HONOR.

GRAND TEMPLE OF HONOR AND TEMPERANCE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS.
GALESBURG, Ill., Aug. 21, 1884.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—A copy of your paper has been sent me this week in which mention is made of the recent meeting of the Supreme Council Templars of Honor and Temperance, held in this city. Permit a few words in relation to that order to stand alongside of what is promised by your paper as a history of the same.

The order is neither political nor a church. It worships no false gods; does not assume to instruct in theology, leaving that for the church of Christ; follows no particular political party, but permits each of its members to vote as his judgment dictates. But, on the other hand, all who enter its portals must believe in the God of the Christian, and pledge themselves to do all in their power to overthrow the rum traffic.

The pledges of this order are as free to the inspection of those outside as to its members. It administers no oaths—simply pledging on honor and for life. The pledge itself is directed chiefly against the drink crime; and this order, in the work to which its time is given, needs no defense nor apology, as that work furnishes all that any locality where its temples are founded needs to show that it has no sinister motive for existence.

It is simply a well regulated and officered army, engaged in the battle against the domination of alcohol. It takes and pledges our boys at twelve years of age, and trains them in temperance work and thought. It invokes the aid of mothers, sisters, daughters and wives in this grand work. It is neither a "side show" to Masonry nor any political party. No man or party can or does claim it as his own. It is governed by the free votes of its members. It pays no living salaries to any of its officers. It antagonizes no Christian work or church. Its ritual service came from the brains and pens of some men eminent for piety. It does open and close its sessions with a service of Christian song, Bible reading, and prayer.

The presence of President Blanchard at our Templars' Sociable, Aug. 12, 1884, was emphatically a surprise and pleasure to all in attendance. It is a source of regret that we did not open our meeting that evening as is usual with us. We are thankful that Pres. B. was there to commend our sentiments—as he did do—and dismiss us with the benediction. Many of us expect to meet him in "that temple not made with hands, eternal in the heavens," where all our order's secrets and his shall be made known to all who shall gather there.

Fraternally yours, W. F. TAIT.

NOTE.—The above from Dr. Tait was received too late for the last issue. Some additional remarks will appear next week.

HE WOULDN'T JOIN.

INMAN, Neb., Aug. 18, 1884.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—A difficulty occurred here in the M. E. church between the church and two or three members, one of whom was a G. A. R. man sporting his badge. He got mad at a German who, too, had been a soldier in the "late unpleasantness," but who would not wear one of those badges from principle. The G. A. R. man, Mr. Harmon, called the other "a flying Dutchman," "a rebel," and, bearing his badge with one hand, struck it with the other and said, "That's what tells; you are too big a coward to wear it."

The question is, Has it come to this that a Union soldier who has served his country faithfully for years, and has an honorable discharge, must be called a coward and rebel because he will not degrade himself by going through the silly mummery of the lodge to gain the privilege of wearing one of those badges? If so, it is about time for the American people to look after their liberties. But I am thankful that the G. A. R. is not likely to be a success in this community.

J. MCCLEERY.

THE GREELY EXPEDITION.

What the public wants in Lieut. Greely's case, as in all others, is fact, not fiction. In order to elicit facts in this case it is important to know several things, viz:

First, were the whole party Freemasons, or were there some Christians among them?

Second, was there any discrimination shown in the selection of those who were to be eaten; that is, did the brethren prey on outsiders first, and on each other last, as they generally do in all other matters?

Third, is not cannibalism a logical consequence of Masonic doctrines physically, as it is morally, if these doctrines are thoroughly carried out? Could not the leading inhabitants of the Cannibal Islands be Freemasons, from the showing of Masons themselves? and, if so, what objection is there to Freemasons becoming man-eaters?

The attempt to throw responsibility for the failure of the Greely expedition upon any one but Greely and his party themselves, and the administration that employed them, seems to us absurd. It was Lieut. Greely's business to see that his base of supplies and his line of retreat were as secure as human agency could make them. There was money enough expended on the expedition to have given it all the success that it met with, without these horrid accompaniments. The expedition seemed to us from its beginning to be under the baneful influence of Freemasonry, which would be sufficient to account for its dismal termination. Let us know the facts.

OLD SOLDIER.

PITH AND POINT.

FROM A MEMBER OF THE ROYAL IRISH CONSTABULARY.

Until lately I looked on Masonry as a good and noble society, and in conversation defended them of working influence unjustly on behalf of one another (I am not one myself). The society is pretty strong in Ireland amongst the influential portion of the population, and for some time past I could not shut my eyes to the injustice worked by it in the force to which I belong. Members join it purely for the purpose of getting promotion, and they do get promotion before their more deserving and often better qualified comrades. This is only a sample coming under my own observation, but they expect far weightier influence in higher quarters.

Yesterday an acquaintance lent me a pamphlet called, "Thirteen reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason." I have read it and certainly it has opened my eyes about the craft. If I had means, I would send a copy to every police barrack in Ireland. I have learned the address of a society in America for the dissemination of literature relative to secret societies. I presume Masonry here and in America is the same. I would like a late, full, genuine, and authentic manual on the subject, without exaggeration, untruthful or doubtful assertions, so that I may be able to learn the truth about Freemasonry.

AN OLD MAN'S DOUBTS.

I like the Christian spirit of the Cynosure. I like its politics. I will be 78 years old on the 24th of August, 1884. When I heard of the death of Wm. Morgan and learned that Masons put an end to his life, I learned to hate Masonry, and I have hated it ever since. Though I do not hate Masons, and I do hate their works. I look at their works as a great curse to the church, and a curse in our courts, and curse to the world; and how a minister can belong to any secret combination and be a Christian is a mystery to me. I doubt the reality of their religion. —JOHN SWICKARD, Hope, Pa.

MASONIC MEANING OF DIRTY BUSINESS.

The Freemasons here have taken to meeting on the Sabbath to do their lodge work, drilling, etc., and at the same time three churches hold their services: but I do not know that any church members absent themselves from church to attend the lodge. We have a soldier here who says he will not join the "Post" because it is a secret society. A Freemason and member of the M. E. church, told me not long ago that it was "dirty business" for me to circulate Finney's book on Masonry; but at the same time he claimed that that book makes more Masons than it keeps away. If this is so why is it "dirty business" to increase the membership of so noble an institution? And much excited he said farther, "Perhaps you think you are a second Christ, and a martyr to the cause, if so, all right."—S. P. S., Jonesville, Mich.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. God alone can bring men out of the horrible pit and miry clay of intemperance. Vs. 1–3. Allusion is probably here made to the subterraneous dungeons into which prisoners were thrown by eastern despots, as in the case of the prophet Jeremiah, leaving them to perish suffocated with the mud and slime. The drink habit is like such a dreadful prison house from which none can come out but by divine help. Gough in his Autobiography gives a terribly graphic description of his own bodily and mental sufferings, which is but a picture of what is every day endured by thousands of wretched drunkards—"Cramps attacked me in my limbs which racked me with agony. Strange lights would dance before my eyes and then suddenly the very blackness of darkness would appall me by its dense gloom. Horrible faces glared upon me from the walls—faces ever changing and displaying new and still more horrible features; black, bloated insects crawled over my face; and myriads of burning concentric rings were revolving incessantly. . . . Utterly wretched and abandoned I have stood by the railway track with a vague wish to lie across it, drink myself into oblivion and let the cars go over me. I was but a young man, yet steeped to the lips in poverty, degradation and misery." "And set my feet upon a rock." It is little use to try to reform the drunkard until we can get him to plant his feet on "the firm foundation," the "Rock Christ Jesus." "He hath put a new song into my mouth," not the vile Bacchanalian songs of the bar-room, but hymns of praise to God. "Many shall see it and fear and shall praise the Lord." One reason why we should work for the reformation of the drunkard is because nothing so glorifies God and shuts the mouth of infidelity as the triumphs of his grace in "unlikeliest hearts."

2. It is the duty of all whom God has delivered from bondage to speak his praise. Vs. 9, 10. It is the first spontaneous impulse in the heart of a reformed man to go and tell what God has done for him. "I have not hid thy righteousness within my heart. I have declared thy faithfulness and thy salvation." This applies to any great evil from which God delivers us. If a member of a secret society finds out that it is hurting himself and others for time and eternity, it is his duty to tell how he has been delivered from the snare. And even if he never belonged to one, as soon as convinced of their evil tendency it is his duty to warn men. We can not "preach righteousness in the great congregation" and be silent on any form of prevailing sin. If we conceal our convictions because they are unpopular and may make us enemies, we are concealing that "loving kindness and truth" which desires not that any should perish from ignorance, but that all should know the right way and live.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

How does Solomon describe the drunkard's miseries? Prov. 23: 29–35. What is the duty of every religious teacher? Jer. 23: 28. Have they a right to conceal any portion of God's truth? 1 Kings 22: 14; Jer. 1: 7; Acts 20: 27.

LESSONS.

1. Believer, this is all Christ's song, but if you are in him, you have the fullest interest in it. For his sake God will bend down to hear your cry (v. 1).

2. If bearing the sins of others was to the Son of God a horrible pit, a miry clay, what must it finally be to the mere son of Adam who insists on bearing his own (v. 2)?

3. If we are planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection (v. 2).

4. A proper sight of Christ's work in his humiliation and in his exaltation is the source of pious reverence and faith (v. 3).

5. True happiness is missed by the followers of the proud and worldly, and is found and secured by those who trust in God (v. 4).

6. We need not fear that we shall ever on earth or in heaven exhaust the subject of God's plan of salvation (v. 5).

7. The only useful knowledge taught in the ceremonial law is, how Christ saves us (vs. 6–8).

8. An important part of the grace of salvation was in making the gospel so plain (vs. 9, 10).

9. Christ's love may be understood somewhat by what he voluntarily suffered in redeeming us (vs. 11–13).

10. It is terrible to have him whom the Father heareth always interceding against us—to have Christ's love become the argument for our punishment (vs. 14, 15).

11. It is sweet to think that our joy in salvation is God's glory (v. 16).

12. "But I am poor and needy." So are you and I, teachers and scholars. Let us join our prayer to his, and take his trust as ours.

ADDITIONAL PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

This Psalm has been very properly explained in the foregoing notes as Messianic throughout. It certainly speaks of the sufferings, the patience, the obedience, and the faith of the man Jesus Christ. Yet the Psalm so aptly describes the state of many a believing soul that it has always been employed to voice the soul's inmost wants. Can it be true that it expresses at the same time the experiences of Master and disciple? Yes, this is one of the most precious facts of our holy religion. "We have not an high priest who cannot be touched with a feeling of our infirmities, but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." "Both he who sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one." "In all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren." Are we tempted? Let us remember that our Saviour was tempted as no man ever was. Satan well knew what prize he had in the Captain of our salvation, and he rallied all the powers of hell to overcome him if it were possible. Are we lonely? He experienced a loneliness deeper still at the time of which he says, "Ye shall leave me alone." Do we suffer pain or mental anguish? What sufferings of ours can compare with the agonies of the garden and the cross? Let us come boldly to a throne of grace in all these times, and we shall obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need.—The U. P. Bible Teacher.

OBITUARY.

WILLARD UPHAM AMES, eldest son of Rev. W. W. and Mrs. M. M. Ames of Menomonee, Wis., was born in Springfield, Mass., Oct. 8, 1858, and died near Beaumont, Kansas, April 26, 1884, aged 26 years.

The subject of this sketch was from very early childhood remarkable for his filial attachment and obedience. He had a great fondness for reading, always choosing books and papers of a good and useful character. His general information was far beyond that of most persons of his age. Though merry and playful he loved work more than play. He seemed to realize that life is a matter-of-fact, earnest thing, and determined to fit himself for it. He cared nothing for questionable amusements, and though fond of hunting, fishing and swimming, never engaged in them without permission. He was always careful never to injure anything, and the choicest things of the household were safe in his hands. His parents could safely leave him in charge of the younger children without fear of mischief or disorder while they were under his care. When but a child he seemed to enjoy church and Sabbath-school, and would sit through two or three services without impatience or weariness. He never spent his time in the streets and public places, and was particular about his associates.

An intimate friend, a minister in the South, writes what was true of him from his childhood: "He shunned the society of the vain and sought that of intelligent Christian people."

When about fifteen he publicly professed faith in Christ, soon after which he entered upon a course of preparation for college, with a view to studying for the ministry; but the effects of an attack of meningitis a few months before obliged him to relinquish his studies for a year. He recovered and entered school again, but after six months it was evident that his health would not admit of a sedentary life. Shortly after this he received a terrible blow in the stomach which greatly impaired his digestive organs and resulted in aggravated nervous dyspepsia and general prostration in the fall of 1876.

He tried a change of climate the next summer, going to the hills of New England and to the seashore, but without avail. But after spending a few months in central Texas, he began to recover, after which a sojourn in northwestern Texas of about three years restored his strength and mental energy to a remarkable degree, demonstrating the possession, naturally, of a sound body and vigorous mind. But he never entirely recovered from the dyspepsia, being subject to spells of inflammation, causing at times great suffering, and which was doubtless the cause of the final and fatal attack.

During the last three years he had given his attention to stock raising, an occupation which he intended to follow permanently. It was admirably suited to his condition of health, and he developed a good capacity for the business as his affairs showed at his decease, and he intended to use the fruits of his labors to advance the cause of Christ.

In the spring of 1883 he moved to Kansas, Crawford Co., and in February last to Butler Co. On the 17th of April he was attacked with peritonitis and suffered intensely until his death.

It should be said of the deceased that as a Christian he was positive and aggressive. A year or less from the time he professed religion, when thrown into the society of ungodly men, while seated at table with them, he would not eat until he had bowed his head in silent thanksgiving, and by unswerving persistency changed laughter and ridicule to respectful waiting for the silent giving of thanks.

It is now said that his example and kindly remonstrances against profanity made a powerful impression on many a hard heart. An educated young man, then a skeptic, but since converted in a foreign land, frankly and voluntarily confessed that there was one argument for Christianity that he could not get over, and that was that Willie Ames, religiously brought up, was so different from all others around him.

The deceased was a hearty sympathizer with the anti-secrecy reform. He read much of its literature and distributed it to some extent, and gave his views whenever the subject was presented and occasion required. He had suffered much in youth on account of his parents' connection with the reform. When cautioned lest he should make enemies, he said, "I don't go around introducing the subject, but when it comes up I can't beat about the bush to avoid discussion."

It is a great joy to his sorrowing parents and only surviving brother, that the transforming power of grace had done so much for the departed one. They are comforted to know that though he died among strangers, devout men and women tenderly cared for him during his illness, and in the presence of a large concourse of people, gathered from miles around gave him a Christian burial and made lamentation over him. The Lord most graciously reward them.

CAMPAIGN RATE!

Four copies of the CYNOSURE until after election for $1.00, to one or different addresses.

The Old Man in Rassellas who supposed he governed the rain, has many descendants alive at the present day. God has a pillar of cloud to guide his children now as when they were in the Desert, and if they would only anoint their eyes with his eye salve they could see and follow it. But some see double, self and right. Some are timid and their heads swim. Some have "eyes full of adultery." The arrogant are rash like Saul and Uzziah. And all more or less lack the single eye and heart which fills the whole body with light.

THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW damages American morals by putting Mormonism and anti-Mormon Christianity on a level in its columns: and now, behold this old and venerable Review brings out Elizabeth Cady Stanton and her doctrine of divorce, which is in practice no whit better than Victoria Woodhull's doctrine of free love. This is not all. The North American chose for its champions of reform, Wendell Phillips while he lived, and men of like stamp, whose extravagances in regard to capital punishment, etc., injured and weakened their advocacy of glorious truths. By putting Elizabeth Cady Stanton on a level with Judge Davis, and concubinage or divorce at will on a level with Christian marriage, the Review is doing untold and unutterable evil. Free discussion is not fit for the open advocates of vice and immorality, and was never designed for them any more than common criminals can claim equal social rights with upright men. This course may be profitable for the North American, but it is disastrous to North America.

AMERICAN PRINCIPLES IN MICHIGAN.—The Prohibitionists of Michigan have nominated for governor an American in very deed. David Preston, a partner in the banking house of Preston, Kean & Co., of this city, whose junior partner has acted as auditor for the National Christian Association for several years, writes the following letter accepting the Prohibition nomination. Thus are the principles boldly set forth twelve years ago by the American party, then looked upon as fanatical, are now becoming the watchword of an hundred thousand voters:

TO ALL THE PEOPLE OF MICHIGAN:

Knowledge, wisdom, wealth, patience, parity, prosperity, power and peace be multiplied unto you. All of these may be secured to all our cities, to all our homes, in every heart. The Republican party cannot give them, neither can the Democratic or any other party. They cannot be purchased with greenbacks or gold. Yet all who desire may have all of them by asking; asking of Him who alone can give them. The political party that will acknowledge God in all their platforms and in all their ways as the "Author and giver of every good and perfect gift," that party shall be my party, and their God shall be my God. If the Republican party will do this, then I am a Republican, all of me; if they will not do this, and the Democrat party will, then I am a Democrat through and through. Neither of these parties has done this, they each seem to be afraid to say that right is right and wrong is wrong, that our father's God is our God. Because none of them have done this, and because of the adoption of the following plank by the Prohibition party on July 24, 1884:

"The Prohibition party, in national convention assembled, acknowledge Almighty God as the rightful Sovereign of all men, from whom the just powers of government are derived, to whose laws human enactments should conform, and that peace, prospetity and happiness can only come to the people when the laws of the nation and state government are in accord with the divine will."

Therefore, "with malice toward none, and with charity for all," their platform shall be my platform, their God my God—and if I shall be tendered the nomination for governor on that platform, I shall accept it, whether I receive twenty votes or 220,000.

DAVID PRESTON.

Detroit, Aug. 25, 1884.

DIMNESS.

"Last week the Washington American, one of the organs of the American party, favored a fusion with the Prohibition party, and the Cynosure, the other organ, opposed it. This week the Cynosure is 'willin,' but the American opposes."—The St. Louis National American.

The National American misapprehends both the American and the Cynosure; and is, or attempts to be, funny at its own dimness. The American party will doubtless vote for St. John and Daniel, and the Cynosure advocates it. But it will never give up or blink its opposition to lodgery as Bro. Walter does; not even for St. John. If St. John should, unhappily, go back on his declaration that he "stands on every plank of the American platform," then the Cynosure will go back on him as it does on Mr. Walter when he goes for the Republican party which sets down in silent contempt on the question of "submission," which is all the National American's stock in trade in the way of reform.

The facts are these: The National American was started as a Know-Nothing paper, and retains a tinge from the complexion of its origin. When Mr. Walter took the paper, he dropped out its secrecy; but, by his silence, secretes the fact that he has done so, or attempts to. Last winter, he avowed his willingness to go with the American party as soon as they had carried "submission of a constitutional amendment in Missouri." Now he fights for a party which despises and refuses his "submission;" and he has discovered that the American party "plays into the hands of the devil," by going for St. John and prohibition.

Mr. Walter is a good man; but supporting a party which despises his principles, blinds him, and makes him incapable of justice to Prohibitionists.

ST. SOHN, TEMPERANCE AND IOWA POLITICS.

FAIRFIELD, Iowa, Aug. 29, 1884.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Secretary Stoddard has borne to your readers the news that the American party in Iowa, by its convention just held at Washington, has resolved to go, and advise the National American party to go for Gov. St. John, provided that gentleman does not consider Masonic oaths binding; and, provided also, that he acknowledges, what every school boy knows, that Masonic lodge secrets have been revealed.

I consider that vote equivalent to an agreement to take Senator Pomeroy's advice to vote for St. John and Daniel. St. John stands on the American platform, the fifth plank of which demands that charters of secret lodges shall be repealed, and "their oaths prohibited by law."

Now to suppose a man considers those counterfeit oaths binding on his conscience when they are so criminal, in his judgment, that they should be prohibited by law, is simply preposterous; and to hesitate on the question whether Masonry has been revealed to the world would be weaker and worse still.

The Iowa convention wisely refrained from all mention of the secret temperance orders. They neither ask St. John to endorse or condemn these offshoots from Masonry. Thousands of voters have been drawn into these orders for the sake of temperance, who might resent a rude attack on them, but who will quit them as soon as they are enlightened. But to endorse them would be fatal.

I have just called on Senator James F. Wilson, one of the most popular men in Iowa. He is sanguine of the election of Blaine; and the nomination of Cleveland has certainly made Blaine's election possible, though scarcely probable. Iowa is one of the strongest Republican States. Yet, at the last State election the Republicans beat the Democrats and Greenbackers by only two or three thousand votes. Of course, if the Prohibitionists run an electoral ticket for St. John, they will draw off more than that number from the Republicans; and this ensures their defeat. It is said that the Greenbackers, headed by Weaver, have proved the hypocrisy of their temperance professions by trading with the Democrats for one-half the electoral ticket and part of the State offices if their coalition succeeds.

Then, it is also said that leading Prohibitionists (some women among them) are agreeing not to run a St. John electoral ticket in order to save the Republicans. But the American party has already nominated an electoral ticket, and, if satisfied with St. John's answers, they will poll a heavy vote for him if they are active and put speakers into the field. The American party will thus double, triple, or quadruple its vote in this State.

If Cleveland is elected in spite of the revolting revelations of his life and morals—and distillers, brewers, and saloon-keepers are not delicate about morals—we may be destined to have another Buchelor President by the fall of the Republican party, as when the double-dealing and fall of the old Whig party gave us Buchanan. But to vote as some talk of voting, for the Republican party in States like Iowa, and for a non-Prohibition, national party, by supporting Blaine, under pretence of temperance, would be like voting that one or two pigs of a large litter are lambs, in order to raise wool. J. B.

—Rev. J. Blanchard, after the Iowa convention, responded to a call from Roseville, Ill., to preach last Sabbath and give a reform address Monday evening.

—Secretary Stoddard was detained at Washington, Iowa, by a washout in the railway until too late to reach the Michigan meeting. He preached Sabbath day in the Wesleyan church, Wheaton, the pastor, Prof. L. N. Stratton, having been dangerously ill during last week. He is now, we are thankful to say, recovering.

—The American committee of the Bartholdi Statue of Liberty. to be erected in New York harbor, are sending abroad their begging circulars, asking the patronage of the public. This is unfair. The committee has licked the dust about the feet of the Grand Masters of Masonry. Let them go to the benevolent Hiramites and get their money.

—The early reports from the Iowa State Convention at Washington is cheering. We hope for a full report from the secretary for publication next week. A fraternal delegation was appointed by the political meeting to visit the Illinois Americans in convention at Monmouth next week. The members are Dr. J. N. Norris, S. Y. Orr, Rev. George Warrington, James Dawson and Miss Izora Norris. They will be heartily welcomed in Illinois.

—Elder Browne's lectures in Danvers, McLean county, this State, were well attended last week. Two of the lectures were in Mennonite churches. He speaks again three evenings this week in the same vicinity, before going toward Monmouth.

—The speech of the Washington Convention last February, "Free Masonry and Free Government," is again printed in a handsome pamphlet worth reading half a dozen times. Get and circulate this document among the reading, thinking people who are now indifferent. It presents facts which will arouse them. Price, five cents each, or $3 per hundred.

—During the National American Convention in June, Rev. George Warrington of Birmingham, Iowa, was arranging in this city for the purchase of a newspaper outfit. It is well known to the Cynosure readers that there has been a long struggle with the lodge in that place, and under such unconquerable leaders as Drs. J. N. and W. Pitt Norris Anti-masonry has gained the day. But the county papers have been subsidized against them, and hence the determination to begin publishing the Birmingham Free Press. Dr. J. N. Norris or Rev. George Warrington will receive subscriptions. Southeastern Iowa can afford to support such a paper as the Birmingham friends will issue.

—President and Mrs. C. A. Blanchard returned from the annual confcrence for Bible Study at Harbor Springs in Northern Michigan on Saturday. The health of the latter has been much improved by the salubrious climate of that region. They left the same day for Lake Bluff, north of this city, to attend the great Prohibition conference. St. John, Daniel, Bain and many other of the temperance leaders of the country are to be present and participate in this meeting which opened Saturday, to continue through Wednesday. Pres. Blanchard preached on Sabbath morning.

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved, 1st. That we are grateful to Messrs. Pomeroy and Conant for representing our principles as faithfully and efficiently as they have, and we honor their unselfish suggestion to the American party, to vote for St. John and Daniel.

2d. That we are unalterably in favor of the American platform and the American name.

3d. That we accord with the preferences of ex-Senator S. C. Pomeroy and will vote for St. John and Daniel and recommend the American party in other States to do likewise next November; on the sole condition, that further inquiry shall satisfy us that there has been no mistake, but that ex-Governor St. John does indeed stand on every plank of the American platform, and will be faithful to it, as he has ever been to his professions and convictions: and, to put this matter at rest, we request Pres. J. Blanchard or any member of the National Executive Committee to submit to ex-Governor St. John these two questions: 1. Do you regard your Masonic obligation as binding? 2. Do you acknowledge that the Masonic secrets have been revealed?

WASHINGTON LETTER.

THE INDIAN RING.

It was one of the conceits of Dickens that there was in London a Circumlocution Society, whose mission was to find out "how not to do it." It is pretty evident that the principles of this society have been adopted here in Washington, especially in the relations of the government to the Indians. It seems probable that there is an Indian Ring and its members are officers in such a society.

It seems that Willis A. Gorman was Governor and Indian Agent for Minnesota from 1853 to 1857. On Feb. 29, 1884, nearly thirty years afterwards, there was found to be a shortage in his accounts of $1,289, but on being referred to the District Attorney in Minnesota it was found that Governor Gorman and his bondsmen had been dead for several years, and their estates distributed.

Another instance is that of Rev. J. P. Bardwell who was missionary amongst the Ojibways more than thirty years ago. It has recently been found that there was a deficiency in his accounts of a few hundred dollars, but he, too, has long been dead, as also his bondsmen. Had these accounts been promptly attended to it is not improbable that both of these men would have made satisfactory explanations.

It is not improbable Mr. Isaac T. Gibson's accounts fell into the hands of this "Circumlocution Society." After serving most creditably for a number of years as agent, he lost favor with Indian department and was displaced. He spent seven yeasr and much time and money to get a settlement of his accounts, but instead, a suit was commenced against him for some twenty thousand dollars. After long delay this was withdrawn and the whole matter compromised by Gibson's paying one dollar. Confessedly, a considerable amount was due him, but then he did not belong to the Ring. He was not even a Freemason, or an admirer of secret societies.

Just now public attention is being called to Indian affairs in Dakota. Dr. T. A. Bland of this city, editor of the Council Fire and Arbitrator, visited some time since the Pine Ridge Agency with written permission of the Secretaries of the Interior. He was arrested and sent out of the agency by the agent, Dr. V. T. McGilcuddy, on the ground that his mission was calculated to disturb the peace of the agency and incite the Indians to hostilities. He claims too, that his life has been endangered by publications sent to the Indians of the agency.

To all of which charges Dr. Bland makes specific denials, and presents a long list of counter-charges against the agent. He also publishes a statement signed by nearly one thousand of these Indians, showing the peaceful character of his mission and reaffirming the charges of fraud, oppression, partiality, etc., made against the agent. It is hoped that these charges will be investigated; but if, as Dr. Bland asserts, there is an Indian Ring that takes bribes from agents and divides with them much of what is due to these wards of the nation, it is quite probable that the investigation will be referred to the Circumlocution Society. I should feel like joining in the cry of the Democratic papers, "Turn the rascals out," were it not that, like Æsop's fox, a hungrier swarm stands ready to devour the body politic.

GOOD TEMPLARS AND PROHIBITION.

The great temperance revival that has for the last year or two been carried on by the churches, reform clubs and (not least) the W. C. T. Unions, has been taken advantage of by the secret temperance orders, and they boast of considerable accessions to their numbers. They have an organ in this city, the Record, that strongly favored the nomination of McDonald by the Prohibition convention, but does not support St. John and Daniel. Within a week or two they have had numerous open meetings, and employed Mr. Penniman, a leading officer in the Temple of Honor in Minnesota. Mr. Penniman is an able and graceful speaker, and has doubtless done something to promote the temperance cause; but when he desired to organize a Prohibition club he could not get two Good Templars to meet with him for that purpose. He had to fall back on members of the American party, and with their aid such a club was organized, and will for the present have headquarters at 207 Pennsylvania Avenue, N. W. It is sincerely hoped that untrammeled friends of temperance will rally around it. In the meantime it is evident that Good Templarism is worth about as much to the cause of prohibition, as a fifth wheel is to a coach.

—Elder J. F. Browne, now speaking in central Illinois, spent the Sabbath in Streator. The first three days of this week he is engaged in Danvers, and he then goes to Warren county.

THE CENTRAL ILLINOIS CAMPAIGN.

Friends of the Cynosure:—I reached Decatur, Ill., Aug. 8. Saw some friends, but as there was no opening for lecturing I went on to Bloomington on the 9th. There I met H. D. Whitcomb and other friends. Bro. Whitcomb arranged to have me speak on temperance, on Sabbath afternoon, before the Washingtonian Society, of which he is president, and also to speak on the lodge question in Washingtonian Hall on the 11th. The audience at this latter meeting was small; several lodge men present. Pastor Sapper, of the Lutheran church, attended and spoke kindly to me of our work. He attended the exposition in Farwell Hall, Chicago, by E. Ronayne, given on the occasion of the visit to the city of the Missouri Lutheran Synod, a few years ago.

I have made head-quarters at the house of Bro. Whitcomb in Bloomington, while working in the country around, and have received much kindness from him and his family. Bro. J. A. Rouser also helped materially, and Geo. O. Robinson, Esq., is kind and interested.

Our old friend, W. C. Smith, of Westfield, whom I met at Decatur, had advised me to visit the country west and south-west of Bloomington. So on Tuesday, the 12th, I went to the neighborhood of the Prairie (U. B.) Chapel, a few miles west of Shirley, and thence walked on the 13th to Covell, six miles west of Bloomington, where I saw Bro. M. Bechtel, U. B. minister, and arranged to lecture at Prairie Chapel, on the 19th and 20th. Returned to Bloomington, and thence on 13th P. M. to the home of Lewis H. Bohrer, a steadfast friend of the anti-lodge reform, living six miles north of Bloomington. On the 14th Mr. Bohrer took me with his horse and buggy to Hudson, Money Creek, and Danvers, and on the 15th to Oak Grove and back to Hudson, where I took train for Bloomington.

On the 16th, I went to El Paso, and saw old Bro. W. A. Bartlett and his wife, who are alone in the place, in outspoken opposition to lodgery. With about 2,000 people, El Paso has a lodge, a chapter, a council, and a commandery, and, it is said, wants yet more Masonry! The religion of the Teacher of Nazareth is at a low ebb there. Business men who in heart favor our reform, fear to take the Cynosure, and thus crucify God's truth for worldly success.

Returned to Bloomington on the 16th, P. M., where Mr. Bohrer met me and took me home. Next day I went with him to the North Danvers Mennonite church, where I lectured on the religion of the lodge, at 4 P. M. Was asked to lecture there again on the 18th, and did so, to a good sized and very attentive audience. After speaking over an hour, I stopped, but the pastor, Joseph Stuckey, asked for more information on the symbols of the lodge. It was late, so I proposed to return on the 21st and lecture on that subject, and the congregation readily accepted my offer. On that evening I spoke nearly an hour and a half on the "Mysteries of Masonry," to very attentive listeners, many of whom had come several miles. After lecture a collection was taken up for the work. L. H. Bohrer came with his family, nine miles, to both these evening lectures. At these meetings I saw Father Shoup, a local U. B. preacher, who asked me to speak at Stout's Grove, farther west, where I have appointments on the 26th and 27th.

On the 19th I went to fill my Prairie Chapel appointment, but found when I got there that the meetings had been given up, for the alleged reason that the people were too busy to attend. I found John Stubblefield interested, and took his order for Cynosure, and for Mackey's Ritualist. I returned to Bloomington. Made the acquaintance of R. F. Ernst, a Christian Anti-mason, who testifies publicly against the lodge.

On the 21st, went to Danvers, and thence to appointment at Mennonite church, already noticed. After lecture I went home four miles with Bro. Peter Schantz, a Mennonite local preacher. This morning, 22d, he brought me to Oak Grove, where I am to speak to-night and to-morrow night. D. V., work in Danvers and vicinity will occupy the remainder of this month. About Sept. 1, I plan to go to Warren Co., to help to arouse interest in the approaching State Convention at Monmouth. I think that a large county convention could be held at Bloomington, if some one could work it up.

LITERATURE.

The History of France, from the earliest times to 1848, by M. Guizot and his daughter Mme. Guizot DeWitt. Eight volumes, profusely illustrated. John B. Alden, New York.

The last volumes of this splendid set are received. The death of M. Guizot took place while he was dictating the last pages of Vol. IV. of his history to his daughter, Madame DeWitt. The work to which he had consecrated the last years of a life full of deep experiences and great literary honors was left incomplete. He had, however, planned the fifth volume down to the period of the meeting of the Constituent Assembly in 1789, and the outlines of the chapters were already traced. The volume is therefore materially the work of the great author. The succeeding volumes are a faithful transcript of his instructions to his household, which assumed a personal tone and are full of vivid recollections of events in which he took part. He was also intimately acquainted with some who took a leading part in the Revolution, and his estimate of that remarkable period is extremely interesting. His own life was full of activity in public affairs during the changing times of the middle of the present century. These circumstances give value to the history, which is embellished with the art of a master hand in literature. It is an addition to our libraries of great value, and the publisher has put the price in reach of all.

Professor Langley, of Alleghany Observatory, has contributed to the September Century an article describing the spots on the sun, with twenty-five illustrations, many of them from drawings by the author. This will be the first paper in a series, entitled "The New Astronomy," of several untechnical articles, fully illustrated, summarizing in popular and graphic language the most interesting of recent discoveries in the heavens. "From Coventry to Chester on Wheels," the opening illustrated paper, recounts the experiences of Mr. Joseph Pennell, the artist, during a trip on a tricycle in England. W. J. Stillman's second paper, descriptive of his yacht journey, "On the track of Ulysses," is even more attractive pictorially than his first paper. A stirring incident of life in foreign lands is also given in Horace D. Warner's description of "A Tropical Hurricane" in Costa Rica. Of biographical interest is the paper (with full-page portrait) on the French lexicographer, "Emile Littre." An essay of importance to political science in this country is Joseph Edgar Chamberlin's analysis of "The Foreign Elements in our Population," with interesting conclusions as to the foreign character of the population of certain sections of the country now and in the near future.

St. Nicholas for the month is very attractively illustrated. The natural history articles: "The Bird Matinee," "Swordsmen of the Deep," and "A Story of a Tree-Frog," are interesting, but the bulk of the stories have little to recommend them.

—Bro. I. R. B. Arnold, who will long be remembered by reformers in Sycamore, Ill., met Secretary Stoddard lately at Galesburg. He is now located at Alda, Nebraska, where he has taken a farm from the government, and is well pleased with the investment and the good health enjoyed by all his family. He still devotes a portion of his time to lectures on Bible lands and history, which were so successful in this State; and maintains a good testimony against the lodge. He will gladly entertain and co-operate with any competent person who can visit Hall county and speak in the region round about.

Is it true that our candidates have resigned in favor of the Prohibition candidates? It does seem as though the two great parties whose sentiments, objects and purposes are so nearly identical, should be one in co-operation for the accomplishment of the great and noble, moral and patriotic purpose that animates both. "Father, that they may be one!" Yours for the cause,

Geo. W. Clark.

Pomeroy and St. John in Colorado.—I am sorry we have no organization in Colorado, either State, county or town, for I would, with some others here, love to cast our votes for Pomeroy and reform. I suppose our next best hold will be for St. John, if he is not in the meshes of secrecy. If we find he is, we will hold over and not vote until we get a clean man. Our city, Denver, is about as full of secrecy as Egypt was of frogs. Well, we will try and do the best we can until we can do better, and hope we will see the day when we shall be organized in Colorado. As far as the U. B. church is concerned in Colorado, we think it is nearly gone up, because her ministers (or a majority of them) have gone down toward secrecy.—St. Clair Ross.

If sorrow could enter heaven, if a sigh could be heard there, or a tear roll down the cheek of a saint in light, it would be for lost opportunities, for the time spent in neglect of God which might have been spent for his glory.—Payson.

THE HOME.

"NOT NOW."

MARK 5: 18, 19.

Not now, my child—a little more rough tossing,
A little longer on the billows' foam,
A few more journeyings in the desert-darkness,
And then the sunshine of thy Father's home!

Not now; for I have wanderers in the distance,
And thou must call them in with patient love;
Not now; for I have sheep upon the mountains,
And thou must follow them where'er they rove.

Not now; for I have loved ones sad and weary;
Wilt thou not cheer them with a kindly smile?
Sick ones, who need thee in their lonely sorrow;
Wilt thou not tend them yet a little while?

Not now; for wounded hearts are sorely bleeding,
And thou must teach those widowed hearts to sing;
Not now; for orphans' tears are thickly falling;
They must be gathered 'neath some sheltering wing.

Not now; for many a hungry one is pining;
Thy willing hand must be outstretched and free:
Thy Father hears the mighty cry of anguish,
And gives His answering messages to thee.

Not now; for dungeon walls look stern and gloomy,
And prisoners' sighs sound strangely on the breeze—
Man's pris'ners, but thy Saviour's noble freemen;
Hast thou no ministry of love for these?

Not now; for hell's eternal gulf is yawning,
And souls are perishing in hopeless sin—
Jerusalem's bright gates are standing open;
Go to the banished ones, and fetch them in!

Go with the name of Jesus to the dying,
And speak that Name in all its living power;
Why should thy fainting heart grow chill and weary?
Canst thou not watch with me one little hour?

One little hour! and then the glorious crowning,
The golden harp-strings, and the victor's palm;
One little hour!—and then the hallelujah!
Eternity's long, deep thanksgiving psalm!

A LIFE WASTED.

About thirty years ago a gentleman from New York, who was traveling in the South, met a young girl of great beauty and wealth, and married her. They returned to New York and plunged into a mad whirl of gayety. The young wife had been a gentle, thoughtful girl, anxious to help all suffering and want, and to serve her God faithfully. But as Mrs. L——— she had troops of flatterers; her beauty and dresses were described in the society journals; her bonmots flew from mouth to mouth, her equipage was one of the most attractive in the Park. In a few months she was intoxicated with admiration.

She and her husband flitted from New York to Newport, from London to Paris, with no object but enjoyment. There were other men and women of their class who had some worthier pursuit—literature, or art, or the elevation of the poorer classes—but L——— and his wife lived solely for amusement. They dressed, danced, flirted, hurried from ball to reception, and from opera to dinner. Young girls looked at Mrs. L——— with fervent admiration, perhaps with envy, as the foremost leader of society.

About ten years ago she was returning alone from California, when an accident occurred to the railroad train in which she was a passenger, and she received a fatal internal injury. She was carried into a wayside station, and there, attended only by a physician from the neighboring village, she died.

Dr. Blank has said that it was one of the most painful experiences of his life. "I had to tell her that she had but an hour to live. She was not suffering any pain. Her only consciousness of hurt was that she was unable to move, so that it was no wonder she could not believe me.

"'I must go home,' she said imperatively, 'to New York.'

"Madame, it is impossible. If you are moved it will shorten the time you have to live.'

"She was lying on the floor. The brakemen had rolled their coats to make her a pillow. She looked about her at the little dingy station, with the stove stained with tobacco in the midst.

"'I have but an hour, you tell me?'

"'Not more.'

"'And this is all that is left me of the world. It is not much, doctor,' with a half smile.

"The men left the room and I locked the door, that she might not be disturbed. She threw her arms over her face and lay quiet a long time; then she turned on me in a frenzy. 'To think of all that I might have done, with my money and my time! God wanted me to help the poor and the sick! It's too late now! I've only an hour!' She struggled up, wildly. 'Why, doctor, I did nothing but lead the fashion! Great God! The fashion! Now I've only an hour! An hour!'

"But she had not even that, for the exertion proved fatal, and in a moment she lay dead at my feet.

"No sermon that I ever heard was like that woman's despairing cry, 'It's too late!'"—Youth's Companion.

IS JESUS ON YOUR CROSS?

You may be bearing a heavy cross—a cross that bears you to the very earth with its weight and crucifixion, and yet receive no power of life from it, because Jesus is not on it.

There is an old legend that "when the Empress Helena went to the Holy Land in search of the true cross, excavations and great researches were made, and at last three crosses were discovered; but how were they to decide which was the true cross? They approached a dead body and laid one cross after another upon it, and when the cross of Jesus touched the cold, lifeless form, it at once sprang up in new life and vigor."

We use this fable to illustrate a great spiritual truth. When the cross of Christ touches dead souls they spring into new life. The presence of this new spiritual life is the test of the genuineness of our Christianity and our fidelity to the cross.

Jesus said: "If any man will be my disciple let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." Surely the Master did not mean the rich crosses that glitter on high altars, and tower above lofty domes, or the beautiful crosses that crowd richly furnished dwellings; or the crosses worn as ornaments, alike by the rich and poor. These bring no life from the dead. Too often they are meaningless symbols that mock heaven and mislead men.

But there is a true cross with a Christ upon it, that brings life, joy, and gladness to dead souls. It is the cross of doing duty when it is hard to do it; of standing by the right even unto death, if need be; of following Jesus even though he leads through desert places and fiery furnaces. It is the cross of yielding heart, life and will to him, and walking humbly and obediently in his commandments; toiling on patiently in the sphere of duty he assigns; meekly and patiently doing his will, and joyfully accepting trials, because of love for him.

Reader, is Jesus on your cross? Does it bring spiritual life to your soul and are its fruits to be seen in your daily life?—The Christian Woman.

WHAT CAN I DO FOR MY MASTER?

Some time ago, when passing along one of the crowded streets of———, a gentleman was attracted to a corner where, in the midst of some 200 people, his eye rested upon a man in the dress of a clown, who drew the attention of all the passers-by. Moved with tender pity for the man, whose daily bread was earned in such a way, and lifting up his heart in prayer, he pressed through the crowd, and gave him a carefully selected tract. The clown contemptuously took it, and to the astonishment and dismay of the giver, held it up and commenced reading it aloud. Word after word he read, with wonderful distinctness, till at length his eye rested on its closing sentence: "Thou fool! this night thy soul shall be required of thee." His whole frame shook with emotion, and with instant speed he left the crowd. While the people around were looking on in amazement, the gentleman followed, and finding him, drew him aside, and tried to enter into conversation with him; but the only answer he could obtain was, "I'm lost! I'm lost!" Who can describe the joy that filled his soul when he found that God had, by his Holy Spirit, brought home to this man's heart and conscience the truth and power of that word which he had despised hitherto! In love and gentleness was the saving power of Jesus set before him. Every word he drank in as living water; all hardness was gone. He had been led to the foot of the cross as a repentant prodigal, and found forgiveness through a crucified Saviour. "Blessed are they who sow beside all waters."—Selected.

CARING FOR WHAT THE WORLD SAYS.

Why will you keep caring for what the world says? Try, oh try, to be no longer a slave to it! You can have little idea of the comfort of freedom from it—it is bliss! All this caring for what people will say is from pride. Hoist your flag, and abide by it. In an infinitely short space of time all secret things will be divulged. Therefore, if you are misjudged, why trouble yourself to put yourself right? You have no idea what a great deal of trouble it saves you. Roll your burden on him, and he will make straight your mistakes. He will set you right with those with whom you have set yourself wrong. Here I am, a lump of clay; Thou art the Potter. Mould me as thou in thy wisdom wilt. Never mind my cries. Cut my life off—so be it; prolong it—so be it. Just as thou wilt, but I rely on thy unchanging guidance during the trial. Oh, the comfort that comes from this! —Gen. Gordon.

WE SHALL SEE HIM.

There are thousands on thousands of men who walk the earth, and many thousands more who sleep within its bosom, in whose hearts has burned a desire to see their Saviour's face. For centuries Christians have loved an unseen Saviour, followed an unseen Leader, trusted in an unseen Deliverer, worshiped an unseen Lord. "Whom having not see ye love, and in whom though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." They have not believed because they have seen, but they have that blessing which is pronounced on those who have not seen aad yet have believed.

They have scanned with strange curiosity the records of their Saviour's life and death, but among all the particulars there laid down they have not been able to find one hint or token that would inform them concerning the personal appearance of him who is dearest to their hearts. Thus they know him not after the flesh, but he images to them the glory of the invisible God.

It is not a vain curiosity that leads Christians to desire to see their Lord. Their loving gratitude causes them to long to behold the face that was marred and spit upon, the brow that was wreathed with thorns, the form that was pierced and torn and mangled for their sins. And they have a strong assurance that at last their desire shall be granted. "They shall see his face, and his name shall be in their foreheads." They shall be like him, for they "shall see him as he is." Their "eyes shall seen the king in his beauty;" they shall behold him whom their souls have loved with unuttered and unutterable desire.

And when that beautific vision shall salute our eyes, we shall have looked our last look on sorrows, and afflictions, and foes; we shall have witnessed the last parting, and shall have beheld the last death-bed scene; we shall have gazed on the last grave, and have read the last monumental inscription. Henceforth our eyes shall be turned to brighter scenes; in gazing on him in his glory we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is, and shall be satisfied when we awake in his likeness.

"There we shall see his face,
And never, never sin;
There from the rivers of his grace
Drink endless pleasures in."

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

"BOYS."

Sturdy little farmer boy, tell me how you know
When 'tis time to plow the fields, and to reap and mow.
Do the hens "with yellow legs"
Scold you when you hunt for eggs?
Do you drive the ducks to drink, waddling in a row?
Do the pigs in concert squeal
When you bring their evening meal?
Tell me, little farmer boy, for I'd like to know.

Nimble little sailor boy, tell me how you know
Now to navigate your ship when the tempests blow.
Do you find it pretty hard
Clinging to the topsail-yard?
Don't you fear some stormy day overboard you'll go?
Do they let you take a light
When you go aloft at night?
Tell me, little sailor boy, for I'd like to know.

Little boys of every kind, tell me how you know
That 'tis time ere school begins rather ill to grow.
Does the pain increase so fast
That 'tis terrible at last?
Don't you quickly convalesce when too late to go?
Do you think I am a dunce?
Wasn't I a school-boy once?
Tell me, all you little boys, for I'd like to know.

RESTITUTION IN BOSTON.

A very pleasant incident occurred in one of our public schools not long since. It seems that the boys attending the school, most of whom are at the age of from seven to eight, had, in their play of bat and ball, broken one of the window panes in a neighboring house. No clue could be obtained to the boy who had broken it, as he would not confess his act, nor would any of his associates expose him.

The case troubled the teacher. The next day a gentleman called to see the school, an acquaintance of the teacher, who knew how to talk to children. After telling him of the breaking of the glass, and her inability to ascertain who of the boys had broken it, she asked him to make some remarks to the school, and to speak of the wrong the boys were doing in not acknowledging the act.

The address to the school, therefore, was upon the conduct of the boys in the streets and at their sports. He told them in simple words that honesty, truthfulness and kindness should govern their conduct everywhere, even when they were alone, and no one but themselves and God knew what they were doing. The scholars seemed interested and somewhat impressed by the remarks of the speaker.

A very short time after he had left the school, a little boy rose in his seat and said:

"Miss Lane. I batted the ball that broke Mr. Dash's window. Another boy threw the ball, but I batted it, and it struck the window. I am willing to pay for it."

There was almost death-like stillness in the room as the little fellow was speaking, and it continued for a full minute after he sat down.

"I don't think it would be right for Charley Drake to pay the whole for the glass," said another boy, rising. "All of us who played ball then should pay something, because we were all playing the same as he was. I'll pay my part."

'And I."

"And I."

A thrill of pleasure seemed to run through the whole school at this display of honesty and of right feeling by the boys. The money was brought the next day, and the lesson will not be forgotten either by teacher or pupils. —Youth's Companion.

CULTIVATE A SWEET VOICE.

There is no power of love so hard to keep as a kind voice. A kind hand is deaf and dumb. It may be rough in flesh and blood, yet do the work of a soft heart, and do it with a soft touch. But there is no one thing it so much needs as a sweet voice to tell what it means and feels, and it is hard to get it and keep it in the right tone. One must start in youth and be on the watch night and day, at work and play, to get and keep a voice that shall speak at all times the thought of a kind heart. But this is a time when a sharp voice is most apt to be got. You often hear boys and girls say words at play with a quick, sharp tone, as if it were the snap of a whip.

If any of them get vexed you will hear a voice that sounds as if it were made up of a snarl, a whine and a bark. Such a voice often speaks worse than the heart feels. It shows more ill-will in tone than in words. It is often in youth that one gets a voice or a tone that is sharp, and sticks to him through life, and stirs up ill-will and grief, and falls like a drop of gall on the sweet joys at home. Such as these get a sharp home-voice for use and keep their best voice for those they meet elsewhere, just as they would save their best cakes and pies for guests and all their sour food for their own board.

I would say to all girls and boys, "Use your best voice at home." Watch it by day as a pearl of great price, for it will be worth more to you in the days to come than the best pearl hid in the sea. A kind voice is a lark's song to a heart and home. It is to the heart what light is to the eye.—Jewish Messenger.

THE BIRD MATINEE.

Let me tell you of a series of matinees I attended this summer, which were given at three o'clock in the morning.

The windows of my bedroom opened toward the south on a beautiful lawn, bordered with elms. Year after year comes the golden, or Baltimore, oriole—most delightful of singers. He loves best the swaying branches of the loftiest elm for his home, that old Dame Nature may rock the little ones to sleep with every breeze. Robin-Redbreast and Jenny Wren build lowlier homes in more accessible places. Then there is the linnet, who years ago forsook us for a southern clime, but, perhaps alarmed by the noise of war, returned to her northern home. These were some of the singers who gave the three o'clock matinees. They continued for two or three months, from May nearly through July, and the programme each day, for the first month, seemed precisely the same.

First came a loud, shrill, prolonged call, always repeated three times, which reminded me of a gong at a hotel. It was evidently intended for the rising-bell and for a call to order. After the last call came a feeble peep, as if one little fellow had managed to arouse himself just enough to answer. Then another replied a little louder, and another, until, in rapid succession, all the dwellers in the grove announced their presence, and answered to their names. Then followed a minute or two of entire silence, after which the prima donna, as it seemed to me, opened the concert. It was a loud, clear, sweet strain, so unlike any heard in the day that I cannot tell what bird it was; I think only the oriole could pour forth that delightful music. It sang alone in a clear, ecstatic strain. At a certain part of the solo two other voices broke in as a trio, and at the end of the stanza all the voices joined in full jubilee chorus. This was repeated six times, so that I came to call it their hymn of praise in six stanzas. It was rendered every morning in exactly the same way. After it there was singing by the full choir, and it grew louder and more impassioned, as if each minstrel was inspired by the rest, like the singing of a vast concourse.

After this grand climax, the voices would die away, one after the other, and the principal concert was over. The parent birds went on their morning flight, and their birdies swung in their wind-rocked hammocks for another half-hour. At the expiration of this time came a call similar to the first, although by a different bird—often a whip-poor-will. The summons was repeated thrice, then came a feeble little "peep, peep, twitter, twitter," and the juveniles joined to the best of their ability. This concert was much shorter than that of their parents, as befitted their tender age, and their hunger on first awaking.—W. C. E., in St. Nicholas for September

Always pray for patience; every day will bring something that will call for its exercise.

TEMPERANCE.

ST. JOHN ON PROHIBITION.

FROM AN ADDRESS AT WOODSTOCK, CONN., JULY 4TH.

We have two systems of education in this country. One hundred and sixty-four thousand public schools educating for God, and one hundred and seventy-five thousand saloons educating for the devil. For education of our children through the public schools, to an honest, sober, Christian manhood and womanhood, we pay annually about $80,000,000. For education through the saloon, the hot-bed of misery, poverty, crime and shame, we contribute about $1,400,000,000 per annum. In other words, for every dollar that we expend to build up through our public schools, we invest $17 to tear down through the saloons.

And yet, in the face of these facts, the saloon system, as well as the public schools, receives the sanction and protection of the laws of the land; and each of the great political parties of to-day, while approving of the schools, are too cowardly to oppose the saloons. Such political truckling ought to be condemned by the ballot of every lover of "God, and home, and native land." What are we going to do about it? Why, one distinguished politician from the East, without a word against the evil, proposes to divide the revenue received from the liquor-traffic among the several States, thus giving it a chance to buy its way into public favor. The idea! Sanction a business that destroys soul and body and robs the people of $1,400,000,000 annually, that the Government may get $70,000,000 revenue from it? What statesmanship! Another equally great politician from the prairies of the West suggests that the liquor revenue be devoted to the education of the youth of the land. In other words, make a public school director out of the devil, and then expect God to bless such a plan.

I trust that no child will ever be educated by giving the sanction of law to that which our conscience tells us is wrong. Others insist that the only way to successfully deal with the traffic is through "a well-regulated, judicious high license." Yet we have been trying the license system in this country for more than two hundred years, and the evil has been growing worse all the time, until, to-day, no curse in the world is so destructive of all that is good..

And could we reasonably expect any other result? What evil was ever blotted out by selling it the right to exist? Can you think of even one? Does the amount paid for the right to sell mollify the effects of the liquor sold? How high shall the license be to make the saloon productive of good? And just how high must it be to make the business respectable? Will high licensed whisky restore happiness to the home that low licensed whisky destroyed? Will a blow, given to a defenceless wife, be less painful because administered by a husband drunk on high licensed whisky? Does the amount paid for license lessen the heartache of the mother at the sight of a drunken son reeling from the door of one of these legalized dens? Does the sorrowing wife, with her hungry children, find relief in the amount paid for the license of the saloon that robs her? Have saloons ever blessed a home or made a single human being better? No! And you know, and I know, and every intelligent citizen knows, and every political party knows, that from the saloons of this country come only degradation, misery, poverty, crime and heartache, and the licensing of them, or in any manner giving them the protection of the law, always has been, is now, and ever will be a compromise with crime, and is a burning shame and disgrace to our civilization.

But many persons, even some who claim to be Christians, are willing that these soul-destroying dens shall exist as long as they pay for the privilege. In other words, they are for saloons "for revenue only," apparently ignoring the fact that money can never make the great wrong right.

If I possessed the power I would forever prohibit the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating liquors, including wine, ale, and beer as a beverage. But we are told that that would "take away our liberties." Would it? What legitimate liberty, I ask, would it deprive us of?

It is an old saying that "none are so blind as those who will not see." It is equally true that none are so hopelessly enslaved as those who falsely believe they are free. There are worse prisons than those constructed of brick and stone and iron bars. The worst bondage is our own selfishness. The consciousness of being right is the truth that makes men free. The man behind the prison bars sober is freer than the man who stands in front of them drunk. On the plains of Kansas, at his quiet home in North Elba, defending his cabin at Ossawatomie, under fire at Harper's Ferry, in a Virginia jail or upon the gallows, John Brown was always free.

Just think of it! Four saloons to every church, six bartenders to every preacher, thirty dollars expended for intoxicating liquors for every dollar paid for Christian missions, homes destroyed, manhood gone, graves and prisons filled with the victims of the infamous traffic; then talk to me about the liberty of the citizen finding a lodgment in such a system!

But we are told that "prohibition is a failure." Is it? Let us see. The amount received by the General Government as a revenue from intoxicating liquors is equal to about $1.25 per capita of our population, while in Kansas, under prohibition, it is only about ten cents per capita. And in prohibition Maine and Vermont it is even less than that. In the entire country there is about one saloon to every three hundred of the population. In Kansas only about one to every two thousand five hundred of her people. And it must be borne in mind that the few saloons in Kansas are, as a rule, in secret places, where the initiated only are admitted, while in license States they are open to all, as long as the victim is able to stand up and has the money to pay for the drinks. Prohibition in Kansas has closed every distillery, nearly all of the thirty-two breweries that thrived under the old license system, and is rapidly driving every saloon from the State. Up to the first day of last December, embracing thirty-one months of prohibition, 972 violators of the law had been prosecuted and 729 convicted. Fines amounting to $100,000 had been assessed against them, and imprisonment imposed aggregating eleven years, five months and nineteen days. The State has gained nearly 200,000 in population and increased about $50,000,000 in taxable wealth. She has 7,000 schoolhouses, and the resources of her permanent school fund equal about $13,000,000. Her State University, Normal School and Agricultural College are worthy objects of the people's pride. She has made ample provisions for all the demands of charity; even her criminal classes are provided with quarters from which "no guilty man escapes." She has 4,000 miles of railways, penetrating almost every county in the State, and her corn crop last year reached nearly 200,000,000 bushels, exceeding that of any other State in the Union, not a grain of which, it may be said to her credit, can, within her borders, lawfully be made into strong drink as a beverage; and this is the way that "prohibition has ruined Kansas." The people of Kansas are in favor of more bread and less whisky, more churches, school-houses and comfortable homes, and no saloons. They possessed the courage in her territorial days to choke the life out of African slavery and for ever dedicate her soil to freedom, and they can and will now protect her homes against the curse of the dram-shop. But I am glad that prohibition of the liquor traffic is no longer confined to the narrow limits of only a few of the States. It is to day a great National question. Our wasted resources, debauched manhood, destroyed homes, and aching hearts cry aloud against this giant evil, the crime of crimes. And woe be unto the political party or individual that shall stand in the way of an indignant and outraged people, as they burst asunder the political shackles that have bound them, and, with a view solely to the good of the whole country, looking to God for his guidance, strike for a purer government, happier homes, and a higher civilization.—The Independent.

There is a gentleman in Portland, living there now for a year. A friend of his in Ohio wrote to him to know whether the Maine law is usually a success or a failure. This was his reply: "I have been living here now a year. I see all sorts of people and mingle with them freely, many of them gentlemen, who like myself are not fanatics, not sentimentalists, not teetotalers. I have had no connection with the temperance movement here or elsewhere, though I am on good terms with some temperance men, as I am with many who have no sympathy with the temperance cause—and very little with those engaged in it. If a friend from abroad should come into my office to-day and I should wish to offer him a glass of wine I know of no place in the city where I could find it. There are such places here, and on inquiry of persons whom I know, I could learn where I could go to obtain the wine, but it would be in such a place and of such character and surroundings that I would not take a friend to it, and no man with self-respect would go there."

Milwaukee is conspicuous for the amount of beer consumed in it, and also for the fact that there are twice as many suicides as in any other city in this country. Materialism, beer, and self-murder make a "conspicuous" trio for any city.

—The Emperor of China recently authorized the destruction of four million dollars worth of opium. The Central Presbyterian says: "A few such heathen officials are needed in the United States to deal with the whisky traffic."

—The anti-Prohibitionists of Kansas are said to be organizing oath-bound lodges of "Sons of Liberty" under false pretences, the recruit believing when he consents to join that he is merely to do all in his power to secure the resubmission and repeal of the one tyrannical prohibitory law, but finding when he is within the secret circle that he is committed to vote for the Democratic ticket in full or prove a traitor to his order.

THE CHURCHES.

—A private letter dated August 7th from Bro. A. D. Zaraphonithes, Andros, Greece, speaks of many duties pressing, caused in part by much sickness in Andros. He says, "We read with great interest the speech of Pres. Blanchard in regard to the whirlpool of American politics; and we hope that the day may soon come when the head of the serpent will be crushed, all falsehood and secretism done away, and Christ reign all in all."

—Bro. G. H. Filian, the young Armenian who was ordained as a missionary to his native people at Wheaton some two years since, has begun laboring with the church at Talas, Cæsarea, in Asia Minor, near Mt. Taurus. He is partly sustained by the Native Mission society of which Mrs. L. H. Plumb of Streator, Ill., is treasurer.

—Mr. A. T. Hemingway has been unanimously recalled to his former position of General Secretary of the Chicago Y. M. C. A. He has accepted and will begin work at once.

—In the exploration of the old Temple area in Jerusalem one of the stones placed round about the low parapet dividing the Court of the Israelites from the Court of the Gentiles, has been dug up, with the inscription in Greek still legible, forbidding a Gentile under pain of death, to pass the parapet.

—The Liberal Baptist Year-Book for 1883, edited by Rev. Geo. H. Hall, D. D., of Buffalo, embraces not only the Freewill Baptists, but also the General Baptists, Separate Baptists, Free Christian Baptists, and the Church of God—five denominations in this country which are one in doctrine and one in practice, save in some minor customs and forms of service. The whole number of churches is 3,869, with a membership of 168,445. The Freewill Baptists alone have a membership of 96,714.

—Dr. Thomson, of the Bible house in Constantinople, says the Turks are now reading the Bible far more than they used to do; and some of them declare that it is a better book than the Koran. The doctor has eight colporteurs selling the Bible in the city. The Bible was first translated into Turkish two centuries ago by Ali, a captured Pole who had been brought up as a Turk.

—Mr. Arthington, of Leeds, has given another $10,000 toward African missions. His last gift is to the English Baptist Society, which has advanced from Stanley Pool to the Equator on the Congo, and proposes to establish its stations on the chief southern tributaries. The first station above Stanley Pool will be Lukolela, which is 300 miles from the Pool. The society makes an earnest appeal for young men to go out as missionaries.

—On the 1st of January, 1882, the Rev. James Price commenced his labors in one of the poorest and most neglected parts of the city of Philadelphia. He had no church-building, no Sabbath school, not even a single member of the church to begin with. Now he has a neat stone chapel, and was recently installed as pastor of the Twelfth United Presbyterian church, gathered by him during the last two years. There is room everywhere for such men.—Christian at Work.

—General Booth, of the Salvation Army, intends entering London at the close of his provincial tour at the head of one hundred brass bands. The Home Secretary has been appealed to to stop it, but has declined.

—The next movement of the Salvation Army is to be an invasion of Germany. The "Army" now numbers 528 corps in Great Britain, and 106 in other countries. Their activity is to be extended during the coming season, also, over Sweden, South Africa, Australia, New Zealand, France and Switzerland.

—The Baptists of Italy have united under the name of "The Christian Apostolic Union of Italy." Rev. James Hall, of the English Babtist church, is president, and Dr. Taylor, American, is vice-president. Evangelizing committees have been formed, a paper is to be published, and a hymn and tune-book prepared.

—Prof. Schaff, Prof. Geo. E. Day, Dr. John Hall and Dr. William M. Taylor, are expected to represent the United States at a conference of the Evangelical Alliance to be held at Copenhagen, Aug. 30 to Sept. 7. Interesting reports will be made on the state of religion in different countries.

—The report of the London Christian Colporteur Association, at its late annual meeting, showed that 146,000 copies of the Word of God and 3,000,000 books and papers of a pure Christian character and evangelical tone had been sold in London and the provinces by the colporteurs of the Association within the last ten years. The colporteurs visit every month for this purpose the houses of both rich and poor. The chairman of the annual meeting, Sir W. Muir, well said of this literature: "It is the seed dropped by the way, which is fructifying and bringing forth much fruit to the glory of God."

—The British consul at Hankow has stated that the China Inland Mission has done invaluable service in obtaining information in regard to China and its people, and that by the journeys and sojourns of its missionaries in the remoter parts of the way has been opened up to foreign intercourse.

—The Evangelical church at Belgium is making progress. It has now twenty-six churches, with thirteen pastors and nearly 4,000 members, and forty-nine Sunday-schools, attended by 1,859 scholars, and 7,000 meetings for worship were held is sixty localities during the past year.

—A persecution has begun against earnest evangelical Christians in Russia. Colonel Paschkoff and Count Korff, who have been active in holding religious meetings and in labors for the poor, are banished. It is also declared illegal to distribute the publications of the Religious Tract Society, though they bear the printed permission of the censor.

—The American delegates to the Presbyterian Council at Belfast attracted a considerable degree of attention, not more for their push and goaheaditiveness, than the fact, in sharp contrast, that they were the most conservative of all in regard to the old faith of the churches, and least desirous of change or revision. It is not the new world which nurses and fosters "isms."—Christian at Work.

—Dr. Wiliam M. Taylor, of the Broadway Tabernacle; Dr. Dexter, of Boston; Professor Day, of Yale, and Professor Boardman, of Chicago, are a deputation from the American Home Missionary Society to visit the new Congregational churches of Norway and Sweden during the present summer.

—The Woman's Christian Association, of Utica, N. Y., has hired a cottage at Westminster Park, in the Thousand Islands, for the purpose of enabling some of the working-girls of Utica to obtain a week's rest in that invigorating air. The cottage has accommodations for nine persons besides the attendents, and it is intended that parties of nine shall be entertained one week each.

—The work of the American Company of Old Testament revisers was finished some time ago, and sent to the British translators. It is now announced that the latter have also completed their task, and that the revised Old Testament is ready for publication. Twelve of the twenty-seven members of the Old Testament revision committee have died before completion of the work. The mortality is to be chiefly explained by the great age of the men whose scholarship secured their appointment for their important work. The complete revision of the Bible will appear before the end of 1884.

—At the recent celebration of its tenth anniversary the Prussian Bible Society reported that up to the beginning of the present year it had distributed 1,283,254 Bibles, and 823,597 New Testaments. During the past year the British and Foreign Society, which has an office in Berlin, distributed in Germany 85,405 Bibles, as against 69,656 Bibles and 15,794 New Testaments published by the Prussian Society.

—The Missionary Herald for September contains a letter from Dr. Davis with exciting news from Japan:

One of the largest Buddhist temples in the city has a school of several hundred young priests connected with it, and the priests have recently bought one hundred and twenty copies of the New Testament and some commentaries, and have put the school at work studying the Bible every day. What will come of it I do not know, but the priest who bought the books told the bookseller that they were bound to see what Christianity was, and if it was better than Buddhism they were going to adopt it. Many Buddhist priests have recently come to us saying that they were convinced that Christianity was the true religion, and asking how they could become Christians, how they could get a living, etc. A priest from Osaka came to my house the other day and told me he wanted to burn his priestly robes and become a Christian, asking how the change was to be effected, etc. If there was any way for them to get a living there are numbers of the Buddhist priesthood who would gladly burn their robes, but they are unfit to support themselves in any other way, and, of course, we cannot support them. The leading paper in Kioto has just published a long editorial on the need of Christianity, and especially of Christian schools, and it calls attention to the great need of a university, established and conducted on the same Christian principles as our Doshiska, and it also calls attention to the fact that over seventy of the leading men of Kioto have formed a company to assist in raising an endowment for a university under the auspices of the Doshiska. The good work of the Lord goes on. Imabari and vicinity are being richly blessed. Pray for us all and for Japan.

GEORGE MULLER'S TOUR IN INDIA.

The (London) Christian says: On Tuesday evening, July 1, the members of the Bethesda Chapel, Bristol, met for a social tea-meeting to welcome Mr. and Mrs. Muller, on their return from India. At the public meeting which followed, Mr. Muller gave some very interesting details of his recent tour. He said that shortly after his conversion he offered himself five times to God for missionary labor in India, but the way was not opened up to him, and he was subsequently led into the sphere of labor with which his name has been so long associated. Thus, after an interval of fifty-eight years, he was guided in his seventy-ninth year to undertake a journey through the country that has had so warm a place in his interest. This tour was one of labor in the service of the Lord and crowned with great blessing, no hindrance having been experienced either from the climate or any other cause.

His objects in going to India were—first, that he might visit the missionaries who are bearing the burden and heat of the day, and, by God's grace, impart counsel and encouragement to them in their arduous labor of love. Secondly, to preach the Gospel to the thousands of Europeans and natives with whom he would come in contact in that vast field. The most difficult classes to reach are the educated Brahmins; he was very anxious, therefore, to bring the simple Gospel before them, as the power of God unto salvation. Thirdly, to promote unity and love between the followers of Christ. This has been a special feature of his administrations during the past nine years in the twenty-seven countries he has visited. To further this object he has gladly labored in connection with all branches of the Christian church where the foundation truths of the Gospel are admitted, though he made that an essential condition. In all these churches he had expounded the Scriptures and taught the things of God, and in no instance was anything required of him that it was against his conscience to perform.

A fourth object was to promote the study and love of the word of God, alike amongst ministers and their congregations, that thus a pure and sound conception might be formed of the truths therein contained. Also to teach what he understood to be the true character of this dispensation, that we are not to wait to see the whole world converted before the coming of the Lord, but to be found "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of our great Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

FREE PEWS.—Of the seventy Protestant Episcopal churches in New York, twenty-three are free churches as distinguished from those in which pews and seats are rented or sold. All the churches connected with Trinity parish are included in this statement. Of the fifty Presbyterian churches of New York, fifteen are free, including missions and the recently organized churches which are the outgrowth of missions. Seven of the twenty Reformed Dutch churches are also free. All of the forty-eight, except a dozen Methodist churches, are free. The Roman Catholic churches are nominally free, but in most of them persons who wish seats are expected to pay for them, and in many instances must pay or stand. The Sunday advertisements of several of the Protestant churches usually finish up with the statement that all are welcome, or that the seats are free, and sometimes both. The evening services in many of the pew-rented churches are entirely free. The sum of the matter is that of the nearly three hundred Protestant churches in New York less than one-third are free.

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

A colored man, member of the Methodist Episcopal church in Batavia, Ill., and of a colored Masonic lodge, who served as an artillerist in the Union army, has three times applied for admission to the Grand Army of the Republic and been refused.

It is announced that the fourth annual congress of the Federation of Trades and Labor Unions of the United States and Canada will be held in Chicago, Ill , commencing October 7. Labor societies are entitled to send delegates upon the following basis of representation. From National or International Unions, for 1,000 members or less, one delegate; for 4,000, two delegates; for 8,000, three delegates; for 16,000, four delegates; for 32,000, five delegates; and so on. From State or Provincial Federations of Trades Unions, two delegates. From local Trade Assemblies or Councils, District Assemblies of the Knights of Labor, or local Trades Unions, one delegate.

H. E. Puette, late pastor of the Christian church in Shelbyville, Ill., fell under public condemnation for scandalous and gross immoralities. The church immediately called a meeting and cited him to appear. He asked to have the trial postponed, but the request was refused and the trial proceeded and went against Puette. He then appealed to the Royal Arch Chapter to investigate his case. The lodge had its trial and fully exonerated Puette unanimously. The church committee, which brought in a verdict of guilty, and recommended that fellowship should be withdrawn by the church, still believes in his guilt, and claims to be able to substantiate the same at the proper time and place.

A new secret lodge, the Order of the Golden Chain, is thus spoken of by its organ: "Its incorporators are prominent business men of the city of Baltimore, members of the Royal Arcanum, Knights of Honor, Legion of Honor, etc. It is in opposition to none, the field being amply large for all. It is based upon the most liberal principles consistent with the successful workings of the order, and is especially arranged for young men." Among the objects enumerated are the following: "To unite in bonds of brotherhood all acceptable white male persons, between the ages of 21 and 51 years, who are of sound bodily health and of good moral character. To establish a sick benefit fund, from which those members who may elect to go into that branch of the order may, in case of sickness, receive weekly benefit not exceeding $25. To pay a sum not exceeding $1,500 (or half the amount of the W. and O. B. certificate) in case of permanent disability. To establish a widows' and orphans' benefit fund, from which, on the satisfactory evidence of the death of a member of the order, in good standing, a sum not exceeding $3,000 shall be paid to his family, or to those dependent upon him, as he may direct. To form a bureau of information for the benefit of its members in obtaining employment for such as may need it, and to assist each other in business."

The Roman Catholic church seems to be preparing for an onslaught on Masonry and kindred secret orders which will exceed in bitterness even its past assaults. It looks as if there would be war along the whole line. The General of the Jesuits, following the example of the late Papal Encyclical, devotes the whole of his first epistle to the members of his order to a violent attack upon those secret associations as enemies of the church, of the state, of religion, and even of good morals. Self-preservation, according to him, demands that the church should wage war upon them to the bitter end.—N. Y. Witness.

The Ancient Order of Druids, eighteen lodges in all, met last Sunday morning in Market square, Chicago, and forming into procession marched to Ogden's Grove, where a picnic party of nearly 5,000 assembled during the day. Features of the parade were decorated wagons with an Arch-Druid in warrior costume, twenty-four boys in Druid regalia, and a number of ladies representing those States in which the order has gained a foothold, together with figures of Columbia and Brittania. Speeches were made, and a summer night's festival closed the day of riot and desecration—another evidence of the anti-Christian Spirit of lodgery.

A TOUCHING INCIDENT.

A YOUNG GIRL'S DEMENTIA—HOW IT WAS OCCASIONED—SOME NEW AND STARTLING TRUTHS.

The St. Louis express, on the New York Central road, was crowded one evening recently, when at one of the way stations, an elderly gentleman, accompanied by a young lady, entered the cars and finally secured a seat. As the conductor approached the pair, the young lady arose, and in a pleading voice said:

"Please, sir, don't let him carry me to the asylum. I am not crazy; I am a little tired, but not mad. Oh! no indeed. Won't you please have papa take me back home?"

The conductor, accustomed though he was to all phases of humanity, looked with astonishment at the pair as did the other passengers in their vicinity. A few words from the father, however, sufficed, and the conductor passed on while the young lady turned her face to the window. The writer chanced to be seated just behind the old gentleman and could not forego the desire to speak to him. With a sad face and a trembling voice the father said:

"My daughter has been attending the seminary in a distant town and was succeeding remarkably. Her natural qualities, together with a great ambition, placed her in the front ranks of the school but she studied too closely, was not careful of her health, and her poor brain has been turned. I am taking her to a private asylum where we hope she will soon be better."

At the next station the old man and his daughter left the cars, but the incident, so suggestive of Shakspeare's Ophelia, awakened strange thoughts in the mind of the writer. It is an absolute fact that while the population of America increased thirty per cent. during the decade between 1870 and 1880 the insanity increase was over one hundred and thirty-five per cent. for the same period. Travelers by rail, by boat, or in carriages in any part of the land see large and elaborate buildings, and inquire what they are.

Insane asylums!

Who builds them?

Each State; every county; hundreds of private individuals, and in all cases their capacity is taxed to the utmost.

Why?

Because men, in business and the professions, women, at home or in society, and children at school overtax their mental and nervous forces by work, worry and care. This brings about nervous disorders, indigestion and eventually mania.

It is not always trouble with the head that causes insanity. It far oftener arises from evils in other parts of the body. The nervous system determines the status of the brain. Any one who has periodic headaches; occasional dizziness; a dimness of vision; a ringing in the ears; a feverish head; frequent nausea or a sinking at the pit of the stomach, should take warning at once. The stomach and head are in direct sympathy, and if one be impaired the other can never be in order. Acute dyspepsia causes more insane suicides than any other known agency, and the man, woman or child whose stomach is deranged is not and cannot be safe from the coming on at any moment of mania in some one of its terrible forms.

The value of moderation and the imperative necessity of care in keeping the stomach right must therefore be clear to all. The least appearance of indigestion or mal-assimilation of food should be watched as carefully as the first approach of an invading army. Many means have been advocated for meeting such attacks, but all have heretofore been more or less defective. There can be little doubt, however, that for the purpose of regulating the stomach, toning it up to proper action, keeping its nerves in a normal condition and purifying the blood, Warner's Tippecanoe The Best, excels all ancient or recent discoveries. It is absolutely pure and vegetable; it is certain to add vigor to adults, while it cannot by any possibility injure even a child. The fact that it was used in the days of the famous Harrison family is proof positive of its merit as it has so thoroughly withstood the test of time. As a tonic and revivifier it is simply wonderful. It has relieved the agony of the stomach in thousands of cases; soothed the tired nerves; produced peaceful sleep and averted the coming on of a mania more to be dreaded than death itself.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.
In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."
The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

FARM NOTES.

A bushel of apples will make from four to four and a half pounds of evaporated fruit.

A French authority states that carrots give horses new blood, which seems to restore them, and they may be justly claimed as the regenerator of worn-out horses.

Dogs do not always kill sheep for the purpose of procuring food. The best fed dogs, when they once begin the practice, will continue it until they are caught in the act.

Farmers should enjoy, above all others, the luxuries of the garden, and yet, strange to say, but few farms have complete gardens, and many farmers buy vegetables.

Horses at work will be gratified if they are allowed a little green grass at least once a day. If not convenient to turn them on the grass, cut it and feed, with a little salt in the rack.

In planting late potatoes discard all that are affected with traces of rot. They should be as sound and perfect as possible, as many diseases of the crop come from the germs planted with the seed.

In raising sheep, besides the profit from wool, lambs and mutton, a considerable value must be allowed the droppings, as it is an advantage in favor of sheep that they benefit the soil upon which they are pastured.

Feed the little chicks often—five times a day will not be too often—with hard-boiled egg, bread crumbs, boiled potatoes, little scraps of meat. Supply them with fresh water twice a day. All this, if you want fine, healthy birds.

In growing food for poultry it should be borne in mind that corn, wheat and oats can always be purchased, and it is the best, therefore, to grow sorghum, broom corn, pop corn, millet and sunflowers for seed, which affords a variety.

A member of the Elmira Farmers' Club opposes the use of breast collars on driving horses, for the reason that it is injurious by drawing the shoulders of the animals together, thereby preventing a development and expansion of the breast, especially of colts.

KILL THE LATE WEEDS.—The fight with the weeds in the cornfield should not stop with the cultivator. We have frequently seen farmers strive manfully against the pests until midsummer, and then, through negligence, subject themselves to annoyance through the next season. Some weeds have a limited season of growth, and if kept rooted out until midsummer, will rarely come up again; others continue growing until severe frosts come. An old Illinois farmer said a cockleburr would come up in the morning, grow until four in the afternoon, and mature seeds before the frost could kill it that night. This is an exaggeration, yet the cockleburr must be fought until there are heavy frosts. The velvet-leaf, Jimson, and rag-weeds, will commence growth almost as late. Weeds are very prolific, and an occasional one gone to seed in the cornfield will insure a good crop the next season. Corn should not be cultivated after it is tasseled, but the weeds can be cut out without disturbing the soil. For this purpose we have seen a short scythe used, but we much prefer a hoe with a sharp edge.—American Agriculturist for August.

CHICKEN CHOLERA.—In regard to remedies, there are legions of them. Messrs. Adams & Brother, the well-known poultry dealers of Chicago, who have a large poultry farm at Waukegan, often have as many as four or five thousand fowls together at one time. They feared the disease, and made up their minds to try experiments in order to settle such matters before beginning too extensively. Whenever they could procure a sick fowl they did so, and placed it in the yard with hundreds of others. Of course these gentlemen had no trouble in introducing cholera, roup, and all the diseases to which chicken flesh is heir; but that was exactly what they craved, and they began to see what they could do under the circumstances. After fighting the disease with roup pills and cholera cures at fifty cents a box, they concluded that doctoring individual chickens out of thousands did not pay, nor did pills at such high prices. They now laugh at cholera and roup. They found that by combining two ounces each of rosin, alum, sulphur and red pepper, and adding it to four quarts of scalded meal, for every twenty-five fowls, they not only cured the sick ones but prevented its spread. For roup they use asafœtida, ginger and red pepper. But they keep their fowls strictly clean, even washing out the quarters frequently. They now believe they can keep as many fowls together as they desire.

It is recommended that those fowls that are too sick to eat should receive a pill composed as follows: Blue mass, ninety grains; pulverized camphor, twenty-five grains; cayenne pepper, thirty grains; pulverized rhubarb, forty-eight grains; laudanum, sixty drops. Mix and make into sixty pills. After a short while give half a teaspoonful of castor oil. Feed only soft food until the fowls are strong enough to move about, and put a little copperas in the drinking water.

IN BRIEF.

At Buzzard Roost, N. C., unphilanthroic but enterprising men are mining white rock called "deception." This is gronnd to powder and sent to New York, where it is mixed with sugar or flour. It is said that twenty per cent. of "deception rock" can be thus mixed and the combination remain undetected. Terra alba was formerly used in cheap candies, but the manufacturers of that class of goods now use this powder, as it is cheaper and less dangerous. Terra alba hardens in the stomach in a lump, just like plaster of paris, if eaten in large quantities, and causes spasms or convulsions. But, this new powder seems to go through the system generally, causing, it is said, many cases of Bright's disease. The sweets made by this process might be appropriately called rock-candy.

As the great mass of the immigration has come since the year 1820, the number of the foreign element in the first and second degrees may be estimated with approximate accuracy from the number of persons of foreign birth and parentage given in the census returns of 1880. While 10,138,758 immigrants had landed in the Unitcd States from 1820 to the middle of 1880, there were in the country, in 1880, 14,955,996 persons of foreign birth or having one parent foreign-born. If from this sum we take 33,252, the surprisingly large number of persons of foreign birth having both parents born in the United States, who are for all the purposes of this study "natives," we have a population foreign in the first and second degrees of 14,922,744, of whom 6,679,943 were foreign-born. This number still does not represent quite all the new element, since a large number of small children figuring in the census of 1880 must have had parents of the younger generation of the new population born upon our soil. There is no record of these third degree foreigners, of course, and we must proceed without regard to them, simply assuming that the figures relating to the old stock embrace a certain number, not proportionately large, who belong to the new. We may judge of the relation in which this mass of people of foreign birth and parentage stands to the population which we are accustomed to regard as the leaven of our nationality—the stock to which all other elements are to be assimulated if possible—by comparing it with the white population of native parentage. The whole population of the country, minus persons of foreign birth and parentage, native negroes, and Indians, is 28,601,676. This is not much more than half the population.—September Century.

Gen. R. E. Colston, late of the Egyptian General Staff, says in the September Century, apropos of the difficulties opposing "the rescue of General Gordon": "The Arabs divide their deserts into two kinds. The first is called el jebel or el berrye, meaning mountain or wilderness. In this kind of deserts there is more or less vegetation, always very scanty; but yet it is there that the Bedouins roam and raise their flocks and camels. Gazelles and other game are also found. The desert between Berber and Suakim is chiefly of this kind. The other sort is called the atmoor, and it is impossible to imagine anything more barren and desolate. It is literally nothing but sand and rocks. Not a bush, not a blade of grass ever grew there, and consequently no animal life at all, not even insects. They are like oceans which you cross on your 'desert ships,' but where it is death to tarry. The ostrich and the hyena cross them swiftly by night. These atmoors are generally from eight to ten days across, with one group of wells in the middle. Such is the Atmoor of Shigre, which I crossed in nine days, and that of Korosko in seven (two days less than the usual time). Only one group of wells is found half-way, which is called moura—bitter. None but camels and Bedouins can drink its water. Travelers always carry enough Nile water to last them across. It is the only desert where no guides are needed, for the track is perfectly marked by the skeletons of camels and cattle, which, as I counted them, average sixty to the mile on the best parts of the trail, and four hundred on the worst. Thousands of camels and oxen perish there yearly. The latter are driven from the Upper Nile, scantily watered once in forty-eight hours on the march, and a large proportion of them die on the way. The hyenas and vultures, which are the only denizens of the Atmoor, pick their bones clean before the next morning, and the fierce sun heat dries the hides and bones, so that the stench of carrion never taints the desert air."

"SCRIP and STAFF."
BY H. M. HUGUNIN.

This new and attractive volume is now ready. It is composed of thirty nine chapters on nearly as many topics. Neatly bound in cloth with gilt stamp. Price 60 cents.

The Chicago Evening Journal of May 3, says:

The author of this little volume, for many years a working editor of the EVENING JOURNAL, has here presented us with a variety of topics of a religious character. Among the number we note "The Evils of the Sunday Newspaper," "The Divine Sanction of Church Organizations," "The Good Work and Government of Sunday-Schools," "The Bible in our Public Schools," "Fallacies of the 'Evolution Theory,'" "Chronology—The Age of the World," and "Labor and Laborers." Mr. Hugunin writes as an independent thinker, untrammeled by denominational alignments. His style, however, is marked by the vigor of earnestness and sincerity, and with these characteristics, and with a close adherence to Bible Christianity, his book becomes a suggestive aid to evangelical workers. In discussing the topics above named, as in others, he deals consistently with questions of public interest and great importance in the reform of individual and social evils.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

POLITICAL.

—The Illinois Greenback-Anti-Monopoly State Convention Wednesday passed a resolution to fuse with either of the old parties, but in no case to accept less than seven electoral votes. The following State ticket was placed in the field: Governor, Jesse Harper, of Danville; Lieutenant Governor, H. C. Vanderwater, of Shelbyville; Secretary of State, E. H. Baldwin, of Joliet; State Auditor, E. F. Reeves, of Elgin; Attorney General, John M. Givin, of Effingham; State Treasurer, J. B. Clark, of Chicago.

—Kansas politics are in delightful confusion. The Prohibitionists are entirely dissatisfied with the action of the Republican Convention. They have, therefore, issued a call for a "Prohibition Convention," to be held at Lawrence, September 8, to nominate Presidential electors and a State ticket. On the other hand, a large minority of the late Republican State Convention, who advocated a re-submission of the Prohibitory Amendment, but were voted down, have held a bolting convention and gone over bodily to the Democrats, the latter having renominated Governor Glick and planted themselves squarely against "Sumptuary laws."

COUNTRY.

—There were heavy frosts Sunday night in New Hampshire, Vermont, and Connecticut, and crops were damaged in many places.

—Dr. Salmon, chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, says he has found eight cases of pleuro-pneumonia among cattle in the vicinity of Chicago, and ten cases in other parts of the State.

—The forest fires in Michigan swept down on Harmon City, destroying every building but one, and on Monday the fires were burning fiercely on Tawas Lake.

—William Norris, head teacher of the Markdale, Ont., school, Monday fired five times at the second teacher, Miss Ford, three shots taking effect. He then shot himself, dying instantly.

—S. W. Tallmadge, the crop statistician of Milwaukee, issued his final estimate of the wheat crop of the United States for 1884, as follows: Winter wheat, 380,000,000 bushels; spring wheat, 150,000,000, or 130,000,000 bushels more than the crop of 1883.

—The steamship Faraday has laid the deep-sea portion of the second Bennett-Mackey cable, and is now on the way to Woolwich to receive the remainder of the deep-sea portion and the American shore end.

—A train stopped at a drawbridge near Pensacola on the Pensacola and Atlantic Railroad. Seeing no signals to move, the conductor went forward and found the watchman murdered and his body laid on the track.

—During the storm Sunday last off the Newfoundland coast, fifteen fishing smacks were lost at Outer Cove, the schooners Petrel and Elizabeth were sunk in White Bay, and a fishing smack with four men and two lady passengers was lost off Cape Broyle.

—At 11 o'clock Thursday night the train belonging to the Anglo-American Circus left Fort Collins for Golden, Colorado. Forty minutes later, when near Greeley, the sleeping-car, in which sixty men employed as roustabouts of the circus were asleep, caught fire and was wholly consumed. Ten men perished. Two were seriously and five slightly burned. The fire was communicated by an open torch with which the car was lighted to a quantity of gasoline which was being carried in the same car, causing an explosion.

—The special agent sent to inquire into the condition of the Piegan Indians reports that these Indians, numbering about 2,000, are dying from the effects of gradual starvation at the rate of one a day. The men and women are gaunt and spiritless, and the children emaciated. All are so weakened by lack of sufficient food for the past two years that dreadful suffering and death will occur shortly. The appropriation for this year only permits the agent to issue two pounds of beef and three pounds of bad flour per week. The governor of Montana reports an unnatural and inhuman state of things existing, and calls upon the Secretary of the Interior to assume the responsibility of issuing full rations until Congress meets in December.

—A tornado struck Evansville, Ind., Friday morning. The city was raked from one end to the other. Not a manufactory in it entirely escaped injury. A large school building in course of construction, and which needed but a roof for completion, collapsed totally. On every street cellars are flooded, trees and fences leveled, and telegraphic and telephonic communications almost entirely suspended. Hundreds of small dwellings and stables are razed to the ground, and families left without shelter. The scene on the river was awe-inspiring. Waves lashed themselves into fury, and, dashing twenty and thirty feet high, small steamers and tugs were broken from their moorings and grounded, or blown up river to sand bars. But the most horrible and saddest news of all is the sinking of the transfer steamer Belmont and fourteen passengers who were on board. The Belmont left with a south-bound passenger train on a barge. Part of the passengers horror stricken fled from the cars to the steamer for safety. The barge was torn from the steamer and driven in shore hard aground, while the cyclone seized the steamer and capsized it, the boat going down bottom upward.

—The State Department has received from Mr. Mason, United States consul at Marseilles, a report upon the situation at that place and Toulon since the abatement of the cholera epidemic. He says: "The finances of Toulon and Marseilles have been strained to the utmost in cleansing the streets and tenements and caring ing for the sick and burying the dead. The presence of impending financial ruin weighs heavily upon the business community, and even the ordinary resources of charity are seriously curtailed. The tide of returning fugitives has just set in and no description can picture the wretchedness and destitution that already exist."

—General Wolseley proposes to reach Dongola with the Gordon relief expedition by Nov. 7. He declares his confidence of accomplishing this programme. The relief party will consist of 7,000 men. Four hundred more river boats have been ordered.

—The Governor General of Canada has been ordered by the home government to secure the services of 600 voyageurs for the relief of General Gordon at Khartoum. They are needed to take flat bottomed boats up the Nile and for making portages around the rapids.

—Col. Kitchener at Debbeh, Egypt, has received a message from Gen. Gordon saying the General and troops are well and had sufficient provisions to enable them to hold out four months. The message is dated the 30th of April.

—The clergy of Spain have started a monster demonstration in every church in the country in favor of the temporal power of the Pope. The movement has grown out of the speech of Senor Pidal y Mon, Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, in the Chamber of Deputies some weeks ago, in which he spoke slightingly of the restoration of the temporal power.

—A private letter to a gentleman in Des Moines from Ireland states that the crops in that country are the most promising since 1879, but that thousands of acres are lying in waste for want of labor to cultivate them.

—It is stated in semi-official quarters that the French fleet in Chinese waters will go to the Gulf of Pechili for the present, and that an attack will be made on Canton by both land and sea forces as soon as the climate permits the march of troops across the frontier from Tonquin. A proclamation has been issued by the Chinese authorities placing a price upon the heads of Frenchmen.

—Mr. Gladstone's speeches to his constituents in the County of Midlothian are attracting great attention. The London papers are filled almost to the exclusion of other news with the Prime Minister's explanation and vindication of his policy. The warmth of his reception shows that his strength has not only been maintained but is on the increase.

—Advices from Shanghai say the Chinese authorities there have received an important telegram from Pekin, the purport of which is not precisely known. There are reports, however, that China is desirous of coming to an agreement with France.

—A dispatch from Foo Chow says that the French iron-clads, having completed the work of destruction of the forts along the Min River from its mouth up to the arsenal yesterday, this morning commenced shelling the camps and earthworks on the hills back of the razed forts along the Kinpai Channel. The earthworks and camps nearer the river were rapidly demolished. The Chinese abandoned the works and retreated to the camps and fortifications higher up the hills, some of which the French gunners found great difficulty in reaching, on account of their elevated positions. Admiral Courbet telegraphed the government to-night that he had completely razed all the remaining fortifications, consisting chiefly of earthworks, and destroyed all the camps established on both sides of the Min River, from its mouth to the arsenal. Admiral Courbet has cleared his fleet from the Min River and has joined the force under Admiral Lespes at Keelung.

—Lima, Peru, suffered a terrible assault on the 26th ult. Caceres, a guerilla, entered the city with his rabble yelling and firing. The night before all the government troops were withdrawn into the Cuartel and the palace, and the entry of Caceres, although not unexpected, was somewhat of a surprise. His men captured the Cuartel and the churches of Mercede and San Augustin, from which they kept up a fusillade. They also attacked the Guadaloupe Railroad Station. About 150 persons were killed in Mercaderes and Bodegones streets and near the palace square, where the fire was the hottest. Finally the government troops made a sortie and drove out the mob. Caceres was accompanied by about ninety horsemen.

For the Cynosure two months and more should prompt every reader and lover of reform to step to the front and embrace this golden opportunity to increase the circulation of the best and most reliable reform paper in all Christendom; that people may be enlightened and brought to see the stubborn fact that all secret orders, Mormonism included, are combined to destroy our government, and are in fact bringing Christianity to a discount. In proof of this, let Masonry take snuff and a large majority of the churches sneeze in response. Now let us get on the Gospel harness and arm ourselves, disregarding all opposition and persecution. Victory is ours if we go forward in the strength and faith of our Lord.—WM. D. JOHNSTON, Lexington, Ill.

By request of the N. C. A. Board of Directors the publication of the new Reform Story is postponed for a few numbers, to give a better opportunity to get out the plates for publication in book form as fast as printed in the paper. The death of Secretary Folger removes from President Arthur's cabinet its most trusted member, and one whose assiduity and faithfulness in office has been a principle means of whatever popularity the admin istration has. This same attention to his business was the cause of his death. When reaching home at Geneva, N. Y., a short time ago he remarked that he had come home to die; the examination of his physicians fixed the cause of disease in overwork. The attempt to make political capital out of this national loss is worse than the appeal to scandal. Mr. Folger's defeat two years ago, for the governorship of New York, by a vote of 192,000, may have been affected in some way by Mr. Blaine. But it is malicious and false to cover with such a charge the overwhelming reason of the disgust of the nation for the methods of Conkling, Logan and their crew.

The great soldier re-unions which have been gathering thick of late suggest to an observing mind that the further we get from the war the more numerous and enthusiastic are these gatherings. That they are a considerable part of the machinery of politics, is so plain as hardly to need remark. They are recruiting stations also for the oath-bound secret order, the Grand Army of the Republic. They are, perhaps with more ultimate danger to society, a great means of fostering a war spirit, deceiving with glamour, parade and excitement, while its horrors and immoralitiesare hidden. "War, said Burke, "is a temporary repeal of all the virtues." But who recognizes this fearful definition in our soldiers' re-unions?

One branch of the Belgian Parliament lately passed an education bill which granted a considerable increase to the educational facilities of the Catholic priests, and the little kingdom has been in a turmoil of faction ever since. The priests rallied their adherents in Brussels for a Sunday parade to the number of about a hundred thousand. The liberal faction thoroughly roused and armed attacked the procession and broke it up in spite of the interference of troops. Repeated charges of cavalry with great havoc, the wounding and killing of scores and the arrest of hundreds could hardly abate the anger of the people. The legislators may not care for an attack on a Romish procession, but a body that can forget its duty to the people in their subserviency to the priests might be powerfully moved by a popular demonstration aimed at their own persons.

The bullying and greed of France in Africa and Asia is meeting not only the protest of other nations, but last week a party in the French assembly itself entered its protest. A delegation of the Extreme Left sent a letter to President Grevy pointing out that France is conducting a war without a vote of the Chambers and expending money without the sanction of Parliament. The disposition of the country's forces, the letter continues, is weakening the national defenses, and personal power is being affirmed with obstinacy and audacity unworthy the Republic. The constitution remains a dead letter, and the government acts without informing or consulting the representatives of the people. The letter concludes by demanding the convocation of the Chambers and appealing to Grevy's high political probity. The President, however, as if convicted, ventured no reply to these charges beyond a simple acknowledgement of their receipt. But he cannot so easily avoid the reckoning to which the Ruler of nations will call him.

The cholera plague, like a lava overflow, after a brief respite has broken out again with double virulence among the lazaroni of Italy. Superstition and ignorance have left that people little but their fears and these have risen above every controlling influence but that of self-preservation. Mobs attack the railways to cut off travel and the spread of the disease. Villages establish armed cordons. Long quarentines are the rule at every city gate and some are closed entirely to the outer world. A panic, almost anarchy prevails, for each town is taking measures to protect its people regardless of government. The superstition that the disease is produced by the doctors is quite general and the rabble accuse all whom they suppose to be in league with them even to the prelates of the Romish church. "Every intelligent Italian is ashamed of his country," say the dispatches, and one Italian paper confesses that the present condition of the nation almost revokes her right to be classed among the great nations of the world.

The British government have not yet broken the power of the Irish "Invincibles" and Beaconsfield's sage remark in one of his latest speeches that secret societies are an element in society which will require the interposition of governments, is forcibly brought to mind. This fierce secret order has issued a proclamation with a reward of $5,000 for the capture of one witness and $3,000 for another, who have been of service to the government in its prosecutions. The "proclamation" sets forth that the above-named sum has been contributed by the men of Ireland, and will be paid to any person who will place, living or dead, within the grip of the missioners of Ireland's liberty the body of James McDermott, British spy, late of Brooklyn, supposed to be now in London. The furthur sum of $3,000 will be paid for the body, living or dead, of Matthew E. O'Brien, British spy, McDermott's associate. O'Donovan Rossa, the representative of this gang of sworn assassins in this country, brags that they will catch the informers; "for in every quarter of the globe" said he, "we have our men on the lookout for them."

The visit of Governor St. John and his colleague on the Prohibition ticket, Mr. Daniel, to the Lake Bluff Convocation grounds, thirty miles north of this city, attracted to that pleasant resort a thousand or so of the earnest temperance men and women of the Northwest. Though the gathering was political, it was more. In our American methods we are learning to measure the conviction of a men by his acts and his vote. So that the temperance cause has a barometer in this movement, which the men who are on the lookout for storms are watching carefully. The liquor dealer estimates the prohibition movement at its true value if the politician does not. The speech of Governor St. John was a clear, manly, convincing and above all, honest argument for political prohibition. The position of the Republican party he examined with scathing eloquence—the party of moral ideas and excellent promises. To those who bewailed so many "lost votes" he cried, "You who voted for James G. Birney, did you lose your vote. You who voted from Fremont, did you lose your vote? Why the man who loses his vote is the man who don't vote for principle. Such a man needs converting through and through to Christ." He had been asked "Do you expect to be elected?" "If every voter" he replied, "votes as he prays, I will; and it is for you to harmonize your ballots with God. God will not take it as an excuse that you are afraid of putting Democrats in power or Republicans in power. He expects you to vote for the purity and peace of the homes of America, for his kingdom. Vote on God's side and he will eventually be on your side."

WHAT I REMEMBER. II.

A REMARKABLE RENUNCIATION.

At one of those meetings in the winter of 1828–9, mentioned in my last letter, Mr. Ambrose Kingman, a well known and highly respected citizen, a Christian and a Mason, arose before a crowded and excited audience, and told them they were meddling with that which was none of their business; and not only so, but it was entirely above their comprehension. He said that no pretended revelation, or exposure; in fact, nothing but a regular, legitimate initiation could give any one any just idea, or conception even, of any "part or parts, art or arts, point or points" of this most sacred and sublime institution! He advised them to go home, "mind their own business, and let Masonry alone," until, by legitimate and proper means, they could obtain a genuine acquaintance with it.

Well do I remember the effect of that speech. Coming, as it did, from one whose word was considered simply unimpeachable, it fell "like a wet blanket" upon the popular mind. Public indignation against Masonry, now amounting almost to frenzy, was, for the week following, very perceptibly cooled. At the next meeting (the meetings were held weekly) "presto change!" Mr. Kingman spoke again. He said in substance: "Fellow-citizens, you remember what I said to you at our last meeting. I did wrong, very wrong. The thought of that speech has worried me day and night, continually. It seems as if I had scarcely slept since that time. It was under the impulse of fear—for I had been threatened—that I said what I did. And now, fellow-citizens, although it is at the risk of my life, my conscience compels me to say that so far as I know about Masonry, MORGAN'S EXPOSURES ARE TRUE!" He then assured them that his connection with Masonry was ended. He kept his word to the end of his life. He concluded by asking their protection, which was promptly and abundantly given.

Had a thunderbolt from a clear sky crushed in upon that assembly, it could hardly have been more startling. Its effect upon the Masons, who were jubilant over that first speech, and who had gathered in numbers to gloat over the confusion and embarrassment caused thereby, was most painfully depressing. So sudden, so maddening was the shock, that but for the presence and protection of overwhelming numbers, Mr. Kingman would have fallen a sacrifice to Masonic vengeance on the spot. As it was, they followed him from the meeting, and were seen around his house during the night; but, as he was well guarded, then and afterward, they made no further demonstration.

The enthusiasm of the people was now rekindled and redoubled. In the rage and bluster of the Masons, they saw, not merely a confirmation, but a most emphatic endorsement of this last speech and of Morgan's exposures. Of course the good work went on. On the next "Fast Day," in April, Rev. Jared Ried, the Congregational pastor, added his testimony to that of Mr. Kingman and others, and renounced and denounced Masonry from the pulpit.

A friend who witnessed the Allyn fiasco, reminds me that the old Masonic "Squire," before whom Allyn was arraigned, was determined, even till after the opening of the "court," to put the matter through at all hazards, and thus make "a wholesome example of Anti-masonic impertinence!" But the assurance of the counsel for the "prisoner," that Masons must and would be called upon for testimony, opened his eyes. So, saying "there was no case," he "quashed the indictment."

Allyn went from here to Woburn, a town adjoining, and worked the first three degrees there. After the close of the "work," Mr. Nathaniel Kendall, a well known respectable Christian man, said to the audience: "Gentlemen, years ago, when I became a Mason, I went through the same ceremony you have just witnessed, and on this very floor." Thus testimony followed testimony. "Good men" everywhere, left the lodge, and became swift witnesses against it.

After waiting, perhaps a year or two, for the first flush of popular excitement in this vicinity to cool somewhat, the now exposed, crippled, crushed "fraternity" issued a manifesto. They told the public that all the pretended "exposures" of Masonry were false. They reasserted the Divine origin and the immaculate purity of their "cruelly persecuted" institution! This was signed by a great many names of those who were, or had been Masons. One name of the latter class, was that of Benjamin F. Thompson of Woburn, Mass. Mr. T. afterward told me he did not put his name there, did not consent to have it put there, nor did he even know or hear of any such paper until it was printed and given to the public with his name upon it! He told me he had not been inside of a lodgeroom for several years. But perhaps the best thing he said was that, in his opinion, no man knowing what the Christian religion is, and what Masonry is, can be, at the same time, both a Christian and a Mason.

Facts like these might be multiplied indefinitely. They speak for themselves. Comment, therefore, is not needed. The promptness with which the public indignation was then aroused is easily accounted for in the fact that the public conscience had not then become debauched and perverted by the "Progress," "Advanced Theology," "Higher Criticism" and "Deeper Convictions" which, centering in our great "School of the Prophets," and now radiating therefrom, are scattering their baleful influence all over our beloved New England, and, more or less, throughout Christendom itself. May God speed the day when truth and right shall once more prevail, and Masonry, that great embodiment and perpetuation of the old pagan mysteries, shall again be held in that abhorrence it so richly deserves. T.

Reading, Mass.

SAFETY OF DISARMAMENT.—"What is at present the danger of foreign invasion, compared to the danger of producing dissatisfaction and discontent, and curtailing the comforts of the people by undue taxation? The answer must be this—That the danger of aggression is infinitely less than the danger of those sufferings to which the present exorbitant expenditure must give rise. The interest of Europe is not that in any country should exercise a peculiar influence; but the true interest of Europe is, to come to some one accord, so as to enable every country to reduce those military armaments which belong to a state of war rather than of peace. I do wish that the councils of every country,(or that the public voice and mind, if the councils did not,) would willingly propagate such a doctrine." —Sir Robert Peel, 1841.

There is great force in Spurgeon's pithy saying: "If God's providence is our inheritance, we need not worry about the price of wheat."

GEMS OF LODGERY.

BY ELDER NATHAN CALLENDER.

In the past five years some rare gems of lodgery have been evolved in Sharkville, Pennsylvania. More than ten years ago an estimable and well to do M. D. of said place and his gifted wife, struck the secret empire some telling blows. Soon the minions of lodgery made war on these reformers on a charge of slander. By liberal and skillful swearing, such as Masons are used to, the doctor was beaten and lost much money in the suit. Masonry drove the nail to suit itself.

One of the leading spirits against the doctor was the Christian (?) Knight, Hon. Shyster of Sharkville. He is now reported to be in the coils, having Masonically appropriated to his own use some soldiers' pensions, committed to his benign agency. The parties swindled, I understand to be, an infirm old man and a feeble old soldier's widow. Masonry looks after the widows and orphans, that is what it is for. Hon. Shyster, our Masonic gem of Sharkville is now in a way to undergo a process by friction, which will tend to evolve his rare and latent qualities. Whether the craft have the power to pluck this gem from the wheel before its merits are brought out, remains to be seen. Great efforts are being put forth to cover up its beauties.

Hon. Shyster is not the only gem in Sharkville. Celestial gems have come to the surface in the last few years. "Revs." we mean. Two of the three churches in this town have been blessed with numerous pastors. Some of them came and left with a sound record. But those were not lodge gems as those were which we are now concerned with. Some twelve years ago there came to this village Rev. Mr. Changewell. He declared himself an anti-lodge man under an injunction of an anti-lodge people—as they then were. In a few months this Celestial gem went to an adjacent town, while still pastor of said people, and joined the Masons. Hon. Shyster, who held the string to manipulate a first-class automaton, as Shyster proved himself, then sang,

"Hail, Masonry, divine Glory of ages shine," etc.

A blush of disappointment and chagrin came over Rev. Changewell when he failed to get his money back which had been solemnly pledged when he paid his fee at the lodge door. There was too much anti-lodge element in this too conservative church to wear this jewel patiently to the year's end. So Changewell left that people under a cloud. It is reported that Rev. Changewell after meeting some adverse changes, including a brief prison home for bad conduct and drunkenness, took to driving a street car in a Pennsylvania city. This is the latest intelligence the writer of this article has of him.

We next introduce the reader to Rev. Daubwell, a very Demosthenes, who served as pastor in Sharkville for some years. Rev. Daubwell came to this field in a fog which thickened into a storm-cloud and burst on his devoted head—devoted to "strong powder," Masonically speaking.

A Mason was he, true son of the craft
Running over with glee, all right fore and aft,
By whisky inspired he "loaded and fired,"
And soon from that parish ignobly retired.

The next, and third lodge gem who presided in said parish, in Sharkville, only briefly, was also reputed to be a man of many bottles, though upheld by a denomination, in orthodoxy par excellence. He could flourish and swell in an association of saints where an Anti-mason of unquestioned loyalty to God and truth would be villified and crushed.

We now come to the latest incumbent in said parish—Rev. Mr. Lillipute, a fine and a fancy sketch of a man. A true son of the G. A. R. (Grand Association of Renegades) and we suppose a member of the potent order of A. Y. M. S. True to the craft, he had long had the habit of imbibing "Templar lemonade" and other lodge beverages. After in a measure concealing his weakness for more than twenty years he was overtaken in this fault, as interpreted from the Christian standpoint, and was helped home by his friends, being too drunk to help himself. Though months have passed since this fact became public, we are informed this son of the craft is upheld in the denomination and is still preaching to a church near Sharkville.

How is it that such men are upheld by a Christian body? Is not Masonry a good thing? It can make inebriates and defend them, and that in the church of Christ. It can defend ministers in the church, in the pulpit, who, were they outspoken Anti-masons, with the same faults, would be blasted by the united breath of the lodge and the church. But, thank God, Anti-masons do not "charge and fire," as, in Masonic language, do these gems of the craft.

So "Masonry is a good thing when one is traveling," and where the constitution demands more stimulus than the legs will support; when the "grand hailing sign" may be used to all lawful brothers in case the poor unfortunate should not, under too strong a powder, become too weak or too foolish to give it. His fellow-craftsmen are sworn most solemnly to help him in distress and in all extremities, and, poor souls, who are more likely to fall into extremities than are these "widows' sons."

Query. Is Satan dead? How then are the children of the craft, the widows' sons?

SHORT SERMON.

TEXT: Why callest thou me good?

MY BRETHREN:—I verily believe that when the devil wishes to catch a certain class of gulls that are somewhat chary, as a last resource he baits his hook with a "good man;" one of those good natured souls whose highest ambition is to become the oldest Mason in "that quarter of the country." In ancient times Satan chose Pharisees for long prayers and broad phylacteries for his bait, and with these he caught much people, so that Moses was left almost without a following. Though the archangel himself strove to possess Moses and hold on to him, yet when at last the devil used Pharisees for bait, he prevailed over his adversary, the angel of light, and held his ground until the coming of the Saviour.

My friends, you all know how Satan tried to get the Saviour himself in order to bait his hook with, and what the result was. The Saviour told Satan plainly and directly, to get behind him; just as you should tell every "good man" that is offered to you by Freemasons as a candidate for office, or that dangles to you upon the Masonic hook in any way. Your language should be towards the Freemason precisely such as was that of the Saviour towards the Pharisee.

You all know too, my friends, how the "good man" Pharisee, lending himself for bait to the evil one, slyly made use of Moses for defeating Moses. Well, then, that is precisely what your "good man" Freemason is doing; he is making a crafty use of Christ for defeating Christ. He tries to outwit the Holy Ghost. He talks with unctuous piety about religion, about the Bible, about Christ, and makes you believe that a man who "lives up to Masonry" may not only have the glory of becoming the "oldest Mason" in the world, but be better even than Christianity itself. While falling down and worshiping Satan (for an office) in the lodge six days every week, and the seventh your "good Freemason" goes and justifies his treason against the Saviour in the church.

Were there no good men among the Pharisees—do you ask?

My friends, it is a very difficult thing to know who is good. It is hardly safe to call any man good so long as the contest over his soul between good and evil still remains undecided. But it is the most foolish thing in the world to imagine a man to be good because he struts as the High Priest of a Masonic lodge; unless, indeed, it is to suppose that a party must be good because it offers us a "good man" as candidate for the Presidency.

My friends, we Americans have more to do with parties and principles than we have with men. Concerning the goodness or evil of institutions and parties we can be more certain, and can unhesitatingly decide that Pharisaism, the Holy Inquisition and Ancient and Honorable Freemasonry, are very bad institutions. We know too, that the Democratic party has sought to defeat Democracy by making use of Democracy. We know that from that tree hangs the fruit of four millions of slaves; and we know that from the Republican tree, supposed to have been once good and virtuous, there hangs the fruit of all kinds of villainies, and all kinds of lodges.

My friends, let us make the tree a true American party, and then we may get good fruit.

So MOTE IT BE!

THE RESULT OF DISCUSSION.

The meeting of the Grand Lodge of Tennessee, Jan. 31st, 1884, was made memorable in the history of Anti-masonry, if not of the lodge itself, from a part of the report of the Grand Master, N. W. McConnell. He said that a revival of Masonry was needed. He found scattered over the State an army of non-affiliates whose ranks were constantly enlarging. He found also another army of sick Hiramites, members who retained their membership but rarely or never attended lodge—Masonically dead though with names on the roll. He determined to save what he could from these two classes, and his address continues, giving some facts that are highly interesting, as proving that earnest Christian instruction against the lodge is sure to have its effect, and that the claim that Masonry let alone will die of itself cannot be defended:

"In view of this determination, the Grand Master issued a circular address to the different lodges, submitting a table of the losses and gains of the order for the nine years ending Jan. 1, 1883. In 1873 the membership was 19,622, the greatest number ever reached in the State. From that year to the first of January, 1883, a period of nine years, the membership has steadily decreased, and the net loss aggregates 4,419; and the aggregate loss from all sources reaches the appalling number of 15,126; the withdrawal of members is the greatest trouble, seven thousand three hundred and thirty-two having withdrawn in nine years. The circular urged members to impress upon those desiring to withdraw the fact that they ought not to do so without joining another lodge, and closed with an order that the circular be read at the next stated communication of the lodge, and the aid of the members be invoked in the endeavor to resuscitate Freemasonry in Tennessee, a report of the result to be made at the end of six months.

"The net loss for 1874 was 150 members; for 1875 it was 448; for 1876 it was 778; for 1877 it was 961; for 1878 it was 922; for 1879 it was 511; for 1880 it was 282; for 1881 it was 450; for 1882 it was 274. At the time this address went to press, the returns from 339 lodges had been received, and they showed a net gain of thirty-two."

THE CLOWN MASONIC.

In our last issue we took occasion to refer to the Masonic mummery which turned the dedication of the pedestal for Bartholdi's colossal statue into a pretentious farce. A few words more may not be amiss on the same subject. We are not aware by what authority the ceremonial laying of the corner stone of that, or any other public work, is handed over to a secret society which has nothing in common with Masonry proper but an empty name.

An easy-going community has hitherto tolerated the public exhibition of Masonic clowning on these occasions as a matter of custom. But we believe there is good sense enough in our public, if once awakened, to insist upon and compel the exclusion of the bedizened Past Grand Mountebank and Free and Accepted Tom-fool from the dedication of our public monuments, and send them back to cut their antics in the privacy of the lodge chamber. "Never," said the Supreme Ineffable Driveller, at Bedloe's Island; "never has our order assisted at a ceremony of deeper significance since the laying of the corner stone of Solomon's Temple." For cool and brazen impudence, this passes parallel.

Hoar antiquity, indeed, claimed for an order which cannot trace its existence back to the masking jest of a knot of Charles the First's Cavaliers, beguiling the tedium of their confinement in beleagured Oxford! Grave authorities even give Masonry a more recent birth, and name a certain London tavern, where in the reign of William III. certain merry-making tradesmen hatched out the tawdry Masonic jackdaw. Commander Gorringe, in removing from its Egyptian pedestal the obelisk now embellishing Central Park, traced, or fancied that he did, certain squares and triangles graven in the cement beneath the monument. Whereat Masonry cried exultant. Here was actually its signet mark impressed upon that which was old when the site of London was still a dreary pen, and the barbarian chased the bear through forests where now stand Vienna and Berlin. This is such logic as we might naturally expect from these banded impostors.

The square, triangle, compass and circle represent the tools of practical masonry, and are probably as ancient as the first builder in carven stone. And if he left the impress of his utensils on his work, he was simply marking it forsooth, with the symbols of a secret order, whose unbroken descent is still perpetuated by a mixed and promiscuous rabble of all trades, callings and professions! If Gorringe had found beneath the obelisk the impression of the insignia of some ancient Egyptian clown, the Past Grand Ninny of contemporaneous Masonry might detect some authoritative ear-mark to establish the antiquity of his order, and prove his own legitimate succession to the buffoon who flourished and rattled his bells, and capered in coxcomb and motley in the days of the Pharaohs.

To a vast number of the American people, the Masonic order is odious. To many more it is ridiculous. To Catholics it is both one and the other. And if its ramifications and occult influences could be accurately traced, we are gravely mistaken if it would not be found to be essentially vicious and menacing. Unbiased judicial integrity and strict conscientiousness in the jury box may possibly co-exist with the presence in bench and panel of the sympathies bred of a secret and oath-bound order; but we are not the first to assert that the insidious poison of Masonry has frequently corrupted justice at its fountain head. The toleration of the order has already in our history become a grave political issue. It has never cleared its hands of at least one assassination. We know what it is, when confident and defiant in its strength, it casts off its hypocritical mask in other countries; and we have, for the very secrecy it practises, no assurance that Masonry in the United States essentially differs from that of France, Italy, and the South American Republics.

But whatever be its drift, codes and influences, its public obtrusion before us, at the inauguration of our State or National monuments, or in our public ceremonies in any official character, is unwarrantable and offensive. Whether the Mason be knave, impostor or mountebank, let him keep his mummery and drool for the edification or honor of his own, and expend it over what he builds or buries. And if the sentiments of those who detest or despise him can only be aroused to open expression, we shall have seen the last of Mumbo-Jumboism pranking its arrogant folly in the face of the public.

What a stinging cartoon might not Keppler have drawn for us of the monstrous clowning at Bedloe's Island—showing the Past Grand Master and his attendant Merry Andrews in solemn foolery with their trowels and squares, corn and oil and wine, the clown's cap peering from beneath their hats, and conventional chain of sausages streaming from their rear pockets, while Liberty in the background reverses the torch of civilization and veils her eyes in shame.—Catholic Examiner.

"PROPHESY UNTO US SMOOTH THINGS."

This has ever been the desire of worldlings and hypocrites. They do not wish to be disturbed, dishonored or disgraced. Whatever iniquities they perpetrate, they wish to keep a smooth outside, and maintain a reputation for respectability and sanctity. But there is no guise in which the devil is more dangerous than when he appears in angelic form; and if he can hush and gag the servants of the Lord, he can work his mischief at his pleasure.

To expose the deceptions and reveal the snares of the enemy, the Lord sends his servants like burning and shining lights. He bids them to "cry aloud and spare not;" he demands of them that they be honest, frank, outspoken, and determined in rebuking wrong and exposing evil.

Such men will be hated and traduced by the crafty and the designing, but their record is on high; and when the Lord appears he will bring their judgment to light. They may labor without thanks or reward in this world, but the Turkish proverb is, "Do good and throw it into the sea, and the fishes will find it."

The world has been greatly benefited by the firm and steadfast testimony of honest and courageous men, who could not be frightened, or bought, or silenced; but who have rebuked iniquities, upheld truth, and have sent forth, by voice and pen, the messages of warning and admonition which God in mercy has given to them. Theirs has been no easy lot, but their work has not been in vain, and they shall not lose their reward when He who "came not to send peace on earth, but a sword," shall come again to bring that peace which shall be abiding and eternal.—The Christian.

PUBLISH THE BANS.

In reply to Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton's article in the North American Review, the Inter Ocean suggests that instead of making divorces easier, there be some obstructions to bad marriages. It is an old idea revived thus:

Many of our readers can remember the time when the proposed marriage was solemnly announced in church, and notice given if any one had aught to say why the arrangement proposed should not be carried out to say so. This custom was peculiar to no denomination, although the custom was given more prominence in some churches than in others. For the most part the custom has fallen into disuse, yielding to a gradual process of decay. The Roman Catholics and the Society of Friends still cling to the old way, with some simplifications. Divorces in both these churches are very rare, almost unheard of among the Quakers. In theory the "giving in meeting," as proclaiming the bans is called among the latter, is not the announcement of a nuptial engagement, only the proposition to form such an engagement if the "meeting" is willing. This move must be made a month in advance of the marriage. The women of the society consider and report upon the matter from the side of the bride intendent, the men from the bridegroom point of view. The ordeal is a trying one for the young folks, although the custom has been softened somewhat of late. But the fundamental idea is maintained with sacred fidelity. As a consequence incongruous, uncongenial marriages are rare, and divorce almost unknown among the Quakers. If the idea at the bottom of the Quaker plan were adopted generally, and public sentiment refused to countenance impetuous marriages, the shores of life would not be strewn, as now, by the flotsam and jetsam of domestic infelicity, or, rather, our court records would cease to be so largely made up of the torn marriage certificates, broken wedding rings, and the like which go to make up "the skeleton in the closet." If the North American Review wants to do work for domestic happiness, let it lend its pages to the cultivation of a public sentiment in the direction suggested. Stop the cause of the divorce evil and the evil itself will disappear.—Inter Ocean.

A MORMON OBSERVATION.

A correspondent of the Saint's Herald, organ of the anti-polygomy Mormons, writes thus of a mining town in Colorado:

'Tis claimed that Coal Creek has a population of 2,000, though I think this is an exaggeration, but there are extensive coal diggings; and be this as it may, there are eight whisky and beer saloons in full blast, and rivers of lager beer being consumed; some of the fair sex, 'tis said, being foremost in the demoralizing practice. There are eight secret societies. Quite a respectable hall has been erected under the auspices of the order of Odd fellows, which is occupied every night save Sunday night by one or the other society.

Being at one time in company with a member of a very prominent secret society, he vauntingly said, it took one and a half hours to make a member, and added, "the oath they take is terrible." What monkey shines they go through in such secret conclaves, is hard to tell. And why a beneficiary society (if that is its only object) should want to be bound up in secret oaths and covenants, with grips and passwords, is puzzling. I have heard that some such places are very sacred, made so by the presence of the Lord, which is still more puzzling—when I remember that the Book of Mormon declares, thet the Lord worketh not in secret combinations. "I spake openly to the world," said Christ. "I ever taught in your synagogues and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort, and in secret have I said nothing."—John 18: 20. So that Moroni and Christ, two competent witnesses, condemn secrecy. "The truth shall make you free;" but how are men free when bound by oaths and covenants? I was surprised one day to see a peculiar sign on several conspicuous places and on inquiry was informed that it was a call for a public meeting of a certain secret society. It now seems that secrecy is the order of societies. Employers seem afraid of their employees, and vice versa. Secrecy appears to be the protection sought, or through it is thought a remedy may be reached. And so secret societies are spreading over the land.

"The Pope's new encyclical letter denounces Freemasonry as atheistic, political, and revolutionary. Dr. Robert Morris, a well-known Masonic writer, replies that the Pope's indictment is true as respects the lodges of France, Italy, and the East, but not as respects those in England and America."

It is claimed that a Mason cannot be an atheist or infidel, and therefore a Masonic lodge cannot be atheistic or infidel How is it that the Masonic lodges of France, Italy, and the East are atheistic?—Tennessee Baptist.

FREEMASON AND MINISTER.

The newspapers inform us that Rev. Mr. Wilson, late Presiding Elder of the Methodist Episcopal church (South), was buried in Bellefontaine, according to the burial rite of the craft. We are very surprised at this. Christian sepulture has for ages been regarded as one of the privileges of Christian communion. In the first ages of the church the tombs of the martyrs, and all who died in the faith were called martyrs, were regarded as holy, and in absence of temples, those burial places were selected for the celebration of the divine mysteries. The burial of the dead was a ceremony next in importance to the baptism of the living. The bodies of Christians have been regarded in all ages as the temples of the Holy Ghost and the obligation of personal purity was predicated on the sanctity belonging to the habitation of divinity. The interment of the dead was a more important ceremony than the consecration of a church. In fact, the consecration of a church is a sepulture. The altar is the central object of consecration and in the marble of the table are inserted, as in sepulchres, the relics of the saints. Every mass throughout the world to-day is celebrated over the graves of the martyrs.

Mr. Wilson was regarded by his brethren as a minister of Christ's church with the rank of local bishop. We are told that he was a most earnest, active and successful member of his denomination. His panegyrist told us that in his death the church suffered great loss. Then why did not the church bury him? Or is sepulture regarded as a religious rite among the Methodist Episcopalians? Does not that denomination consider a dead man no better than a dead ass, to be buried with what the Old Testament calls the "sepulture of asses?" If she considers him anything above a brute she should have some way of testifying that regard. And we understand that the Methodist Episcopalians have a burial service. On this very important occasion they yielded in favor of the Freemasons.

Did they consider the prayers and ceremonies of the craft as constituting as proper burial service for a dead presiding elder as that furnished by their own denomination? The craft does not pretend to be a religious denomination or a religion at all? Do the Methodist Episcopalians consider their religion as no better than no religion at all? It would certainly so appear. * * * *

These Masons have become the handy men of our non-deuominational Christians; the fac-totums of the uuchurched world. They do not think that in obtruding their ceremonies they are giving offence to anyone. They lay corner-stones and dedicate public buildings when religious rites as practiced by any denomination of Christians would be considered a sectarian impertinence. * * * *

The church of Christ is the kingdom of Christ. This kingdom is distracted and torn by dissensions. There are organized rebellions, which call themselves churches; there are predatory bands, the most dangerous of which is the craft. The laws of Christ's kingdom are unchangeable and universal. Her ministers are duly appointed, duly commissioned, duly installed, and obedience to them is obedience to him who created both minister and ministry.—Western Watchman.

A trade journal published in Connecticut utters a needed and earnest protest against a form of desecration that is not uncommon, even where as a rule the Sabbath is respected and observed. It says: "The custom of making repairs and improvements on the Sabbath is, in our opinion, a loss in the end. . . . If men are required to work on the Sabbath, the influence will be demoralizing. They will not have the same respect for any law as they otherwise would, nor will they, in our opinion, have the same respect for their employers' interests. The whole practice is wrong, and contrary to the instincts of those even who have no religious convictions. . . . Work of necessity is different, and there would be no difference of opinion on that point. But be careful not to magnify a mercenary feeling into a necessity!"—United Presbyterian.

There is not much suavity, and no halting and hesitating, about duty. Brusque and blunt and determined, no obstacle can stand in its way when once the right is made known. With bent head and folded wing standing in the presence of the Eternal, the first prayer is: "Make Thy way straight before my face." When that prayer is answered, the voice of the siren expediency, charms she never so wisely, is never heeded. With a countenance like the sphynx, "Staring right on with calm eternal eyes," it speeds to the goal.—Union Signal.

Oh! what a weariness it is to live among men, and find so few men; and among Christians, and find few Christians; so much talk and so little action; religion turned almost to a tune and air of words; and amid all our petty discourses, pusillanimous and base, and so easily dragged into the mire, self and flesh, and pride and passion domineering, while we speak of being in Christ, and clothed with him, and believe it because we speak of it so often and so confidently.—Leighton.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

PLATFORM.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

POMEROY AND CONANT.

THEIR LETTERS TO THE NATIONAL COMMITTEE.

BOSTON, Mass., Sept. 2d, 1884.

To the Executive Committee of the American Prohibition Party,

GENTLEMEN:—The time is at hand when those who are accorded the right of suffrage are to choose the chief executive officers of the United States.

To reach an intelligent conclusion, the distinct issues in the pending canvass should be well defined and clearly stated; and I think there should be as few candidates and party organizations encouraged as is possible, to meet the requirements of a dignified public sentiment.

All party conventions, national in character have now been held, nominations made and platforms adopted. It now becomes the duty of the American party to see how it can cast its vote to best secure the objects it desires to see accomplished.

For myself, having no personal or private ends to promote and willing to serve the cause in any capacity, and learning that Mr. Conant, my associate, fully concurs with me in this sentiment, I desire to refer the whole question to the Committee, appointed at Chicago at our convention in June last, for such advice as they may make in the premises.

In this matter I feel assured that their recommendation will be cordially acquiesed in by the great majority of the people, while others may be free to vote as their best judgment and ripened experience may dictate.

With sentiments of the highest esteem,
I am, cordially and truly,
S. C. POMEROY.

WILLIMANTIC, Conn., Sept. 3d, 1884.

To the National Committee of the American Party,

GENTLEMEN:—Since the nomination of Hon. John P. St. John of Kansas for President and Hon. William Daniel of Maryland for Vice President by the Prohibition party, the subscriber has learned from good authority, he believes, that the above named gentlemen personally endorse the American platform of principles, not excepting the anti-secrecy plank.

Should the honorable gentlemen composing the National Committee of the American party, after obtaining satisfactory confirmation of the above statement, deem it wise and expedient to substitute the names of Messrs. St. John and Daniel upon the American ticket in place of Mr. Pomeroy and myself, the ticket will receive my endorsement and hearty support.

Respectfully,
J. A. CONANT.

THE CHANGE ENDORSED.

After having canvassed the whole question of changing the nominees of the American party, the undersigned, members of the executive committee, unanimously endorse the change and recommend the party to support John P. St. John and William Daniel for President and Vice President respectively. We are led to this conclusion by the following considerations:

1. Messrs. S. C. Pomeroy and John A. Conant, the nominees of the Chicago convention have recommended this action and with a magnanimity which ought to meet a rich reward, have laid aside all considerations of personal honor to effect harmony of action between the American and Prohibition parties. The action of the committee originates with them and to them the gratitude of the party is due for their unselfish, noble and patriotic course.
2. We have received personal letters from both of the Prohibition nominees which satisfy us that they are in accord with American party principles and that they have nothing to do with secret orders, but are open in their methods of work.
3. Through our secretary we have corresponded with the National Committee of the American party and from a majority of the committee have received letters endorsing the proposed change. We have also received a large number of letters from prominent individuals of the party consenting and in some cases urging that we follow the recommendation of Mr. Pomeroy and Mr. Conant in this matter.
4. The action of the National convention, foreshadowing such an event, and authorizing the committee to fill any vacancy which might occur in its ticket, would seem to amply warrant this course.
5. We recommend that in connection with the Illinois convention a national meeting of such members of the committee and party as can attend be held, that this action of the executive committee be there submitted for ratification and that, if ratified, a suitable address to the people be promulgated. We also recommend that action suitable to the honorable course of Messrs. Pomeroy and Conant be taken.
6. In taking this action we further recommend that the American party organization be pushed to completion and that the campaign be vigorously prosecuted in the interest of American party principles.

THE ILLINOIS CONVENTION.

MONMOUTH, Sept. 3.

Arrangements for the convention here on the 11th and 12th insts. are substantially completed. The friends of prohibition and reform here feel quite confident that free entertainment can be furnished to all coming from abroad, and will attend to details at their respective prayer-meetings this evening. The local interest and attendance will be all that can be reasonably expected at an educational center and busy town like Monmouth. If there is a fair representation from different parts of the State as there should be, those anticipating good results will not be disappointed. Very few people here, or in fact anywhere, are indifferent to political movements at this time; but there are many who are as yet undetermined how they ought to vote. If our convention is a success it will make many votes for St. John and Daniel, for prohibition clean of the lodge. Let there be a grand rally, and let the friends on arriving repair at once to Opera House, where the committee of arrangements will assign them places.

J. P. STODDARD.

THE MICHIGAN CONVENTION.

The Macatawa Park meeting lately met with some head winds from bad weather and from the enforced absence of Secretary Stoddard, who was relied on for an address, but could not get the railway trains through washouts. The convention met Thursday morning, Aug. 28th, and adjourned to afternoon after arranging business. Rev. H. A. Day was elected president, and J. A. Cairns, secretary. An American State ticket was nominated. Rev. C. C. Foote, of Detroit, nominated David

C. Preston, his fellow-townsman, for Governor. Mr. Preston's letter published in last Cynosure is evidence of his adherence to American principles. Rev. J. L. Bush, of Whitehall, was nominated for Lieutenant Governor; George Swanson of Bedford for State Treasurer; Charles C. Foote, Detroit, for Secretary of State; A. C. Goodrich, Peach Belt, Adjutant General; J. O. Doesburg, Holland, Commissioner of State Land Office; O. S. Grinnell, Pittsford, Superintendent of Public Instruction; M. Veenboer, Grand Rapids, Member State Board of Education. For Electors at Large, H. A. Day, Parma, and F. Keppel, Holland, were chosen.

It was voted to correspond with the nominees of the Prohibition party and learn if any of them were ready to endorse the American platform, with a view to vote for them if such endorsement was given.

Rev. C. C. Foote made a brief address to the convention which then adjourned.

THE AMERICAN PARTY AND ST. JOHN.

FROM THE CHAIRMAN OF NATIONAL AMERICAN COMMITTEE.

DALE, N. Y., August 28, 1884.

Pres. J. Blanchard,

MY RESPECTED AND DEAR BRO.—It will be utterly impossible for me to attend the Monmouth Convention. Nothing would give me greater pleasure than to meet the nation's counsellors there. Will you kindly excuse me to the Convention, assuring them of my hearty co-operation in every effort to carry out the American prohibition platform. No compromise; no lowering of our standard or bartering the least jot or tittle of true American principle.

I am exceedingly sorry our candidates have decided in favor of changing the nomination. As to Hon. John P. St. John and Hon. William Daniel, I am fully persuaded that there are no two men in the nation who would be more acceptable to the prohibition element in all parties, and draw a heavier vote than they. Both have stated frankly that they can stand on every plank and heartily endorse the American platform. I see no valid reason, therefore, why we may not consistently endorse them as our candidates, and utilize the exceedingly strong current in the nation against the liquor traffic, to roll up such a vote for prohibition as will make the rum and lodge devil, which possesses both of the corrupt old political parties, tremble. It is only a question of time when all true Americans will be united in one grand American party, whose mission will be to destroy all un-American institutions and bring us back to be "the land of the free and the home of the brave." Let us with increased zeal put forth renewed effort in the line of organization; let there be no State, county or town in the nation but has a perfect organization of the American prohibition party, and that at once. There will be no dropping of name, organization, or principles, while we drop into the ballot box the St. John and Daniel electoral tickets. Truly yours, F. W. CAPWELL.

Ch'n. Nat'l. Ex. Com.

STAND BY THE AMERICAN PARTY.

Why? Because no other political party stands clear on all the great issues of the day. But shall we not vote for St. John? If the American National Committee, by the advice of Senator Pomeroy, say vote for St. John, then yes, provided he's willing to openly renounce the Masonic government he swore to obey, and is willing to run openly as candidate of the American party as well as of the Prohibition party. We should vote for him as the candidate of the American party, if at all. The two parties are not fused. While by invitation our representative was stating the principles and presenting the greetings of the American party at the Pittsburgh Convention, he was answered by hisses and insult. Did the Prohibition convention apologize for the insult? Members of the convention did privately apologize, but did the convention apologize? Have the Prohibition organs apologized? We've seen no such apology. It has even been said that the Union-Signal has even condoned the action of those who insulted us, and showed their contempt for our position. The insult to C. A. Blanchard was an insult to the American party, and to American principles. We cannot seek affiliation with a party that allows the principles we hold dearest to be scoffed at without even an apology for the insult. Let us not stultify ourselves. Let us respect ourselves. Let us honor our principles.

And then about Mr. Daniel. Who knows how he stands on those principles we hold dearest and most important? I have known John A. Conant for more than nine years. I named him for the second place on our ticket at the Galesburg Convention. He is every inch and every hair a temperance man, an anti-secrecy reformer, an American, a man, and a Christian. I don't flatter. To say less would wrong our mother-tongue. I honor the stand he took when our honored J. Blanchard thought best to advise the retirement of the ticket nominated at Galesburg, Conant saying that he didn't seek the nomination, but that having accepted it he did not feel at liberty to withdraw till the party thought best, and that he would then cheerfully do so. That spoke the man. He stands by his constituency. And shall we forsake a man like Conant for a man whom we may only hope or guess will stand with us? Let us not jump too quickly. Let us be true to ourselves, to our candidates, and to our principles. If we can vote for St. John and Daniel without a compromise of honor and principle, let us do so by all means; if not, let us stand by the nominations already made, first, midst, last, and all the time.

J. F. BROWNE.

A WORD TO AMERICANS.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Allow me to say to our friends of the anti-secret reform, that I am anxious and ready to work shoulder to shoulder with all true reformers, and shall bless God for the opportunity, though I am not clear to pledge my vote to the Prohibition party led by J. P. St. John. Can I vote that ticket with the assurance that the lodge will not manipulate its nominees to promote its selfish and unholy ends, and use its prestige in the subsequent Presidential campaign to elect a rank Mason?

If the Pittsburgh nominees are on every plank of the American platform and will publicly declare it, I am ready to vote for them. I would just as soon ignore the prohibition as the anti-lodge plank; but will do neither if I do not vote at all. Our anti-secret reform must not be swallowed up by prohibition. Momentous as is the temperance question, the anti-secret issue is at least its equal.

Allow me to say, dear brother editor, that in view of the riotous outrage at Pittsburg, perpetrated upon the noble representatives of the American party by some of the leading men of the Prohibition party, that I must regard our brethren who can, after such abuse, merge into said party uninvited and unrecognized, the most confiding and the most magnanimous set of men this side the celestial world. Without a public and decent recognition of our platform and principles by that party, I cannot see how we can, without stultifying ourselves, go with St. John and Daniel. I will have to grow in confideuce and in magnanimity more rapidly than Canada thistles grow if under the present circumstances I grow up to the saints Johu and Daniel.

All this does not, however, say I shall not vote for them. I shall greatly rejoice in the opportunity to vote that ticket when it can be done without self-stultification. God bless the men and may they "dare to be a Daniel and dare to stand alone—dare to have a purpose true and and dare to make it known." But what will we do if in these United (?) States, among the endless variety of platforms, we find no ticket we can support?

Well, in that emergency we shall vote the dual platform—the one of two planks—and vote for a King. See the platform in Matt. 22: 37-40. Our King's digest of the moral law shall be one platform and He on whose "shoulder the government shall be, whose name is Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace," is our candidate. With our ballot steeped in prayer we will take us to the closet, where we will leave our vote to be written by the Recording Angel on our moral firmament, by the electric light, to be deposited in the celestial archives, again to turn up when our King shall "fold the heavens up, when they shall be changed." From our celestial precinct, chosen as our election district, we will go singing, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done", etc., till lodgery, liquor, lying, licentiousness and all the Masonic progeny get to their G. L. A.—to Gehenna's lodge abyss.

Yours for Regeneration platform,

NATHAN CALLENDER.

NOTE.—To the brethren who write above, and others who may not have carefully noted all that has been said in the Cynosure respecting the Prohibition party, it is due to say, that while the condemnation of the lodge row at Pittsburgh has been severe because deserved, yet the distinction has been kept between the thirty or so secretists and the convention itself. While these were hissing and demanding revenge the vast majority approved Pres. C. A. Blanchard's remarks; and, as he looked upon the convention he plainly saw how numerous were his friends by their hearty applause and cries of encouragement. The chairman, Mr. Daniel, representing the convention, insisted on the speaker's right to the floor, and he kept it until through speaking, though in a tumult.

Some of our correspondents have believed the Prohibition party, as a party, to be controlled by the lodge, and composed of lodge sympathizers. It has been too much under that control in years past, but we are learning good things of it. The movement to hold the late Pittsburgh convention May 21, instead of in July, was made by the Good Templars in favor of their secret control. They were defeated. Dr. Jutkins, the secretary of their national committee was against them. He is no secretist. Gov. St. John was also opposed to the earlier meeting. Finch, the Good Templar champion, was voted down in Pittsburgh by lodge opponents, who marked his course and did not want his leadership. Leading men in the Prohibition party and active Anti-masons have felt grieved at some wholesale statements of our correspondents, carelessly made, and a word in their behalf is just.

A PROHIBITIONIST ON THE GOOD TEMPLARS AT PITTSBURGH.

NORTHFIELD, Minn., Aug. 26, 1884.

EDITOR OF THE CYNOSURE:—The course of the American party in adopting the national Prohibition candidates for the Presidency is wise and honorable. It has some features of "heaping coals of fire" in the right place. The treatment of Mr. Blanchard in the convention at Pittsburgh was highly censurable, and many of us deeply regretted it at the time. There were too many there who supposed they were managing a Good Templar lodge or some local collection in their charge, and far less conscious of the rights of others than of the importance of their own ideas. The dignified proprieties of that great national occasion were above their perception. It was sometimes very different from our national convention there in 1852, for liberty. But in its essential action the convention was a grand success, the nation will feel its power, and a vote be cast which will be as decisive against the horrible liquor power as the 150,000 in '52 were against the slave power. They as certainly fixed its doom as the vote of 1860. The whole country saw that all efforts to intimidate, cheat, divert or compromise the great upheaval for liberty, humanity and justice, were useless; that slavery must come to trial, and having no defense it must fall. This glorious result is now certain if professed temperance men will vote as they talk.

The issue is made up before the country, and the position of all parties is beyond doubt. The liquor chieftain says, "Let us alone," and all parties but two essentially respond, We will. And every vote cast for them says, Let that awful curse go on undisturbed and lay 100,000 dead along our country's path each of next four years, making 400,000 victims sent to eternal destiny by consent of American ballots! There is no neutral ground. Every voter must say yes or no to all this pagan massacre, and there will stand the record "when the books are opened." Will not Christian men, ministers, and religious editors, pause and think before they commit this horrid crime, and lead others to do it? Bishop Ireland, a Catholic, says, "It is an insult to be asked to vote a liquor ticket." What then is it for Protestant Christians and ministers to join hands with saloonists and drunkards, and "let their light shine" along the path to the polls to cast with them a common ballot? They are pledged to vote against every party and candidate opposed to their business; but they are well satisfied with both of the national old party tickets—are they deceived? Would Jesus Christ, if a voter now, vote their ticket with them? Ask him. A. WILLEY.

PROHIBITION IN MASSACHUSETTS.

Dr. A. A. Miner of Boston, who spoke so eloquently at the Washington convention last February, sends the following to the Union Signal as a testimony to the kind of prohibition sentiment fostered by the Republican party in some quarters:

PROHIBITION OVERTHROWN BY REPUBLICANS.

"The statement of Francis Murphy 'that independent prohibition action in Massachusetts was the means of overthrowing the prohibitory law,' not only is not true, but it is grossly and utterly untrue. That law was overthrown by the Republicans. It was done covertly, hypocritically, and in a most cowardly manner. In those New England States where they have not repealed the law, as in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont, they are guilty of mischiefs almost as great in their refusal to execute it. In Democratic cities and towns it is the same. Concord, N. H., is an illustration. A combination of some of its best citizens, including many clergymen, waited on the mayor, sheriff, marshall and police, urging them to execute the prohibitory law, in violation of which liquor selling abounds, and they flatly refused, the mayor saying: 'He was not elected to execute the law.' And yet he had taken his oath to execute it. Perjury against the interests of a private citizen is adjudged worthy of the State prison. How much more when committed against the public!"

The Chicago Daily Herald is sound on the philosophy of voting: "A vote cast conscientiously for any object dear to the citizen's heart is not thrown away. There is but one way to secure prohibition, and that is to vote for it. If the votes are few they will not be effective. If they are numerous and some politicians are hurt by them they will make an impression somewhere. No more cowardly and un-American idea was ever advanced than that a minority party should refuse to express its real sentiments at the polls lest it throw away its votes. The only votes that are thrown away in this country are those cast in opposition to the conscience of the voter."

When is a vote thrown away? When a man throws his principles one way and his ballot another.

The political campaign is rapidly verging toward a ten commandment basis. The close scrutiny of personal morals reaches even the candidate who smokes, especially if he be a Prohibitionist. It is a wholesome symptom.—Signal.

Indiana has one illiterate voter in every thirteen; Massachusetts one in every sixteen. The Northern States range from one in ten in California to one in thirty-one in Colorado. In the Southern States, the illiterate voters in South Carolina are more than one-half; in Alabama, Florida, Mississippi, Georgia, North Carolina and Virginia, one in two; while Missouri with one in nine presents the best record.

CORRESPONDENCE.

LODGE INCIDENTS IN AUSTRALIA.

NATIONAL CITY, Cal., August 21st, 1884.

DEAR EDITOR:—As your space and time demand brevity, I will only give here a few facts to show that remarkable instances of corruption in polities, law and morals, exist in Australia. Some three years ago the Parliament of South Australia, then assembled, passed a measure conveying 80,000 acres of the public estate to themselves, and the exposure of this was due to an independent man of means in the neighboring colony, Mr. W. E. Adcock of Hawthorne, Victoria, particulars of which can be given if required.

Second, in the year 1869, the then Governor discovered £16,000 deficit in the public funds, supposed to have been embezzled by a former treasurer, who was a Freemason, who obtained influence, and pressure was so strong as to prevent the Governor from appointing an auditor as he had threatened, with a view to show where the money went.

Third, in the town of Gawler, twenty-five miles from Adelaide City, a police constable, a member of the order, and a single man, promised marriage to each of the daughters of three farmers, and left them after their seduction. Each of these women were highly respectable, and, strange to say, met each other to condole and deplore the misery brought upon their households. This man, a police officer, was shifted, promoted, and his salary raised in another district, where he again introduced misery in another family, and was then sent a long way off to another district, where he fell from his horse and broke his neck.

Fourth, in the city of Sandhurst, Victoria, 103 miles from Melbourne, the postmaster was discovered taking money notes out of letters by a skillful detective. After many years of such plunder and widows' earnings squandered by this man, and much trouble to detect him, many innocent men having been dismissed with the brand and rumor of suspicion following in their wake, this man was brought to trial and discharged three times, and finally the government had to abandon the prosecution, after costing several hundred pounds. This was done in the face of positive evidence, and this man eventually committed suicide.

Fifth, some detectives connived at a robbery of some valuable property from a draper shop. The goods were sold to a man who bought stolen goods at the instance of the police. The draper found his goods with the aid of a friend, and the officers were found aiding and abetting; but two were Masons and the commissioner of police, who advised the draper to buy back the goods. The draper went to a lawyer, who advised him to rather bear the loss than spend money in an unprofitable suit, and these men still retain their positions.

Sixth, there is a firm of solicitors in Adelaide, some of whom are Masons, and of the heartbreaks these men have caused to the poor and oppressed, words would fail to show. Permit one case. They made a charge of ten guineas (£10, 10s) to a poor ignorant widow for engrossing letters of administration to her late husband's estate, which was of the value of £350. The work consisted in writing some hundred words in the center of a piece of parchment, and would have been overpaid at a guinea.

On the advice of his lawyers a man defended an action in which land to the value of £1,000 was involved. He lost his case, and had to pay the costs of both sides. The bill was only for a portion of his own costs, and did not include the cost of an appeal nor his solicitor's charges, nevertheless it exceeded £856.

That such things should be daily done and we live is marvellous, to say nothing of the adverse decisions given against poor and other suitors in the Supreme Courts of Australia where wealth is involved, but these are samples of what comes to the surface at times. Probably there is much we never see or hear of that warrants us in thinking as of old that horrible things are done in secret, and though we may rest assured our sins will find us out, yet very often justice is so tardy as to be no benefit to the oppressed in this life. Truly there is a great and wide field for social reform in Australia, where violence and robbery reigned triumphant when I left its shores; even freedom of speech and thought was being martyred hourly. Yours truly,

BENJAMIN JUDKINS.

A CAMP-MEETING INCIDENT.

CLEARPORT, O., Aug. 29, 1884.

At the M. E. camp-meeting near Lancaster, O., Sunday, Aug. 24th, a preacher named Clement collected a crowd around him on the grounds, and proceeded to tell them that there was no necessity for and no good in camp-meetings, that they were usually carried on for the money rather than for the religious benefit, which was particularly the case with this one, etc. He continued in this vein some fifteen minutes; when, without any warning to desist, he was seized by four of the ground police and half dragged, half carried from the grounds. As he was being borne along he sang hymns and shouted, "This is the manner in which Christ was crucified."

Being released he soon collected a crowd outside the gate and began preaching as before. Again he was seized, placed in a cab and driven to town before the mayor, who immediately ordered his release, saying that he had done no wrong. His persecutors were no sooner back to the camp than their victim was back also, and continued to preach outside the grounds until night-fall. The man claims that he is moved by Providence to preach against camp-meetings, and travels about from one to another for that purpose. Much indignation was expressed at the conduct of the Methodist brethren as there was nothing about the man's demeanor warranting such treatment. It is said that had he again come on the ground his friends would have sustained him and a conflict would have been the result. Whether Freemasonry had anything to do with this is not known, but it is no secret that the Methodist preachers here are almost all Masons, and it is possible that the speaker may have made some slighting allusion to their pet institution, which would of course greatly incense them. Only a couple of weeks previous to this, the same man was arrested, thrown into the jail at Lancaster, and after several days' confinement was released without a charge being preferred against him. C. M. STRICKLER.

A ST. LOUIS SERMON.

ST. LOUIS, MO., Aug. 22, 1884.

DEAR BRO. K :—There is a well known quotation that runs thus: "Plato is my friend, Socrates is my friend, but Truth is more my friend." Heretofore few have said as much for the distinctive anti-secret truth. And, indeed, we are often led to wonder that more Christian people do not espouse the cause that declares unflagging war against so arrant and deceitful an anti-Christ as secret societies. But the smallness of the number of anti-secretists is attributable to the hampered efforts of so few who have propagated the truths of the reform since its inauguration. When we consider the obstacles—scarcity of funds, deadly and ruining opposition from the enemy (which was and is still expected and welcomed), fewness of workers, and what would seem to be the most lamentable, the active opposition and neutrality of the Christian ministry. When we consider all these and more, the accomplishments are marvellous. But re-enforcements are gathering, and God is leading on.

Some of the "popular" pulpits have taken a stand that is unmistakably "out and out for Christ," and martyrdom is necessary. It was my pleasant privilege to listen to a sermon by Prof. A. H. Currie, D. D., of Oberlin College, I think, in Pilgrim Congregational church (Dr. Goodell's, who is now in Europe). The result of my note-taking is as follows: Text: Luke 2: 51, 52. The lesson drawn from these verses was a beautiful tribute to the home and family. Since Christ was a child, children are more blessed and mothers more kind. The family stands today as the prop of Christianity, and Christ made it so. The family is the primary department of the great school of life, and therefore the most important. "In childhood we consider its homely attractions inferior to something else which we seek outside of the pale of home. In manhood we desert home for the club or the street."

Just after the above utterance there was a change of position on the part of many in that great audience, which showed they were "hit." But the speaker was calm and kind in the remainder of the sermon in which he appealed to all to make the most of home, and let nothing infringe upon its sacred sphere.

Dr. Currie is acting pastor of this church during the absence of Dr. Goodell, who is, according to latest dispatches, dangerously ill, in Leamington, England.

Yours in Christ, EDGAR WYLIE.

PITH AND POINT.

TESTIMONY OF REV. JOEL SWARTZ, D.D.

I have from independent inquiry, and, unhappily, from personal experience been long persuaded of the evils and dangers of lodgery in its influence upon the individual member, the family, the church and the state, and so should be glad to see the thing swept from the earth. I know what it is to suffer from opposition to the evil system, though I have endured little in comparison with others.

PUBLIC PARK MUSIC ON SUNDAY.

Whatever may be the justification of the New York city government in appointing a band of music for Sunday recreationists and pleasure seekers, there can be but one view of it in its bearing upon the really Christian community. It is plausibly alleged that the music will attract people from the slums and vice-nurseries of the city, and thereby help to purify and elevate many of the unfortunate and degraded ones—but even if this claim is admitted there is on the other hand the danger of alluring away from religious influences thousands who may have attended divine services and may thus be induced to seek their own pleasures on the Lord's day, instead of being earnestly continuing in the Lord's work of teaching, or visiting the sick, or even meditating on the truths they may have heard in the sanctuary and Sunday-school. Nothing is easier than to persuade men that what is pleasant to them is no harm to any one else. The pleasures of sin or of practices like those of Aaron and the people who ate, drank and played in sin when Moses was up in the Mount, are ever seductive and dangerous to the higher life duties. Whilst we may not condemn the City Council, we would nevertheless solemnly warn Christians against giving such performances any countenance by their presence—rather let them seek to win the crowds by the heavenly manna and the songs and music of love divine. T. H.

A WORLD'S ANTI-MASONIC CONVENTION.

Is it advisable, it is asked in a late Cynosure, to unite with French Anti-masonry and have world's Anti-masonic as they had world's anti-slavery conventions. It is the best safeguard against the political death of Morgan Anti-masonry and that of the present time as foreshadowed in the proposed fusion with the Prohibition party, the stronger and consequently controlling division. It will also supply needed information independent of a subsidized press. B. T.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON XII.—September 21, 1884.—A Song of Praise.—Ps. 103: 1-22.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

THE REASONS WHY WE SHOULD BLESS GOD.

1. For preservation from famine and pestilence. Vs. 1–5. Before the discovery of vaccination a large proportion of the human race were swept away yearly by small-pox. Its ravages spared neither king nor peasant. Now it is so thoroughly under control as to be little dreaded. The plague or black death used to visit Europe periodically as an epidemic, fearfully decimating the population. Now it is hardly known. Dreadful famines used to be frequent, but they have generally ceased among civilized nations. In John 6: 24–26, we have an incident which shows in a striking light the scarcity of food among the common people in our Saviour's time. In the poorest countries of Europe at the present day multitudes would hardly be found following a popular leader merely for the chance of getting a piece of bread! We may say that science has caused this improvement in human affairs; and it is true that sanitary knowledge has greatly advanced since the days when even London had no sewerage system, but all the garbage and refuse of a great city was poured indiscriminately out of the windows into the street below, and that our tables are supplied with much better food and in far greater variety than kings could command a century ago. But that is a very short-sighted view which cannot see a divine hand back of science, "healing our diseases" and "satisfying our mouth with good things."

2. For freedom from oppression. V. 6. Many unjust laws of the past have been repealed. Poor debtors can not now be sold or sent to prison. Negro slavery is a thing of the past, and even animals are protected by law from cruel usage. This advance in justice and humanity comes through the benign teachings of Christianity. It is "the Lord who executeth righteousness and judgment for all that are oppressed." But there are other forms of oppression. The tyranny of strong drink holds half a million captives in our own land, the tobacco habit even more, while many thousands of honest workmen are held in bondage by secret labor unions. That many of these are willing captives does not make the case any better. Slavery's most terrible effects are when it so degrades men that they lose their natural desire for freedom.

3. For his mercy to our forefathers and his covenant mercies to their posterity. Vs. 7, 17, 18. Our pilgrim fathers did not think that politics and religion should be separated. They made the service of God and the service of the state one and the same thing. The American platform goes back to the old foundation principles on which our nation was reared, and only as those principles triumph can we expect to be saved from national ruin. The Jews were not saved by being children of Abraham. "The mercy of the Lord is to such as keep his covenant."

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What constitutes real slavery? Rom. 6: 16; 2 Pet. 2: 19. What does God demand of our nation? Jer. 22: 3; Ez. 20: 19, 20.

OTHER NOTES.

As in the lofty Alps some peaks rise above all others, so among even the inspired Psalms there are heights of song which overtop the rest. This one hundred and third Psalm has ever seemed to us to be the Monte Rosa of the divine chain of mountains of praise, glowing with a ruddier light than any of the rest. There is too much in the Psalm for a thousand pens to write; it is one of those all-comprehending Scriptures which is a Bible in itself.—Spurgeon.

"Bless his holy name." The name of God frequently signifies his nature and attributes in Scripture. Now, holiness is the glory of this name; the purity of God is that which beautifies all his perfections and renders them worthy to be praised.—William Dunlop.

"Forget not all his benefits." This touches the secret spring of so much ingratitude—forgetfulness, the want of re-collection, or gathering together again of all the varied threads of mercy. Comp. Deut. 6: 12; 8 : 11, 14. "Si obliviscris, tacebis" (If thou forgettest, thou wilt be silent).—J. J. S. Perowne.

"Healeth all thy diseases." All the healing power of the body is from God. He also leads to the right medicines and care of the body, to healthful habits; and this way as really heals our diseases as if he should heal without means. Spiritually we are daily under his care, and he visits us as the surgeon does his patient; healing still (for that is the exact word) each malady as it arises. No disease of our soul baffles his skill; he goes on healing all, and he will do so till the last trace of taint has gone from our nature.—Spurgeon.

"From destruction," or from the "grave." From his earliest days the psalmist was the child of providence. Many were the hair-breadth escapes and the wonderful deliverances which he experienced. Well, therefore, might the psalmist stir up his soul, and all that was within him, to bless the Lord with most fervent gratitude who, by so many signal deliverances, had "redeemed his life from destruction."—John Stevenson.

"Who satisfieth thy mouth." No man is ever filled to satisfaction but a believer, and only God himself can satisfy even him. Many a worldling is satiated, but not one is satisfied. God satisfies the very soul of man, his noblest part, his ornament and glory.—Spurgeon.

"For all that are oppressed." This is especially true of all the oppressed among God's people; but it is also true that God is against all oppressors everywhere. His laws and his providence are against oppression, and no oppression succeeds in the long run. All individuals or corporations who gain wealth by oppressing the poor are certain to suffer from their course. God will not let them have enduring success.—Peloubet

"His ways unto Moses." (1) By revelation on Mount Sinai of himself, his laws and his plans for the people, and (2) by what he did for Moses personally in training him for his work, in speaking to him, in delivering him from his enemies, and for Moses as leader of the Israelites. —Peloubet.

"And plenteous in mercy." Rich in it, quick in it, overflowing with it; and so had He need to be or we should soon be consumed. He is God, and not man, or our sins would soon drown his love; yet above the mountains of our sins the floods of his mercy rise.—Spurgeon. The commodity which we stand in need of is mercy and the pardon of our sins, because we have been unholy and ungodly creatures; this commodity is abundantly in God. There it is treasured up as waters are in the storehouse of the sea; there is no end of the treasures of his grace, mercy, pardon, and compassion.—John Goodwin on "Being filled with the Spirit."

"Hath not dealt with us after our sins." He has not inflicted the judgments we have merited, nor deprived us of the comforts we have forfeited, which should make us think the worse and not the better of sin, for God's patience should lead us to repentance.—Henry.

"He remembereth that we are dust." Made of dust, dust still, and ready to return to dust. We too often forget that we are dust, and try our minds and bodies unduly by excessive mental and bodily exertion; we are also too little mindful of the infirmities of others, and impose upon them burdens grievous to be borne; but our Heavenly Father never overloads us, and never fails to give us strength equal to our day, because he always takes our frailty into account when he is apportioning to us our lot. —Spurgeon.

"The wind passeth." The east wind (Jer. 4: 11, 12) changes in a moment a garden into a waste.—Cook.

"Bless the Lord." All Jehovah's hosts, all Jehovah's servants, all Jehovah's creatures, inanimate as well as animate (Ps. 104: 4), in all places of his dominion, must take up the thanksgiving, and praise, and blessing. It is (Rev. 5: 13) anticipated.—A. A. Bonar.

A Wonderful Woman, A Wonderful Life, AND A Wonderful Book.

Laura S. Haviland is a quiet, gentle, unassuming Quaker woman, 76 years of age, yet vigorous, who has had a remarkable career of usefulness, and has now given to the world a remarkable history of her "Life Work" as a teacher, at an early day, of the colored refugees in Canada and in Michigan, and in other States, as a traveler down South in the guise of a "berry picker," helping out into freedom many slaves; as a nurse and preacher to the sufferers in hospitals during the war; and with Gov. St. John and Elizabeth Comstock, relieving the destitute and suffering refugees in Kansas, etc.

Her book is neither fiction nor founded on fiction, but is an interesting narration of facts of a most thrilling character, as every one will find and testify who will get and read her book, now on sale at the Cynosure office, 221 W. The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD, HENRY L. KELLOGG, } EDITORS.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1884.

CAMPAIGN RATE!

Four copies of the CYNOSURE until after election for $1.00, to one or different addresses.

"Don't mix religion and politics. Give us the Gospel." One half the Old Testament and a considerable share of the New deals directly with politics. Preaching salvation by Christ without assailing slavery, saloons and secret societies is sowing among thorns. It is disobeying the command, "Take up the stumbling bloeks out of the way of my people."

Freemasons hover delicately over the political arenas of all parties like buzzards over battlefields, wishing to share in the action only to secure the prey.

In spite of steam and lightning it takes time to collect facts and lay them before our readers. Good Elder Nathan Callender and Dr. S. Collins, with many, very many others, will find their perplexities all vanish and the American party in open sea with sails all set and a fair breeze, in one or two numbers more—unless we meet a squall.

THE TEMPLE OF HONOR.

Dr. Tait says, "The order is neither political nor a church."

Ans. Then certainly it is not temperance; for temperance is both politics and religion. We lately met a former master of a Masonic lodge, who said, "True, I was waked from my bed at night to consult about the borough elections next day; but I was only consulted as a man, not as a Mason." "But," we suggested, if the devil should get the Mason, what would become of the man?" This pretence of secret societies that they are "not political," though some may be deceived by it, is the boldest possible pretence. It is a continental hypocrisy. After Gen. Logan had been feted, toasted, and hurrahed by the Grand Army of the Republic, and hailed as the future Vice President of the United States, the beer and whisky fumes had not left their breath, before they would look grave and assure you, "It's not political: no, Hal; not political."

Again, Dr. Tait—"No man or party can or does claim it as his own."

True, and this is equally true of "The ancient order of harlots," yet this ancient order has a material influence on families, polities and religion.

Again: "It is neither a 'side show' of Masonry nor any political party."

Yet its secrecy, degrees, regalia, altar with Bible on it, its signs, symbols, itself even are Masonic. Even the loathsome symbol of "The point within the circle," which Mackey's Lexicon tells us was originally intended to represent "the male and female generative organs," is used to teach boys of twelve years and girls a little older, the important lessons of temperance!

There is but one way possible of accounting for the presence of Christian gentlemen like Dr. Tait in such infamous caricatures and Satanic mockeries of virtue and goodness; and that is the way that "Aaron, the saint of the Lord, was drawn into the abominations of cattle worship at the foot of Sinai: that is, the thing is popular. "Thou knowest the people that they are set on mischief," was his excuse to Moses; and the people, in turn, are blinded by its sorceries.

THE CHANGE OF CANDIDATES.

The late Iowa American party convention commissioned the senior Cynosure editor to present these two questions to Governor St. John, which at Lake Bluff were duly presented and the Governor has promised a reply:

1. "Do you consider your Masonic obligations binding?"
2. "Have the Masonic secrets been revealed?"

As soon as his answer is received the Iowa brethren shall have it.

This puts St. John into a dilemma, not unlike that in which the Jewish rulers placed Christ when they required him to say whether it was "lawful to give tribute to Cæsar." If he said No, they would have aroused loyal Cæsar men and howl that he was robing the Roman revenue. They doubtless hoped he would say Yes; and so they would have embroiled him with the masses, who hated Cæsar's taxes, and held it unlawful for Jews to pay them, just as Democrats condemn the tariff, but pay it all the same.

Why then did we take these questions to St. John?

Because an incurable breach between St. John and one or the other, Masons or Anti-masons, is simply inevitable. Masons worship devils in their lodge; Anti-masons worship Christ, while heathen Romans were not much different—"hypocritic politicians." So Christ would not answer them, but called for a penny and pointed them to Cæsar's image on it, by using which they themselves confessed that Cæsar owned the taxes. So the Saviour kept the humbugged Jewish masses on his side: and St. John may keep the humbugged masses of Good Templars, Templars of Honor, etc., etc., on his side. Thousands of them are just as honest as the most honest Americans, and we are unwilling to drive them off if we can help it. But Masonry must go to the wall, and her whelps must follow.

So we warn our Iowa brethren that we shall be very lenient on Gov. St. John's answer whatever it shall prove to be. Indeed, when we gave him the questions, we felt for him as if we were putting him into a cauldron of boiling oil, to let him live if he could; and we thought we were putting Mr. Daniel, like his name-sake of old, into a den of lions to let him shift for himself there; and about the same question too, viz., a man-contrived worship. But we believed, and still believe their God will deliver them.

A religious "invention" is a "cursed thing," and Moses was directed by God himself how to save the nation from its destroying the sanctity of the OATH, and so everything which rested on it. "Neither shalt thou bring an abomination into thy house, lest thou be a cursed thing like it: thou shalt utterly detest it, and thou shalt utterly abhor it, for it is a cursed thing." Deut. 7:26. "And there shall cleave nought of the cursed thing to thine hand, that the Lord may turn from the fierceness of his anger, and show thee mercy, and have compassion on thee, and multiply thee as he hath sworn to thy fathers."—Deut. 13:17.

The night initiations, prayers, signs, grips, oaths, ceremonies and obligations of secret "orders," temperance or other, are simple religious "inventions." "Verily," says the Psalmist, "Thou wast a God that forgavest them; though thou tookest vengeance of their inventions." Ps. 99:8. Religious inventions now are "abominations" as they were then. Because they undermine oath, ballot-box, jury box, communion-table, court house, legislature,—all by the simple process of substituting themselves for religion, displacing Christ, ignoring his atonement, and sending men and nations to destruction. Frederick Seward uttered this calm, clear and correct sentence to the writer in Thurlow Weed's parlor: "A secret political society is hostile to every American principle." And so it is. And every secret society is "political" where the masses vote.

We are willing and desirous to retain for St. John the votes of thousands of Good Templars, etc., who are honest and patriotic men. But we are not willing to sell Christ, the oath, popular government, all we hold dear in two worlds to keep those votes. Nor can we if we would. The Masonic lodge never will trust St. John. Masons who led Kansas Republicanism, met in State convention; adopted a prohibition plank, and nominated St. John on that regular caucus platform. St. John refused to run a third time. They whined, whimpered, almost cursed him—You've got us into Constitutional Prohibition. You are the only man who can execute the law: we can't do it. The people trust you, not us. And now you have put our Republican party into the prohibition boat, you are going to quit the helm and skulk ashore.

St. John yielded, and the very men, Ingalls & Co., who forced him to run by appeals to his honor, and love of prohibition, bolted their own platform, bolted their caucus candidate, bolted the man who had never bolted a Republican ticket, and, by Masonic distillers' and brewers' money, poured out by thousands, they sunk St. John thirty thousand votes, by the cry of "No third term;" "St. John is not the only man in Kansas," etc., etc. And these glorious Republicans elected Glick, a Mason, a rebel, a secessionist, a whiskyite, a Lecompton Democrat—by Republican prohibition votes!

Will the lodges, which took the Milwaukee brewery, and Peoria whisky money into their dark closets; spread it by invisible hands over the one hundred Kansas counties; bought the poor exodus negroes by whisky and tobacco to vote against their good angel St. John,—will these wretches ever do anything but betray the man whom they defeated? Never! never! If St. John has a lingering hope from the lodge, he is still bewitched by it. BUT HE HAS NOT. Seventeen years he has shunned their doors, and refused their dues, and next week, God willing, you shall "hear the conclusion of the whole matter."

—The National American of St. Louis thinks the American party could not have polled 50,000 votes, but "twenty times that number of voters are in hearty sympathy with its doctrines."

—The Cynosure has endeavored to speak truly of Gov. St. John and his practical renunciation of the lodge, but the secretary of the National Prohibition Committee, himself no lodgeman, writes that he is informed by a high Mason that St. John is not a member of the order.

—It is said that the Detroit Evening News, the paper of largest circulation in that city, within two or three days after the Chicago Republican Convention, said the Masons of the country would probably unite against Blaine. Is this plan being carried out? Everybody investigate and report to the Cynosure.

—Rev. A. H. Hall of College Springs, Iowa, chairman of the State Central committee, has proposed to the editor of the Cynosure to speak at several prominent points in that State for the American nominations and set the ball rolling in Iowa.

—The Iowa State Christian Association at its annual meeting at Washington elected the following officers for the year: President, Rev. George Warrington, Birmingham; Vice President, Rev. T. P. Robb, Linton; Corresponding Secretary, T. C. Maughlin, Washington; Recording Secretary, A. W. Hall, College Springs; Treasurer, Joseph A. Laird, Wayne. These officers form the executive committee.

—The Christian Statesman has been tempted by the general movement of every interest toward politics to begin a campaign edition, with special effort to gain permanent friends to the great reform it represents. A series of able articles will be published during the twelve campaign weeks, discussing the various dangers that threaten to wreck our nation morally. The lodge will be one of these topics. Articles discussing and maintaining the American platform will also be published.

—Another attempt to run a Masonic church under the Christian constitution has failed. The Streator, Ill., Independent church adopted a rule against the lodge, and some of its members left and opened a Congregational church with much parade in the Chicago papers, and too much aid altogether from other Congregational churches and societies. The end of this Masonic affair is thus given in the Tribune of this city:

"Rev. J. H. Shay, pastor of the church in Streator, who was recently tried for heresy by the Central Congregational Association of Illinois, has declared his intention to sever all connection with ecclesiastical bodies, and hereafter to allow no authority to claim the right to call him to account for his religious opinions. He made this statement to his congregation yesterday [Sunday] in response to a call to remain with them another year, and after deliberation the church and congregation unanimously resolved to stand by their pastor, and asked him to reconsider his determination to leave, which he did."

—The report of the Iowa State Convention will be given in full from Secretary Hall's notes next week. That it was an important meeting we can well believe from Bro. M. A. Gault's letter to the Blanchard Record, where he says:

"It was the sixth one of the kind I have attended, and with the exception of the one at Topeka last fall, it was the best. It is manifest, as I heard several remark, that the tone of these conventions is improving. They are attracting men of greater culture and power. The addresses are of a higher grade. The friends of anti-secrecy may henceforth consider that it is well worth their while to cross the State to attend these conventions. It is at these meetings that we meet the most devoted friends of reform; no other gathering contains so many of Gideon's three hundred. In several of the churches there are many friends of this cause, but they are so much devoted to building up their own sects that they have no time or means to sacrifice in carrying forward a great home missionary reform. A self-sacrificing few must bear the brunt of the opposition. When the movement becomes popular then thousands will come rallying around the battle-scarred banner."

—Such an item as the following should be kept before the people until they are familiar with its sentiments:

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—At the session of the State Grand Lodge of Odd-fellows to-day the Grand Master recommended the holding of funerals at night. He said less money ought to be spent on the dead and more on the living; that the order of Rebekah should receive more attention; that Odd-fellowship was decreasing in this city so rapidly that it was almost unknown in polite society, and he recommended the changing of the meeting places of some lodges from tenement houses and saloons.

The N. Y. Witness says of the American party: "This party, it will be seen, includes in its platform a recognition of the Deity in our national constitution, and the prohibition of secret oath-bound societies. In both of these points we think it is right."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

THE ELECTRIC LIGHT.

Some time since the District authorities arranged for the lighting of Pennsylvania Avenue from the Capitol to the treasury (a mile and a-half), by electricity instead of gas, at the same expense as heretofore charged for the latter. The experiment was to be tried forty-five days and if found satisfactory continued. A crown of lights surround the dome of the Capitol and a number of others were placed on the dome behind large reflectors. At several prominent places on the Avenue lights were placed behind reflectors throwing the rays in the same direction of the street.

The general effect is very brilliant and beautiful. In the vicinity of the lights and anywhere in the middle of the Avenue the light is only too bright for the eyes of men and beasts. But on the side walks where the trees cast their shadows and in the alleys there is corresponding blackness.

On the whole, since the novelty wore away there seems to be a wish for the regular and uniform light of the street lamps. There are many other electric lights in the city besides these, and it is probable that sooner or later our streets will all be lighted by electricity, but tower lights will never come into general use. They lack uniformity and diffusiveness.

GOOD GOVERNMENT.

It is still a most deplorable fact that our rulers are not "a terror to evil doers." There are certain forms of crime of which they think tenderly, and never punish but most leniently, if at all. Not long since a public fight was advertised and took place within a square of the Capitol. A large number paid to witness the worse than brutal scene, but the officers of the law took no notice of it. The Theatre Comique regularly advertises similar entertainments, all of which are in violation of law and most demoralizing. A few days ago an old sinner was brought into court and plead guilty to the charge of keeping a house of ill-fame on the avenue. This was the second offense, and it seemed that his own daughter was among the score of vile women that were prostituted to this infamous purpose. And yet the court fined him only $100, showing the exceedingly low estimate put on sexual virtue in this district. It is not perhaps strange that a government that licenses and protects more than 1,000 saloons should think lightly of the good morals of society and the purity of home.

MASONIC FAVORITISM.

It is well known that Captain Howgate, while connected with the Signal Service Bureau, managed to defraud the government out of more than one hundred thousand dollars, and that though it has been well understood that he has put himself to little or no inconvenience, he has hitherto escaped all punishment. It now appears that he has spent last winter in Bermuda, but is now living in the south of Maryland. A day or two since a citizen of Maryland came to see if there was any reward offered for his apprehension, and found there was none. A reward might possibly have tempted some brother Mason to have violated his oath "to always conceal" his whereabouts.

There is no mystery about the case other than the fact that officers in both the civil and military service are under bonds to Capt. Howgate. Of course they do not desire his arrest so long as he has good Masonic standing and plenty of money. How long will decent Masons consent to a system of which this is a legitimate result? How long will the people elect as officers those who are under a double oath, to their country and their order?

PROHIBITION IN THE DISTRICT.

Last night the St. John and Daniel Prohibition Club met at 207 Pennsylvania Avenue. Permanent officers were elected: A. A. Wheelock, president; O. C. Bailey, secretary, and H. H. Hinman, treasurer; E. D. Bailey and Dr. Candee, executive committee. The club voted to make their headquarters at the N. C. A. building, 215 4½ street, N. W. It is probable that in spite of the opposition of professed temperance people this organization will have a marked influence on the country.

H. H. HINMAN.

Often and often it is the unconsciously uttered truth that teaches most. As for instance the following from an officer's letter published in the Army and Navy Gazette: "All our officers fought like devils, and how we only lost one I cannot tell. God is good and must have put his shield around our brave and gallant officers. The colonel is a splendid man. He shot two Arabs dead and would have more, only the ammunition missed fire." It is soon to be believed throughout the whole world that fighting can never be done otherwise than "like devils."—Union Signal.

PERSONAL.

—Pres. J. Blanchard returned from Roseville, Ill., to Chicago Tuesday evening. He spoke on Sabbath and Monday evenings to large audiences. Wednesday he attended the great Prohibition meeting at Lake Bluff, north of this city, and held a brief and very favorable conference with Governor St. John.

—George W. Clark and Gen. A. W. Riley spoke at a Prohibition convention for Monroe county, New York, a few days ago.

—Secretary Stoddard spoke at Kirkwood, Ill., in the United Presbyterian church, to a good audience. He spent the next day, Wednesday, in Monmouth and Galesburg, and returned to Chicago to attend a meeting of the N. C. A. Board on Thursday. He speaks at several points in the vicinity of Monmouth before the convention.

—After preaching a strong sermon for Christian politics at Lake Bluff on Sabbath morning, Pres. C. A. Blanchard returned to Wheaton to open the College year on Tuesday last. The attendance of students last week is most encouraging, being larger than for many years. It is believed by members of the faculty that 300 students will be enrolled in the different departments during the winter term.

—Elder Miles Grant of the Advent Christian church, and former editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, made a friendly visit at the Cynosure office last week. He was on his way to the great Amboy camp meeting.

—Rev. S. S. Palmer, a Congregational minister late of Mancelona, Mich., where his faithful testimony against the lodge cost him his position, is now in this city, and the way seems providentially opening to secure his services in the reform field. Bro. Palmer attended the Seceders' Convention in 1880, and is a faithful, humble Christian man, whose experience with Masonry can be used powerfully against the order.

—Dr. W. T. Meloy, of the N. C. A. Board, was, during part of his residence in Pennsylvania, an intimate friend of ex-Secretary Blaine. It would take more than a hundred avalanches of newspaper abuse to shake the Dr's. confidence in the personal integrity and great abilities and genius of the Republican leader.

REFORM NEWS.

THE ILLINOIS STATE CONVENTION.

By order of the executive committee the annual convention of the Illinois State Christian Association will be held in Monmouth, Sept. 12, next. The hospitalities of the city will be tendered to the delegates, and the C. B. & Q railway gives a two-third round trip rate. Let churches and auxiliary associations send delegates, and above all pray for the meeting.

FROM CENTRAL ILLINOIS.

WENONA, Ill., Aug. 29, 1884.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I spoke to good and attentive audiences at Oak Grove, McLean Co., on the 22d and 23d. A collection was taken for the work, and a vote of thanks given the speaker. The anti-lodge reform has many friends in the U. P. church at Oak Grove.

On Sabbath morning, 24th, I endeavored to unfold God's plan of salvation by trust in and committal to the personal Christ, to a crowded house at the North Danvers Mennonite church, where I had lectured three times. Had excellent attention. About forty persons have lately presented themselves to this church as candidates for baptism.

At 4 P. M. I lectured on the Religion of the Lodge at a Mennonite church west of Danvers—an independent split-off from the old church. Found a good many secretists in that church, and they didn't wish any more on that subject, though they needed it much. I am glad to find the Mennonite brethren sound in doctrine generally, with quite a deal of simplicity in their ways. Membership in a secret society is made a bar to membership in their churches, and this rule, I am told by Bishop Joseph Stuckey of Danvers, is generally well enforced. But these brethren need enlightenment on the lodge question very much, so as to be able to teach their young men and women why they should not join the lodge. And, in common with all other Christians, they greatly need an outpouring of the Holy Spirit to give true vitality to their religious work.

On the 26th I spoke at Stout's Grove, four miles northwest of Danvers, to a small audience, in a school-house. "Uncle Joe" Shoup, as his neighbors affectionately call him, an old U. B. local preacher, made this opening for me. He has promised to do some canvassing for the Cynosure.

As there was a revival effort in progress in Danvers, it was thought best to postpone my lectures there to Sept. 1, 2 and 3.

Aug. 27 I went to Lexington and found Wm. D. Johnston and other friends. Bro. J. took me around the country on the 28th and we saw several friends, among them J. L. Neniger, a U. B. minister who has been a Mason of three degrees, but is now a positive Anti-mason. Sometime in the near future, I think, lectures will be wanted at Lexington and vicinity. The more than 50 campaign Cynosures that Bro. Johnston has sent in will help open the way. Stopped again at the hospitable home of Bro. J. on the night of the 28th, and on the 29th took the 3:30 A. M. train for Bloomington, and thence to Wenona. Have seen here Bro. Peter Howe and his son Charles, and Bros. Wm. Swartz and S. J. White, and am now waiting for the 5 P. M. train for Lostant. I expect to go to Streator to-morrow A. M., and spend the Sabbath there. Return to Danvers, D. V., on Sept. 1. On the 2d we propose to organize an Anti-lodge association for McLean Co. Thence on to Monmouth.

J. F. BROWNE.

LITERATURE.

THE INTELLECTUAL LIFE, by Philip Gilbert Hamerton. pp. 552. Price, Russia, gilt, $1.00 cloth, 50 cts. John B. Alden, New York.

The celebrated English artist and critic, Hamerton, is becoming as well known in the realm of literature. This handsome little volume will charm as well as instruct all who can appreciate what is wisest and best in literature. It is in the form of a series of letters addressed, much as Dr. Holland's "Letter to the Joneses", to persons not by any means imaginary, and treats, with great felicity of illustration and grace of style of the Intellectual Life from a physical and moral point of view, in its relations to education, power of time, influence of money custom, women and marriage, social distinction, trades and professions, and surroundings. Both the work itself and its mechanical outfit make it a useful as well as ornamental addition to the library.

The English Illustrated Magazine opens with an interesting article on Covent Garden, London, with cuts representing the famous square during the early part of the last century, from which the article derives its greatest value. The printed account is mainly interested with literary and dramatic incidents and characters, and makes no mention of Apple-tree Tavern, famous in lodge history; and to discover in the engravings the celebrated place, where amid the stupefaction of liquor the first grand lodge of Masonry was formed and the infamous system began to be, would require the skillful eye of a very Hiramite. "The Women of Chaucer" and "Cricket" are other illustrated articles.

Vick's Magazine for September devotes an article and colored plate to the Narcissus, and devotes considerable space to a prize essay on conservatories. The correspondence and short artieles are good as usual.

According to Edwin Alden & Bro.'s (Cincinnati, O.,) American Newspaper Catalogue for 1883, there are 14,867 newspapers and magazines published in the United States and the British Provinces. Total in the United States, 14,176; in the British Provinces, 691; divided as follows: Dailies, 1,357; Tri-Weeklies, 71; Semi-Weeklies, 168; Sundays, 295; Weeklies, 10,975; Bi-Weeklies, 39; Monthlies, 1,502; Bi-Monthlies, 26; Quarterlies, 83; showing an increase over the publications of 1883 of 1,594. The greatest increase has been among the weekly newspapers of a political character(?) while it has been least among the class publications. The book is very handsomely gotten up and contains some 850 pages, printed on heavy book paper, elegantly bound in cloth. It will be sent to any address, prepaid, on receipt of $1.50.

Prof. Langley's interesting paper on "Spots on the Sun," in the September Century, will be followed by another on "The Sun's Surroundings," in the October number of that magazine. The remaining articles of this brief series, also profusely illustrated, the last two of which will treat of the moon and stars, will appear in early numbers of the coming volume.

ILLINOIS POLITICAL CONVENTION.

An American Prohibition convention will meet at Monmouth, Illinois, September 11th, in the Opera House at 7:30 P. M., and continue its sessions the day following. The opening address of Richard Haney, D. D., will be followed by other distinguished advocates of prohibition and reform. The object of this convention is to put in nomination a candidate for Governor and other State officers to be voted for on the American platform, and transact such business as may legitimately come before the body. All prohibitionists who favor and practiee open temperance work are cordially invited to attend and co-operate in efforts to exterminate the curse of strong drink, and its causes and consequences in our State.

L. N. STRATTON, Chairman of the Illinois Committee of the Amerieanparty.

—The French government has granted a constitution to that Evangelical church of Tahiti, which means that the church will be allowed to manage its own internal affairs without the interference of local magistrates.

THE HOME.

O, CITY OF THE JASPER WALL.

O, city of the jasper wall,
And of the pearly gate!
For thee, amid the storms of life,
Our weary spirits wait.
We long to walk the streets of gold
No mortal feet have trod;
We long to worship at the shrine,
The temple of our God!
O home of bliss! O land of light!
Where falleth neither shade nor blight—
Of every land the brightest, best,—
When shall we there find peace and rest?

O, city where they need no light
Of sun, or moon, or star,
Could we with eye of faith but see
How bright thy mansions are,
How soon our doubts would flee away!
How strong our trust would grow,
Until our hearts should lean no more
On trifles here below!
O home of bliss! O land of light!
Where falleth neither shade nor blight—
Of every land the brightest, best—
When shall we there find peace and rest?

O, city where the shining gates
Shut out all grief and sin,
Well may we yearn amid earth's strife
Thy holy peace to win!
Yet must we meekly bear the cross,
Nor seek to lay it down
Until our Father brings us home
And gives the promised crown.
O home of bliss! O land of light!
Where falleth neither shade nor blight—
Of every land the brightest, best—
Soon shall we there find peace and rest.

AT LEAST A TENTH.

A young man whom I know has more than once told me in confidence that though he owned two town lots, yet he was always in debt. His small family was pinched until he began to give a tenth, holding it as necessary as his grocery bill, and God as a "preferred creditor." From that time began a prosperity which enabled him to pay his debts much sooner; he has had money when necessary, his property has increased so that he does not fear for his family if he should die; and he has been happier in letting his light shine as a Christian. His is the uniform story of those who adopt the tithe as a basis of their beneficence. Undertaken as a grace of the Christian life, it proves God's promise of temporal prosperity, and usually awakens satisfaction and enthusiasm, earning the right to be called "the condition of spiritual, and the occasion of temporal blessing."

What are the principles on which this requirement of the tithe is based? Broad principles in the Word of God.

God, by creation, has a right to all our time and all our strength or money which we earn with it; but he has allowed us the larger share of each and demanded only the smaller for himself. He mentions the seventh of the days and the tenth of the possessions as his. The Sabbath was given for the body and soul to rest and grow holy, approaching the image of him who rested and is infinitely holy. The tithe was required that we may imitate the great Giver, and as a token that our all is his.

When some object that the tithe is a Mosaic institution, and the New Testament commands it not, I say, "Please take a broader view." Some say the same of the Sabbath. But both antedate Moses. Adam had the Sabbath. Abel's property was such that he could offer it all to God, if necessary. Abram, the great example of New Testament faith, paid tithes to the King of Righteousness. Tithing is found in the infancy of the church; was handed over to the New Testament by the expiring words of the Old Testament (Mal. 3: 10), and is a delight now. Our human nature is the same as Adam's, and since God has not changed, the same ordinances are as necessary for us. The scale of giving is increased all the way through, but the practice is just as binding. The tenth is the least; that was Abram's share. After Moses it was one-third, a tenth was the least. After Christ and the Apostles, it was all, at least a tenth. If so much was asked from the servant of God when religion was limited to Palestine and when Christ had not yet come, how much more must we give, whose field is a world for which Christ died! At least a tenth! Many ought to far exceed this. As one says: "Everybody knows that giving only a tenth was a beggarly Jewish notion unworthy of a Christian." There may be some so poor that they ought not to give more; but you will never hear any one who have tried it faithfully say they ought to give less. Others sometimes say so for them; but a tenth giver, never. They tell you that nine-tenths with God's blessing go farther than the whole when they can claim the promises of that covenant; and that the consciousness of obeying the requirement makes the giving a pleasure which cannot be otherwise experienced. The obligation is sweet. We are as happy in obeying God as David in the Psalms.

How many would give even the tenth unless they felt the requirement? The Hebrews were examples of joyful obedience because the property of which God said "the tithe is the Lord's" came from stock-raising and agriculture, and depended most helplessly upon God's continuous protection from robber nations and his gift of rains. When they gave according to the commandment, they were the richest and most powerful nation of the world; but when they "robbed God" they had nothing left besides their useless ancestral lands from which they were carried captive. God will give to us, for the same obedience, prosperity and continuance of income.

Some one says: "I give a great deal more than a tenth. I don't know how much." Well, then, you miss the satisfaction of a partnership with God, which you cannot otherwise have so completely as by an agreement with him to give proportionally. If you covenant to give one-tenth of your salary and one-fifth of all other business profits, you will feel safer and nearer to God in a trade than if you say, "I will give $140 this year." Every Christian ought to make a rule, "If God keeps me alive, at least a tenth of my pittance or more of my fortune is his." Then whenever in worldly service he enables us to prosper, a per cent. of its proceeds go to him, and it becomes heavenly service. Our lives are glorified and as prosperity increases, the grace increases in us. We are larger partners in the expenses and work of his kingdom. We are joyful workers together with him. Rev. Geo. A. Hood, in the Advance.

INTO ALL THE WORLD.

David Livingston used to say that the day would come when men of wealth would take more pleasure, and consider it more honor to support whole stations of missionaries than in spending it on "hounds and horses." Was he visionary, or had he simply the open vision of those whom God makes seers? The preaching of the Gospel in all the world in twenty years is as feasible as the Suez Canal or the Mt. Cenis Tunnel. There are six hundred millions of the unevangelized to the one hundred millions of Protestants. If every one of the latter could be depended on to reach six new souls with the Gospel in twenty years, the work would be done. But say that ten millions, or one in ten only, shall be found to undertake it. It would need merely that each shall in some way bring the Gospel into contact with three souls each year. Of course both men and means must be multiplied. We must have ten thousand more missionaries; but that would be but one in every thousand of the ten millions, and five dollars from each would furnish fifty millions annually for the work!—Sel.

FOR QUIET HOURS.

Ungoverned temper is by some strange confusion of thought classed among "little sins." There never was a greater mistake. Whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause is a murderer in his heart. Many exclude themselves for years from Christian work out of petty spite and foolish vanity.—H. R. Reynolds.

Be thyself, says Christ to us, and stand upon thy feet that I may speak to thee and give thee thy errand. Be thyself what I have made thee and meant for thee, and do not complain that thou art not some other man. No one else can do thy work, or fill thy place, or declare thy message, or use thy opportunities, as well as thou canst, or, indeed, at all. For no man can do another's work for him.

If it is not done by each one for himself, it is not done at all. God is thy Father!

Go forth bravely and strongly to witness for him as his child in thine own way. Christ is in thy heart.

Is not that enough both for thy food and protection, light and gladness.—Thorold.

We love him not because he compels us to love him; not because we cannot help it, which would take all the reality out of love, but because he first loved us. Let us keep our thoughts intent on the work in life which our Father hath given us to do. In it, apportioned by his good providence who has created both the shoulder and the burden, will be found our most healthy and our wisest employ; there shall we meet with him who can give us strength and whose presence alone can cheer the journey through life.

We cannot understand our way, it is true; but for this very reason, that our goings are of him, he is about our path and about our bed and spieth out all our ways. His blessed Son has lived our life, has felt our sorrow, has died our death. Wherever we are in the world the tracks of his footsteps are visible before us.—Alford.

Are our hearts doing the Father's will? Is that will our will? Are our purposes doing the Father's will? Each day is full of purposes and schemes. What are these? Earthly or heavenly? Holy or unholy.—Bonar.

No man is to be esteemed of a willing spirit but he that endeavors to do the outward work or to make all the supplies that he can, not only by the forwardness of his spirit, but by the compensation of some other charities, or devotion, or religion. "Silver and gold have I none," therefore I can give you none, but I wish you well; "Such as I have I will give you. Rise up, and walk." I cannot give you gold, but I can give you counsel. I cannot relieve your need, but I can relieve your sadness.—Jeremy Taylor.

WHAT IS AGNOSTICISM?

A letter recently written by Prof. Huxley to the editor of the Agnostic Annual, but not intended for publication, casts some new light upon some of the questions of the day. Prof. Huxley claims that he invented the word Agnostic to describe that class of persons who "confess themselves hopelessly ignorant concerning a variety of matters, about which metaphysicians and theologians, both orthodox and heterodox, dogmatize with the utmost confidence." He is somewhat surprised to see how a sect has been built up on a confession of ignorance, and he suspects that if a general council of the Agnostic church were called and his case passed under review, he would be called a heretic. So he offers a more specific definition of the term, and an expression of his personal judgment in relation to some of the questions involved in the term which has come into general use. He says:

1. Agnosticism is of the essence of science, whether ancient or modern. It simply means that a man shall not say he knows or believes that which he has no scientific grounds for professing to know or believe.

2. Consequently Agnosticism puts aside not only the greater part of popular theology, but also the greater part of popular anti-theology. On the whole, the bosh of heterodoxy is more offensive to me than that of orthodoxy, because heterodoxy professes to be guided by reason and science, and orthodoxy does not.

3. I have no doubt that scientific criticism will prove destructive to the forms of supernaturalism which enter into the constitution of existing religions. On trial of any so-called miracle the verdict of science is, Not proven. But true Agnosticism will not forget that existence, motion, and law-abiding operations in nature are more stupendous miracles than any recounted by the mythologies, and that there may be things, not only in the heavens and earth, but beyond the intelligible universe, which "are not dreamt of in our philosophy." The theological gnosis would have us believe that the world is a conjurer's house; the anti-theological gnosis talks as if it were a dirt-pie, made by the two blind children, Law and Force. Agnosticism simply says that we know nothing of what may be beyond phenomena.—Christian Standard.

UNCONSCIOUS EGOTISM.—"Dr. McCosh," says the Troy Press, "is celebrated for egotism; and the best of it is he is never conscious of it. He has a broad Scotch accent, and the habit of gnawing at the joint of his thumb when busily thinking. Some years ago he was lecturing before the Senior Class in Princeton College. He had been discussing Leibnitz's view of the reason of evil, to the effect that mankind was put upon the earth because there was less evil here than elsewhere. One of the Seniors inquired, 'Well, Doctor, why was evil introduced into the world?' 'Ah!' said the Doctor, holding up both hands, 'ye have asked the hardest question in all feelosophy. Sukrates tried to answer it and he failed; Kahnt attempted it and he made bad work of it; Leibnitz tried it and he begged the whole question, as I've been tellin' ye; and I confess (gnawing at his thumb knuckle), I confess I don't know—what—to make of it myself!"

SAVING POWER OF MARRIAGE.—I have noticed that a married man, falling into misfortune, is more apt to retrieve his situation in the world than a single one, chiefly because his spirits are soothed and relieved by domestic endearments, and self-respect kept alive by finding that, although abroad be darkness and humiliation, yet there is still a little world of love at home, of which he is monarch. Whereas a single man is apt to run to waste and self-neglect—to fall to ruins, like some deserted mansions, for want of inhabitants. I have often had occasion to mark the fortitude with which women sustain the most overwhelming reverses of fortune. Those disasters which break down the spirit of man, and prostrate him in the dust seem to call forth all the energies of the softer sex, and give such intrepidity and elevation to their character that at times it approaches sublimity. — Washington Irving.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

TELLING FORTUNES.

I'll tell you two fortunes, my fine little lad,
For you to accept or refuse;
The one of them good, the other one bad;
Now hear them, and say which you choose.

I see by my gifts within reach of my hand,
A fortune right fair to behold;
A house and a hundred good acres of land,
With harvest fields yellow as gold.

I see a great orchard with boughs hanging down
With apples, russetts and red;
I see droves of cattle, some white and some brown,
But all of them sleek and well fed.

I see droves of swallows about the barn door,
See the fanning mill whirling so fast,
I see them threshing wheat on the floor—
And now the bright picture has past.

And I see rising dismally up in the place
Of the beautiful house and the land,
A man with a fire-red nose on his face,
And a little brown jug in his hand.

Oh! if you beheld him, my lad, you would wish
That he were less wretched to see;
For his boot toes they gape like the mouth of a fish,
And his trowsers are out at the knee.

In walking he staggered now this way now that,
And his eyes they stand out like a bug's,
And he wears an old coat and a battered in hat,
And I think that the fault is the jug's.

For the text says the drunkard shall come to be poor,
And that drowsiness clothes men with rags,
And he doesn't look much like a man, I am sure,
Who has honest hard cash in his bags.

Now which will you have? to be thrifty and snug,
And be right side up with your dish,
Or go with your eyes like the eyes of a bug,
And your shoes like the mouth of a fish?

"STRAIGHTENING OUT THE FURROWS."

CAP'N SAM'S LITTLE SERMON TO THE BOYS.

"Boys," he said, "I've been trying every day of my life for the last two years to straighten out furrows—and I can't do it!"

One boy turned his head in surprise toward the Captain's neatly kept place.

"Oh, I don't mean that kind, lad. I don't mean land furrows," continued the Captain, so soberly that the attention of the boys became breathless as he went on:

"When I was a lad, about the age of you boys, I was what they called a 'hard case;' not exactly bad or vicious, but wayward and wild. Well, my dear old mother used to coax, pray, and punish—my father was dead, making it all the harder for her, but she never got impatient. How in the world she bore with all my stubborn, vexing ways so patiently will always be to me one of the mysteries in life. I knew it was troubling her, knew it was changing her pretty face, making it look anxious and old. After a while, tiring of all restraint, I ran away, went off to sea—and a rough time I had of it at first. Still I liked the water, and liked journeying around from place to place. Then I settled down to business in a foreign land, and soon became prosperous, and now began sending her something besides empty letters. And such beautiful letters as she always wrote me during those years of cruel absence. At length I noticed how longing they grew, longing for the presence of the son who used to try her so; and it awoke a corresponding longing in my own heart to go back to the dear waiting soul.

"So when I could stand it no longer, I came back; and such a welcome, and such a surprise! My mother is not a very old lady, boys, but the first thing I noticed was the whiteness of her hair, and the deep furrows on her brow; and I knew I had helped blauch that hair to its snowy whiteness, and had drawn those lines in that smooth forehead. And those are the furrows I've been trying to straighten out.

"But last night, while mother was sleeping in her chair, I sat thinking it all over, and looked to see what progress I had made.

"Her face was very peaceful, and the expression contented as possible, but the furrows were still there! I hadn't succeeded in straightening them out—and—I—never—shall! never!

"When they lay my mother—my fair old sweetheart—in her casket, there will be furrows in her brow; and I think it a wholesome lesson to teach you, that the neglect you offer your parents' counsels now, and the trouble you cause them, will abide, my lads, it will abide!"

"But," broke in Freddie Hollis, with great troubled eyes, "I should think if you're so kind and good now, it needn't matter so much!"

"Ah, Freddie, my boy," said the quavery voice of the strong man, "you cannot undo the past. You may do much to atone for it, do much to make the rough path smooth, but you can't straighten out the old furrows, my laddies, remember that!"

"Guess I'll go chop some wood mother spoke of; I'd most forgotten," said lively Jimmy Hollis, in a strangely quiet tone for him.

"Yes, and I've got some errands to do!" suddenly remembered Billy Bowles.

"Touched and taken!" said the kindly Captain to himself, as the boys tramped off, keeping step in a thoughtful, soldier-like way.

And Mrs. Bowles declared a fortnight afterward, that Billy was "really getting to be a comfort instead of a pest; guessed he was a copying the Captain, trying to be good to his ma—Lord bless the dear, good man!"

Then Mrs. Hollis, meeting the Captain about that time, remarked that Jimmy always meant to be a good boy, but he was actually being one now-a-days.

"Guess your stories they like so much have morals to them now and then," added the gratified mother, with a smile.

As Mrs. Hollis passed on, Cap'n Sam, with folded arms and head bent down, said softly to himself:

"Well, I shall be thankful enough if word of mine will help the dear boys to keep the furrows away from their mother's brow; for once there, it is a difficult task straightening out the furrows!"—The Life Boat.

WORD-GAME.

Here is a play which affords a field for quick thinkers and good spellers, and gives slow thinkers and poor spellers a chance to improve by practice. It is an exercise likely, moreover, to increase one's vocabulary of words, and so increase the gift of language by testing it. It was given as a puzzle by the students at the Boston Institute of Technology.

Two words are given of an equal number of letters, and the problem is to change one to the other by altering one letter at a time of the first so as to make a legitimate English word, continuing the alterations until the desired result is attained, and accomplishing this with the smallest number of changes.

The conditions are that only one letter shall be altered to form each new word, and that none but words which can be found in English dictionaries shall be used. Here are some examples of the changes:

East to West—East, vast, vest, west.

Dog to Cat.—Dog, cog, cot, cat.

Soup to Fish.—Soup, sour, pour, pout, post, past, fast, fist, fish.

Road to Rail.—Road, goad, goal, coal, coil, toil, tail, rail.

Milk to Hash.—Milk, milt, mist, mast, mash, hash.

The game is becoming quite popular in family circles, and seems to furnish instruction with amusement.—Ex.

A WAY TO GROW WISE.

After reading a book, or an article, or an item of information from any reliable source, before turning your attention to other things, give two or three minutes' quiet thought to the subject that has just been presented to your mind; see how much you can remember concerning it; and if there were any new ideas, instructive facts, or points of especial interest that impressed you as you read, force yourself to recall them. It may be a little troublesome at first until your mind gets under control and learns to obey your will, but the very effort to think it all out will engrave the facts deeply upon the memory, so deeply that they will not be effaced by the rushing in of a new and different set of ideas; whereas, if the matter be given no further consideration at all, the impressions you have received will fade away so entirely that within a few weeks you will be totally unable to remember more than a dim outline of them.

Form the good habit, then, of always reviewing what has just been read. It exercises and disciplines the mental faculties, strengthens the memory, and teaches concentration of thought.

You will soon learn, in this way, to think and reason intelligently, to separate and classify different kinds of information; and in time the mind, instead of being a lumber-room in which the various contents are thrown together in careless confusion and disorder, will become a store-house where each special class or item of knowledge, neatly labeled, has its own particular place and is ready for use the instant there is need of it.—Martha Holmes Bates, in St. Nicholas for July.

THE STUDY OF ONE'S HAND.—No instrument devised by man compares with it for complication. It is a hammer, a vice, a forceps, a hook, a spring, a weight; it pushes, draws in, and the fingers alone contain elements of chisels, gouges, and all the tools a sculptor requires in modeling. From the elbows to the digital extremities, its movements are produced by nearly fifty muscles. So complicated is the cordage of a human hand, expert anatomists can hardly keep in remembrance its intricate mechanism. With it all the emotions of the mind may be both manifested and intensified. How could a Frenchman talk with his hands tied? The hand is the prime minister of the brain. It is the soul's agent in the accomplishment of its designs. It is a wonder of wonders.

TEMPERANCE.

The Farmer's Review does not hesitate to say that the use of alcoholic drinks in harvest is like putting oil and pitch under steam boilers. They will get up a sudden head of steam, but will burn out the boilers, or cause an explosion.

Cholera does not seize its victims by hazard. It has been ascertained that of every one hundred persons who die of this disease ninety are habitual drinkers. Invisible placards on every spirit shop in the land read: "Cholera sold here."

Georgia has secured such prohibition in some of her counties that the jail stands open, night and day—notably at Jonesboro, where the whole institution has been offered for sale, and the conscientious sheriff is forced to think of resigning for lack of something to do.

The editor of the Banner of Holiness, passing between Keokuk and Des Moines, Iowa, since July 1st, makes the following note: "Everywhere, also, were the fruits of the prohibition legislation seen. The quietness at stations, the absence of crowds of loafers, with the usual percentage of hard-looking specimens of demoralized men, so in contrast with what we meet everywhere in Illinois and other States, gave most conclusive proof that a great and glorious work has already been accomplished. With this great beginning, who will hesitate to join in a movement of wider sweep in prohibition work?"

The Des Moines, Iowa, Register says: "During the first week of prohibition the sales at one meat market in Fort Madison were just double what they had been in any previous week, and the increased patronage came from the men who had been the regular patrons of the saloon."

On the night of August 18, John W. McCord died in the city calaboose of Audubon. He had been on a protracted spree, and after lying nearly three weeks in his rooms continuously drunk, the health officers ordered him and his room cleaned and disinfected. He was forty-five years of age, a criminal lawyer of extraordinary ability, and reputed to be the ablest common law attorney in the State.

Prince Bismarck has met an enemy hard to overcome. It is "Alcoholism." The German Government is endeavoring to restrain the use of intoxicating liquors, but with little success. Saloons spring up on every side. There are 11,000 in Berlin. The Gazette of Cologne says that 10,000 persons die of delirium tremens every year in Germany. It well describes the intemperance of modern Germany as a "hideous moral plague."

A lady has just given $6,000 to the temperance cause, who, a few years ago, was told by her husband that as temperance was being agitated in their State (Virginia) he thought he would sign the temperance pledge to help the cause. With great pride she said, "I would be ashamed of a husband who would thus surrender his personal liberty." One year from that time he died of delirium tremens; and her sons, learning to drink at their mother's table, have both died drunkards. —Congregationalist.

Recent figures show that the consumption of liquor in the United States has far outstripped the growth of population. The number of gallons of liquor consumed yearly since 1840 has increased as follows: 1840, 71,000,000; 1850, 94,000,000; 1860, 202,000,000; 1870, 293,000,000; 1880, 506,000,000; 1883, 655,000,000. While the population has only trebled in the last forty years, the consumption of intoxicants is nearly ten times greater than it was in 1840, and the amount of money expended in the purchase thereof is twenty or thirty times greater. Our annual expenditure for liquor now exceeds $800,000,000.

POPULAR SCIENCE.—One of the most gratifying indications of substantial progress is the increasing attention of late given by American physicians to the alcohol question. Dr. Felix L. Oswald, in Popular Science, writing of "Alcohol as a Remedy," asks, "Does alcohol impart strength? does it benefit the exhausted system?" and answers: "If a worn-out horse drops on the highway, we can rouse it by sticking a knife into its ribs; but after staggering ahead for a couple of minutes it will drop again, and the second delirium will be worse than the first by just as much as the brutal stimulus still has further exhausted the little remaining strength. In the same way precisely alcohol rallies the exhausted energies of the human body." He adds: "The prostrate vitality rises against the foe, and labors with restless energy till the poison is expelled. Then comes the reaction, and, before the patient can recover, his organism has to do double work. Nature has to overcome both the original cause of the disease and the effect of the stimulant." The efforts for the suppression of the liquor traffic will be greatly strengthened by the scientific demonstration that alcohol in health is in no sense a necessity, and that in nearly or quite all cases it may be safely and advantageously dispensed with in the treatment of disease.

THE CHURCHES.

—Rev. James L. Andrus is a Baptist clergyman who has for many years been constant in his efforts against the lodge, and who suffered much for his principles in Pennsylvania. He has for a year or two been residing in Michigan, looking for a people among whom he could labor conscientiously. He has just accepted a call from the church at Smyrna, Ionia Co., with his postoffice at Otiseo.

—Rev. Joseph Travis, editor of the Free Methodist, is visiting the annual conferences of his church quite generally this fall. He will be absent from Chicago until October.

—The general camp meeting of the Advent Christian church meets this year in Amboy, Lee county, Ill., beginning Sept. 6th and continuing over two Sabbaths. This meeting is attended by thousands, and from different parts of the country. A carload came on from Massachusetts last week to attend.

—It is said that John Wanamaker, who has a Sunday-school in Philadelphia with over 2,200 names on its roll, has never expelled a pupil. He says the bad boys are the ones who need a Sunday-school; hence they should not be expelled.

—In taking a public collection in a Canadian church, the officer passed a prominent citizen without giving him a chance to contribute. The injured man sued the officer for damage and recovered five dollars. It is not often we find people so anxious to contribute for benevolent purposes that a refusal to accept will cause litigation. The judge in this case considered that the officer was guilty of offering an insult.

—Dr. Nathan Brown writes from Yokohama, Japan: "The mission work in this part of Japan has been very encouraging this year, more converts having been added than at any previous period." Rev. Mr. Poate, from Sendai, in the north of Japan, writes: "All opposition has ceased. The people of this city as a whole begin to glorify the name of our Father in heaven. The harvest is not far off."

—At Edinburgh, last Friday, Gladstone promised a number of the ministers of the Free Church of Scotland if a distinct majority of the Scotch members returned to the Commons at the next election were pledged to disestablish the Church of Scotland the government would carry out the popular will.

—About two hundred Americans are present at the Evangelical Alliance now sitting in Copenhagen. Among the number are Philip Schaeff, John Hall, William Taylor, Edward Bright, and William F. Watkins, all of New York City.

—John Wanamaker's Bethany Sunday-school at Philadelphia has been in existence twenty-five years. It now numbers 2,200.

—The Boston Y. M. C. Union is providing carriage rides for invalids again this season. Last year it made over 1,000 persons happy in this delightful way.

—The will of Bishop Simpson leaves one-seventh of his estate for the endowment of an Episcopal chair for the bishop who shall reside in Philadelphia, provided the amount shall be increased to $50,000 before the next conference. The remainder of the estate, valued at $100,000, goes to the bishop's wife and children.

—The colored Baptists of Kansas have a general association, which met a few days since at Emporia. The attendance was quite large, from all parts of the State, and interesting discussions were had upon the current questions of the day. It was resolved to publish a monthly paper, devoted to the interests of the association.

—Rev. Samuel W. Dike points out the changes that have come over the New England town, both in its educational and religious life. The religious denominations have destroyed the old unity, the schools have destroyed the old central purpose of the town life, and the draft of the city upon the rural districts exhausts the means by which the old tone is maintained. Mr. Dike insists that two things must be done. One is to restore religious unity, which is now almost the last thing that seems possible; the other is to restore the family to its old place.

—The Society of Friends report a total membership in this country of about 75,000, and in Great Britain and Ireland about 18,000. They carry on considerable mission work. Among the various Indian tribes they have twenty-five Friends engaged in teaching, and in the foreign field are doing a noble service. They are sustaining thirteen missionaries in Madagascar, five in India, and a medical mission in Turkey under the care of the London Yearly Meeting. In Syria they have two stations, Burmana and Mount Lebanon, with training home for boys and girls, three Sabbath-schools and nine day schools. At Ramallah, near Jerusalem, they have seven schools. These are under the care of the New England and London Yearly Meetings.

—A singular excitement has been aroused in the Jewish communities of Southern Russia by the appearance, at Kischineff, of an energetic reformer named Joseph Rabinovitch. He declares Christ to have been the real Messiah, supporting his theories by numerous citations from the Bible and the prophets. He is an enthusiastic and eloquent preacher and is winning numerous proselytes. A remarkable conference has been held in Kischineff, at which the representatives of a hundred Hebrew families were present. They declared themselves ready to acknowledge their faith in the essential principles of Christianity, and desired to be recognized as a Hebrew branch of the Christian church. They hold tenaciously, however, to many of the Jewish traditions and observances.

—Mrs. Wall's "beggars' meetings" in Rome continue to be a great success. Each meeting is attended by some hundred and fifty poor creatures who learn Scriptures and hymns.

—The two Moravian missionaries to Alaska have reached Nushigak, and ascended the Kuskokwim River in skin-canoes. Large numbers of Esquimaux are living in that part of the territory, which they intend to explore thoroughly.

—In Bolivia, South America, where in 1877, a devoted Italian Bible colporteur was cruelly murdered on account of religious hatred, two agents of the Bible Society last year passed through the same region, were kindly received, and sold 581 copies of the Scriptures in four days.

—It is stated as an illustration of the power of special prayer offered for the safety of the Moravian vessels, that for 120 years a ship has annually left England for the Moravian mission in the Arctic regions of this continent, and that not a single ship or passenger has been lost by storm, iceberg or wreck.

—The house of Rudolf Hertzog, one of the greatest Berlin firms, has decided to close its premises entirely on Sunday. The letters delivered on the Sabbath are to remain unopened until Monday.

All the foreign Salvationists have fled from Bienne, Switzerland. The meetings are interdicted. Petitions are being sent to the Government urging the complete expulsion of the Salvationists from Switzerland, as otherwise further violence is threatened.

—The committee having in charge the arrangements for the General Conference at Copenhagen of the Evangelical Alliance has entered the names of 1,300 persons who have notified it of their intention to be present. Of these, 800 are Danes, 190 are from Sweden and Norway, 20 from France, 35 from Germany, others from Switzerland, Holland, Italy, Spain, Belgium, Austria, Greece, Russia, and more distant lands, while the delegates from Britain and America will number about 200.

—An important convention of Christian workers and others will be held in New York City. The principal topics for conference and prayer will be "Christian Life," "Spiritual Power," "Christian Work Among the Neglected Classes," and "The Evangelization of the World." Mr. and Mrs. Henry Grattan Guinness, the founders of the East London Training Institute for Home and Foreign Missionaries, and of the Congo Mission, are expected to be present, besides other well known ministers and workers from this country. The meetings will commence on Tuesday evening, September 9, and close Friday, September 12.

—The President of the Transvaal Republic has paid a visit to the Seminary of the Berlin Mission during his stay in the Capital of Germany. His excellency was full of praise for the work of the Berlin missionaries in South Africa, and delivered a warm speech to the students. Great things have really been accomplished in that benighted country during fifty years. The Gospel is preached at 172 places, 45 native preachers assist the white pastors, 3,000 children are in the schools of the mission, and the adult members contribute yearly over $12,000 to the work of the Mission-Synod. Two seminaries prepare young men for the office of preaching and teaching, and various societies have been established. The present chairman of the Berlin Society is Dr. Jacobi, Under-Secretary of State.—Lutheran.

—The Walla Walla United Brethren conference meeting at Huntsville, Washington Territory, gave this good testimony of its convictions on the lodge:

"Believing secret societies to be 'evil in their nature and tendency,' and that Christians are morally bound to 'shun the very appearance of evil;' therefore,

"Resolved, 1. That we re-affirm our attachment to our church Discipline relating to secret societies, and shall consider any move within the borders of our beloved Zion toward 'modification' to be a departure from the landmarks of our fathers, and destructive to our vitality.

"2. That we, the ministers and members of Walla Walla Conference, do respectfully memoralize the next General Conference that it make no change in our church law relating to secret societies."

—The former Quaker preacher, Mrs. Sarah F. Smiley, has been licensed by Bishop Doane, of Albany, to read and explain the Scriptures "in such parishes as she is invited to teach in by the rectors."

—The Chicago Evangelistic Committee have issued a pamphlet giving an outline of the work of the State Street and Adelphi Theatre Missions. The central part of Chicago would include about 150,000 people. The religious care for this number of people is undertaken by the Young Men's Christian Association, the Pacific Garden Mission, and the two missions mentioned above. The population of this part of the city are represented in the pamphlet as being entirely transient, not more than ten or fifteen per cent. remaining in the neighborhood for a year. The pamphlet contains many incidents of peculiar interest, showing the need for just such missions as those mentioned, and it seems a pity that the city of Chicago should not see fit to give them the financial aid necessary to carry the work on.

—The Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, who founded the Society for China Inland Missions in 1865, gave in London on July 8th, a summary of the work, which was begun on "absolutely nothing," and which yet has prospered well. Several other missionaries testified to this fact, that hitherto they have been welcomed wherever they went, but a war with France might, of course, change all that. They have at present 126 missionaries and about 100 native agents scattered over the Chinese Empire, and the position of some of these devoted men during the next six months will be somewhat precarious.

—The Berlin Missionary, Posselt, reports that he is waging a hard contest with the "drink fiend" in Natal. Herr Posselt has formed a temperance society among his people, which has eighty-three members—thirty-four men and forty-nine women and children. His efforts for temperance were at first ridiculed, but now the people recognize that he has done a good work, and even the traders who sold the liquor, laud his efforts notwithstanding their trade has been diminished. By the rules of the society, the first violation of the pledge is punished by a fine of to and a half, the second of five marks. Only the intoxicating drinks of the whites are forbidden.

—The Indian University is the only institution in our country that has for its special object the training of native preachers and teachers for a Christian work among the Indian tribes. Its work was commenced in a small dwelling-house at Tablequah, the capital of the Cherokee Nation, in 1880, with three pupils and not a dollar pledged for its support. From this small beginning the number of pupils has increased to 138, coming from five different tribes; and now there are five teachers under the appointment of the American Baptist Home Mission Society; the ladies' societies of Chicago, Boston and Cleveland and other friends contributing liberally toward its support. Several of its students have given themselves heartily to preaching the Gospel and to mission work among their own and other tribes, and their labors have been greatly blessed. Others are now studying for the ministry, and a large number are preparing to teach; all of whom give promise of great usefulness.—Journal and Messenger.

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

—The residents of Galicia, the north-eastern province of Austria, are petitioning the Emperor to expel all Jesuits from that province. Their demands are so extortionate that the people are unable to pay the government taxes and keep from starvation.

—"The Corner Stone says regarding the address printed in the August Voice of Masonry entitled, "Freemasonry and the Church," that such sentiments are driving out of the institution thousands of honorable men who conscientiously repudiate any theory of divine revelation."—Inter Ocean.

—Freemasonry has many disciples in Germany. There are 8 Grand Lodges and 461 subordinate lodges with 40,000 members. Some of the princes are Grand Masters, etc. Whilst some of the clerical members of the Protestanten-Verein belong to lodges, the bulk of the Protestant pastors keep off minds and hands from the secret societies, which nowhere in the world have been profitable to the true church. The German Freemasons as a whole keep within doors and street parades with chaplains, etc., are unheard-of things.—The Lutheran.

—A Chicago daily has the following notice of a colored lodge which gives some idea of such a performance: "A hall was dedicated last evening at No. 248 Wabash avenue, by Hutchinson Lodge, No. 1,362, of the Grand United Order of Odd-fellows. The room had been newly and nicely fitted up at an expense of about $1,000, strictly in accordance with the ritualistic requirements. The stands were on convenient platforms under elegant canopies. A fine body Brussels carpet covered the floor and lace curtains adorned the windows. The walls were hung with American and English colors. One corner was occupied by a new organ. Mr. T. Cooper called the assembly to order, and all joined in singing "Rock of Ages." Prayer was offered by the Rev. J. A. D. Podd. The dedicatory address was made by Mr. E. H. Morris. The responses were by Mr. H. T. Wells, Noble Father. The Rev. Stephen Taylor, chaplain, invoked the Master's blessing and consecration. After a cornet solo by Mr. P. T. Tinsley, the Rev. J. W. Polk made a short speech, followed by a closing solo by Mrs. F. A. Powell. The rest of the evening was given to social enjoyment and refreshments. The lodge was organized Nov. 11, 1867, and is now one of the strongest in the city. It numbers about 175 of the colored citizens.

THE FLIGHT OF TIME AND ITS RESULTS.

This is an age of progress. Were it possible for the mythical fable of Washington Irving to be realized, and had an inhabitant of this sphere composed himself for the renowned Rip Van Winkle nap some twenty-five or thirty years ago, truly, upon awakening to-day, would he imagine himself in another world advanced far beyond his comprehension. A retrospection of the past ages, based, of course, upon the records and evidence extant, in comparison with the past half century, render the improvement of the latter almost miraculous. The arts, sciences, general intelligence, and other advantages to mankind, have advanced with the rapidity of the mushroom, but with the stability of the pyramids. Probably the most beneficial development has been that of the railroad system. One does not have to go back to the boyhood days of the oldest inhabitant to see the vast changes wrought through the instrumentality of the latter, as many are yet comparatively young that well remember the status of affairs innovated by the introduction of the steam horse. At that time, when removed from water transportation, the turnpikes were the great thoroughfares—the principal medium of communication between the different parts of the country. The latter were certainly a great advance upon previous modes, and from the substantial manner of their construction were, doubtless, considered the limit of human efforts in that direction. They served their turn well, opened up the inland, and still, after many years of use, render valuable service. It is now difficult to comprehend how, even with the use of turnpikes, it was possible to transact business of large dimensions. The slow, plodding freight team, the coaches with their limited accommodations and speed of ten or less miles per hour, surely retarded commercial traffic and almost completely prevented a pleasure trip. How different it is to-day. The immense railway system covers the country like the web of a spider. Time and distance are annihilated. Thousands of cars with unlimited capacity transport the products of the cities into the country and the agricultural products into the cities. Elegant trains convey the army of travelers in every conceivable direction, at almost incredible speed. At the very commencement of the railroad era one was started from Chicago, and, following the old Buffalo Trail, slowly but surely built toward the Great West. Directly through the Heart of the Continent it went, throwing out branches to tap the rich agricultural sections, opening up and developing the country it traversed, until to-day it has five thousand miles of steel track, and extends from Chicago, Peoria and St. Louis in the East direct to Denver in the West. Not built for speculation, nor with monopolistic ideas, it has ever consulted the best wishes of its patrons, and has always, therefore, received their hearty encouragement and support. Every day in the year palatial trains, equipped with the very latest facilities for eating, sleeping, smoking and lounging, move over its perfect road-bed between Chicago and Denver, Chicago and Omaha, Chicago and Kansas City, and Kansas City and Denver, without change of cars, and with direct connection from St. Louis and Peoria. The principal cities and towns in Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Nebraska, Kansas and Colorado are situated on the lines of this now great corporation. It is, in fact, the great highway through and between the important head centers of the West. Its phenomenal success has been achieved through the perfect system that pervades everything it undertakes. Its representations are facts and are carried out in every particular. Realizing this, the large organizations of Knights Templar and Grand Army of the Republic, journeying to San Francisco and Denver in 1883, together with Religious, Civic, Military and Theatrical bodies, traveling in large numbers, selected this road. For the same weighty reasons the Tourist, Health-seeking and Business travel in the largest majority have always patronized its lines. Upon the completion of the Mexican Central Railroad, which opened commercial relations between the Republics of Mexico and the United States, the first international train passed from Kansas City to Chicago over this great road. If it needed a higher endorsement than the preference of the people, it was supplied by the United States Government selecting it from all others to carry the Fast Mail west of Chicago. It matters not where may be your destination in the great States and Territories west of Chicago, it means, by this line, but a few hours or days, according to distance, of luxurious life on the rail. If your objective point is not located on its lines, it connects direct in Grand Union Depots at each of its western termini with through trains for all railroad points. In conclusion, if you desire your trip to be endowed with all the comforts, luxury, speed and satisfaction that is possible in connection with a railway journey, realizing and enjoying all that is herein described, and following the lead of many of your predecessors, purchase your ticket over the "Burlington Route," Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R.

"SCRIP and STAFF."

BY H. M. HUGUNIN.

This new and attractive volume is now ready. It is composed of thirty-nine chapters on nearly as many topics. Neatly bound in cloth with gilt stamp. Price 60 cents.

The Chicago Evening Journal of May 3, says:

The author of this little volume, for many years a working editor of the EVENING JOURNAL, has here presented us with a variety of topics of a religious character. Among the number we note "The Evils of the Sunday Newspaper," "The Divine Sanction of Church Organizations," "The Good Work and Government of Sunday-Schools," "The Bible in our Public Schools," "Fallacies of the 'Evolution Theory,'" "Chronology—The Age of the World," and "Labor and Laborers." Mr. Hugunin writes as an independent thinker, untrammeled by denominational alignments. His style, however, is marked by the vigor of earnestness and sincerity, and with these characteristics, and with a close adherence to Bible Christianity, his book becomes a suggestive aid to evangelical workers. In discussing the topics above named, as in others, he deals consistently with questions of public interest and great importance in the reform of individual and social evils.

The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

FARM AND GARDEN.

SUCCESSIVE CROPS OF POULTRY.

Where labor is too costly, says the Co-operative Poultry Post, or where, as in a large family, no account is made of the labor of children, it is possible to obtain a large income from a comparatively small flock of fowls. This is accomplished by raising successive crops of chickens during the season. The first crop should be out of the shell by Feb. 1, and the last installment by June 1. We are speaking now of raising chickens for market. The first hatched will be ready for market by May 1, and the last by Thanksgiving. The old fowls should be disposed of in July, or as soon as their services as layers and mothers can be dispensed with. The successive broods should be disposed of just as soon as they will command a fair price. The earliest will be in marketable condition in from eight to twelve weeks. They can never be more profitably disposed of than at that age, for as they increase in size prices decline, and so the extra food bestowed on them is actually thrown away. By this method of promptly disposing of the chicks as they mature, the premises do not become overstocked and the soil of the runs foul, as is the case when large flocks are kept throughout the season to be sold at the holidays. By selling off the old stock in July the greatest possible profit is obtained from them. After this date they lay but few eggs, begin to moult in the fall, and perhaps lay not a single egg before winter. The extra pound or two of flesh they put on does not pay for their keep. By killing off all surplus stock by Thanksgiving the yards are cleared and opportunity is given to feed and care well for the few that are to be kept over for next season's breeding. The extra care these few receive will induce early laying and broodiness in the spring, and these two points are essential to success. We have only outlined a method that is followed by many in the Eastern States who have been successful in making money by raising eggs and poultry for the food market. The plan will have to be modified according to locality and other circumstances.

CARE FOR THE SICK ANIMALS.

Nearly all diseases to which live stock are subject, are the result of neglect of the simplest sanitary rules, and may be prevented by the exercise of a little common sense. Never compost manure in a cellar beneath the stables, nor in an adjoining shed. The foul, noisome gases arising from the rotting mass will poison the air throughout the entire building, and to compel animals to breathe it is the hight of folly. Never change any kind of stock suddenly from one kind of food to another which they are not accustomed to.

When a cow or calf is seen choking, grasp it and feel along the outside of its throat for the hard substance. When found, exert vigorous pressure, and slide the article up into the mouth. For scours in calves, feed new milk (heated near to the boiling point, and allowed to cool sufficiently) with oats, bran, and corn-meal dry until cured. Heavy milkers are most liable to garget. We prevent it by milking once a day the last month of pregnancy, and feeding cooling relaxing food. Fomenting the udder once a day with tepid water is a great help. Watch the udders of pregnant cows for indications of garget, and relieve promptly. In three different instances we found it necessary to regularly milk young heifers, of a strain of heavy milkers, nearly a month before dropping their first calf. A neighbor having one of the same strain refused to go "contrary to nature," as he termed it, and the animal was ruined. In every case, after the calf has sucked the first time, the udder should be drained of its last drop. This should be done regularly twice a day until the calf takes it all.—FROM PRIZE ARTICLE in American Agriculturist for September.

SOW NOW FOR SPRING FLOWERS.

While our gardens present a much greater variety than did those of a half century ago, there are some plants in which the old-time gardeners excelled. We do not see such beds of Pansies, or of Rocket Larkspurs, as were then the pride of the gardeners. Success with Pansies is mainly due to sowing the seed in autumn. If the seed is sown in spring, by the time the plants begin to bloom hot weather comes, and the flowers become fewer and smaller. In order to have the flowers in spring, sow the seeds early this month. Make a spot of rich soil fine, and level the surface by pressing it with a board. Sow the seeds, sift a little soil over them, and press down firmly with the board. When the plants are an inch high, transplant them to the place where they are to flower. The plants are quite hardy, and all the winter protection they need is a little brush to keep the snow from pressing too heavily upon them. The Rocket Larkspurs are, unlike the tall ones, annuals. A bed of them is as showy as one of Hyacinths. Sow in a well enriched bed this autumn, but leave them to flower where they were sown. The bed may be covered with brush during the winter, and if the plants are too much crowded in any part of the bed next spring, thin them by cutting out the surplus. They do not transplant satisfactorily.—American Agriculturist for September.

BAFFLED!

ONE OF THE MOST UNACCOUNTABLE AND DANGEROUS OF RECENT DECEITS DISCOVERED AND EXPOSED.

There is some mysterious trouble that is attacking nearly everyone in the land with more or less violence. It seems to steal into the body like a thief in the night. Doctors cannot diagnose it. Scientists are puzzled by its symptoms. It is, indeed, a modern mystery. Like those severe and vague maladies that attack horses and prostrate nearly all the animals in the land, this subtle trouble seems to menace mankind. Many of its victims have pains about the chest and sides, and sometimes in the back. They feel dull and sleepy, the mouth has a bad taste, especially in the morning. A strange sticky slime collects about the teeth. The appetite is poor. There is a feeling like a heavy load upon the stomach; sometimes a faint all-gone sensation is felt at the pit of the stomach, which food does not satisfy. The eyes grow sunken, the hands and feet feel clammy at one time and burn intensely at others. After a while a cough sets in, at first dry, but after a few mouths it is attended with a greyish colored expectoration. The afflicted one feels tired all the while, and sleep does not seem to afford any rest. He becomes nervous, irritable, and gloomy, and has evil forebodings. There is a giddiness, a peculiar whirling sensation in the head when rising up suddenly. The bowels become costive, and then, again, outflux intensely; the skin is dry and hot at times; the blood grows thick and stagnant; the whites of the eyes become tinged with yellow; the urine is scanty and high-colored, depositing a sediment after standing. There is frequently a spitting up of the food, sometimes with a sour taste, and sometimes with a sweetish taste; this is often attended with palpitation of the heart. The vision becomes impaired, with spots before the eyes; there is a feeling of prostration and great weakness. Most of these symptoms are in turn present. It is thought that nearly one-third of our population have this disorder in some of its varied forms, while medical men have almost wholly mistaken its nature. Some have treated it for one complaint; some for another, but nearly all have failed to reach the seat of the disorder. Indeed, many physicians are afflicted with it themselves. The experience of Dr. A. G. Richards, residing at No. 468 Tremont street, Boston, is thus described by himself:

"I had all those peculiar and painful symptoms which I have found afflicting so many of my patients, and which had so often baffled me. I knew all the commonly established remedies would be unavailing for I had tried them often in the past. I therefore determined to strike out in a new path. To my intense satisfaction I found that I was improving. The dull, stupid feeling departed and I began to enjoy life once more. My appetite returned. My sleep was refreshing. The color of my face, which had been sickly yellow, gradually assumed the pink tinge of health. In the course of three weeks I felt like a new man and know that it was wholly owing to the wonderful efficiency of Warner's Tippecanoe The Best, which is all the medicine I took."

Doctors and scientists often exhaust their skill and the patient dies. They try everything that has been used by, or is known to, the profession, and then fail. Even if they save the life it is often after great and prolonged agony. Where all this can be avoided by precaution and care, how insane a thing it is to endure such suffering! With a pure and palatable preparation within reach, to neglect its use is simply inexcusable.

IN BRIEF.

One of the most remarkable telegraphic feats on record, it is said, was the recent delivery of a message from Melbourne, Australia, to London in twenty-three minutes. It went by land and sea over 13,308 miles of wire.

Mrs. Dr. Mary Weeks-Burnett thinks that most of the divorces of the present day are due to the use of tobacco. The seductive weed affects the sympathetic nerves which surround the heart.

After residing, in some cases, fifteen years in the German capital, Russians of all ages, sexes and conditions are now being ruthlessly banished, without a word of explanation or, often, a moment's notice.

The tea plant has lately been introduced near Soukgoum Kalch, on the Black Sea, and the Russians are confident that they will soon be able to do without either Chinese or Indian teas.

A year ago a swarm of bees was seen to enter a knot-hole over the door of Oliver Williams' house at Parma, N. Y. The other day some clapboards were removed and 100 pounds of honcy taken out.

When lightning struck the house of John Queen, of Jacob's Creek, Pa., it knocked from the wall his loaded gun, and at the same instant his daughter Nancy dropped dead. The gun was discharged and the contents struck her in the breast. Whether she met her death by the lightning or the shot will never be known.

Several persons were riding on horseback at Shawnee Mound, Jackson Township, Ind., fleeing from an impending rainstorm, when lightning struck a colored boy, who was one of the party. It burned his face almost past recognition, and, passing to his shoulder, left an ugly wound, but he will recover. His horse was killed under him. None of the others were injured.

Several of the saloon-keepers of Washington, supposing the police to be at the scene of the United States Hotel disaster, opened their saloon doors on Sunday evening, but much to their disappointment nineteen of them were captured. They will probably be fined $20 each.

In New York, Tuesday night, Charles H. Vogt, in enforcing the law to his hard-working wife, brought his fist fiercely down upon the supper table she had arrayed for him, and jarred it so that a broken saucer fell into the cradle where his sick baby lay, and cut its jugular vein with fatal effect.

Six hundred Italians sailed for their native land in the steerage of the steamship Scotia on Friday. It is explained that dullness in railroad building and the approach of cold weather accounts for this large exodus. The steamer's consignee also says that there are at present 20,000 of these people out of work in New York city alone.

The London Graphic says: "A countryman named William Stickers, flying to London to escape from rural justice, was appalled at reading on a wall: 'Bill Stickers Beware!' He went a little further, but reading again, 'Bill Stickers will be punished with the utmost rigor of law,' gave himself up for lost, and surrendered."

There are now in the Treasury vaults at Washington 136,000,000 silver dollars, weighing nearly 5,000 tons. If placed in ordinary coal carts, a ton in each, and allowing fifteen feet of space for each cart, it would make a continuous procession fourteen miles long. The above figures do not include the silver bullion and fractional silver, of which there is a thousand tons more.

Cuba will be reduced to a wilderness if she remains much longer under the rule of Spain. The population of the island is about 1,500,000, one-third being slaves and other colored people who pay no taxes. The tax-payers have to pay annually from $35 to $40 per capita. This state of affairs cannot last. The sugar product ten years ago was 1,000,000, now it is only 350,000 tons. The tobacco and coffee industries are almost prostrate. The valuable timber forests are untouched. The roads are the worst in the world.

HORSFORD'S ACID RHOSPHATE.

Very Satisfactory in Prostration.

Dr. P. P. GILMARTIN, Detroit, Mich., says: "I have found it very satisfactory in its effects, notably in the prostration attending upon alcoholism."

The suicide of the defaulting cashier, the aged president and two of the depositors of the broken bank of New Brunswick, New Jersey, is part of the wreckage from the tide of speculation in Wall street. If we say the gambling mania slew these men, what of the public sentiment which sustains the stock gambler?

Congressman Barnum of Connecticut, chairman of the Democratic National committee, is confident that the money of the Milwaukee brewers' will carry Wisconsin for Cleveland. How much they give with the hope of thus purchasing a few years' immunity for their traffic is not reported. But their support of the Democratic party in Wisconsin is like the support of the Republican party in other States for the same reason and by the same class. To hear the testimony from the South of the prohibitory sentiments of Democrats enforced at the ballot gives a singular insipidity to the arguments of some good Republican friends in favor of their party as the party by which prohibition can be secured. In Illinois the situation is claimed to be more critical because of Carter Harrison's vile following. But Miss Mary Allen West, president of the State W. C. T. U., and as well able to judge as perhaps any person, says that in her estimate the Prohibition vote will be more increased from the Democratic party than from the Republican. The Republican county of Knox cannot yet drive out the liquor demon from its two cities, Galesburg and Knoxville, while in the adjoining Democratic county of Fulton liquor is prohibited and the leading Democratic paper has just raised a St. John flag.

The vote of Maine for the prohibitory amendment as now counted is 64,507 in favor, to 20,224 against —a majority of 44,283, or more than two-thirds. The Republican majority is nearly 20,000. The most regretful part of the Maine election was Mr. Blaine's position which he frankly gave to the country in a short speech to the people of Augusta during their rejoicing over the victory. During this speech he said: "The issue on the temperance amendment to the Constitution has been very properly and very rigidly separated from the political contest of the State today. Many Democrats voted for it, and some Republicans voted against it. The Republican party by desire of leading temperance men took no action as a party on the amendment. For myself I decided not to vote at all on the question. I took this position because I am chosen by the Republican party as the representative of National issues, and by no act of mine shall any question be obtruded into the National campaign which belongs properly to the domain of State politics. Certain advocates of prohibition and certain opponents of prohibition are each seeking to drag the issue into the National canvass, and thus tending to exclude from popular consideration questions which press for National decision. If there be any questions that belong solely to the police power of the State it is the control of the liquor traffic, and wise men will not neglect National issues in the year of National contest." Mr. Blaine's philosophy, that a man in his position before the nation may withhold his personal influence and testimony for the purity and safety of the home, might be used to condone Cleveland's crime against marriage, the foundation of that home.

JOHN A. CONANT.

The summary of the report of the Commissioner of Education for the year 1882–83 has lately been given in the daily press, and is not without an admonition to the country. The children of legal school age in the United States in 1882 was 16,243,822 of whom 10,013,826 were enrolled and 6,118,331 attended daily, or of every sixteen children who should be in school but six are found there. The result of such neglect and indifference will tell, is now telling severely against the moral progress of the nation. The number of public school teachers is reported as 293,-294 or about one teacher for every twenty-one pupils. But as many duplicates are included in this number the teachers actually at work are many less. It is a general complaint that the pay of teachers is too low to engage the services of those persons who would most benefit the schools, though in this respect there is an upward tendency. The gross income of the public schools was $94,327,188 and the expenditures $91,158,039, one-eighth being in the State of New York. School property was valued at $216,562,197, an increase during the year of over $30,000,000. An increase in the payment of teachers would be a far preferable disposition of funds than the erection of expensive buildings. Such school houses are an opportunity for fraud and venality which is not left at times unimproved.

Odd-fellowship is constructed upon as divine principles as those which sway other institutions.—Schuyler Colfax. Are the principles of Odd-fellowship as divine as those of Christianity? Then it must be equally as good an institution as Christianity. In other words Odd-fellowship, a human institution of recent origin, is as worthy of our confidence and support as Christianity, that has existed since the birth of Christ. In other words, Mr. Colfax exalts this very imperfect and human institution to equality with Christianity, that divine and God-given institution which is the help of the world. Such is the absurdity of human reasoning. It is the absurdity of blind reasoning into which so-called great men are for our warning permitted to run in their vain speculations. How thankful should Christians feel who know better, that their eyes have been opened to see the folly and absurdities of such sophistry and superstition.—Sandy Lake, Pa., News.

As we read of the banquets, balls and gaiety at Warsaw during the visit of the Emperor Alexander last week we cannot forget what a turbulent volcano of political hate is covered by the tinsel of royalty. During the last of August the most extraordinary precautions were taken against the Nihilists. Scores of men and women were arrested. Warsaw was in a state of seige. Railways were minutely inspected and all trees along the road traversed by the Czar were demolished to prevent conspirators hiding in them. Search was made everywhere for secret mines. A detective was appointed to every five houses. Soldiers were ordered to fire at anyone crossing the Czar's route as he entered the city. Although these precautions were greatly relaxed after a few days and the Emperor drove unattended in an open carriage to the theatre, yet the severe precautions speak of but one great subject—the radical evils embodied in the Russian government. Nor can the Czar, on his part, if he have not a heart of stone enjoy power purchased at such a price. The time must draw nigh when the rule of autocrats and aristocrats must give way and the principles of brotherhood which Christ taught must prevail.

PRAYING FOR RULERS.

BY A. WILLEY.

This is a Scriptural duty, and it has been proposed to pray even for those who are to be rulers. This is very well indeed, at this time; but who are the "rulers" under Republican government? The Bible was written when the people had no part in making rulers, and their duty only was to submit, and to pray. And it is surprising that this seems to be held as the limit of religious duty under elective government. Is it to escape any belligerency with politicians? Who are "rulers" in the United States? Where is the ultimate sovereignty? The voter is ruler. There is the seat of power, and the official is but his agent. To vote for men whom God has declared unfit for civil trust, or for objects which he has forbidden, and then pray for them, is a farce and an insult. To vote for those who will tolerate and protect the liquor crime and then pray for just government, is mockery. His answer is: "I will not hear. Your hands are full of blood. Wash—make you clean—put away your evil doings. They are an abomination to me."

Praying for rulers now is first of all praying for voters. And now is the time. A special occasion should be set apart all over the land to pray that the people may be led to vote for such men and objects as God has described for righteous government. Then would "arise a morning without clouds."

TRADE UNIONS AND THE LABOR INTEREST.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

Trades unionism, as a factor, is gaining strength and influence constantly. It is wedging itself in between the manufacturer and the individual worker, and in time the individual will be lost sight of, except as he acts in accordance with the laws and decrees of the trades unions. Most employers regard supply and demand the sole regulating factor in determining wages During the infancy of unionism, and in its semi-organized shape, this rule prevailed; but as organization becomes fixed and trades unionism grows a new rule is developed, viz,: wages shall be determined by the average, reasonable and just requirements of the average worker.

The workingmen will establish this rule by refusing to compete for or accept work below the rates agreed upon.—Philadelphia Record.

We believe the results desired can never be attained by the methods adopted, because not founded in any correct principles of political economy. That all labor should be fairly remunerated, and that those who by fraud have kept back his hire, have committed an offense that cries in the ears of the God of of Sabbaoth, is a proposition that none will deny. The question is, how shall this just reward be secured?

There are two methods proposed, each of which rests on an opposite theory. The first is the plan suggested above, and assumes that capital and labor are antagonistic, and that in the conflict the best organized and strongest will be sure to prevail. The second theory is that labor and capital are in harmony, that to promote their harmonious relation will be a benefit to both, and that to produce antagonism will injure not only laborers and capitalists, but all other persons.

1st. In carrying out the first plan it is proposed to diminish the hours of labor. This would render a larger number of laborers necessary and increase the demand.

2d. The voluntary or enforced idleness of large numbers of laborers, thereby creating a demand for their return at increased wages.

3d. This involves secret, oath-bound combinations to which all members are subject and which by the use or moral and physical force can prevent the employment of non-union men.

4th. Opposition to labor-saving machinery. This was formerly more relied on than now, but is still a part of the plan.

5th. Opposition to the importation of laborers from other countries.

6th. Opposition to unrestricted apprenticeships.

7th. Boycotting all men and firms not subservient to the interests of the unions.

Before considering the objections to this general plan and its details, I notice what the other plan proposes to do.

1st. The careful education of all laborers. Hands that are educated, and are directed by educated minds are far more valuable, both to employers and to their owners, than those of the ignorant. Skilled labor is always cheapest and best paid.

2d. Labor-saving machinery by making labor more effective and therefore entitled to a larger compensation. A man who with a machine does the labor of ten men really earns more than he could possibly do unaided. Other things being equal, his labor will be in greater demand and he better rewarded. But the greater effectiveness of his labor cheapens its products and puts them in the reach of multitudes who otherwise could not buy them. In this age of steam machinery, the articles of manufacture can be sold on the great lakes in Africa, on the Congo and the Amazon, and thus the ever-widening production is followed by an ever-widening demand. Not only has the nominal price of labor increased with the introduction of labor-saving machinery, but the actual value as measured by the necessities of life has also increased. Every plan for the abridgement of labor has in its final result been a blessing to the laborer and has proved beyond peradventure, that all plans whereby labor has been made more effective, have given it a better reward.

3d. Diversity of employments. Over-production is sure to follow excessive demand. Previous to 1873 there was an iron famine which was speedily followed by such over-supply that most of the iron furnaces were obliged to put out their fires. The excess of any particular kind of labor must inevitably reduce its price. The remedy is not idleness, but different labor. One department of labor always creates the necessity for others, and if each received its due share of attention they would mutually support each other. A bureau of labor statistics would materially aid laborers in determining where there was the greater demand. Manifestly American laborers would find more regular and certain support if a larger proportion were engaged in agriculture.

4th. Labor is capital. Let it be counted as such. Let men who have money use it in erecting manufacturing establishments, but let the man who has only his mind and hands, put them in as so much stock, on which he may draw his percentage of gain. The experiment of co-operative manufactories owned and conducted by workingmen has been a reasonable success, and will gain in appreciation; for when the producer is both capitalist and laborer, there can be no conflict of interests.

5th. When there are conflicting interests it ought not to be difficult to determine what is just and equal. There can be no written enactment that can supercede the law of love. Temporary embarrassments are inevitable, and men will never cease to need mutual kindness. Something of evil will surely be, but the remedy is not counter evil but to "overcome evil with good."

It remains to show the absurdity of the plan of antagonism between capital and labor.

1. Diminished hours of labor will never make lalor more remunerative. Men will never, other things being equal, pay as much for eight hours' labor as for ten. To insist on the eight hour law will be to diminish the daily and the aggregate wages.

2. Strikes greatly diminish the amount of productive labor and the aggregate wealth of this country. They injure the capitalist and manufacturer, but the greatest calamity falls on the laborer himself. Sometimes it is an actual gain to the manufacturer to shut up his mills, and the sole loss comes on those who are least able to bear it. Laborers are beginning to see this and strikes are not so popular as they were.

3. Secret oath-bound combinations are inconsistent with the personal liberty of their members, often an expensive machinery and always liable to be used for unlawful purposes. That they are being so used is good reason to doubt their utility.

4. Opposition to labor-saving machinery is a step towards barbarism with all its attendant sufferings and abominations.

5. Opposition to the importation of labor. We have laws against the importation of paupers and against fraudulent contracts, but any law against voluntary immigration violates alike our treaties with other nations and the principles of justice and natural liberty. We are all of us foreigners or their descendants.

6. It would be a blessing if every young person knew some useful mechanical occupation. All restriction is absurd.

7. Boycotting all persons not subservient to our wishes, if by individuals is an impertinence, and if by a secret combination is a practical conspiracy which no looked-for advantage can justify.

In conclusion, let me state these propositions, to which I think all will assent:

1. It is for the interests of all laborers that manufacturers should be prosperous; for whatever impairs their prosperity makes them less able to give employment and pay remunerative wages.

2. It is for the interest of all manufacturers that all employees should have regular and constant labor at remunerative wages. Such employees are effective and profitable.

3. All things that contribute to harmony between capital and labor are a benefit to both, and that which destroys this harmony is a wrong to all people.

SHORT SERMON.

TEXT:—And he said Legion.

MY BRETHREN:—There is hardly anything in human affairs into which the foul spirit of Masonry in its multiform shapes does not enter. Go into the church, it is there. Go into politics, into business, into the newspaper offices—go where you will; it is there. It assumes numerous shapes and names, and runs through a great variety of degrees. Some of our politicians are possessed by thirty three of these degrees. As the Roman Legion once seized upon Judea, and infested everything sacred and holy therein, so this legionary foul fiend has seized upon the United States.

My friends; believe me, though this foul, brassy spirit seems terrible to you, and beyond all control, yet if you will manfully face it down with the real spirit of reform, and throw an honest ballot against it, it will cower down at once and humbly beg when it leaves the bosom of the Christian (!) ministry, that it may go into a herd of Mormons, or confine its abode to the purlieu of the brothel.

My friends, where this foul multiform fiend seizes upon a butcher, and fills him with the conceit that he is a High Priest, a Sir Knight, a Worthy Grand, an Eminent Commander, or some "puffed up" pomposity of the kind, do you think that you can bind him with the old-fashioned restraints of honor, virtue, decency, reason, propriety? No! he will break asunder all these, and spurn them from him as if they were but chains of straw. There is but one way to deal with this devil-possessed butcher, and that is to vote against him, and let him see that the Presidency of the United States is not in the line of promotion with the Masonic High Priest.

Sometimes this Legion appears as an angel of light, dropping a tear of tender pity into the contribution box of rich widows' and orphans'. Sometimes it seems like a very, very "good man;" then again as a very great statesman; often as a Methodist minister, or an Episcopal bishop, and not seldom as a leering Jew. Often, very often of late years he has appeared as the Republican candidate for the Presidency. He drinks wine from a pirate's skull and imprecates its damnation on his own soul in order to be true to a truthless set of knaves seven times worse than himself, and then advocates prohibition. While partaking of the devil's sacrament from a skull, in good strong wine, he uses colored water at the sacrament of Christ! Sometimes he goes up among the sepulchers and mumbles prayers and speeches over dead bounty-jumpers, like a Jesuit priest.

My friends, not till each one of you, standing firm in the simple integrity of Christian faith, dares to face this Legion and vote him down, will your Masonic brother ever be restored to his right mind, and become a worthy American citizen. Never vote for a man or a party that is possessed of the Masonic devil.

SO MOTE IT BE!

WITNESSES.

MARIANNE FARNINGHAM.

"I am working alone, and no one heeds!"
Who says so, does not know
There are clear eyes watching on every side,
And wherever our feet may go,
We are "compassed about with so great a cloud,"
That if we could only see,
We could never think that our life is small
Or that we may unnoticed be!

We seem to suffer and bear alone
Life's burdens and all its care;
And the sighs and prayers of the heavy heart
Vanish into the air;
But we do not suffer or work alone,
And after a victory won,
Who knows how happy the hosts may be
Who whisper a soft "Well done!"

Oh, do not deem that it matters not
How you live your life below;
It matters much to the heedless crowd
That you see go to and fro;
For all that is noble and high and good
Has an influence on the rest,
And the world is better for every one
Who is living at his best.

But even if human eyes see not,
No one is unobserved;
There are censures deep and plaudits high
As each may be deserved;
We cannot live in a secret place,
There are watchers always by,
For heaven and earth are full of life,
And God is ever nigh.

Oh, for a life without reproach,
For a heart of earnestness!
For self forgotten, for meanness slain,
For hands well-used to bless!
God, raise us far from the little things,
And make us meet to be
Skilled workers here in the place we fill,
And servants unto Thee.

BALAAM.

The Bible contains a remarkable narrative concerning Balaam and his ass. We note they lived in ancient times—not so ancient, perhaps, as some claim for Freemasonry. The animal had two names according to sex. Abraham saddled his chamor when about to start upon his journey to offer up Isaac. Balaam rode upon an athon; or, if we give the Hebrew letter taff the sound of s, as some do, we call it ason. This would be a far-off beginning of the word ass. We don't know why the inspired informer thus denotes the sex of Balaam's particular donkey, but such is the fact. There was no hybridized mule then. The mule was much prized in Dixie in the days of slavery, and has ever been noted for the expert use of his heels in kicking, but has no progeny. Hybridized Masonry, that is, a cross with the religion of the churches, is remarkable for kicking. It often "kicks against the pricks."

The ancient chamor and ason were very subservient. "Am I not thine ason, upon which thou hast ridden ever since I was thine?" The black fiend of slavery was wont to smite all in the church or state not subservient to its behests. For long years the only reply of the greater number was, "Am not I thine ass?" etc.

Freemasonry and secretism, like Balaam, would smite all opposition in church and state. Many still reply, "Am not I thine ass?" Masonry and Odd-fellowship present us also with the chamor and ason. The name is altered to Eastern Star and Rebecca. It should be western star, but Masonry borrows its abominable features, many of them, from the old East.

When Balaam's ason had a spiritual vision it could not proceed. Many church members get a spiritual vision, and although smitten by their lords of the whip, cannot proceed in the ways of secretism. Balaam said, "If I had a sword in my hand now would

I kill thee." Secretism has often carried out such a principle or spirit. Balaam had a vision that Israel should finally prevail, but unlike Paul was not heedful. It cost him his life. Many church Masons and Odd-fellows have such visions but are like Balaam.

We are not told that Balaam went to the "grand lodge above," when the men under Joshua slew him, but where Balaam is all false seers must go. When Balaam had his spiritual visions he testifies that his eyes were then open but had been shut. The Mason bandages his eyes with the hoodwink and, worse than the poor ass, shuts out Christ and every angel of good. The poor preacher becomes a man of words as before but never of the Word.

The common dupe by "the shock of enlightenment has his eyes opened like the transgressors" in the garden who heeded the counsel of the serpent.

QUAKER BOY.

SMASHING CROCKERY.

There is no man who seems more utterly out of place in a sinful, tricky, crooked, and perverse generation, than a man who will tell the truth without fear or favor, irrespective of friend or foe. If there is any vision which is hateful to the devil and his servants, it is the face of such a man. He is an unknown quantity in the world's reckoning. No one can tell when he will crop out. He deranges business, overthrows parties, pricks bubbles, unmasks hypocrites, upsets sinful schemes, and brings to naught the devices of evil men.

Here stands a great mysterious organization, with an agent in every circle, a spy in every community, a tool in every office, a partizan on every jury, and an organization which controls, terrorizes, and defies the helpless public who are yet outside of its toils. At length one solitary man says, "I propose to tell the truth about this hidden iniquity, and warn the people of their danger." At once hell from beneath is moved, and all its powers are invoked to hush the accusing voice. The man is threatened, assailed, kidnapped, imprisoned, spirited away, and murdered. But the truth has found a voice, and though courts are venal, and officers are perjured, and law is defied, and justice is turned away backward, and truth is fallen in the streets, yet blood cries from the ground, and a whole generation of organized lying cannot purge out the damning spot, and the solitary voice, swelled and re-echoed by a multitude of consenting witnesses, prophesies the downfall of that which was mightier than kings and rulers and governments.

The greatest statesman of his generation, the idol of his friends, and the pride of his party, stands in full view of the loftiest prize which his ambition can covet or attain. Eloquent, astute, and influential, he sees the object of his desire just within his reach. True, there is a joint in his harness, but no man dares to aim an arrow at it. There is a skeleton in his closet, but no one dares to unlock the door. A single weak woman learns the situation. She has no high worldly hopes or ambitious aspirations, but she can tell the truth. She sits down and writes out the plain, undeniable, unvarnished facts, and gives them to the world. The arrow finds the harness-joint. The god-like statesman's hopes are blasted. The men who honor him dare not make him their leader, and he stumbles and falls, and hides his disappointment in the grave.

Political parties name their standard-bearers, and cast around them the glamour of partisan enthusiasm, and men stand dazed, with bated breath, in the presence of their idols, and fear to intimate what they suspect, or declare what they know. Brilliant talents are made to do duty instead of unquestioned integrity. Partisanship covers up impiety. Orthodox political principles condone intemperance and irreligion. A reputation for honesty, and the applause of political reformers, is expected to hide the whiteness of moral leprosy, and hush the wails and curses that rise from the lips of ruined and broken-hearted women. All goes smoothly. Politicians are afraid of the glass in their own houses, and the argument, "You are another," lays its finger on their quivering lips.

Just in that crisis rings out the startling "voice of one crying in the wilderness," and telling the simple, exact, undeniable, unadulterated truth, and the whole situation changes, and the glory of God seems flaming on the scene as when it looked out on Pharaoh in the darkness that hung over the Red Sea.

The voice of the people is the voice of God, when the people tell the truth; but it is the voice of the devil when they lie! We need to hear God's voice again and again. The blind lead the blind toward the ditch. Partisanship heads for perdition. Sin sits enthroned in high places, and rules in church and state. He who tells the truth finds he is in a hard world. A thousand clamorous voices seek to drown his cry. But God calls for bold men. Nathan must say, "Thou art the man," and send the guilty monarch from royal purple to sackcloth and ashes; and John the Baptist must say to Herod, "It is not lawful," though the dungeon waits upon his utterance.

The trunk of the prophet may lie heedless in the prison, and the shameless daughter may carry her gory prize to an inhuman and revengeful mother; but loving disciples shall bear away their master's body to its burial, and One who never flatters and never deceives, shall write upon the pillared temple of the ages the epitaph of him who told the truth,—"He was a burning and a shining light; . . . Among those that are born of women, there hath not risen a greater."—The Christian (Boston).

MASONIC IMPOSITION.

The end of the Masonic system seems to be chiefly to practice imposition, first upon the candidate who allows himself to be stripped of nearly all his clothes, and more of his manhood, and hoodwinked and cabletowed—put through a foolish initiation and then made to believe he has done a big thing, and is sublimely exalted to the comprehension of mysteries hid in all ages of the world from "cowans and profanes." Secondly, the game of imposition is tried upon an unsuspecting and too often credulous public. This spirit is kept up until the average Freemason soon has more cheek than any other bipid. He will ask you to believe the most unreasonable things without evidence and deny the most patent facts of history. Such is the effect of this spirit that Masonic writers suffer themselves to make more mistakes and plainer contradictions than any other class of teachers the writer has ever read after. I can account for this upon no other principle than the supposition on the part of the Masonic authors that they have the profane public so gulled and misled that it will accept any statement from them no matter how much at variance the statement may be with plain facts of history or how contradictory to writings of some other standard Masonic author. We give the following as an illustration of the manner of imposing upon little Masons and profanes in regard to Hiram, king of Tyre, having been a Mason, proved by a square and compass being now found upon his tomb. A respected friend of ours who has traveled "the rough road from Babylon to Jerusalem" says, in a notice to send him the Banner, upon the margin of a circular announcing that the "Rev. Brother Coleman would lecture at Appleton City on a certain night upon the subject of Freemasonry in the Holy Land." On the first page of the circular is an engraving of the tomb of (Kabr Hairam) Hiram, king of Tyre, upon which is engraved "the square and compass." The impression intended to be made is that the square and compass being found by brother Coleman on the tomb when he visited the same in the year 1880, is evidence that Hiram, king of Tyre, was a Mason, in year —— before Christ.

In trying to palm off this square and compass as evidence of king Hiram's connection with the Masonic fraternity, brother Coleman either displays unpardonable ignorance or convicts brother Rob Morris of deliberate falsehood. Rob Morris is a great Masonic writer, and he, too, a dozen or more years ago, visited the Holy Land to scare up evidence of the antiquity of the Masonic order. He too, visited the tomb of worthy Grand Master Hiram, king of Tyre, and after returning wrote a book called "Freemasonry in the Holy Land." In the seventh chapter he describes his first visit to the tomb of king Hiram. He found no Masonic devices on the tomb. He made a second visit about a month later, and on page 108 says, "I cut the square and compass deeply on the monument, on the second tier, eastern end, near the northeast corner. My Arab servant, Hassan, having seen me do this at other places, labors under the impression that it is my name, and tells everybody so." Now brother Coleman's picture of the tomb has the square and compass upon it just where Morris says he cut it. Now it is not reasonable to suppose that Coleman had never read Morris' book for they both claim to be after all the light they can get on the subject from the Holy Land. In the description of the tomb by no writer prior to Morris is there the least hint at a square and compass. Morris, if not an unmitigated falsifier, cut it there himself. The plan, if there was one, seems to have been for Morris first to go and scatter evidences of Masonry in the Holy Land, for he tells us he cut the square and compass at other places, and then Coleman and other Masonic tourists could follow after and gather them up and blazon them over the world and the people would accept the imposition without questioning it. Thus another false witness would stand up and testify to the already satisfied mind of the hoodwinked Mason, and the unthinking jack-Mason that "Masonry is as old as Solomon." Hiram was a Mason. The square and compass on his tomb proves it to be so. Now by the same evidence it can be as credibly established that General Washington was an Odd-fellow. All that is needed to be done is for some Odd-fellow to go and cut the "three links" on his tomb and then another visit to Mt. Vernon to get evidences of the existence of Odd-fellowship in the old Dominion, and lo! he finds it on Washington's tomb. The above is a fair specimen of the way in which all the boasted claims of Masonry are established.

Morris also furnishes another evidence that Hiram was not a Mason, and that is that his tomb is not oriented, or as Masons understand that word, his tomb was not built east and west. But the funny part of brother Robert's statement is to be found in the fact, he had a servant so ignorant of Masonry in the land of its birth, where according to brother Coleman tombs and rocks and shells were covered with its devices that he thought the most prominent of all its symbols was Rob Morris' name.—Banner of Truth.

THE RELIGION OF MASONRY.

[Rev. J. P. Lytle, in the United Presbyterian.]

The principal reason which impels many Christians to oppose Freemasonry is its opposition to the Lord Jesus Christ. The order, it is true, does not profess opposition but simply claims neutrality. There are, however, many things in which neutrality is hostility. Neutrality between truth and error is hostility to truth. Neutrality between God and Satan is hostility against God. Professed neutrality between the religion of Christ and any other system of religion is hostility against Christ himself. "He that is not with me is against me." This dictum of the Holy Spirit can not be reasoned away.

The principle here stated holds good in any relation which men can sustain. A nation or government may be for Christ or against him. Even a railroad or telegraph company may be for or against him. But in matters of religion the principle becomes so clear as to be self-evident. Any system of religion which has not Jesus Christ for its foundation and its center is a false religion. "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." "There is one God and one Mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus." "There is none other under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved," but by the name of Jesus. "If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ let him be anathema maranatha"

Freemasonry constructively denies this fundamental principle of the Christian religion, and, in so doing, denies the whole system. Mackey's Lexicon, page 404, declares, "The religion, then, of Masonry is pure theism." Mackey's Manual, page 216, says Masons are obliged only "to that religion in which all men agree." Again, page 40, "A belief in God is the sole creed of a Mason, at least the only creed he is required to profess."

Notwithstanding this exclusion of the name, person, office, atoning blood, righteousness, Spirit and grace of the Lord Jesus Christ from the lodge, the members are assured that by being "good Masons," or by obeying Masonic requirements only, they shall be saved. Town's System, page 184, "The Divine Being views no moral character in a man with greater complacency than his who, in heart, strictly conforms to Masonic requirements." So the "good Mason," though he be a Jew, Mohammedan, or of any other false religion, is the holiest man on earth. Mackey's Manual, page 203: "We may be received into thine everlasting kingdom, and there enjoy the just reward of a pious and virtuous life." Christians expect to enjoy heaven as the reward of Christ's obedience, sufferings and death, and by being fitted by the Holy Spirit for that place. Masons are taught that heaven is no more than a "just reward" for obeying "Masonic requirements." Ahiman Rezon, page 63: "White" (the white apron spread over the stomach of a Mason) "is the emblem of that purity of life and rectitude of conduct by which alone we may expect to gain admission into the Holy of Holies above."

It is often said by the ignorant that Freemasonry does not claim to be a religious but only a benevolent society. Why, then, its altars, priests, prayers, hymns, benedictions, moral lessons, illuminations, regenerations, and eternal rewards? Masonic authors are probably competent witnesses on this point. Webb's Lexicon, page 357: "The meeting of a Masonic lodge is strictly a religious ceremony." Mackey's Manual, page 41: "Masonry is a religious institution." Town's System, page 170: "In advancing to the fourth degree the Mason is assured of his election and final salvation. Hence opens the fifth degree, where he discovers his election to, and his glorified station in, the kingdom of his Father."

It makes but little difference how much of this nonsense and impiety Masons really believe. In judging of the order it is sufficient to know that this is what it teaches, and what the members profess to believe. With "the deceitfulness of sin," and "the deceivableness of unrighteousness," and "the wiles of the devil" (we beg pardon of the more sensitive brethren of the order), combined against the salvation of the soul, it is not safe to "make believe" in regard to a false system of religion, or to trifle with eternal truths.

There is no Saviour of men but the Lord Jesus Christ. There is no heaven but that which he has gone to prepare. There are none admitted into glory but those who have "washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." There is no eternal bliss but in drinking from the "pure river of the water of life, clear as crystal, which proceedeth from the throne of God and of the Lamb."

REFORM NEWS.

MEETINGS AT NORMAL, ILL.

It is expected there will be a three days' meeting at Normal, Ill., Sept. 23, 24 and 25. J. P. Stoddard, J. F. Browne and others, will attend and speak. Meeting will begin Tuesday evening with an address by Bro. Stoddard.

The object of these meetings is to further the interests of the reform against secret societies, and to forward the organization of the McLean Co. Christian Association opposed to secret orders. J. F. BROWNE.

THE IOWA STATE MEETING.

On the evening of August 26th, the Anti-secret Association of the State of Iowa met in Music Hall, Washington, in its twelfth annual session. In the absence of the president and vice-president the secretary called to order. Prayer was offered by the Rev. J. W. Dill. Rev. C. D. Trumbull was elected president pro tem. The convention was welcomed by Dr. Maughlin in a warm and eloquent address, which was responded to in behalf of the Association by the chairman. Rev. J. P. Stoddard of Chicago was then introduced and delivered an excellent address, setting forth in stirring words some of the obnoxious and evil principles of Freemasonry.

Morning session of the 27th opened with Scripture reading by Rev. C. D. Trumbull, followed by Dr. J. Blanchard in prayer. The usual business, consisting of the plans and work of the Association, received its proper attention. Dr. J. Blanchard, present to give gist and turn to the convention, fully accomplished his duty in this line, adding greatly to the interest and cheer of the sessions. His speech at this time upon the political situation was as full of pith and point as the Doctor is of polities: which is an unusual degree, even for a Presidential campaign. If some of the young men in the reform could only catch the Dr.'s enthusiasm, things would certainly take a decided move in the right direction.

Afternoon session:—An address of Rev. Mrs. A. A. Rathbun, of goodly merit, was given to a full house. Appeals from women upon the moral issues are well in order at this day. The address gave rise to the question of a Women's Christian Union opposed to the lodge. Let the mothers and daughters of Iowa give thought to this idea, and be as wise for the overthrow of the lodge, as for its allied power—rum.

At this, as well as at other sessions of the convention, the G. A. R. was discussed, its nature and claims considered, and after "due examination" was declared "kith and kin" of Freemasonry, as set forth in the following resolutions:

WHEREAS, There have been for some time past zealous efforts to extend the secret association self-styled the Grand Army of the Republic, and

WHEREAS, The ritual of the G. A. R. "adopted in general convention at Philadelphia, Jan. 17th, 1868," has been revealed and published and its correctness vouched for by seceding members of the order, and

WHEREAS, We have reasons to believe there has been no material change in the nature since that time, therefore

Resolved, That we feel called upon to lift up the voice of testimony against the G. A. R.

1. We hold that its obligations of secrecy are condemned by the words and by the example of our Saviour and are sinful.
2. We hold that its obligation to implicit obedience is ensnaring and destructive of true liberty.
3. We hold that its threatened penalty is unlawful and should be put under the ban of government.
4. We hold that notwithstanding its boasted patriotism it is dangerous to the cause of civil liberty and at war with the genius of republican government.
5. We hold that it is dangerous to the moral and religious interests of all members who are Christians, since they are unequally yoked together with unbelievers.

Second day, A. M.:—S. E. Starry reported his labors in the State during the year. A discussion followed upon the state of the work, which resulted in the appointing of an agent in each county, who shall have the interests of the reform specially in care, and whose duty shall be to see that the question is properly agitated and kept before the people. The following appointments were made, the parties named requested to accept the position and report their labors to the convention of next year:

Jefferson county, Wm. Elliott; Van Buren county, Rev. Geo. Warrington; Cedar county, John Dorcas; Page county, A. W. Hall; Louisa county, S. Y. Orr; Des Moines county, Rev. J. W. Dill; Lee county, Rev. D. E. Shaw; Washington county, Rev. J. H. Elliott; Henry county, Joseph Frazier; Monroe county, Rev. Atchison: Linn county, Rev. T. D. Adams; Polk county, Rev. A. W. Livingston; Fayette county, Rev. H. Hull; Ringgold county, Rev. S. Smith; Guthrie county, Rev. E. I. Grinnell; Carrol county, A. J. Loudenback; Iowa county, Rev. L. J. Harrington; Buchanan county, Rev. T. F. Blair; Benton county, O. Davis; Madison county, Dr. McCaughn.

Further appointments were left to the executive committee. The following resolutions were presented by the committee on resolutions, and were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, The legislature of Iowa has enacted a law prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicants, which law is now in effect, and

WHEREAS, There is violent opposition in some quarters to the execution of the law, therefore

Resolved, That we give our hearty endorsement to the prohibitory law of the State, and pledge it our hearty co-operation and support to its enforcement.

WHEREAS, It is a well known fact that Sabbath desecration is increasing in many departments of government, and,

WHEREAS, The late Congress has furnished us a sad illustration of the fact, in that many hours of the last Sabbath during their sessions were spent in the transaction of public business, thus giving sanction to the secularization of the Lord's day, and,

WHEREAS, Secret societies, Freemasons, G. A. R., and others, violate the Sabbath by traveling in their organized capacity, by the railroad, on that day, therefore,

Resolved, That we feel called upon to testify against Sabbath desecration in high places, and beseech all in official stations to honor the God of the Sabbath by the sanctification of that holy day.

Resolved, That we condemn all violations of the Sabbath, especially such as made by organized bodies, and we utter our solemn testimony against this sin.

The following resolution will explain itself:

WHEREAS, Rev. F. W. Evans of Oskaloosa, Iowa, has, in answer to inquiry, expressed his readiness to meet Pres. C. A. Blanchard in debate on the subject of secrecy, on condition that the friends of seerecy in any place think a debate will do any good, and are willing to pay him for his time and work, therefore,

Resolved, That we challenge the friends of secret societies in Washington to meet our representatives in this place and make arrangements for a debate.

Afternoon session:—Dr. Blanchard delivered an interesting address—subject, "Is God the author of civil government?" followed by Rev. M. A. Gault—"The Bible the foundation of law." These addresses were highly commendable, and were received with evident appreciation by the large number present to hear them.

I should have mentioned that on the evening of the 27th, Mrs. C. A. Dunham, of Burlington, addressed the convention upon the subject of Prohibition. The address was well received and needs no commendation. God bless these faithful women! We were more than gratified to have from the lips of this woman, a representative of the W. C. T. U. in Iowa, some sensible and stirring remarks against lodgism. I am sure if the women of the W. C. T. U. could only have the relations of the lodge and rum set before them, they would oppose the lodge to a "man." Nearer and nearer come the two reforms together. Frances Willard, the orator, has spoken. Mrs. Ellen J. Foster is of Anti-masonic heritage. Oh, that God would give them a double mission!

On the evening of the 28th, after a short address by Rev. D. P. Rathbun, the third degree of Masonry was given by S. E. Starry.

Brethren Blanchard and Stoddard added much to the interest of the convention by their words of counsel and personal enthusiasm. On the whole the meeting was excellent. The people of Washington afforded the convention the most generous entertainment at their homes, and the largest audiences that we have ever been favored with. We trust we did them no harm and hope to have done some good. Some things we would have had otherwise. The Lord reward them for their kindness.

The following are the officers for the present year: President, Rev. Geo. Warrington, Birmingham; Vice-President, Rev. T. P. Robb, Linton; Cor. Sec'y, Dr. T. C. Maughlin, Washington; Rec. Sec'y, Rev. A. W. Hall, College Springs; Treasurer, J. A. Laird, Wayne, Henry county. Rev. D. P. Rathbun was recommended as State lecturer. We have resolved, now let us do.

A. W. HALL, Sec'y.

THE ILLINOIS STATE ASSOCIATION.

ANNUAL CONVENTION REPORT.

The Illinois State Christian Association, having arranged for its annual convention through their Executive Committee, gathered in the First United Presbyterian church. The president and vice-presidents of the Association being absent, the secretary called on Rev. John Stahl, of Augusta, to open the meeting with devotional exercises. Business being taken up, Rev. Mr. Stahl was elected temporary president, and H. L. Kellogg temporary secretary.

The report of the treasurer was read and adopted; also the report of the Executive Committee was read by W. I. Phillips, and adopted after remarks of warm approval by several members of the convention.

The report of the Executive Committee reviewed the colporteur work of J. K. Hunter in Randolph county and vicinity and reported an engagement with S. Y. Miller of Contreras, O., to enter the field as agent in November.

Rev. Wm. H. Chandler, of Dover, was elected president of the Association. The vice-presidents were re-elected with the addition of Mr. Samuel E. Holyoke, of Galesburg. The secretary and treasurer were re-elected. Rev. T. B. Arnold, A. G. Laird, Mrs. E. A. Cook, Mrs. L. N. Stratton, Mrs. N. R. Weed, Rev. Wm. Moerdyk, Rev. D. S. Faris, Rev. W. H. Chandler, W. I. Phillips, Elder Joseph Stuckey, and P. P. Chapman, were elected Executive Commitee; and the following provision made for their meetings:

Resolved, That to constitute a legal meeting of the Executive Committee of the Illinois Christian Association, due notice must be given of time and place to each member of said committee by the secretary, after the chairman has authorized the meeting.

Resolved, That not less than three members shall constitute a quorum.

A committee on resolutions, H. L. Kellogg, S. Y. Miller and C. W. Sherman, were appointed, which reported after the address of Elder Browne.

The business of the hour being a lecture by Elder J. F. Browne, he was introduced and spoke very effectively on the religious philosophy of Freemasonry for an hour, using blackboard drawings to illustrate and impress the truth respecting the order.

The report of the committee on resolutions was adopted as follows:

Resolved, 1. That we renew the action of last annual meeting recommending public prayer in congregations and special prayer-meetings in churches and neighborhoods for the downfall of the secret lodges and the blessing of God upon the lecturers and other workers in this reform.

2. And, also, that the instruction of last year to the Executive Committee to memorialize the different ecclesiastical bodies be also renewed, with the additional recommendation that special attention be given to the distribution of tracts in our county fairs.

3. WHEREAS, It is believed by many now living who are more or less acquainted with the circumstances that David Brownlee was murdered by Freemasons in this vicinity some fifty years ago; and

WHEREAS, It is understood that the report of the coronor's jury is missing from the records of Warren county;

Resolved, That Samuel E. Holyoke, N. R. Weed, and Hamilton Brownlee be a committee representing this State Association to inquire concerning the abstraction of this coroner's report from the records, and learn, if true, by whom, when, and for what reason the records were mutilated: and that this committee report through the public press.

4. Resolved, That we fully endorse the policy of the Christian Cynosure, and regard it as an able and vigorous exponent of our principles, a safe and pure paper for the family, a clear, critical and uncompromising herald of truth and reform. We realize that this paper has a mission and fills a sphere peculiarly its own. It has by its wise and fearless advocacy of unpopular truth won our confidence and shall have our hearty and united support.

5. Resolved, That the sincere thanks of the Association are due and are hereby given to the friends of our reform in Monmouth for their kindness and hospitable entertainment during our stay in their midst.

We also desire to express our obligation and thanks to the First United Presbyterian church for the use of their house of worship for our meeting.

Remarks were made on the third resolution by Secretary J. P. Stoddard recounting his visit to the Warren county court house and failure to find the record of the coroner's inquest in the case of David Brownlee. He spoke also of the loss of the records of the Morgan inquest, which were borrowed by a pretended county historian to copy. Neither historian, history or records were ever heard of. Pres. C. A. Blanchard and Rev. C. W. Sherman, editor of the Vanguard, most ably seconded the resolution on the Cynosure; and, after the resolutions of thanks by rising vote, pledges were taken for trial subscriptions for the Cynosure, and 103 were promised or paid for.

The records of the meeting were referred to the Executive Committee for revision and approval, and the convention adjourned after prayer by Pres. C. A. Blanchard to meet at the call of the Executive Committee.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable;

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights, while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion, or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties, as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it. Yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy; and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living, and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country; "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

THE MONMOUTH POLITICAL CONVENTION.

The State Convention of the American party, called by the chairman of the State committee, met in the commodious Opera House at Monmouth on Thursday evening, September 11th, and organized by the election of temporary officers, afterwards made permanent: Rev. J. P. Richards, president; H. L. Kellogg, secretary. Prayer was offered by Elder D. P. Rathbun of Iowa, and J. P. Stoddard of the National committee in a few opening remarks upon the business of the meeting, announced a necessary change in the programme of the evening owing to the absence of the two leading speakers. Prof. L. N. Stratton was detained on account of the illness of his family, and Dr. Haney had been for some days absent in Kansas and had not yet returned. In the absence of these gentlemen the audience was profitably entertained by several speakers. Rev. George Warrington of Birmingham, Iowa, spoke of the prohibition movement in that State and the well-grounded fears of many who saw an evident insincerity in the prohibition work when it came in collision with secret societies.

Rev. R. T. Wylie, lately associated with Rev. M. A. Gault in the work of the National Reform Association in Iowa, spoke upon the fundamental principles underlying all reform work and especially the effort to put prohibition upon a legal basis. He was followed by Elder J. F. Browne of Berea, Kentucky, whose late work in central Illinois will be long remembered. The aspect of the prohibitory movement in Kentucky was interesting because in that State the Democratic party are the prohibitionists as the Republicans are in Iowa. Elder Rathbun spoke briefly, complimenting the Republican party for the work already done in Iowa.

Friday morning a devotional meeting profitable to every one present was held, and business opened with the appointment of committees:

Resolutions: J. Blanchard, S. Y. Miller, Samuel E. Holyoke.

Candidates for State Ticket: C. A. Blanchard, W. I. Phillips, Jerome Howe.

Finance: Hugh Nash, A. C. Higgins, J. P. Stoddard.

Enrollment: H. L Kellogg.

During a brief consultation of committees, the question of the change of Presidential candidates was eagerly discussed. The committee on State ticket reported in favor of the following:

For Governor, James B. Hobbs, of Cook county.
Lieut.-Governor, James Perryman, St. Clair county.
Sec'y of State, C. W. Enos, St. Clair county.
Treasurer, Peter Howe, La Salle county.
Attorney-General, Hale Johnson, Jasper Co.
Auditor, A. B. Irwin, Sangamon county.

These names were recommended provided they were not members of any secret society. The State executive committee was authorized to fill any vacancy that may occur. The State Committee was thus elected: L. N. Stratton, W. I. Phillips, A. J. Laird, Jerome Howe, Alexander Thomson.

After the State Christian Association meeting in the afternoon, the convention heard and adopted with slight amendment, the report of the committee on resolutions as follows:

Resolved, 1. In the clear words of the son of Lincoln's Secretary, Seward, in the parlor of Tburlow Weed, the Warwick of American politics, that "A secret political society is hostile to every American principle."

2. That where the masses vote, all secret societies are political.

3. That for secret temperance and mock-military lodges, to say they are not political, while following political party nominees, in increasing crowds, and shouting louder as the election draws nigh, is to add political hypocrisy to political falsehood, and damage the morals of the American people.

4. That we accept the advice of our excellent retiring candidates, Messrs. Pomeroy and Conant, and endorse the action of our National Committe nominating ex-Governor St. John and Hon. William Daniel for the suffrages of the American party and the American people, and pledge them our ardent support.

5. That we support St. John and Daniel not only as Prohibitionists, but as Americans who have shown by their lives their condemnation of the anti-American Masonic lodge.

6. That we call on all temperance people to support the holy cause of prohibition by leaving the two old parties, one of which condemns prohibition as "sumptuary;" and the other asks temperance men and liquor men to vote together to give them a new lease of power, thus carrying water on one shoulder and whisky on the other.

7. That the Republican convention, Chicago, June 3d, gave whisky a stronger support by its silence than the Democrats did by their words: and by nominating Mr. Blaine, who proposes to make liquor-revenue "a permanent resource of the States," the Republican party has forfeited the respect of temperance people, and must surely lose their support.

8. That Mormonism is Masonry legalized by the Grand Lodge of Illinois; and though that authority was withdrawn because the Mormons were the keener rogues, no lodge-ridden parties will ever suppress Mormonism.

9. That we are Americans, standing on our American platform, and expect to see it adopted by the American people in the near future; that we hail and welcome the friendship of the great and good Prohibition party and fervently wish them a safe deliverance from the leprosy of the lodge.

10 That we devoutly recognize the God of the Bible as our God; his Son Jesus Christ as our Saviour and Model; and we firmly believe and trust in his word that every political and religious plant which the Father hath not planted, "shall be rooted up."

It was voted also to approve and endorse the American of Washington city as an organ of the American party. In behalf of the Tenth Illinois Congressional District, Royal Hammond of Galesburg was nominated as Representative to Congress. Nominations for the other districts were referred to the State committee. Other questions which might arise were referred to the same committee.

The evening addresses drew out a fair audience, many of them college students, who frequently applauded, though their sympathies were clearly not altogether against the old parties. The first address by the editor of the Cynosure was upon "American Politics in 1884 and the Politics taught by Christ contrasted." Pres. C. A. Blanchard of Wheaton followed in an able review of the old parties and in favor of leaving them for a new party which stands for great moral principles and the protection of American homes.

"STICK TO THE PEOPLE, DICK."

BLOOMINGTON, Ill., Sept. 6, 1884.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The above sentence appeared on a banner at a late Republican demonstration. It claimed to be the language of Abraham Lincoln, addressed to Richard J. Oglesby, now Republican candidate for Governor. This was supposed to be the most sublime wisdom by the party carrying the banner, and certainly its illustrious authorage entitles it to consideration. To me it was more the language of the politician than the statesman, more of the demagogue than patriot. The barnacle on the side of the ship practices it, and the more barnacles the more rotten the ship. The parasite on the tree and the leach or vampire on the body believe in and follow the same motto. Stay with the majority in the pursuit of office; "hollo with the hounds," is advice which the modern politician will not be slow to follow. To predict which way the popular wind will blow, and trim sails to catch the breeze for present advantage, is the grand study of modern political science. Very seldom do we hear from the rostrum, "Stick to the right, Dick." They do not ask what is right, or what will God approve? They do not teach, "Thou shalt not go with the multitude to do evil," or "Sin is a reproach to any people." But instead, "Stick to the majority, Dick," and thou shalt obtain office. We need not add that Dick will be faithful to the admonition. He is too busy sticking to the majority to think of morals. To him what the majority says, is right, forgetting that the mob is the most fierce and unreasonable of tyrants.

But it is refreshing, on turning to the American platform, to find a party asking for that which is right in the sight of God, even in politics. We rejoice when we remember that the hearts of the people are in the hands of God. That he moulds the popular mind, and it is the highest kind of political sail-trimming to trim for the righteous breeze of God, knowing that in God's own time the people will be with us, and the barnacles which now surround and devour the ship of state, will all be scraped away by God's and the people's righteous indignation. For that time we can well afford to wait. "He that believeth shall not make haste." Isa. 28: 16.

H. D. WHITCOMB.

THE ISSUE.

Why do the heathen rage and the people imagine a vain thing?—2d Psalm.

The great issue before the American people in this Presidential campaign is: Which shall rule this nation, the Word of God or the word of the devil? I can say for one that I entirely approve the American as the best platform before the people; but even it is not as radical as I could wish. God will never give us the victory until we come to his terms. What are his terms? We answer, Whenever a majority of the American people will publicly acknowledge Jesus Christ as their King, and make his Word (the Holy Bible) their only law; then Jesus will indeed reign over us as a nation.

Perhaps one will ask, Does he not reign now? He does, for "he is the governor among the nations (Ps. 22: 28); but he rules to our destruction. He gives us up into the hands of our enemies because we will not constitutionally and legally acknowledge him as our ruler, and because we vote for his adversary. We act as though our motto was, "Let us do evil that good may come."

Jesus Christ as our king, and the Bible as our law, is the platform I have voted for the past fourteen years, and still expect to vote.

I cannot attend the State Convention at Avalon, Mo., but I suggest the name of Geo. W. Needles as our candidate for Governor of Missouri. I hope we will have a county ticket in Mercer county.

I expect to vote for the men and the measures that come the nearest up to my principles, as stated above, and I am willing to serve the American party in any capacity that my ability will permit. GEO. W. STEWART.

A GOOD ENDORSEMENT WITNESSED.

We have always admired the faithful few who protest against the omission, in the Constitution of the United States, of any recognition of our dependence upon God, or even any recognition of the existence of the Supreme Being. This great lack was doubtless owing to the general infidelity which from France had spread over the world in the writings of Voltaire and many other men of genius, or rather to the false representations of Christianity given by the Church of Rome, and the "established" churches of Protestant countries. The party to which we refer includes in its high aims the prohibition of the liquor traffic and condemnation of secret societies. These three objects should be in the platform of any Christian party, and would be if the promotion of public good were the sole or chief object. This party, which had put forth its usual platform and nominated its ticket early in the summer, has now merged itself in the Prohibition party so far as the Presidential candidate is concerned, a measure which will, it is supposed, give 40,000 additional votes to St. John.—New York Weekly Witness.

"Wise men change often: fools never." But the American party cannot claim under this old maxim. Like its prototype in the natural heavens, unswerved, undeviating, it is no more changed by its candidates than the North Star by the captains who steer by its light.

The Hon. Julius H. Seelye is preparing an article on "Moral Character in Politics," to appear in the next issue of the North American Review.

A FRAGRANT FLOWER FROM THE FIELD OF MASONIC LITERATURE.

COLLEGE SPRINGS, Iowa.

EDITORS CYNOSURE:—Among the accumulation of old papers, I have just taken up one unopened, which proves to be the "Masonic Chronicle," published in Columbus, Ohio. In connection with another Anti, I was a reader of that paper for a year, and furnished you some strictures on some things found therein. This unopened paper was dated May, 1883. It came in my absence, and was therefore, until now, unread. In it I found what I recognized as a dish served up for my special benefit. It was evidently an attempted reply to an article from my pen, which was published in the Cynosure some time before. It is somewhat old it is true, but as Masonry boasts of its honesty and urbanity, and denounces the disposition of Anti-masons to vilify and misrepresent, I wish to give a specimen of urbanity and honesty from this journal which prides in its culture.

Editorially it says: "Our talented contributor, Frank W. Baxter, has raised Cain in the camp of the Nat. Christ Ass.(es), stirred up the monkey, so to speak, and one of their big(oted) bugs undertakes to answer in a recent issue of the Cynosure."

Let the reader mark the courteous language employed, and the commotion that Frank Baxter is represented as making in our camp. Then the Association are supposed by the astute editor to have chosen one of their ablest men to demolish Frank, the talented contributor to the Masonic Chronicle. Methinks I see the smile that goes through the camp now.

An humble pastor in a distant western village has been reading a Masonic journal to learn Masonry from Masons, publishes a little review of something he has read; and this is the basis of a representation that Frank Baxter has raised Cain in the camp of the Anti-masons, and they have chosen one of their "big(oted) bugs" to answer him.

Now, brethren, let us indulge in a good-natured Anti-masonic smile.

But S. C. Chorlton, M.D., editor of the Masonic Chronicle, continues:

"This individual who prefixes his name with "Rev.," seems to have a grievance against our brother because he claims that Masonry is not an unchristian organization, and that while it does not require of its votaries a belief in the widely distinct doctrines, promulgated by the numberless sects professing Christianity, its precepts and examples are all in keeping with the teachings of "Him who went about doing good."

And here again look at Masonic honesty. Who ever objected to Masonry because it did not require of its votaries a belief in the widely distinct doctrines of the numberless sects, etc.? Who ever objected to Masonry because it did not enforce the peculiar tenets of the Presbyterian, or Methodist, or Baptist faith? We object to it because it rejects the fundamental doctrine of Christianity—the fundamental article in the faith of the Christian world. Masons are simply trying to hide in a fog-bank when they attempt to represent us as opposing them, because they do not require faith in "the widely distinct doctrines of the sects."

Toward the close of the article this cultured and courteous editor waxes funny over the "big(oted) bug" who was chosen to write for the Cynosure, and Rathbun, who was "clubbed for his cussedness;" presents them as a fair sample of Anti-masonic Christians, and closes with an awful pun, that no doubt convulsed the Masonic camp with laughter.

Let the editors of the Cynosure hold their sides. Here it is: "Well, they can sigh-now-sure if they have no better champions than the rowdy Rathbun and his Rev. associate."

Now, let us all take a good Anti-masonic laugh.

Is the Cynosure not now convinced that Masons are the very essence of sweetness and courtesy, and Anti-masons the incarnation of "malignant hate?"

It is true that in the same number of the Chronicle the sweet Frank Baxter speaks of Dr. Blanchard as one who "may have worn the livery of an expounder of the Word of God, but has yet to learn the first lessons of Christianity." "True Christianity is to him a sealed book; yet he is but a sample of their whole fanatical crew."

Still, Masons claim to be a sweet, bland and affable class of people, and it is too bad that Dr. Blanchard, as in the language of sweet Frank Baxter, the "Rev. Jonathan who carries off the prize for pure cheek." "The 'grand mogul' who will get the largest slice when the distribution of plunder comes"—we say it is too bad that this Dr. Blanchard should oppose them. It is too bad that Rathbun, wrapped up in all his unregenerated "cussedness," should attempt to expose them. It is too bad that any "Rev. big(oted) bugs," or any of the "deluded tadpoles and lizards" in the "mud pond of deceit" should wriggle a sign of opposition. It is too bad that "valiant mouth pieces" of the Anti-masonic ranks should "disgrace their high calling" and "open their batteries of malignant hate in the house of God, while preaching his word."

Well, I set out to present a fragrant flower from the field of Masonic literature. Instead, I find I have gathered a whole "bouquet," and could enlarge it still more and more from the same field. If you place this bouquet in the "sigh-now-sure" vase, perhaps I can furnish another by the time its fragrance is gone. The quotations are all from the field of Masonic literature.

WM. JOHNSTON.

OUR LECTURERS.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have been a reader of your paper for some years and there are some old names which I liked always to see, but which have disappeared—some gone to their reward no doubt, and others still on the battlefield. I would be glad to know of such men as Feemster, Barlow and Freeman and others. I see that you have letters from new men, good and true also, worthy to fight under the banner with such men as Hinman, the tried and faithful and judicious and able agent from your earliest days. This well-posted lecturer is in some respects second to no one in the field. His courte ous, able letters and lectures make converts when an equally earnest but less skillful man would but excite hostility or fail altogether. The National Christian Association has been fortunate in having such an agent, and I for one would gladly welcome scores of men like him and others known to you. Hurrah for such lecturers and agents. Let us hear often of them. I cannot doubt that they would do immense good in these days of public meetings by watching opportunities to express to men and to meetings, Our Views of Lodgery, in the country, for men have ears just now which shall be closed by and by against lodgery as a public question.

Truly yours, PRO LECTURERS.

SEEK THE LIGHT.

CLEARFIELD, Iowa.

We boast of the liberty won by our fore-fathers, but without free thought, free speech and free investigation, there is no liberty; Christianity courts investigation, and any institution that shuns investigation is unlike Christianity, and is the opposite. The righteous principles of Christianity seek the light of truth on all questions and is the spring from which all right actions flow, in thought, speech, life, liberty. Secrecy is just the opposite, it shuns investigation, seeks the dark, and has suppressed free speech in many instances, and has deprived men of life, and would destroy all our liberty, rob Christ of his throne, and exalts man to most worshipful master, whether an infidel, Jew, or Mohammedan, saloon keeper or libertine, gambler or political trickster; it dishonors a nation, and is unlike that "righteousness" that "exalteth a nation." It is plain to be seen that the right principles that distinguish us as a Christian and not a heathen nation are being trodden under-foot by persons actuated by the principles of these dark secret orders. Christianity never hisses down even her worst enemies. She is willing to talk friendly, listen calmly; she is ready, able and willing to prove all things; she is willing to hold fast that which is good: is she not as fair as right can be? When did any one actuated by her principles ever disturb free speech? When a Christian man, such as C. A. Blanchard, was exercising the right of free speech, who disturbed him? Was it men actuated by the principles of Christianity or Freemasonry?

Good men's minds are being so warped that they seem to act as if they thought that every one is free to say anything they please about Christianity and everything else except the principles of Freemasonry; it is so much better than Christianity that to tell its principles is an unpardonable sin, and, to defend itself, drowned Wm. Morgan, defied the law, gives the sign of distress to judge and jury, defied the police in Boston, and uses fraud, deception and bad eggs instead of reason and common sense. Any institution that cannot defend itself with truth has no right to exist. God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, never planted the lodge and the church too, and whichever he did not plant "shall be rooted up." Christians, Americans, let us say by our votes which it shall be. The two cannot live together; Christianity will kill the lodge, or the lodge will kill Christianity. In this land of liberty Freemasons shrink from being controlled by the murderous principles of Freemasonry. It is only really bad men who think it is right to murder, to mob, and to suppress free speech. There are good men in the lodge not actuated by her principles, and there are bad men out of the lodge who are moved and actuated by the principles of Freemasonry. The lodge will find it hard work to make nihilists out of Americans. She has more success in Russia. CYRUS SMITH.

PITH AND POINT.

"SO MOTE IT BE."

Who is more likely to need help in his dire and labyrinthian way from "refreshment" to the home of his wife and children, than this widow's son? And what a comfort to these lodge saints to have sworn brethren to "ever conceal and never reveal" "their crooked ways" in the lodge and in the church. Cowans might not cover the faults of a good brother. Surely a child cannot fail to see the utility of these great and charitable orders.

Dropping all irony, let us candidly inquire what is there in the lodge that so debauches humanity, and how is it that bad men, besides being profane in their lodge usages, and to all intents and purposes guilty of false worship, men who are also grossly immoral in other ways, are upheld by churches and by associations of professing Christians? Masonry is doing this thing. The church, through fear of giving offense to the lodge minions, dare not discipline her members, however bad, while these same men are almost deified in the lodges. OBSERVER.

TWENTY-FOUR MILLION MASONS.

It was recently stated in a neighboring paper that the present numerical strength of Freemasonry was placed at 138,065 lodges and 24,160,543 members, an evident exaggeration, as the number has been given at 3,000,000 within the last ten years. Again, suppose we concede to the three other principal Masonic countries, France, Germany and Great Britain, a membership equal to the United States, or six hundred thousand in round numbers, the four would only amount to two and a half millions, which other sources could not increase by one half. The statement must be a gross exaggeration. How is it?

GOT INTO BETTER WORK.

Please send these [books and pamphlets] at your earliest possible convenience, as I anticipate taking a few days, as soon as the above arrive, canvassing for the Cynosure, and want to scatter copies of "Freemasonry at a Glance" where I think they will accomplish good. I have been a Master Mason, Encampment Odd fellow and Good Templar, but renounced them all when I found that they conflicted with the Bible. I now desire to assist in removing the spiritual blindness from the hoodwinked Masons, and showing them the true light of the world.—E. I. WICKERSHAM.

TEMPERANCE LESSON.

LIQUOR AND POLITICAL ECONOMY.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Much food is in the tillage of the poor; but there is that is destroyed for want of judgment. Pr. 13: 23.

Ques. With what has the drink subject a close connection?

Ans. With a science that we call political economy?

Q. What is political economy?

A. It is that science which treats of the laws that govern national prosperity, just as physiology treats of the laws that govern bodily health.

Q. What is one of these laws?

A. That a bad state of trade, or what we call "hard times," always follows when bread is scarce or dear.

Q. How does liquor make bread dearer?

A. By destroying forty million bushels of grain annually in the U. S. What is left rises in value as certainly as if a portion of the crops had been cut off by drouth or any other natural cause.

Q. How does this make hard times?

A. When people have to pay a high price for necessities they have less money to pay for comforts and luxuries, and nearly all kinds of trade suffer in consequence.

Q. What is another of these laws?

A. That the wealth of a nation depends on the prosperity of its working classes.

Q. How does drink make them less prosperous?

A. It employs about half a million brewers, saloonists and distillers in this country alone, who consume but do not, in the legitimate sense of the word, produce.

Q. Mention another way.

A. We are said to have six hundred thousand drunkards who do not work at all, and a million and a half of tipplers who work but a portion of their time. As this vast army of non-producers give back little or no equivalent for their keeping, it is really so much food taken out of the mouth of honest labor.

Q. Mention another way.

A. They have to pay higher taxes because of the crime and pauperism that drinking makes. And it is another law of political economy that heavy taxation of the laboring classes always causes national poverty. Taxation in Turkey and Egypt to support tyrannous officials in luxury is no worse than taxation in America to support saloonists.

Q. Is there any other way?

A. Great Britain gathers in about half a million dollars tax a day from drink, and out of this revenue she supports her standing army and navy. But if this source of revenue were cut off, she as well as other nations might begin to think that it was not worth the while to keep millions of able-bodied men eating the bread of idleness; and this would be a great step towards universal peace. War is only next to drink in the waste it makes of the poor man's substance.

Q. Then how is our Golden Text true?

MARRIED.

We are in receipt of an invitation from Mr. Pliny F. Axtell to the marriage of their daughter, OPHELIA A., to Mr. LEWIS L. DYCHE, at Sterling, Kansas, Sept. 4th, 1884. Miss Axtell, with her sister, Celestia, were graduated from Wheaton College last June. They came all the way from Kansas; owing to their own and the religious attachment of their friends to the Christian religion untarnished by the leprosy of the lodge; and hundreds who made their acquaintance will wish the wedded pair joy on reading this notice. They are two young ladies of rare excellence, clear-minded, capable, loving sisters, like the two in Shakespeare who,

"——— Like Juno's swans, Still went coupled and inseparable," and we know no way for Celestia to make up for the loss of her mate, but to follow her example; an event which their friends in Roseville hint to us, is likely soon to occur.

We dislike to attach a sombre moral to this joyous notice. But the esteemed relatives of these young ladies, Mr. Linus Axtell and wife, devoted friends of missions, are sending the daughter of one of their good missionaries to a college which is a head quarters and fountain-head of college secret orders! Even Monmouth was invaded by two of these girl-chapters a while ago; which teach that it is awful funny and nice to swear young girls to secrecy from their own mothers! while there are side doors in their institutions open to young men. The Monmouth College senate last year bravely attempted to clear out these pests, and God's children should sustain them.

MR. EDWARD NICHOLS, a nephew of Mrs. Pres. J. Blanchard, married MISS JESSIE M. BROOKS, of Dunkirk, N. Y., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Horatio G. Brooks, a prominent family in that city. Mr. Nichols has iron works in Hermitage, Georgia; and is a young gentleman of superior parts. Their advent into the mountain region of the State will, we hope, prove a blessing to their employees and society in general.

NEW AFRICA.

German explorers claim to have discovered an advanced and fairly civilized race in Central South Africa. They unveil to us the existence of a Utopia where strangers are graciously supplied with food, and they reveal that the Bassonge, subjects of King Katshitsk, a strong and handsome race in a densely populated country teeming with natural produce, excel in artistic manufacture of workmanship of various kinds in wood, clay, copper and iron, weaving stuffs out of the Mabele plant, and showing skill in basket making. Wissmann declares that no foreign influence has ever touched them. The Utopia has received the honorary epithet of Lubuku; that is, "Friendship," but its real name is Casselange; its inhabitants are called Tusselange, and their principal chief, Makenge, resides not far from the confluence of the Lulua and the Kassai. Pogge tells us that the inhabitants of one village, or sometimes of several villages, can be looked upon as a family, for each inhabitant is treated by the rest as a relation, and one member of the community stands by another "for better and for worse." The king's hospitality went so far that he accompanied his guests to a distance about as great as from Berlin to Dantzic—not having received any present except a brass chain, supplemented by the promise of a musical box in case Dr. Pogge should reach the Lualaba, and return thence in safety. After describing the details of Dr. Pogge's difficult journey up some of the great rivers of the interior, the account continues: "Thus, after sixty-two days' journey from Kimbundu, Dr. Pogge arrived alone, on October 30th, 1881, at Makenge's place of residence, situated under six degrees and ten minutes S. L., rather more than twenty-two degrees east of Greenwich. He describes the Tusselange as capital farmers. Everywhere around he saw broad fields of fine mondioca, maize, millet, earth-nuts, or beans. Tobacco and hemp are both grown for smoking. Their country is a fertile and well irrigated undulating plain between the rivers Kassai and Lulua, covered in a large measure by large forests, in the midst of which are prairies, which the inhabitants cultivate, and where they build their villages. The climate, though warm, is salubrious. In the first days of December, Dr. Pogge and Lieutenant Wissmann met again, and about the middle of the month they reached the Lake Mukamba. On January 5th, 1882, they reached the Lubi, a fine tributary of the Lubilash, in the midst of a splendid tropical vegetation they saw villages arise, 'where in clean and roomy dwellings, with gardens neatly hedged in, forming streets as straight as an arrow, the Bassonage live under the shadow of palm trees and bananas."—Selected.

A Wonderful Woman,
A Wonderful Life,
AND
A Wonderful Book.

Laura S. Haviland is a quiet, gentle, unassuming Quaker woman, 76 years of age, yet vigorous, who has had a remarkable career of usefulness, and has now given to the world a remarkable history of her "Life Work" as a teacher, at an early day, of the colored refugees in Canada and in Michigan, and in other States, as a traveler down South in the guise of a "berry picker," helping out into freedom many slaves; as a nurse and preacher to the sufferers in hospitals during the war; and with Gov. St. John and Elizabeth Comstock, relieving the destitute and suffering refugees in Kansas, etc.

Her book is neither fiction nor founded on fiction, but is an interesting narration of facts of a most thrilling character, as every one will find and testify who will get and read her book, now on sale at the Cynosure office, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill. Price, cloth, $1,75; half Russia, $2.25.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD, HENRY L. KELLOGG, } EDITORS.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1884.

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS:
OR THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR.

By request of the N. C. A. Board of Directors the publication of the new Reform Story is postponed for a few numbers, to give a better opportunity to get out the plates for publication in book form as fast as printed in the paper. Our readers will bear with this temporary delay as it will secure a much earlier publication in book form of a work that will have a powerful influence in our reform.

This will give more time for the canvassers and every friend who is interested in the circulation of the Cynosure to secure new names on the campaign list at 25 cents for two months.

THE CHICAGO CHRISTIAN WORKER, (Sept. 4), in a calm and Christian article says: "We would like to vote for the American or for the Prohibition party but do not," and calls us to vote for Blaine as the best thing to do in the circumstances. He says: "Have not Friends acted upon that principle during all the twenty years we have supported the Republican party?"

We answer, No. Twenty-eight years ago Friends broke from the Whig party, voted for Fremont, and elected Buchanan, according to the Worker's reasoning. Had we not done so, there had been no Republican party to save the Union, and slavery had stood to-day. Sixteen years previous, the Abolitionists started the Liberty party and voted in the minority twenty full years against the slave power. Then Lincoln was elected and slavery fell. During that twenty years Friends voted on the very principle of the American and Prohibition parties. They gave the testimony of their ballots, and God owned their testimony.

The Worker's reasoning is not good. Friends quit the Whig party, which ignored the chief question then up, and voted for Birney, Van Buren, Hall and Fremont. Consistency with their record now binds them to quit the Republican party, whose platform ignores lodge and liquor, and vote for St. John.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

ST. JOHN AND THE AMERICANS.

"The conclusion in which nothing is concluded."—Johnson's Rasselas.

We last week promised our readers "The conclusion of the whole matter," God willing. But it seems Providence does not permit. No letter has reached us from Gov. St. John in reply to the questions of the Iowa convention, but plenty of earnest letters for and against the American party voting for him.

Gov. St. John has been on the wing, and if he mailed a letter to us on the train some Mason may have morganized it, as Senator Pomeroy's letter of acceptance never reached us in 1880.

It is just possible, though I think not probable, that St. John has reconsidered his promise to write. Blaine has carried Maine by 19,000 votes, and this will cause thousands of Prohibitionists to vote for him. And if the St. John and Daniel ticket should receive a small vote, it would hurt the cause amazingly. To this, as a man of sense and a patriot, he cannot be indifferent. But the enthusiasm is rising in this region among the Americans, and the Cynosure will seek to swell his vote to the uttermost.

Brethren Williams and Barlow deplore "casting ourselves into the Prohibition party," being "swallowed by the Prohibition party," etc., etc. We should have printed their letters, but through absence from home they did not reach us till after the National Committee's decision was in print.

If the Prohibition party swallowed up the American party, it will come out of its stomach as Jonah did out of the whale's belly, alive and kicking. We think in this case Jonah is more likely to swallow the whale. This is written on our way to Monmouth, where the National Committee asks final action to be had on St. John and Daniel. If possible we will send our readers the action of that convention to supplement this writing. If the American party votes for St. John and Daniel it is as Americans.

THE MONMOUTH CONVENTION.

The convention ended nobly last night. The nomination of Hobbs and the State ticket was unanimous. The vote for St. John and Daniel was very strong, but three voices in the negative. The great Opera Hall was well filled below with some in the galleries. Dr. Haney came in from Kansas this morning. The convention was disappointed at his absence. Mr. Holyoke and myself called on Dr. Haney this morning, who expressed much regret that he could not have reached and addressed our convention. A long journey, with neuralgia in the face prevented. He says the St. John vote in Kansas will be very strong, and the enthusiasm is increasing.

Pres. C. A. Blanchard gave last night a calm, clear and most scathing indictment of the Republican party, and the great crowd enjoyed it. He will repeat his speech at Galesburg and elsewhere. Dr. Haney says he saw and conversed with strong Blaine men in Kansas who lamented that Blaine "did not vote for or against" prohibition in Maine. His course reminds one of Stephen A. Douglas's "Don't care whether slavery is voted up or voted down," while the masses were reeling and rocking with the slave question. Sixty-four thousand for prohibition in Mr. Blaine's State, and he "did not vote one way or the other!" How he loves the people!

The discussion of St. John and Daniel in our convention was free, full and earnest. Now is the time for the American party to split and part, if ever; like Paul and Barnabas, both good men and children of God. Good men see principles alike. They divide in applying principles to men, for two reasons: 1st. Because their information of facts differs; 2d. Their mental reach and generalization differs. But, above all, we are in danger, because, if Americans vote for St. John, they do so on an exception, and not a rule. The rule is, vote for no man but one who is an out-an-out American and Anti-mason, and to argue for an exception seems to be making that exception the rule, which alarms honest men. It seems to them, as one brother expressed it, "A square back down." But it is not. Another case just like St. John's might not occur in a hundred years. He has quit the lodge seventeen years ago. He pays no dues. He says he is done with it and shall never enter it again; and that he stands on every plank of our platform. What more do we want?

One says: "Let him write us a letter, and put all that in it, and I will vote for him." But that would be accepting the nomination of a second party, which would be disrespectful to the first, subject him to their contempt as unreliable, and drive off thousands of votes which we want him to have. We voted for Harrison in 1840, and Van Buren in 1848, precisely on the principle on which we vote for St. John; and we never regretted it. I intend to vote for St. John and urge every American to do so. We lose nothing; the cause loses nothing by going for St. John. Suppose the worst, viz., that, like some Masons, he should go back on us, and cringe to and betrays us to the lodge? Then we should attack him and publish and expose his inconsistency; and our cause would gain even by his defection.

But we suppose no such thing. It would be moral and political suicide for him to do so. But he will not do so. He is "made of sterner stuff." And if, as we have not the shadow of a doubt, he acts like an honest, reliable man, then we gain what cannot be counted in figures; and he will be President of the United States in 1888, as sure as he lives to see that year.

Meantime, every American is free to vote as his conscience dictates. This is a question like that debate by Paul and Barnabas, viz., whether they should take one man or another to help do Christ's work; and neither Paul nor Barnabas were turned out of the church for an honest difference of judgment. Let us see to it that Satan gets no advantage of us. We can all work in the National Christian Association, and vote as God gives us light. J. B.

JOHN A. CONANT.

John A. Conant, born in Mansfield, Conn., August 16th, 1829, the oldest son and fourth of eight children of Lucius and Marietta Conant, is a lineal descendant, in the seventh generation, from Roger Conant, who came to this country about 1623, and was founder of Salem, Mass., and governor of Cape Ann Colony.

Lucius, father of the subject of this sketch, was a hard working man, and one who could turn his hand successfully to various kinds of industry. Though never successful in the accumulation of a fortune, he had the reputation among his townsmen of being scrupulously honest.

At the age of ten years Mr. Conant went to live on a farm in Tolland, Conn., with his mother's brother, Mr. George Eaton, with whom he remained about four years. His educational privileges were limited to the common school, but happily his education was not limited by what he obtained in the schools. Mr. Eaton, with whom he lived, though an excellent farmer, was also a close observer of passing events, especially such as tend to effect the moral and physical condition of the people. Being a consistent Christian gentleman, he always gave his influence to forward moral reform in church and state.

Four years of life with such a man is a good school for any boy, and it was especially so in this case, where the child's earlier life had been blessed with the instruction of pious parents,—a fact which readily accounts for his activity in the reform measures of the day.

At the age of fourteen years Mr. Conant returned home, obtained work in a silk factory, and there learned the business occupation of his life. He married Caroline A., daughter of Dea. Simon C. Chapman (then deceased), of Ellington, Conn., May 11th, 1852. She was a modest Christian lady, of sterling worth, a great help to her husband in the Christian life, and by her influence he was saved from joining the Masonic lodge. After having lived happily together eleven years and five months, she died, leaving a son of nine years, who is now living in East Hampton, Conn., engaged with the Eureka Silk Manufacturing Company. His present wife was Mrs. Marietta Brown of Mansfield, by whom he has two sons aged eighteen and fourteen years respectively.

Since 1866 Mr. Conant has been engaged with the Holland Manufacturing Company at Willimantic, in the manufacture of machine twist and silk sewings. Early in life he became a Christian, and made a public profession of faith in Christ when fourteen years of age, joining the Wesleyan Methodist church at Tolland.

After his marriage, while living in Hartford, there being no Wesleyan church there, he, with his wife, became a member of the Fourth Congregational church of that city, Rev. W. W. Patton, pastor. He continued his relation with that denomination until, in 1881, he, with others, organized an independent mission church, bearing testimony against secret societies, intemperance and other popular evils.

But the most interesting facts of Mr. Conant's life are connected with his great service to the cause of reform.

He was from the first a radical Abolitionist and voted with the Free-Soil party until its development into the Republican party. Early in the year 1856, he, with Hon. Joseph R. Hawley and a few others, met one evening in a small room in Hartford to consider the best method of securing more extended and united political action against the system of slavery. This meeting resulted in the organization of the Republican party in Connecticut.

Though not a politician, he always voted with the Republicans until 1872, when, noticing with sadness, the controlling influence of the liquor traffic in its ranks, and hopeless of its reformation, he severed his connection therewith, and assisted in the formation of the Prohibition party in this State (Connecticut).

Observing the success with which secret societies control either of the dominant parties, and their efforts also to control the Prohibition party, and believing that in case of its success to power, it would be impossible to successfully and entirely enforce laws prohibiting the liquor traffic with adhering secret society men for officers who are closely allied, by lodge obligations, to those who engage in the manufacture and sale of intoxicating beverages, he felt it his duty to assist in the organization and support of the American party, which earnestly advocates every reform measure agitated by the Prohibition party without the incubus of the lodge to paralyze its power when obtained.

He took an active part in the convention in Syracuse, N. Y., in 1874, when the American party was named, and at Galesburg, Ill., in 1881, he was nominated for Vice President on the national ticket of that party. His late withdrawal in order that the party might support the nominees of the Prohibition party is on the part both of Mr. Conant and his companion on the ticket, Senator Pomeroy, an act of self-abnegation and devotion to the reform which exalts and honors them far more than would the fact that they had received a few thousand or tens of thousands of votes. Mr. Conant is one of those characters whom good men delight to honor, and though now engrossed in the cares of business, the time may be near when he will be called to do more public service for his fellow-citizens.

—Elder J. F. Browne had engaged to spend the 13th and 14th insts., in Whiteside county, Ill., and the 15th probably at Warren. During the remainder of this week he will be visiting friends in Wisconsin. Next Tuesday evening he lectures in Galesburg on "Masonry as a Counterfeit of Christianity." Bro. Browne's blackboard address at Monmouth was very popular.

—Pres. J. Blanchard has accepted the invitation of the Iowa and Kansas friends to visit those States and speak at several points.

—Rev. A. J. Chittenden, pastor of the College church, Wheaton, was nominated last week by the Americans and Prohibitionists of his legislative district, candidate for State representative. If the earnest men and women of Du Page and Kane counties who stand for reform will enter into the canvass with due enthusiasm, they will elect the ablest man nominated in the district.

—Philo Millard of Woodhull, Steuben county, New York, asks that the Cynosure editor or the General Agent call in that neighborhood and lecture. He fears the bad reputation of the county remains since the first outragcous night attack on Rathbun occurred there in 1870, but hopes some lecturer will call and help the truth along.

—The foreign work of the National Christian Association will soon begin to demand attention. England, Ireland, France, Greece, Turkey, India, Australia and South Africa are already corresponding with the Cynosure, and a leaven of truth is at work to cast out the lodge worship in these remote and interesting countries. We are glad to call attention to the work of Bro. C. B. Ward of Secunderabad, India, with his faith orphanage and independent mission work. Let him have a goodly share of the mission fund which Anti-masons are sending, possibly to lodge men. Send through Mrs. A. R. Kean, 100 Washington St., Chicago.

—Hugh Brown, the evangelist, whose home is at Morgan Park, near this city, has been so successful in that high and holy work as to make his name a desirable one to give influence to any cause. It may be that for this reason he has been claimed as a Freemason. We are happy to say that in reply to a direct question of a friend he replied that he is not a Mason and never will be.

—Bro. Samuel E. Holyoke of Galesburg, Ill., has lately been to Pittsfield, Mass., to attend the installation of his son over the large Baptist church of nearly 500 members in that city. Like the father, the son stands nobly for Christ against all the lodge substitutes for the true church. May his ministry be a blessed and successful one.

—The District Secretaries of the National Reform Association, Revs. M. A. Gault and R. C. Wylie, have arranged for a convention to be held in the Presbyterian church, Monmouth, Illinois, Monday and Tuesday, Sept. 29 and 30. The speakers and topics to be discussed are as follows: "Principles and Aims of the National Reform Association," Rev. M. A. Gault; "Jesus Christ the Ruler of Nations," Rev. John Harper; Discussion: "What is National Religion?" opened by Rev. T. P. Robb; "Divorce Reform," Rev. A. H. Dean; "Intemperance and the State," Rev. J. W. Kelsey; Discussion: "The Sabbath and Sabbath Legislation," opened by Revs. W. T. Campbell, D. D., and C. D. Turnbull; "The Pre-emption Right of Christianity," Pres. C. A. Blanchard. MONMOUTH NOTE BOOK.

—The College, under the able and popular presidency of Dr. J. B. McMichael, opened during the first week of the month with a large and increased attendance. The college building is located in the eastern part of the town, at the distance of more than a mile from the railway station, and is approached by fine streets upon which a number of beautiful and costly residences attract the eye of the stranger and speak of temporal prosperity. Monmouth has banished the saloon and none exist except without the limits.

—The failure of one of the National banks last spring was not without its Masonic episode. Hulbert, the defrauding cashier, was about to be arrested, but the United States bank examiner insisted that he should not be touched, as he wanted to use him in the inquiry into the affairs of the bank. Hulbert, very unreasonably, accepted the notice to leave, and neither bank examiner or officers of the law could find him when wanted. The bank officials say it was a Masonic game, as both the absconding cashier and the examiner were lodge "brothers."

—Opposite the First United Presbyterian church (Rev. Dr. Hanna) the Roman Catholics have been putting a large brick church, and the apprehensions of disturbance from the unwelcome neighbor are beginning to be realized. The lot was owned by a United Presbyterian family, who wished to sell, but steadily refused the offers of the Catholics. A purchaser soon came, however, who said that he wished to build a dwelling on the lot, and bought it. He immediately turned it over to the priest who paid him $100 for his lying.

—Drs. Hanna and McMichael were among the delegates to the Pan-Presbyterian Council at Belfast. The former in journeying through the south of Ireland subsequently, found himself one Sabbath in a town where there was none but a Catholic place of worship. He attended, and to his surprise listened to one of the ablest sermons against secret societies he ever heard.

—Among those who are familiar with the story of the Brownlee murder in Monmouth, is Mr. Hugh Nash, a highly esteemed and respected citizen, who received from his father the whole story. The father was one of the two who laid out the body of Brownlee for the grave. The throat was cut clear around and the tongue was cut out. Against the pretension of the lodge that the wounds were made by hogs, they found a slight appearance as if the flesh on one side under the skin had been eaten by some animal with small teeth, but the skin itself was entire and closed together exactly as they sewed up the wound.

—The singular disappearance of Rev. Wm. Collins, pastor of the Methodist church at Galesburg more than a month ago, admits of a very ready explanation. The gentleman had been too intimate with several women, and the evidence was so complete that he was to be tried for adultery before his next conference. Now he was also prelate of the Galesburg Knight Templar Masons and a member of several other secret societies. His lodge companions could not think of his trial before conference unless they could control the verdict, and an easier arrangement was to get him out of the way until after meeting of conference. Since his alleged drowning at Cleveland he has been seen and recognized in Minnesota by a gentleman from Galesburg.

A SUGGESTION FOR LODGE-RIDDEN CHURCHES.

RESOLVED, That all Christian denominations, which fellowship secret societies by silently consenting to the action of their ministers or members joining or belonging to the same, should organize a secret society, imbibing the principles and obligations of the so-called secret societies into which they may have been initiated, and that such secret society be auxiliary to the denomination (whose auxiliary it is).

RESOLVED, That any Christian denomination omitting or refusing to search the teachings of Christ, with reference to the principles of secrecy, is guilty of a high misdemeanor and is not giving testimony for Christ.

RESOLVED, That it is the duty of every Christian minister and member to do all he can to rescue the demoralized church or brethren thus guilty, but if unable to reclaim them to withdraw himself from them and so fulfil the law of Christ.

Mr. Editor, in presenting this suggestion I am writing of, and to churches as they are.

It is so in regard to most of our professedly Christian denominations that it is their imperative duty, either to enforce the law of Christ on the secrecy question, or acknowledge the false claims of the lodge to divine origin, and along with the Mason sing that vilest forgery, "Hail Masonry Divine." But admitting their claims, as churches are guilty of doing, it would surely be wise as well as consistent for each church to operate its own handmaid and save thereby the vast amount of money paid into the devil's church. But, please tell, if you can, what is the difference between Satan's church and a church in fellowship with his?

These are seeming hard reflections but facts are stubborn things, and how can they be avoided? I say make the handmaid an auxiliary, as she professedly occupies that place, and accept the poor, who have the Gospel preached free of initiation. J. J. HAYDEN.

THE TWO PLATFORMS.

Between the platforms, the so-called declaration of principles of the two great political parties of the country, there is little to choose. The only advantage of the one over the other is that the Republican platform is constructed more plausibly. Its English is better calculated to conceal its meaning, that the first, last, and unmistakable duty of the American voter is to retain the Republican party in power. In this respect it is worthy of praise, if praise should be given to that which is best calculated to deceive by reason of its skillful composition. It has been analyzed to be a bid for the labor vote, the manufacturers' vote, the capitalists' vote, the sheep raisers vote, the bankers and business men's vote, the anti-monopoly vote, the monopoly vote, the colored men's vote, the reform and independent vote, the squatters' vote, the soldier-and-sailor vote, the peace-and-war vote, the anti-mormon vote, and the territorial vote. The Democratic platform almost duplicates the declarations of its rival, but does it in execrable English. It bids for the vote of every interest under the sun in terms alike remarkable for their shameless ambiguity and amazing inelegance. * *

The fact remains that neither of the platforms is worthy any man's support. Voters may as well disregard both and look only to the records, character, and promises of the party candidates.—Chicago News, July 14.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Sept. 10th, 1884.

The sudden death of Senator Anthony of Rhode Island and of Secretary Folger has been among the sad events of the last week. The National flag is at half mast on the Capitol and all the public offices, and the Treasury building is to be draped in black for a month. Mr. Anthony had served longer in the Senate than any other member of that body, having held his place continuously since previous to the war. He had been several times president of the Senate and was an eminently respectable without being a brilliant legislator. His estate of about $200,000 goes mostly to relatives, but $25,000 are given to charities, mostly to Brown University, and thirty thousand dollars are mutually to be used for a memorial fountain in Providence.

Mr. Folger was born in Nantucket, Mass., 1818, but since he was twelve years of age has lived at Geneva, N. Y. He has served a number of terms as State Senator, and also as judge. He was assistant treasurer during President Grant's last term, and was made Secretary of the Treasury by President Arthur in November of 1881. He has filled that responsible position with entire acceptance to all parties.

His funeral was attended yesterday, in the Presbyterian church of Geneva, of which he had long been a member, by President Arthur and most of his Cabinet.

It is noteworthy that neither of these distinguished men were buried by Freemasons or Odd-fellows, though a Greek letter fraternity from Hobart College and a post of the G. A. R. are mentioned in connection with Mr. Folger's funeral. Probably Mr. Folger once belonged to a college fraternity. He could hardly have been a member of the G. A. R. There is some reason to think that these lodge displays at funerals are becoming unpopular.

Recently Rev. John H. Brooks, pastor of the Fifth Baptist church of this city passed suddenly away. Mr. Brooks was of pure African decent and of marked ability. He was born a slave in Hanover county, Va., in 1830. He became a member of the Baptist church at thirteen years of age. Came to this city in 1866 and organized the Fifth Baptist church which now numbers about 1,400 members, and has a fine house of worship on Vermont Avenue. He was greatly beloved and respected by all the people. In common with most colored ministers he had been drawn into numerous secret societies, but evidently he had lost interest in them. He is reported to have expressed his disapproval of the whole secrecy system, and it is quite certain that both he and his family desired for him only a Christian burial.

This was a great disappointment to the orders, as they evidently expected to make the occasion one of grand display. The People's Advocate, the leading organ of the colored people, says the display would have brought a boom to these societies. But, their hopes were cut short. Strict orders were given to the police not to admit to the church or the cemetery any person in regalia. The societies were on hand in procession in carriages and in great force. They bitterly felt their disappointment, and undertook to repeat the funeral ceremony at the cemetery, but were dispersed by the police.

It is hoped this may be the beginning of a healthful reaction against societyism among the colored people of this city.

The Maine election has awakened much interest. The fact that after thirty-eight years' trial, a whole generation, the people of Maine have adopted the Prohibition Constitutional Amendment by over fifty thousand majority, pretty clearly shows the estimation in which it is held by the people.

That Mr. Blaine went to the election and voted, but not on this question, shows him to be a thorough demagogue and devoid of all manly self-respect. If the question was, as he says, simply a State issue, then, as a citizen in his own State and home he ought to have voted for or against it. But it is more than this. So long as more than one thousand saloons, one for every thirty-five adult males, are licensed in this city by the authority of our National Congress, the question is national. No one knows this better than Mr. Blaine. The same plea used to be made for slavery. It was purely a State affair and must be kept out of national politics. But the fact of slavery in this district, and the determination to extend it into the National Territories, made it impossible to keep it out of politics. By Mr. Blaine's reasoning there never was any occasion for the Republican party. That party was organized to abolish slavery in this district and to exclude it from the National Territories. The Prohibition party proposes to do just the same with the liquor traffic. Mr. Blaine's affectation of neutrality, was an earnest plea for the whisky vote. H. H. HINMAN.

THE HOME.

DISCONTENT.

I.

THE BRIER ROSE.

I cling to the garden wall
  Outside, where the grasses grow;
Where the tall weeds flaunt in the sun,
  And the yellow mulleins blow.
The dock and the thistle crowd
  Close to my shrinking feet,
And the gypsy yarrow shares
  My cup and the food I eat.

The rude winds toss my hair,
  The wild rains beat me down;
The wayside dust lies white
  And thick on my leafy crown.
I can not keep my robes
  From wanton fingers free,
And the veriest beggar dares
  To stop and gaze at me.

Sometimes I climb and climb
  To the top of the garden wall,
And I see her where she stands,
  Stately and fair and tall—
My sister, the red, red Rose,
  My sister, the royal one,
The fairest flower that blows
  Under the summer sun!

What wonder that she is fair?
  What wonder that she is sweet?
The treasures of earth and air
  Lie at her dainty feet;
The choicest fare is hers,
  Her cup is brimmed with wine;
Rich are her emerald robes,
  And her bed is soft and fine.

She need not lift her head
  Even to sip the dew;
No rude touch makes her shrink
  The whole long summer through.
Her servants do her will;
  They come at her beck and call.
Oh, rare is life in my lady's bowers
  Inside of the garden wall!

II.

THE GARDEN ROSE.

The garden path runs east,
  And the garden path runs west;
There's a tree by the garden gate,
  And a little bird in a nest;
It sings and sings and sings!
  Does the bird, I wonder, know
How, over the garden wall,
  The bright days come and go?

The garden path runs north,
  And the garden path runs south;
The brown bee hums in the sun,
  And kisses the lily's mouth;
But it flies away ere long
  To the birch tree, dark and tall,
What do you find, O brown bee,
  Over the garden wall?

With ruff and farthingale,
  Under the gardener's eye,
In trimmest guise I stand—
  Oh, who so fine as I?
But even the light wind knows
  That it may not play with me,
Nor touch my beautiful lips
  With a wild caress and free.

Oh, straight is the garden path,
  And smooth is the garden bed,
Where never an idle weed
  Dares lift its careless head.
But I know outside the wall
  They gather, a merry throng;
They dance and flutter and sing,
  And I listen all day long.

The Brier Rose swings outside;
  Sometimes she climbs so high
I can see her sweet pink face
  Against the blue of the sky.
What wonder that she is fair,
  Whom no strait bonds enthrall?
Oh, rare is life to the Brier Rose,
  Outside of the garden wall?

SYRIAN FORGIVENESS.

A LEAF FROM A TRAVELER'S DIARY.

We left camp under the walls of ancient Tiberias, about sunrise, for the exploration of the shores of Gennesaret. Ibrahim, our "big sheikh," gave orders that the tents should be pitched for the night at the meadow of Khan Minyeh, some ten miles to the north, the site, according to Professor Robinson, of Capernaum.

The day was a tiresome one. Nothing but our intense interest in the sacred sea would have sustained our energies for so many hours under the fiery reflection of the sun from its surface. A strange fascination drew us through stifling ravines, where lizards seemed too sluggish to notice us. With torn clothing and skin we pushed through dense thickets of rank and prickly vegetation, that we might find traces of the cities which, under the Master's curse, had disappeared, and left those once crowded shores to silence and death. We prolonged the day to our utmost endurance of fatigue and hunger, feeling confident that Eliezar, our camp-placer, was ready to welcome us to our carpeted tents, that Yosef had prepared the flowing bowls of spring water for our ablutions; and that Antoine, our Italo-Russian-Syro-Phœnician cook (we could never make out his nationality by comparing the stories he told of his origin) was waiting to salute us with the dinner-horn. If Ibrahim had pride in the fact that his men had never failed to meet the expectation of a party of tourists, we had equal complaisance, in it. Esau did not long for his bread and lentiles, that day that he came in faint from the fields, more than we did for the flesh-pots whose savor filled our imagination.

But alas for human confidence! As our clumsy boat grated on the pebbly beach at Khan Minyeh, Antoine's horn was as silent as the pipings of the boys in Capernaum. Yosef did not meet us with the salaam, "All right, ah! Howadji!" as, raising one tent door after another, he was accustomed to bow us into our apartments. Indeed, but half the tents were up. Mules were patiently waiting to be relieved of their packs. The rattle of tin pans and the angry voices of potato-peelers and dish-washers, screeching in high falsetto their mutual criminations, gave the doleful intelligence that dinner was but dimly prophetic.

The face of Ibrahim was flushed with wrath, as an Indian's face with war paint. And well might it be. He prided himself on keeping the best camp in Palestine. Yet here was downright insurrection. He was disgraced in the eyes of foreigners. Something must be done to restore his equanimity and reputation. Summoning the chief cook, chief bed-maker, and chief muleteer, he sent them reeling one after another across the camp court under the tremendous blows of his fists. Having thus worked off his surplus anger, he resolved himself into an investigating committee and began an orderly inquiry. One by one the men exonerated themselves, except Antoine. To evident guilt for the delay, he added the most dangerous crime of using insulting words to Ibrahim. For this he got a good beating, was summarily dismissed the service and driven out of camp.

This was severe punishment. He would lose his wages for half the expedition, and the season being advanced for travel, would perhaps get no other employment for the year. Besides, he was many days' journey from his home, to reach which he must steal his way between Bedouin villages, whose inhabitants were just then excited against the men from Mount Lebanon (where most of ours lived), because of certain depredations alleged to have been committed by them.

But, although Antoine's fate was hard, his pride was harder; and he shouldered his "kit" with the stoicism of an old Roman going to commit suicide at imperial command.

Among the muleteers was a fine-faced fellow, Yakoob, who was a general favorite. He could speak no English beyond the words "good donkey," with which he saluted the ladies as he lifted them into the saddle, or presented them with bouquets of rare wild flowers which, in some places carpeted our way. But generous hearts do not need to declare themselves in words, real goodness has a sort of spiritual radiation, and Yakoob went among us, in his clumsy shoes and dirty shins, as a sort of saint in the grub state. In that land of Eastern romance where some mediæval legend or Mohammedan wonder-lie is located on almost every hill, we might not have been greatly surprised if Yakoob had been transformed into something more celestial

His big brotherly face twitched with emotion as he stood watching Antoine's form growing smaller and smaller against the long slope of the hill that leads up from the sea towards the plain of Hattin, where the Crusaders were defeated by Saladin. When Antoine reached the brow and stood still for a moment against the western sky, and then disappeared, Yakoob fell down upon his knees before Ibrahim, touched his forehead to the ground, and then, rising on one knee, begged that Antoine might be restored. We did not need to understand Arabic to know what he said. He pointed in the direction of Hattin, beat upon his breast, and then gesticulated with open palms, which, being interpreted, meant that if Ibrahim would pardon Antoine, Yakoob would himself take any punishment, and even give up his wages as security for his friend's good conduct in the future. Ibrahim's face softened; he hesitated a moment, but turned away and shook his head.

Yakoob then came to us. Prostrating himself he embraced our feet and pointed in the direction of Antoine's vanished form. We understood this to mean that we should unite in asking Ibrahim to forgive the culprit, and let Yakoob run after him. The voice of the camp was unanimous that, for Yakoob's sake, Antoine might be recalled. And as Ibrahim's face and shrug of the shoulders showed that he had relented, we cried "Run, Yakoob!" and then began to hurrah for Ibrahim.

Ibrahim's face grew black again.

"What!" he cried. "Do you Franks think that we Syrians forgive as meanly as you do? Send Yakoob? When I drive Antoine away with my own words and blows, let somebody else bring him back? No! my voice and my hands shall bring him back. I would not pardon him unless I pardoned all his offence away. He must not come back to feel mean. Nobody but myself can make Antoine feel that it is all right. Now, when I bring him back, hurrah not for me, but for Antoine. This is only half-hearted forgiveness which takes any glory for it."

In the later twilight, came Ibrahim with his arm thrown fondly about the neck of the ex-culprit, whom he kissed as he entered the camp. Then a double score of voices shouted "Antoine! Antoine!" none louder than Ibrahim's. The Lebanon men were wild with apparent delight over their comrade, although he was not at all a favorite. Yakoob and Ibrahim were seemingly forgotten. But when it was all over, one after another would come quietly to the chief, and kiss his hand, without uttering a word. Yakoob got any number of hugs on the sly from his brawny comrades. The ladies declared that if he were not quite so dirty, they would like to squeeze him, too. We all took occasion to slap him on the back, when Antoine was not present, and say, "good donkey!"—words which were felt to be full of admiration.

As we sat in the circle of the tents that night, a clergyman asked if the scene we had witnessed suggested anything in the Bible. One thought it suggested God's entreating men to be reconciled to him, when we would imagine the need of something to reconcile him to us. Another was made to think of the whole-hearted pardon heaven gives us. Another thought that some such customary scene in the East, was in the Bible figure of there being joy in heaven over a returning sinner. Yakoob's mediation brought all our minds to the mediatiorship of the Great Brother of humanity. And so the scene reflected in our hearts some higher truths, as the waters of the sea below us reflected the light of the stars.—S. S. Times.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

THE TRUTH AT ALL HAZARDS.

Some time after the beginning of the present century there was living in a busy country town in the North a pious couple who had an only son. For this son they daily prayed to God; and what they asked in their prayers was that God would enable them to lay in his young heart, among the first lessons he should learn, the love of all things honest and good. So the foundations of an upright life were laid in the boy's heart, and among these very especially a regard for uprightness and truth.

In the course of years the boy's school-days were ended, and also his apprenticeship to a business life in the country town; and, as there was no prospect for him there, he came up to England, to one of the great seaports, and by and by he got a good position in a merchant's office. He was greatly pleased with his new office, and wrote to his father and mother that Providence had been very kind to him, and had opened up to him an excellent place.

But he was not long in this excellent place before he was put to the test in a very painful way with respect to the lessons he had received about truth. It was part of the business of that office to have ships coming and going. And it was the rule, when a ship came into the port, that its captain sent word to the office that he had arrived, and was now waiting instructions where to discharge the cargo; and it was the duty of the manager of the office to send back instructions to the captain where and when this was to be done. A few months after this little lad from the North came to the office, a ship laden with coal came in, and the usual message from the captain came; but, somehow or other, no answer was sent back to him. The captain waited a week, and still no word came back. Now, that was very hard on the captain. Until his ship got free of its cargo, it had to lie idle in the dock; and all who belonged to the ship were kept idle too. So, at the end of a week, the captain sent word to the office that his ship had been kept so long waiting for instructions where to discharge its cargo that it had missed a good offer of a new cargo, and the office would have to pay him for the loss. This payment is called "demurrage."

When the manager of the office got this message from the captain, he was very angry. He thought he had sent instructions where to discharge the cargo, or he made himself believe he had sent them. At any rate he sent for the little lad from the North and said to him, "Didn't I send you down to Capt. Smith with instructions to discharge his coal?"

The little lad said, "No, sir; I do not remember being sent down."

'Oh, but I did," answered the manager. "You have forgotten." And there for a time, so far as the office was concerned, the matter was allowed to rest.

But the captain did not intend to let it rest there. He applied for his demurrage. And when that was refused, and his word that he had received no instructions was disbelieved, he took the master of the office to law. And, by and by, his complaint came before the judges in the court of law.

The day before the trial the manager came to the little lad from the North and said to him, "Mind, I sent you to the dock with those instructions to discharge the coal"

"But, I assure you, I cannot remember your doing so," said the lad.

"Oh, yes, but I did. You have forgotten."

It was a great trouble to the lad. He had never been sent to the dock. He could not say he had been sent; and he foresaw that he would have to say before the judges what would certainly offend the manager and lead to the loss of his excellent place.

On the morning of the trial he went to the court. The manager came up to him and said, "Now, our case depends on you. Remember, I sent you to the dock with the instructions to discharge the coal."

The poor lad tried once more to assure the manager that he was mistaken, but he would not listen.

"It is all right," he said hastily. "I sent you on such a day, and you have got to bear witness that I did—and see you say it clearly."

In a little while he was called into the witness-box, and almost the first question put to him was whether he remembered the day when Capt. Smith's ship came in. And then this: "You remember during that day being sent by the manager of the office to the dock with a letter for the captain?"

"No, sir."

"Don't you remember taking instructions to Capt. Smith to discharge his coal?"

"No, sir."

"Were you not sent by the manager of your office to the coal-ship on that day?"

"I was not, sir."

"Nor next day?"

"No."

"Nor any other day?"

"No."

The gentleman who put the questions was a barrister. He had been engaged by the manager to win the case for them. But, when he heard the little lad's replies, he saw that the manager was in the wrong; and he turned to the judge and said, "My lord, I give up this case. My instructions were that this witness would prove that a message to discharge had been sent to Capt. Smith, and it is plain no such proof is to be got from him."

So the case ended in the captain's favor, and against the office in which the little lad had found so excellent a place.

He went to his lodgings with a sorrowful heart, and wrote to his father and mother that he was sure to be dismissed. Then he packed his trunk to be ready to go home next day; and in the morning, expecting nothing but his dismissal, he went early to the office. The first to come in after him was the master. He stopped for a moment at the little lad's desk, and said, "We lost our case yesterday.'"

"Yes, sir," answered the lad; "and I am very sorry I had to say what I did."

By and by the manager came in; and, after a little time, he was sent for to the master's room. It was a long while before he came out. The little lad was sent for. "I am going to be dismissed," he thought to himself. But he was not dismissed. The master said to him, naming him: "I was sorry yesterday, but not with you. You did right to speak the truth; and, to mark my approval of what you did, I am going to put you in charge of all the workings and sales of our Glenfardle mine." Then he sent for the manager, and told him what he had said, and added, "And the young man will make his reports direct to me."

In six months after the manager left the office; and, young though he was, the little lad was appointed to his place. And, before as many years had passed, he was admitted as junior partner in the firm; and he is now at the head of the entire business—the managing partner.

In this case, truth was the best. But I want to say that, if things had turned out other than they did, and he had been dismissed, it would still have been the best for him to speak the truth.—Dr. McLeod, in Sunday Magazine.

CHIMES, AND HOW THEY ARE RUNG.

Bells may be rung in two ways: first, by swinging them with rope and wheel; and secondly, by striking them either upon the outside or inside with hammers, the bell itself being stationary. In England the former method of rope and wheel was almost universally adopted, requiring a man for each bell. From this method we get that interesting and peculiar English kind of chime music known as the "changes," which gave England the name of the Ringing Island. In Belgium, however, the stationary method was used. Chimes played in this manner were rung by one person and were called carillons, because the Italian quadriglio, or quadrille, "a dreary kind of dance music," was the first ever played upon them. To play upon carillons the performers used an instrument known as the "clavecin," a kind of rough key-board arranged in semi-tones. Each key was connected by wire or rope with a hammer, which struck the bell when a sharp blow was given the key with a gloved fist. This machine was necessarily extremely crude at first; and since chimes have never been played half so well as in the days of this invention, it is all the greater wonder that the art ever progressed at all. Recently some great masterpieces in chime music have been found which were composed and played at Louvain in the latter half of the last century, by the most skillful and wonderful chimer who ever lived, Matthias ver den Gheyn. No one in Europe or America can now be found who is able to play this music, which rivals in the depth and subtlety of its composition some of the finest works of Bach, Mozart, or Beethoven. Hence the inference is that the art of playing carillons has sadly declined, with small prospect of ever recovering the lost ground.—Atlantic.

TEMPERANCE.

THE DRINK QUESTION IN RUSSIA.

Between 1863 and 1867 inclusive, the brandy traffic was burdened with imposts amounting to 100 millions of rubles. Those imposts for the last four years now reach the sum of about 150 millions, showing an increase of fifty per cent. All this, of course, means an increase in the price of intoxicating liquors to those who consume them, yet somehow or other the consumers have risen to the occasion, bad as the times are, and the flow of spirits is even greater than before. Ten quarts of brandy is now the annual rate of consumption for every man, woman and child in the empire. Every 224 men have a whisky shop to themselves in the country districts, including villages; in the towns, drinking establishments are provided in the proportion of one to every 120 inhabitants; in parts of Podolia, Volhynia, and the Ukraine, there are places where as many as ten beer shops may be reckoned to a single village. That the measures contemplated by the government will really wean the population to any noticeable extent from its fondness for vodka by no means follows from the comprehensiveness of the measures, or from the flourish of trumpets with which they have been heralded. To treat the whole of the Russian people as having a natural penchant for liquor would be a mistake. In the middle and upper classes of society intoxicating drinks are very sparingly used indeed. "Morning nips" are unknown. "Liquoring up" is no essential part of the formality of a bargain in business, and if life is sometimes thought not worth living in this country, it is not because a good half of it has been spent in the atmosphere of a bar parlor. Most of the beer and whisky shops in Russia have been devised, not for the convenience of the tradesman, but for the use of the artisan and the peasant, and it is to these classes, one would think, that government measures should be most directed. The misfortune, however, for both town laborer and country laborer is not only that there are no philanthropists in Russia engaged as in the west of Europe, in combating various social evils by well-equipped social organizations, but that the national church herself, despite her vast wealth and immense facilities of influencing good for the very classes most concerned, should treat this drink question as one with which she has absolutely nothing to do.—Correspondence London Globe.

MILLIONS IN IT.

Millions of drunkards.
Millions of paupers.
Millions of criminals.
Millions of needless taxes.

Millions of wasted lives, and wasted dollars, and lost reputations and characters.

Millions of desolate homes and broken hearts and discouraging vows.

Millions upon millions of unhappy creatures, all made so by the use of rum; and the system that mixes the poisonous concoctions, distributes them over the country, puts them in the reach of everyone, presses them into the hand and to the lips, protects and empowers the infernal traffic in all its hideous phases! This is the system which great masses are contentedly perpetuating, that delusive phantom, the license system.—Selected.

Colonel Burnaby, in his "Ride to Khiva," tells how the right to sell liquor in a certain Russian village was sold by auction. This fetched nearly $2,500, which was divided among the population. The money was readily paid, but it is said the publican got it back in about three days, as it was all spent in his shop.

Milwaukee last year produced 1,066,030 barrels of beer, or 86,290 barrels more than the year before. The Milwaukee Prohibitionist asks: "There is in this city one saloon for every twenty-six voters, and as half the people do not drink, every thirteen drunkards must support one saloon. How many women take in washing to support the thirteen drunkards who support each a saloon?"

The apostle of the Indian Theistic church lately declared in Birmingham, England, that "fifty per cent. of the educated natives of India die through indulgence in intoxicants," having acquired the habit of drinking from contact with our Western civilization. If the more self-governed and resolute manhood of the Western nations falls before free intoxicants, it is not strange the feebler manhood of the Orient decays before them. As prohibition has saved India and China, it alone can save them or the Western nations in the future.—Watch Tower.

The prohibitory law was first adopted in Maine, when a majority of the legislature, in both houses, and the governor, belonged to the Democratic party.

The selling or exposing for sale of intoxicating liquors has been prohibited in Vermont for the last thirty years, and yet there are 426 places where intoxicating liquors are more or less openly sold. Is there as small a number of saloons in proportion to population in license States?

The officers of all the railroads traversing the State of Iowa, have united in a circular, announcing that, in compliance with the new law, they will not receive any intoxicating liquors for transportation from any point either within or without the State to any point within its limits after that date.

Noah Porter on temperance education: "I have no doubt that the State, in its public schools, ought to give instruction in respect to those duties and moral relations which are generally acknowledged to be essential to the welfare of the commonwealth. A knowledge of the duty of temperance, and the sin and evil of intemperance, are both recognized as essential to this welfare. It follows that the State has the right, and is under the obligation, to give such instruction as may thus promise to be useful and effective for good."

I do not believe that a nation controlled in its government by rum sellers and rum drinkers can long exist as a republic—and to that condition this country is fast approaching. Our political conventions, our national, State and local elections are largely controlled by the organized forces of liquor dealers and liquor drinkers. I know this to be an unwelcome truth, nevertheless, and we may as well face it first as last.—SENATOR PRATT, of Connecticut.

The Des Moines State Journal, speaking of the present conflict going on in the State of Iowa against the liquor traffic, says: "It is a war that will crush out the drunkard makers eventually.

At the celebration of the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of Jesuitism in this country, at the church of the Immaculate Conception in Boston, recently, Bishop O'Reilly said: "No one outside of the Church of Jesus Christ can be saved, and it is needless to prove that this Church is the only Church of Jesus. One might as well have tried to be saved out of the ark in the days of Noah." After this there followed a banquet, and on the bill of fare were five different kinds of alcoholic drinks.—National Temperance Advocate.

An English saloonist advertises by name not less than fifty-three varieties of American drinks. They are novelties of concoction among the straightforward Britons who use ale, porter, brandy, gin and whisky without any disguise, and are looked upon with terror by even the tippling population because of their seductive attraction for young boys.

The cholera scare and the attendant admonitions to temperance are having effect in Paris. A diminution of fifty per cent in the arrests for drunkenness on a recent national holiday is given in proof; also the fact that on the 12th of July the arrests were reduced to a smaller number than has been known since the police regulations concerning drunkenness have been in force.

In an English paper we see a letter from Mr. William Hoyle, the great statistician, who visited Canada a short time ago. Before going home he passed through the State of Maine, and here is his experience: "I went about Portland and the surrounding district a good deal during the four days I was there, but did not see the least indication of liquor selling or drinking. It is true the law is violated, but not so much as other laws, as, for instance, the education law, nor more than our liquor laws in England, if so much. The observance of the Sabbath, and the moral tone of Portland, are far, very far, ahead of any of the American towns we have seen. Nor do I know a British town that will compare with it."

The "Dominion Brewers' Wine and Spirit Merchants' Protective Association" has issued a circular headed, "Strictly confidential, destroy when read," calling upon every man interested in the business to defend his trade against the fanatical onslaught of the Prohibitionists. The government of Canada has pledged, "that if the country pronounced in favor of the principle of prohibition it would be granted," and this "protective association" has made arrangement "to contest every inch of territory and educate the public minds to appreciate the great injury that will be done to the country by the passage of such unjust laws." It is claimed that every brewer in Toronto has subscribed $1,000, the distillers $10,000, and all other branches of trade have been equally liberal. That "this our craft is in danger" is evident and Canada has reason to thank God and take courage.

A new charge against the tobacco habit—its use by native converts interferes with the progress of the Gospel among their heathen neighbors. Dr. Phillips, a Free Baptist missionary in India, writes about a native church: "The lay preacher in charge of this outpost has done a fair amount of work. Naturally a quiet man, his omnipresent pipe stupefies him beyond expression at times, and this has been a serious trial. We hope to see the day when not a single worker in the field, foreign or native, shall be a slave to tobacco. After years of observation I am more than ever convinced that this narcotic drug, as used by Christian men and women, is a mighty obstacle to the progress of Gospel truth in Bengal. The present rule of the mission, that no young man who uses this drug shall be either licensed or ordained to the Christian ministry, will bring help in time; but the older men are causing confusion now."

THE CHURCHES.

—Secretary Stoddard spent Sabbath, the 14th inst., at Galva, Ill., occupying the pulpit in the Congregational church in the morning and the Baptist church in the evening.

—It is announced that Mr. Moody will preach in Boston this fall, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. But as two similar announcements have already appeared, stating that he will preach this fall in Cincinnati and St. Louis, there are probably errors somewhere.

—The Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church of this city, Rev. Dr. John Hall, led last year in the money columns of the statistical tables. The total of monies raised amounted to $146,671, of which $36,564 were for congregational purposes, and $91,007 for benevolent and miscellaneous causes.

—The thirty-eighth annual meeting of the American Missionary Association is to be held at Salem, October 21–23. The sermon is to be preached by Rev. George L. Walker, D. D. It appears that a "debt of $50,000 threatens the Association." Its officers seem to have done all in their power to secure the needed "thousand dollars a day," but for the first ten months of the financial year, ending July 31, there was a total decrease of $31,814 from last year's receipts for the same period. Of this falling off, $30,292 is in legacies.

—Mr. and Mrs. Grattan Guinness, of England, are now in this city. While on their way over in the City of Rome, they engaged in earnest Christian labor among the steerage passengers, with gratifying results.

—The Methodist Episcopal church (North) has 97 conferences, 25,000 ministers and 1,850,000 members. The Methodist Episcopal church (South) has 39 conferences, 9,906 ministers, and 873,254 members.

—One of the many interesting works of benevolence in behalf of the poor in London is that preseuted by the Prison Mission, of which the Duchess of Teck is patron, where uearly 200 children of parents who are serving sentences in the prison are being trained. This mission is in the form of a little village, each house having a "mother" in charge. On every week-day morning a breakfast is given to the discharged women from the prison.

—The Londou Anniversaries have uow all beeu held. Already more than $5,000,000 is reported as given to foreign missions duriug the last year, with an expected additional $2,000,000. Of this the Wesleyan Methodist Society raised $750,000. The noble Bible Society is preeminent in its contribution of $1,200,000. The Tract Society follows closely in its gifts of over $1,000,000. Upward of $7,000,000 in all have been laid on the altar of the church. But $600,000,000 have been sacrificed to strong drink.

—The English Congregationalists have resolved to build a college or theological school in each of the university towns, Oxford and Cambridge. The English Presbyterians, not to be outdone, have resolved to build a church at each of the two seats of learning. To carry out the plan the Presbyterians need $95,000, and they have resolved to go to Scotland to raisc the required amouut.

—The Baptists of Dakota Territory are thoroughly in earnest in the temperance work. At a meeting of the Baptist Association recently held in Dell Rapids, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we, as an association, denounce the liquor traffic in all its departments, that we will be satisfied with nothing short of total prohibition, and we will endeavor to educate our children to abhor intemperance and to resist every temptation that leads to it.

—A persecution has begun against earnest evangelical Christians in Russia. Col. Paschoff and Count Korff, who have been active in holding religious meetings and in labors for the poor, are banished. It is also declared illegal to distribute the publications of the Religious Tract Society, though they bear the printed permission of the censor.

—The missionaries at Bihe, West Africa, write hopefully of the progress they are making in reducing the Umbundu language to writing. They have prepared in manuscript a grammar and quite a large vocabulary, which they wish to have printed; and every week Mr. Sanders finds time to translate enough of the New Testament to furnish a lesson for the boys on Sunday morning.

—Mr. Miyoshi is a native of Japan, aud has been a Christiau about four years, during which time he has been studying under the direction of the Bros. Hail, Cumberland Presbyterian missionaries. He is coming to this country to prepare himself to preach the Gospel to his own people, and will be educated and trained for this work in the theological school in Cumberland University.

—The Rev. Eric Lund, Baptist missionary at Barcelona, Spain, has been excommunicated by the Roman Catholic bishop. The little monthly paper "El Evangelista," which he publishes in connection with his work, has also been condemned, and good Catholics are forbidden to read it. In the August number of the paper Mr. Lund prints a letter to a bishop, Dr. Casanes, in which he rejoices that he has been counted worthy of excommunication, since it is a testimony to the effectiveness of his labors, and he assures his excellency that the attempts to stop the preaching of the Gospel will be useless.

—The Karen Mission at Henthada, Burma, has recently sent eight preachers to the Chins over the mountains in Arracan. Two of these are Karens and the rest are Chins who have been educated at Henthada. The Karen Mission at Tungoo has resolved to do more toward the support of their own pastors. These indications of self-help on the part of the converts in heathen countries are the most encouraging signs for the future of missionary work. When the Gospel becomes self-propagating in any country its complete evangelization is not far off.

—A very remarkable revival of religion has been in progress lately at Brownwood, Texas. Fifty persons will be added to the various churches, more than half of whom will join the Presbyterian church. Instrumentally this is the result of a Presbyterian camp meeting, conducted by Rev. B. T. McClelland, the pastor. The converts are chiefly middle-aged people, and more men than women. The work was noted for its depth, its quiet thoughtfulness, and its wide-spreading fervor. The whole town talked about little else but religion for some days.

—The Medical and Surgical Reporter says that Dr. George E. Post, a medical missionary connected with the Presbyterian church of this country, who is living in Beirut, Syria, has aequired a great reputation among the Turkish officials for his skill in surgery, and could easily acquire a large income if he were to receive pay for his services. He devotes, however, his entire time to the poor, and the calls upon him are immense in uumber and in variety. He has preparcd a series of text-books in Arabic on surgery, materia medica, botauy, zoology and physiology, and edits a monthly medical journal. He is at present employed on a work descriptive of the flora of Syria and Palestine, the first work of the kind on the subject in any language.

RUSSIA.

A light appeared in the darkness of the Russian church when Count Paschkoff, an earnest Christian nobleman, felt bound in his heart to work for the Saviour's kingdom in the city of St. Petersburg. He opened the parlors of his resideuce to his friends, read ou Sunday afternoon and evening the Bible with them, added some good, earnest remarks, exhorting his friends to devote their lives wholly to the Saviour, and concluded by singing a hymn with them and by offering a prayer, in which he remembered fervently his beloved country. With the help of other friends, especially of Count Korff, Paschkoff founded also an evangelical Tract Society, in order to reach his countrymen by the printed saving truth. Nothing could be more desirable for the poor Russians than such a missionary work as Count Paschkoff did. Yet he was looked upon with suspicion from the beginning, was annoyed by the police, was summoned to give au account of himself aud of his prayer meetings. The good and brave man stood nobly in every storm, and proved to every fair-minded man that he was an evangelist and not a Nihilist. But the priests, the head man of whom was the teacher of the Czar and is all-powerful with him, hated the movement of Paschkoff from the start, just as night-owls hate the light of the sun. They want no reform of the church, no reform of the hearts of men. They want to remain in office and in power, they want to retain their influence over the misled and ignorant people.

At last these night-owls have got it all their own way. By a decree of the Russian Government Count Korff was exiled from Russia like a great conspirator and evil-doer. Count Paschkoff was asked whether he was willing to declare solemnly that he would give up circulating tracts, and when he refused he was giveu two weeks' time to leave Russia forever. The printed tracts, which had already been approved by the Ceusor, were ordered to be burned.—Illus. Chris. Weekly.

CANADA PRESBYTERIANS AND SECRET SOCIETIES.

At a recent meeting of the Toronto Presbytery of the Canada Presbyterian church, the Masons and the Odd-fellows received an unlooked-for blow. In the report on "the state of religion," the question, "What do you consider hinderances to the cause of Christ in your neighborhood?" the committee answered, "Dancing, tippling, Odd-fellowship, Freemasonry, and practical infidelity among professing Christians." Dr. Gregg, professor in Knox College, Toronto, said he was glad to see that at last the secret societies were being mentioned as hindrances to religion. "I consider that Freemasonry is doing a great deal of mischief for the cause of Christ. They [Masons] are doing harm in one way in that they ignore the mediation of Christ in their prayers to the Almighty." Mr. McDonnell, a popular minister in the body, loudly applauded the professor's remarks. The report was adopted and sent up to the synod. At once there is a buzz among the fraternities, the presbytery is considered as meddlesome, and the above-named ministers are abused. The next day the Toronto World, referring to the action of the presbytery, said: "The attack made on the Freemasons and Odd-fellows created a strong feeling of indignation among the organizations referred to." A reporter of this same paper interviewed a number of the "leading lights belonging to both orders," who, as they always do, spoke in the most extravagant and laudatory manner of these Christless institutions. The ministers are accused of ignorance, jealousy, etc., and the lodges which they had the courage to oppose are lauded to the skies.

What an amount of twaddle these "lights" do utter. They positively claim that their orders are religious. They have a ritual, use grand ceremonies, and the Knights Templar pray in the name of Jesus; yes, and take what Bernard calls the oath of "double damnation." John Quincy Adams said, "The Knight Templar takes an oath containing many promises, binding himself under no less penalty than to have his head struck off and placed on the highest spire in christendom should he knowingly or willingly violate any part of his solemn obligation of a Knight Templar." Then he properly asks, "Is this a fitting obligation for a Christian man to take or to administer?" Every step in the Mason's progress in the order is paved with hard and blasphemous oaths; and yet the order is very religious, the "ally" of the church. But it is claimed that it is not only the "ally" of the church, but a little superior; for if the church were "sifted there would be found much less hypocrisy in the craft than in the church." What an insult to the church and to Christianity! And yet professedly Christian men enter these institutions, support them, and defend them. They might just as consistently connect themselves with the worshipers of Baal.

The "lights" fling out the insinuation that the ministers and the members of the presbytery were prompted by jealousy because "the church, from their point of view, is not the success they wish it," and "the Freemasons are diverting ability and means from them, and this fact galls them." Ah, no, these Christian men have learned that the orders are a delusion and a fraud, and are warning their people, as honest Christian men should, to beware of the snares laid for them. We thank God for this action of the Toronto Presbytery. How the synod will treat the matter is to be seen. The Presbyterian church in this dominion is large. Its ministers are mostly men of scholarship and ability, and if they bring their influence against secret societies as we pray they may, it will do much to arrest their progress and bring them into disfavor.—Rev. A. B. Sherk, in the Telescope.

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engravng of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

FLAGG, author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story, accurately true to life because mainly a narration of historical facts. 384 pages. NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"There is no important history extant but has connected with it numerous other histories of which it was the initial point, or the dominating influence. The abduction and murder of Morgan set ten thousand secret springs in motion, as the surrender of the charters of so many lodges at that time, and the severing of their connection with the order of some forty thousand of its members indicated. This story is one of these histories, and is a collection of facts woven into a story. It cannot fail to be read with interest."—Free Methodist, Chicago.

"The republication of the Reform Story which ran through the columns of the Cynosure for nearly a year is at last completed, and the book so anxiously expected by thousands of our readers has come from the press of Ezra A. Cook. The book is finely bound and fairly introduces the reader to the treasures within. The publisher has made occasional selections from Masonic works to verify the statements of the text; these make a helpful addition for some who can afford no more complete an armory of this kind."—Christian Cynosure.

"Our Anti-secret society friends are certainly entitled to great credit for their persistence in their efforts to expose and root out secretism. The object of the writer of this story is to present in its true light the crafty, unscrupulous and exceedingly hurtful influence of Masonry, the parent of all the orders."—Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter.

"In an incidental way the story tells much about the manner of conducting lodges and much about the spirit and methods of Masonry. The story covers the period of the abduction and murdering of William Morgan. The strategic position from which the author writes put a charm in the book, while it gives a good opportunity to show the workings of the order. We wish all the people would read it."—Telescope.

"It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."—Lutheran Standard, Columbus, O.

"The story is intensely interesting and the author has succeeded in weaving into it a great deal of information in regard to this mysterious order, which is certainly startling if true, and he gives what seems to be undoubted evidence to prove his assertions. The book is one which should be read by both Masons and Antimasons."—Wayne Co. Herald.

LUCILE VERNON.

THIS is a pleasant surprise in many ways. The author is Rev. W. T. Meloy, of the United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and the book is published by the Board of Publication of his denomination. It is a love story, not "fascinating," but with so much of genial interest that the reader is in no danger of laying it down unfinished. * * * The moral purpose of the book is to describe and vindicate Christian character, in its more heroic aspects, and it is a success. We congratulate the author and the United Presbyterian Board of Publication on this literary lily of the valley.—The Interior.

"LUCILLE VERNON" is evidently not an ideal sketch, but the fictitious names used represent to a great extent real men and women of flesh and blood. The characters of many of them are by no means attractive, but are perfect counterparts of querulous, obstinate and parsimonious professors who are thorns in the flesh of many a pastor in all the churches. But as in all the churches, there were also good and true men and women at Lansington, who upheld and encouraged the pastor. * * * In its author will be recognized the worthy pastor of the First United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and a welcome contributor to these columns.—United Presbyterian.

IT belongs to the class known as the religious novel. It is a love story written in the Pansy style, and so constructed as to teach sound moral and religious principles, in connection with quite an interesting narrative. Indeed, when the writer sat down to examine it, he commenced as a critic on the sharp lookout for blunders, but soon he became absorbed in the story, and forgot altogether his critical duties. He also noticed that when the members of his family commenced to read it, they had but little time for anything else until it was completed. Tried as a work of art by the practical test, it must be regarded as a success. Its influence will doubtless be good in correcting false views, and in helping the reader to sounder principles and to a better spirit. * * * Some may think some of the scenes depicted are not true to nature, but the critic would be likely to find, on inquiry, that the very incideuts which he would select as unnatural are actual facts. "We often find that truth is stranger than fiction."—D. A. W. in the Christian Instructor.

The heroine, who becomes the bride of the pastor of the church at Lansington, is a wonderful exemplification of how a woman who is a true wife and help-meet may throw her life and energies into the great work of saving souls; aiding, by gentle words and sympathy, wise counsel and brave endurance, the husband having charge of a congregation where the Demon of Misrule held full sway. We follow with interest the history of the wife and husband through their hours of despondency and discouragement to the happy ending, where religion, harmony and peace have gained the ascendency and the good man and wife find their reward.—Pittsburgh Daily Telegraph.

FARM AND GARDEN.

FACTS FOR FARMERS.

—Potash is an excellent fertilizer for the grape vine. Fork in around the roots a few pecks of wood ashes. Cow dung contains a large proportion of potash, and but a comparatively small amount of nitrogen, consequently it is a better fertilizer than horse manure for the grape vine.

—Give each of your calves and yearlings a teaspoonful of saltpeter, finely pounded, once in three weeks, and they will not be troubled with blackleg. The blood becomes too thick to circulate freely, and causes a stoppage. Fever ensues and the animal dies. But the saltpeter thins the blood and cools it. So says an exchange. The experimeut is worth trying.

—It seems nearly impossible to induce some plant lovers to desist from trying to grow all their plants in a marsh. Few plants can endure standing in soil constantly drenched, or in saucers of water. A good rule is to thoroughly drench the soil once in two days, using water but little warmer than the temperature of the room. Geraniums especially revolt from superfluous water.

—An English farmer says: I have more than once freed fields entirely from wireworms by sowing a crop of white mustard seed. I once sowed a whole field of forty odd acres, which had not repaid me for many years, in consequence of every crop being destroyed by the wire-worms, to white mustard. I am warranted in saying that not a single wire-worm could be found the following year, and the succeeding crop of wheat was a fine one."

—In trying to answer the question, "What do we salt butter for?" the National Live Stock Journal shows, first, that it does not preserve butter to salt it, and, second, that it depends on the quality of the butter whether much or little salt improves its flavor. Packages of butter were shown at the Philadelphia Centennial Exhibition which were two or three years old, and some of them had never been salted, but were as sweet as when first put up. The keeping quality of butter seems to lie in the making and putting up, rather than in the addition of salt. But salt undoubtedly covers up a bad flavor, or gives a flavor—of salt—where none exists.

THE NEW "HOLSTEIN" CATTLE FURORE.

The cattle of the Netherlands are attracting more attention from the dairy farmers of the country than any other breed. For many years they have been carefully bred, with an aim to produce large quantities of milk. Doubtless the quality of the milk has been less an object with the breeders of Holland; but when well-fed cows give enormous quantities of milk, and the milk can be disposed of as such, the profit is almost invariably greater to the producer than if the quality were better and the quantity less. Besides, milk of low quality is poor in fat, but not necessarily poor in cheese substance. The districts whence they come, have always been famous for both cheese and butter, so that without further evidence our farmers might safely assume, that the milk was really rich in both butter and cheese. But we have other facts. The famous cow, Mercedes, now dead, was the especial rival of the Jersey cow, Mary Anne of St. Lambert, for the honor of being the greatest butter cow in the world, and the no less worthy and scarcely less famous heifer, Jamaica, is credited as giving one hundred and three and one-quarter pounds of milk a day, and in a week as yielding twenty-six pounds three ounces of butter, while Ethelka gave eighty-one and one-half pounds of milk a day. These cows were neither of them four years old and with their second calves.

A breed with such possibilities, even though the average fall far below, is one upon which too great care can not be spent, with a view to both preservation of these inbred qualities, and to render them the more uniform inheritance of the race. —COL. "SCRIP and STAFF."

BY H. M. HUGUNIN.

This new and attractive volume is now ready. It is composed of thirty-nine chapters on nearly as many topics. Neatly bound in cloth with gilt stamp. Price 60 cents.

The Chicago Evening Journal of May 3, says:

The author of this little volume, for many years a working editor of the EVENING JOURNAL, has here presented us with a variety of topics of a religious character. Among the number we note "The Evils of the Sunday Newspaper," "The Divine Sanction of Church Organizations," "The Good Work and Government of Sunday-Schools," "The Bible in our Public Schools," "Fallacies of the 'Evolution Theory,'" "Chronology—The Age of the World," and "Labor and Laborers." Mr. Hugunin writes as an independent thinker, untrammeled by denominational alignments. His style, however, is marked by the vigor of earnestness and sincerity, and with these characteristics, and with a close adherence to Bible Christianity, his book becomes a suggestive aid to evangelical workers. In discussing the topics above named, as in others, he deals consistently with questions of public interest and great importance in the reform of individual and social evils.

From a bushel of corn or rye there can be obtained almost two gallons of alcohol.

A New York printing press maker promises to produce a press that will turn out 960,000 copies per hour.

A farmer's work on wet days includes, according to an agricultural paper, this miscellany: "Mend the tools, oil the harness, pick out the decayed fruit and vegetables in the cellar, read, write and visit the school.

Three bulldogs were set upon a wildcat a few days ago by some West Virginia men, the cat being chained to prevent its escape. It was the dogs, however, that did not escape, as the cat killed all three of them.

Among the exhibits that will be sent to the New Orleans Exhibit from Choctaw county, Alabama, is a hewed stick of pine 80 feet long, 42 inches square in the middle, and containing 11,760 feet, board measure.

A five-year-old son of Austin Brady, of Steubenville, Ohio, was stung to death by black hornets last week, and a little daughter narrowly escaped with her life. Blood poisoning followed the stings of the insects. Mr. Brady has lost several members of his family in a like manner.

The total number of deaths from cholera in the various infected cities and towns of France is now stated at about 4,000, and in Italy there have been not far from 300. The spread is now swifter and the violence of the attacks greater than at first, and death sometimes follows in three hours.

The primeval woods of Maine contain 19,000 square miles and still cover an extent seven times that of the famous Black Forest of Germany. The States of Rhode Island, Connecticut and Delaware could be lost together in a Maine forest and still have a margin of wilderness wide enough to make its exploration without a compass a work of desperate adventure.

The largest sailing ship in the world was launched at Glasgow on the 5th inst., from the yards of Messrs. Hamilton & Co. She is described as a handsomely modeled iron, four-masted, full rigged sailing ship of the following dimensions: Length over all, 340 feet; breadth, 49 feet; depth of hold, 25 feet 8 inches; register tonnage, 3,173. Her principal masts and yards are made of steel.

It seems that the law against the coming of the Chinese to this country does not prohibit after all. It is stated that an underground railroad—similar to that which formerly existed in this State for the benefit of runaway slaves, from British Columbia to Washington Territory, has been unearthed, built and used for the purpose of secretly conveying Chinese laborers into the United States. A newspaper published somewhere along the line of travel says, from "positive knowledge," that this underground business is a well organized branch of trade, paying large profits to the white men who are operating it. The trade is carried on principally at night. Sailing vessels loaded with Chinese leave Victoria and passing Port Townsend at night, land almost anywhere on the coast, from whence they are sent into the States via the underground road.

From the official returns of the assessors of Kansas, it appears that that State is increasing rapidly in wealth under the operation of the beneficent prohibitory law. The total number of acres of taxable lands for last year was 25,889,907; for this year, 27,710,981, an increase of 1,821,074. Total assessed value of taxable lands last year, $99,899,599; for this year, $117,358,311, an increase of $17,458,711. Average value per acre last year, $3.86; for this year, $4.23. Total number of town lots last year, 381,804; for this year, 397,864, an increase of 16,060. Total assessed value of towns last year, $2,773,920,988; for this year, $3,484,697,076, an increase of $710,776,788. Total assessed value of personal property for last year, $48,030,492; for this year, $56,391,618, an increase of $8,361,125. NEWS OF THE WEEK.

POLITICAL.

—The result of the Maine election gives the Republican candidate for Governor 16,000 plurality and elects all the Republican Congressmen. For the State Senate none but Republicans have been returned, while in the House but two Democrats will have seats. Two-thirds of the Irish-Americans in the State voted for the Republican candidates, and is considered as significant of the result of the National election.

—The Prohibition State Convention of Wisconsin made the following nominations for State officers: Governor, S. D. Hastings, of Dake county, Lieutenant Governor, A. A. Kelly, of St. Croix; Secretary of State, E. G. Durant, of Racine; State Treasurer, C. M. Blackman, of Walworth; Attorney General, F. M. Angel, of Barron; Superintendent of Public Instruction, Robert Graham, of Winnebago; Railroad Commissioner, Henry Sandford, of Manitowoc; Insurance Commissioner, Nelson Ladue, of Lafayette. Hastings is a secretist. Let the others be questioned.

COUNTRY.

—The largest convention of Ohio miners that ever assembled convened Tuesday at Columbus. The men are slow and deliberate, and a conservative element is said to be in the majority.

—The contest between manufacturers and workmen at Cincinnati is assuming a serious phase. Crowds standing near non-union shops are dispersed, but the Mayor refuses to hire extra police, on the ground that the regular force have not been paid since June. A committee of the Board of Trade is making efforts to effect a settlement, but thus far without success.

—The Edgar Thompson Steel Company at Pittsburgh, Thursday notified the employes that unless they accepted a reduction in wages the mills would be closed. There is great distress in Pittsburgh because of the number of factories and mills now idle, and the appropriation for out-door relief is already exhausted, with six months yet to run.

—The towns of Clayton and Clear Lake, Wis., and Marine and White Bear Lake, Minn., were swept by a cyclone Tuesday evening. The greater portion of White Bear Lake is in ruins, and in the other places devastation marks the path of the "funnel." At Marine several persons were injured, and in White Bear Lake many boats were capsized and others sunk at their moorings. In the section north of Stillwater scores of people were hurt, some seriously, and near Hudson, Wis., half a dozen houses were leveled. Horses and cattle were blown against the barb wire fences and badly lacerated. At Grant twenty-five houses were demolished, and in the Hudson Prairie district six dwellings were torn to pieces, and one person killed. The loss in crops, barns and outhouses is very heavy.

—The heat was so intense Wednesday at Pittsburgh that the schools were dismissed. The iron workers suffered terribly, and there were many cases of prostration.

—Up to noon Thursday at New York twenty-five sudden deaths were reported, mostly caused by the heat, from which the people and business are suffering severely.

—The remains of Private Henry, who was shot by the Greely party in the Arctic, have been stolen from Cypress Hill Cemetery, New York, presumably by persons who desire to investigate whether the body had been mutilated.

—Ben Johnson (colored), who, with Allen Ingalls, perpetrated the murders which preceded the great riot, was hanged Friday at Cincinnati. Frank Hutchings, the strangler, was executed at San Francisco.

—Differences on the liquor license question in the Decatur Council has resulted in the city's gas supply being shut off. Members will not vote for gas bonds unless their fellows agree to the granting of liquor licenses.

—A kettle of varnish in Cragnin's Japan works at Brooklyn caught fire Wednesday and exploded, burning one man to a crisp and fatally scalding four others. The fire resulting caused a damage of $3,000.

—Near Lanark, Ill., Tuesday afternoon, a passenger and an express train came in collision, wrecking both engines and several cars. In the express train were Sitting Bull and other Sioux Indians en route to Chicago, but all escaped uninjured, while only a few of the other travelers received slight bruises.

FOREIGN.

—The codfish catch by fishermen in Northern Newfoundland and on the Labrador coast, this season, has fallen off half a million quintals, and already families are reported starving. Icebergs stud the coast of Newfoundland and Labrador, and are passing down into the tracks of ocean steamers.

—The Pall Mall Gazette, London, has the following: "The Chinese report the damage done the forts and arsenals on the Min River by Admiral Courbet as trifling. The masonry in some places was thrown down, but now has been fully restored. The French landed and destroyed only three guns at the Mingan forts and did not land at all at Kinpai. The arsenal is not damaged, and no war material or stores destroyed. No fire and no explosion took place. Work at the arsenal is proceeding as usual. The naval loss is serious, but after all only two fighting vessels were sunk. The others were dispatch and patrol boats. The defenses of the river are now in as good condition as before the bombardment.

—Advices from Africa announce that two flagstaffs erected upon the Gold coast by Dr. Naohtigal, German commissioner, had been cut down. One of them was cut down by an English official and the other was razed by negroes of the Togo tribe. General Buehner, of the provisional government of Cameroons, was insulted by the negroes and obliged to take refuge in a German factory.

—Count Gourko received the Czar and party upon their arrival at Warsaw, Sept. 8th. The Imperial party subsequently reviewed 50,000 troops. They were received everywhere with manifestations of cordiality. The city was illuminated in honor of the imperial guests. A brilliant reception and a grand ball will be given.

—At Naples for the twenty-four hours ending 9 o'clock Thursday evening there were 966 fresh cases of cholera and 328 deaths.

—The Porte is considerably alarmed alarmed over the revolt of the Arabs in El Hejaz. Arabia, and 8,000 troops have been ordered to proceed there at once. A dispatch received this morning states that the disturbances are spreading, and that 8,000 Arabs are preparing to make a descent into Yemen, where, it is expected, they will receive aid from sympathizers of the Mahdi. The Governor of Mecca was ordered to send reinforcements to guard the towns of Sara and Mocha, but replied that he was unable to do so because of the disaffection among his own tribes.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

The Grand Lodge of Knights of Pythias of Pennsylvania Tuesday reported the number of lodges in the State at 360, with a membership of 34,955.

Dr. John Brown, an old Episcopal minister of New York State, died in Newburg, N. Y., at the age of 93. He delivered the welcome address to Lafayette at a Masonic reception at that place in 1824. But he probably left the order in 1826–7 as the Masons made no demonstration at his death, as would have been the case had he adhered.

—One thousand women belong to the Kappa Kappa Gamma secret society, which has chapters in a score of institutions in the northwest and west called colleges. There is no similar organization of women in the world.

The degraded, half-fed farmers of France keep the treasury of the republic always full of money. The farmer loves the republic as much as the Parisian detests it. The republic receives in its savings banks the money of the poor up to 1,000 francs, and gives them 3½ per cent for its use. The peasant farmers have nearly $800,000,000 on deposit in these banks.

25 CENTS

For the Cynosure two months and more should prompt every reader and lover of reform to step to the front and embrace this golden opportunity to increase the circulation of the best and most reliable reform paper in all Christendom; that people may be enlightened and brought to see the stubborn fact that all secret orders, Mormonism included, are combined to destroy our government, and are in fact bringing Christianity to a discount. In proof of this, let Masonry take snuff and a large majority of the churches sneeze in response. Now let us get on the Gospel harness and arm ourselves, disregarding all opposition and persecution. Victory is ours if we go forward in the strength and faith of our Lord.—WM. D. JOHNSTON, Lexington, Ill.

Thus opens an exposition of the relation of the Secret Empire to Civil Government, which will remain of great and permanent value to every citizen until the triumph of the American party shall have put the secret lodge system under the ban of law. SINGLE COPIES, 5 CENTS.
